There's also an upside. Jumping out of a plane is, of course, exhilarating (until you hit the ground, of course). Having my options entirely open to pursue my way in the world, to prove my worth and my talent in a universe that doesn't give a crap if I live or if I die, is a challenge that I can't wait to face. I'm confident that I can crack some skulls out there in the real world. My drive is unquestioned, and I'm ready to show my abilities, such as they are. The time for ass-kicking has arrived.

It'll also be nice to have time to do things that I haven't done in a good long time. Things like homework, and class attendance, and reading, and relaxing, and even (possibly) sleeping. There's a small chance that I may actually earn a paycheck that reflects the time and effort spent on the employment. (I said small.) I might see my roommate more than once a week; whether he approves of this development is his business.

That's all fringe, though. None of these prospects alone would have prompted me to leave the precious familiar safety zone in which I've lived my life for these many years.

What it ended up coming down to was respect for myself, a desire to make an impact and, above all, a burning need to put my ideas and my deep-seated beliefs into practice. I see now that I would never have any of those things at my old place of work, and that these intangibles are what mean the most to me. Money, time, and the rest are secondary; I need to be happy and fulfilled in an emotional sense. And so I go.

Eyes open, heart quaking, but not looking back.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

I love ISOM

AHHHH. The famed Isenberg School of Management...how I love to walk through those hallways carved out of diamonds and sit in those golden desks. Oh wait. I can't remember the last time I walked through the hallway and didn't see Collegians littering the dull floor, or sat at a desk where I almost fell on my ass because it wobbled so much. How interesting.

I am in the Isenberg School of Management and I would like to try and denounce any sort of cult following that is believed to occur in ISOM (by the way, notice the I in ISOM, comes from Eugene M. Isenberg who, about 3 years ago, an alumni who so generously donated approximately $8 million dollars to have that wonderful addition built). I have been a part of ISOM for about 3 years now. Yes, I am riding the 3-year wave as a super-senior. I know the ropes of ISOM. ISOM is made up of 4 separate majors, Finance and Operations Management, Accounting, Management, and Marketing. We have class in one dingy building. We all have class together, and we greet one another to conspire to become great students. Through the same introduction classes and placed in the same dorm, we see each other on a consistent basis, so how else are we to react when we see each other on the street, at a party or in the Campus Center? We acknowledge each other's presence, and better yet, we hang out with each other because we have fun. Cult? I think not...Let's talk about other majors.

Engineering: I am taking a mechanical and industrial engineering class right now and it is kicking my ass. As I listen to the teacher talk about the labs we are going to do and assignments in the million-dollar car simulator, I don't think to myself, "hey, they don't deserve this." If it furthers their education, they need it, and the 5 or 6 different buildings that they have class in, I am not bitter. I chose to be in ISOM, and if donated money comes from alumni allocated in a beneficial manner, then hell yes, put it toward our education. Granted, I am going to be out of here before this building even opens, but it's for the students and not for the glorification of our own stature.

DANIEL KRECHMER

Back to majors. What about HRTA (Hotel Restaurant Travel Administration)? I hung out with a lot of those kids last year. They're great kids, lots of fun, but they were pretty exclusive in their friends. They didn't have bad intentions, but it was who they had class with and who they liked to chill with. Never once did I hear a peep about their cult-like status.

So why is ISOM a cult? Because we all work together and are forced to be the best that we can be. Because our teachers give us massive amounts of work, forcing us to team up and meet everyone in our class. Because we have projects that help out non-profit companies like Habitat for Humanity and the Hitchcock Center (environmental education institute) and force us heartless, immoral, and unethical vagabonds to do some good.

On the contrary to what is thought, ISOMers are leaving this college as business majors to head into the world and bring a helping hand to the business industry that runs and provides for this entire country, let alone the world. Granted he might be monopolistic and greedy, but you couldn't be writing this article without Bill Gates' keen business sense and creativity. The professors that ISOM employ are the most interactive, communicative, and helping people I have ever met. If you find one student or faculty member that has one bad word to say about all the Dean of ISOM's hard work, then I'll show you a real cult.

For years and years, I've been hearing jokes mocking students in ISOM; I've brushed it off because it usually comes down to ignorance. Because we have classes together early and the students in them are the first friends we meet, we must be defined then as a cult. We don't hang liberal arts majors in effigy. We don't slack off because teachers shine our shoes. We don't conspire to loot this campus of any excess money that may be lying around.

We do, however, study our asses off. We do graduate and become bosses employees like because ISOM taught us right. We do hang out together because we have the most fun. We do work hard and play hard. We do go out into the real world with success in our eyes and money as a by-product. If you happen to be in some other major that will not treat you well, then I'm sorry. You chose your path in life. Don't knock another for your misfortune or lack of thinking ahead. You came to this school for the purpose of learning. You decided your major, even if you are going to be chained to girder, building future ISOM's for the rest of your life. If you're bitter because the green eyes of jealousy have finally pierced your conscious, then I only have one thing for you: a tissue...because you're crying.

Daniel Krechmer is a Collegian staff member.

Yankees different
This time around

"Red Sox Fan: I love NY."

The six words prominently displayed on the sign forced me to do a double take and look back at the television screen. Yet there they were: printed in red and blue on a white background seemingly by a child's crude hand. In a different time the sign would be tinged with irony, but given the circumstances, the words denoted sincerity and respect. I wasn't dreaming. They were genuine; they were tangible to our new definition of reality. And their meaning was justified.

It was just six words. Six words on a sign that flashed for a brief moment during the day's sports highlights on ESPN, on a day when the men whom we once called our heroes took the field again to play a game. There the players stood, amongst the true heroes, the firefighters and police officers, who joined them as the national anthem played with a renewed worth and Old Glory flew from half mast. United as one, they stood silently with their heads bowed, embodying the raw anguish of a nation and remembering their own fallen comrades.

This same scene played out across the country in every sporting venue from Los Angeles to New York. In Boston, the understated power in the words of one fan's sign proclaimed the wave of patriotism had extended to our national pastime in the aftermath of the attacks. They declared this newfound unity was stronger than a long-standing rivalry that had endured for the past eighty years. The implication was loud and clear – from Landsdowne to Broadway. As the Fenway faithful returned to the stands like their counterparts in the Bronx after the ill-fated interruption to the season a little over a month ago, the pro-New York sign was raised high in place of the flag during the time of mourning. It was simple, yet proud, true and unwavering in its own unobtrusive glory and sympathetic assent.

TEHANI SCHNEIDER

What a difference a month makes. New York's stunning comeback over the Oakland A's in the American League Division Series on Monday night brought the inevitable dissent of protest from Red Sox fans, including the majority of students on this campus. Of course it was too good to be true, wasn't it? The Yankees, down two games to none, could never attempt to mount a comeback, not with the series in Oakland's favor and the coastal shift to the Coliseum. Alas, Oakland's atrocious defense – painfully pronounced in Game 5, I might add – led to their untimely demise. This, combined with Derek Jeter's sparkling defense, clutch hitting, solid pitching and the Yankees' uncanny ability to capitalize on every mistake their opponents make, and the A's were history. Oh, and we can't forget the wrath of George Steinbrenner (aka the Devil's Spawn) which would have rendered the Yankees' off season unbearable had the defending champs lost. You can bet he would have set his sights on increasing the Yankees' already gigantic payroll in pursuing a huge marquee name like free agent Barry Bonds. But Mount George hasn't erupted yet. So now New York heads to Seattle for a showdown with the Mariners in their quest to reach the World Series...again.

Those Damn Yankees. They are as common and formidable a presence in October as the changing of the foliage that forewarns of darker days ahead. For some inexplicable reason, the Yankees go on autopilot come autumn. Maybe it's luck. Maybe it's fate and the mystique of pinstripe destiny that is forever the thorn in the side of diehard Sox fans. Whatever it is, the Yankees have it. And even when it seems like they've lost it, they always regain it. The timeless, tiresome refrain that has become the bane of Boston's existence has risen once again this postseason.

The collective grumbling of Red Sox Nation reaches a fever pitch every autumn. It just wouldn't be October without the annual heartbreak and injustice, without Bostonians retreating to lick their wounds, without the chants of "Yankees suck!" Another October, another bought Yankees victory, another reason to hate New York. The Yankees need another World Championship like Roger Clemens needs an ego boost.

Yet it is not just another October. Even the most anti-Yankees fan must begrudgingly concede that. Superficially, it appears that all teams play to win, to feel the sweet thrill of victory and taste of champagne, to experience the joint efforts of a season's culmination in a shiny ring, trophy or cup. The majority of the time this rings true. But the great desire for New York to win this year stems from a greater need. This Yankees team is not playing for a ring, for another title to preserve their dynasty, or for another feather to garnish place in King George's overstuffed cap. These Yankees, fervently supported by Mayor Rudy, will serve to lead a city in its healing process, portraying the roles of heroes on the diamond as they play their game, while their real-life equals toil away at the World Trade Center site, working to repair the mortal hole in the city and in the hearts of New Yorkers.

These Yankees will do their best to boost the morale of a city gravely damaged that must now derive consolation from a steady force, a team that has consistently come out on top. This team, through their grit and resilience showcased in the comeback against Oakland, beats with the heart of a champion and personifies a city whose nation embraced its sorrow and shared in its inestimable loss.

It may be of little comfort to Red Sox Nation right now, and it probably still smarts that that the Yankees will have yet another go in the postseason, and a chance to four-peat in the World Series. Look at it this way, Ichiro and the mighty Mariners stand in their way. I'd say that chance is pretty slim. Even if they do somehow get past Seattle, another World Series in New York would undoubtedly help to raise money for the relief effort and for the economy. How can anyone dispute that?

A little over a month ago, I saw those six memorable words. I'll never forget that sign, and how one brave soul acknowledged what truly does matter. I'll always remember what those words stood for.

Tehani Schneider is a Collegian staff member.

Letters to the Editor
Now is the time to have pride in America

To the editor:

Where has Melody Zagorni been all of our lives? That woman hit it right on the head in her column, "Time to Rethink Notions of the Flag." Those veterans, whom the town of Amherst is currently trying it's hardest to deprive the right of patriotism, FOUGHT and/or gave their lives so that 50 years later, some whiny ungrateful person could forget their bravery. I would love to see one of those morally drained human beings talk to a veteran and tell them that what he did for his country should not be remembered. What the hell is wrong with people today? Or at least in the town of Amherst?

When I see those flags today and for the rest of my life, I will be proud. For me, what happened on September 11 will never be a "commemorative coin." It will always be real to me. Anyone that is soon to forget what that flag represents is just not American. What illogical state of mind must someone be in to have the product of ones thought be to take down the flag? People don't usually spend all day thinking about the veterans and past wars. But when they see a flag, something springs to mind. The veterans don't want to be forgotten any more than I want to forget them.

And a standing ovation to Elizabeth Pariseau's "Peace Demonstration is just insulting." Even more anger towards these peace obsessed neurotics overcame me when I read, "The peace rallies are an insult to our soldiers now overseas, who have given up their homes, families and comforts, and who risk giving their lives." Anyone, I don't care who you are, who doesn't appreciate those men and women is selfish. It angers and saddens me that it took so much for people to show patriotism but what's worse is that it still hasn't affected some people. What would they rather be done? "Well, 5,000 Innocent people just died because someone hates Americans. Oh well.

Maybe we can talk about it and resolve it in a peaceful manner." Is that a joke? Are they insinuating we make rational talk with Irrational people? Why not just help them out and bomb ourselves? After all, it would save them effort and maybe then peace would be accomplished. It would at least it would be a hell of a lot easier and wouldn't require a f*g miracle! Don't get me wrong, I don't want my friends and family to die but I realize that sometimes things like this are necessary for future existence to prevail.

Where would we be if George Washington and his revolutionaries just kicked the bucket and said, "We'll just let someone else take care of this one. Our people can live in terror and oppression?" These peace people wouldn't be able to complain about this "grave injustice." Just a side note to all who agree with the peace freaks: Open your eyes and join the rest of America!

Stephanie Fuchs
Sylvan

ARTS & LIVING

design & layout by: riki Alcid and Shauna Billings

Fall Fashion

New York

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

New York Fashion Week, planned for September 9 through the 15, was cut short when the nation suffered the infamous terrorist attacks of the 11th. Most designers slated to show their designs on the day of, as well as the days following the attacks have since shown their collections. In response, Calvin Klein didn't show his full line in his September 17 show, and Oscar De la Renta gave guests and models American flag armbands to wear during his show, also on the 17.

While some may question the importance of showing collections after the tragedies that occurred, the designers showed their American stubbornness and continued to display the designs that have long made New York a powerhouse in the big three fashion venues of the world. Fashion, as art, reflects human pain, emotion and spirit – all important to express after such horrors.

There are a few main looks for Spring/Summer 2002 fashions. Colors have been progressively making a comeback over the past few years, and citrus colors will be big this spring. Designers specifically loved tones of orange, lime and lilac. Ruffles ruled the runway in designs reminiscent of 1980's prom gowns. And sheer fabric topped dresses and skirts – floating over the skin not covered by plunging necklines or shorter skirts.

Calvin Klein kept with his sleek, no-nonsense image. His designs retained the traditional palette of black, white, navy and brown. Trousers seem to be taking the place of the skinny pants of past seasons – so, a sigh of relief can be exhaled by all those holding it in to button the tiny pants from last year.

Calling on his Dominican past, Oscar De la Renta's designs swept along the runway with tropical prints and bold red flowers in the models' hair. Ruffles and lace were on nearly every garment he showed. Betsey Johnson also exhibited lace and ruffles – however instead of showing them with Latin flair as de la Renta did, she opted for a more Madonna look. Johnson paired her ruffles with ankle socks, stiletto heels and pica-boo lingerie. And instead of putting flowers in her models' hair, she placed corsages on skirts and shoulders.

Turn to NY, page 8

Milan

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

Milan's Spring/Summer 2002 Fashion Week, September 26 through October 3, was the second in the trio of fashion heavy hitters. While New York fashions were all about embracing multicultural ideas, Milan went wild with new innovations that went against the ruffled skirts shown on American runways.

Versace went for eye-popping colors and designs. Op-art flower blossoms and bold patterns alternated with simple single-toned outfits, offering a relief from intense pattern overload. The Versace label showed crotchet as the favored material for this spring, with models striding down the runway in loosely crocheted skirts and camisoles peeking skin here and there. Fringe replaced ruffles as the edge of choice on the Versace stage.

Corsets were huge in the pages of Vogue and Elle this summer, with the hype from Moulin Rouge inspiring the rise of the undergarment as a top. Dolce and Gabbana took the look one-step further adding petticoats to the list of acceptable underwear to wear as an everyday look. The label also went wild with thick 70's-inspired striped slacks and jackets with Pucci-inspired piece-work designs (or for those who are saying "Pucci, what?" – think the "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" coat.)

Gucci went an entirely different route than any other designer this season. His show opened with straight-jacket-inspired coats that closed with buckles. However doubtful the success this trend will prove to have, it cannot be argued that the idea was at the very least original. Gucci also exhibited the plunging necklines that donned awards show gowns this year. Gucci also exhibited pants and skirts with cutout designs like flowers and hearts and chiffon and ribbon trapeze gowns concluded the show.

Copper and gold metallics swept Prada's runways, and tuxedo shirts promoted subtle ruffles in the place of loud lacey frills. Prada also showed long-style pleated cheerleader skirts and slecker versions of grandma's cardigan.

Turn to MILAN, page 6

Paris

By Christine Gauthier
Collegian Correspondent

No single style can define what designers created for Spring 2002 in Paris' fashion week, October 5th through 13th. There were some similarities, which gave a hint of what trends to look for this spring. Ruffles, ruffles, and more ruffles came from Richard Edwards, Viktor and Rolf, Alexander McQueen, and Christian Lacroix. Valentino, Christian Dior, and Alexander McQueen exhibited corset-like thick belts.

Romanticism was the inspiration for Christian Dior's collection. Biascut silk and lace dresses using neutral colors, and corset-like belts filled Dior's runway, creating a lingerie-like, sexy collection. However, unless you want to wear your lingerie in public, this might not be the look for you.

An uproar from the press attracted attention to Chloe's spring collection by Phoebe Philo. Since designer Stella McCartney left Chloe, many are calling Phoebe Philo the new McCartney. Chloe's spring collection steers away from the label's recent in-your-face rock 'n' roll style. Day and evening-wear are combined with easygoing yet elegant separates, all inspired from the 70's business suit look.

With her recent farewell to Chloe, everyone has been waiting to see Stella McCartney's debut collection. Surprisingly, she fell short of expectations with her first spring collection on her own. Her risqué, almost pornographic slogans printed on some of the ensembles showed an unnecessary beg for attention, and McCartney was described by critics as an "artless wannabe shocker." The public's disenchantment with McCartney's collection was not her only problem - she has been accused of pinching ideas from other designers. The Stang Label claims to have put out similar designs in stores for months.

Jean Paul Gaultier never ceases to amaze. Flowing dresses, draped tops, and extra long skirts showed a

Turn to PARIS, page 8

Kottonmouth Kings' Hidden Stash goes up in smoke

Kottonmouth Kings' latest smoke odyssey is better left unlit

By Nick Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

KOTTONMOUTH KINGS
Hidden Stash II: Kream of the Krop
Capitol Records

Thanks to the Kottonmouth Kings, I now know every word and phrase associated with the smoking of marijuana. Bud, swag, joint, grass, ganja, weed, tree, chronic, killa kali, 4:20 and others are used in every song, every verse and have no other purpose but to unite a nation of pot-smoking suburban youths, anxious to rebel against something, no matter how moronic.

I can only imagine how the brainstorming went for this album: "What the hell, let's make an album that talks about rebelling by smoking herb and bad mouthing cops for a "racist" war on drugs" (even though a majority of the band is white). Cause after all, if you have no intelligence about any world issues, let's blame the police for busting down on weed, instead of blaming cops for more serious issues like racial stereotyping, the beating of innocent minorities or the corruption that lies in some inner cities. Nope, weed is their biggest concern, and by god they are going to let the world know why they like weed so much.

Their music is trying to be Dre, Limp, and Rancid, only there lies one problem: it doesn't even come close to duplicating the sound, rhythm, or feel of those artists. Even "My Way" looks like a masterpiece compared this entire album. Their work especially is based and inspired by Cypress Hill. Did I say inspired. I'm sorry, I meant stolen. Down right and blatantly stolen.

Here's a break down of every track on their latest CD: tracks one through all deal with a bunch of guys smoking WEED. Tracks four deals with cops busting guys for smoking WEED. The rest of the tracks are about guys smoking WEED. And if you think reading it my description is boring, the album is mind numbing!

In "The Intro," the Kottonmouth Kings use the same formula that Cypress Hill uses in the intro of Dr. Greenthumb, you hear phrases such as "pass that shit" and the sound of bongs being lit up, along with relaxing sighs. Despite the fact that this is totally ripped off, it's the most original thing on the album. Every track after that is the same exact thing. Track after track, it's the same beat, practically the same rhymes and the same melody. It's not even fun music. At least Cypress Hill can get people jumping, even if they don't smoke up, these songs don't even inspire people to learn the words.

Fifteen out of the sixteen tracks deal directly with the wacky tobacky and the one that doesn't, a track entitled "Tell me why," deals with the serious subject of premature ejaculation. Actually, the song basically bitches about police officers (as depicted by the Kings as pigs or the Man) arresting them and their buddies for smoking weed. Who are those crazy members of law enforcement thinking? Arresting potheads and selling marijuana, why would they do a thing like that? Oh, that's right, it's illegal. One introspective lyric says, "I get high and fly/ I don't drink and drive/ and your fuckin' with my flight/ so I got ask why?" Man, like wow, never thought of it that way.

I particularly like the track entitled, "Welcome to the Suburbs." It tells the story about how these spoiled kids from the suburbs get high and start a music group, and then get upset

Turn to MOUTH page 8

Lee's A Sense of Wonder well-written but more often is a sense of boring

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Recently I read the Arts and Entertainment Channel's list of the one hundred most influential people of the past millennium, and was surprised to come across the name "Rachel Carson". I had never heard of her, despite the fact that she was one of the few people on the list that lived in the 20th Century. Carson, I soon learned, was an environmental author, and is generally credited with founding the modern environmental movement. Why, I wondered, hadn't I previously heard of such an important figure?

After attending Kaitlani Lee's A Sense of Wonder, a one-woman show based on Carson's life, at Mount Holyoke's Gamble Auditorium last night, I feel I can safely account for Carson's relative lack of fame. While her contributions to the environmental cause are immeasurable, if A Sense of Wonder is to be believed, the details of Rachel Carson's life are about as exciting as a tofu sandwich. She was a quiet, guarded woman who retreated to a simplistic, private life to avoid the spotlight hardly the stuff great biographies are usually made of.

This isn't to say that A Sense of Wonder is a failure – it is not. It is as well-written and performed as a one-character plays about a woman as self-reflective and serene as Carson possibly could be. It explores the life that the author struggled to keep from being tainted by her sudden celebrity. The first act of the play takes place in Carson's vacation home in Maine, where in the summer of 1963 she sheltered herself from the controversy raging over her book, Silent Spring, which condemned pesticide use. The second act takes place two months later, in her home in Silver Spring, Maryland, where she privately suffered the effects of bone cancer. Lee, as Carson, talks to the audience about her personal history, and her views on the environment.

The concept of presenting Carson's life in theatrical form is interesting, but one has to question the decision to make Carson the only character in the play, and to deliver all of the show's dialogue directly to the audience. It makes the show extremely tedious, despite being only 75 minutes long. It also leaves the audience wondering about Carson's relations with others, which we naturally see nothing of.

A Sense of Wonder is saved from mediocrity, however, by the extraordinary performance of Kaitlani Lee, the show's author. Instead of relying on showy gimmicks or splashy dialogue, Lee calmly inhabits her role. Especially impressive is her ability to convey the physical suffering Carson endured as a cancer patient. To see her quickly saunter across the stage to make a curtain call, after an hour's worth of feeble hobbling with a cane, is almost jarring.

Unfortunately, even the best of performances could not save the show's dialogue, the vast majority of which comes directly from Carson's letters. These letters are not without literary merit, but hardly seem suited for the stage. The dialogue consists mostly of Carson delivering trite descriptions of the beauty of nature. The illuminating moments where the audience hears of Carson's attitude toward her work, and her celebrity, are few and far between.

Rachel Carson was, without question, one of the most important individuals in recent history. The fact that she was able to make her impact in the days before the zenith of the modern women's rights movement makes her achievements all the more remarkable. Kaitlani Lee is to be commended for trying to educate the public about Carson's legacy, but the uneventful Sense of Wonder will not hold most viewers' interests.

■ Milan

continued from page 5

Georgio Armani's runway came alive with ethereal designs. Handkerchief dresses and fishtailed gowns floated with the models. Watermarked sheer Grecian-style gowns ebbed and flowed past the Armani guests and satin shone throughout the show.

While Milan got bolder than other fashion venues, the designs still seem to stand on their own. Next spring, stores will be showing lace and ruffles, crochet and gauze, and flowers on everything. In a switch from most fashions of the past few springs, this feminine and fairy tale dresses will be a welcome change.

The Loose Goose Cafe
GRAND OPENING CELEBRATION!
Saturday, October 20, 2001
LIVE MUSIC WITH ETHAN INSEL'S TRIO & BROQUE
the Loose Goose cafe
BREAKFAST • LUNCH
Java Hut coffee, bagels, egg sandwiches, muffins, scones, specialty sandwiches, homemade soups, salads, desserts and more!
WE ACCEPT MC VISA OCMP
233 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST • 413-549-GOOSE
Located in the Carriage Shops
Hours: Tu-Sat 7 a.m. - 4 p.m. Sun 9 a.m. -4 p.m. Closed Monday

ZANNA has it...
Sweater Dusters
ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

money

YOU WANT TO CHANGE THINGS.
TFA Information Session
Thursday, October 18 7:30 PM
Goodell Hall, Commenwealth College Lounge
All are welcome!
TEACHFORAMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3224 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-6
204 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 10-8, Sun 12-6 800-729-5971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian - Every Thursday!

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – Guest curator Leandro Soto will give a gallery talk on Tuesday, October 23 at 7 p.m. entitled "Café: The Journeys of Cuban Artists." The event will be held in the Augusta Savage Gallery.

UMASS – From October 18 to November 11, Central Gallery will be presenting an exhibit entitled Icon and Golem by Judith Shaffer. There is a reception on October 18 from 4-6 p.m. and a Gallery Talk on November 6 at 3 p.m.

UMASS –The Student Union Art Gallery presents the show Rise Up and Take Us With You, a celebration of heritage presenter by valley artists. The Gallery is open Monday – Thursday from 10 to 5 and Fridays 10 to 5. The exhibit will run from October 22 to October 26 with a reception on Tuesday, October 23 from 4 to 6 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Journey, Not the Arrival: Anne Morrow Lindbergh, 1906-2001" is an exhibition of the author, aviator and Smith graduate being displayed in Morgan Gallery. It is available for viewing through Oct. 31.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Linear Dimensions" is a series of artwork by painter, sculptor and artist Eileen Kane. It will be on display through Oct. 31 on weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in Alumnae House Gallery.

AMHERST – "Paintings" by Michiro Yoshida will be displayed in the Jones Library in the Burnett Gallery. The one-person show will run from Oct. 1-30.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – On October 20 in the Concert Hall, the performing group Gypsy Caravan II will sing and dance to Roma music and cultural identities. It's the music that influences culture from India to Spain. For tickets call 545-2511.

UMASS – Tonight, October 18 at 6:30 p.m. there will be an Open Mike Event in the W.E.B. DuBois Library featuring members of the Asian American Performance Artists Two Tongues.

UMASS – On October 20 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, The New WORLD Theater will be bringing the performance art show "I Was Born with Two Tongues" to UMASS. The group, which speaks out against stereotypes of the Asian American culture, has received national popularity within the last few years.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The Mount Holyoke College Department of Theater Arts will be opening their 2001-02 season with Tennesse William's The Night of the Iguana. Directed by theater professor Joyce Devlin, the performances take place in Rooke Theater from October 25-28. Prices are $5 for the general public and $3 for students and seniors.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS –The University of Massachusetts Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band will perform music from Wagner to Bach at 8 o'clock on Friday, October 19 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets are $5 for seniors, students and children under 18 and $10 for general public.

UMASS – On October 23 at 8 p.m. the new director of the University Orchestra Lanfranco Marcelletti will be giving his debut concert in the Concert Hall. The event will include selections by Wagner and Stravinsky and costs $10 for the general public and $5 for students, elders, and children.

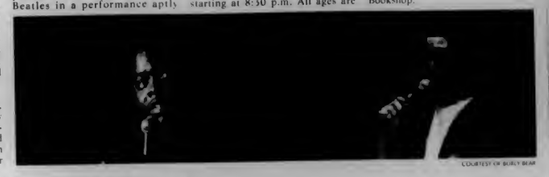
UMASS – The ALANA Affairs Office and UPC will be bringing Puerto Rican singer/songwriter Roy Brown and guitarist Jose Gonzalez for an evening of music. The performance will take place on Thursday, November 1 at 7:30 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. The event is $5 for the general public and free for UMass students.

UMASS – On Thursday, October 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Concert hall, the Kronos Quartet will be performing. For more than twenty-five years the musical group has shared a unique musical vision with the rest of the world, incorporating jazz and other global influences throughout the world. Tickets for the show range from $15-30 for general admission. $10 for people seventeen and under and ranges from $5-10 for Five College Students.

AMHERST COLLEGE – The Amherst College Choral Society will performing its annual Homecoming Weekend concert at 8:30 p.m. on Saturday October 20 at Buckley Recital Hall. Tickets are $6 for the public and $3 for children under 12 and seniors.

SMITH COLLEGE – On October 20 at 8:30 p.m. in John M. Green Hall at Smith College, Smith College presents it annual POPS! concert. This year members of the Glee Club, Chamber Singers, Orchestra, Wind Ensemble, Jazz Band and a cappella groups will perform selected songs from the Beatles in a performance aptly named "Beatlemania."

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents the Naegele Family Concert. Led by Phillip Naegele, a violinist and professor emeritus of music at Smith College, and accompanied by his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, will play assorted pieces by Mozart, Kodaly, Bach, and Schubert. The event will take place on Sweeney Concert Hall on Friday October 19 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7 and $5 for students and seniors.



NORTHAMPTON – On Saturday, October 20, there will be a Swing Dance at the Northampton Center for the Arts. A seven-piece Dixieland band called The Hot Cat Jazz Band will be performing original arrangements of jazz classics, including the works of Louis Armstrong, Fats Waller and Duke Ellington. The night begins at 7:30 p.m. with a basic swing dance lesson, and the party starts hopping starting at 8:30 p.m. All ages are welcome, and will cost $12. For more information call 247-9396.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

UMASS – The Visiting Writers Series is bringing poet Louis Jenkins to UMass tonight, October 18 in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. A reception and book signing will follow the reading. It is free to students and the public.

AMHERST – At Food for Thought Books, on Wednesday, October 24, author William Stornadt will be reading selections and signing his new book Outband: Finding a Man, Sailing an Ocean. The event will begin at 7 p.m. and books will be able to be purchased at the event.

SOUTH HADLEY – Maury Klein will discuss his new book Rainbow's End: The Crash of 1929 at 7 p.m. today at The Odyssey Bookshop.

COURTESY OF BURLY BEAR

Grin and Bear It

The Burly Bear Comedy Festival returns to UMass on Friday at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

COURTESY OF OLAF HEINE

Tag Baby, was ist dein Tierkreizeichnen?

Rammstein makes their way to the Hartford Civic Center on Friday as part of the Pledge of Allegiance Tour with Slipknot and System of a Down.

Stand next to your Best friend and read this.

One of you could Get pregnant Before you're ready.

That's right. Almost half of all women* get pregnant before they plan to. Sound scary? It is! That's why more women than ever are choosing Depo-Provera.

Depo-Provera* is 99.7% effective.

You need just one shot on time every 3 months to stay pregnancy-protected. That means Depo-Provera is one of the best ways to ensure you won't get pregnant—until you want to!

Remember, Depo-Provera doesn't protect you from HIV/AIDS or other sexually transmitted diseases.

Some women using Depo-Provera experience side effects. The most common are irregular periods or spotting. Many women stop having periods altogether after a few months and some may experience a slight weight gain. You shouldn't use Depo-Provera if you could be pregnant, if you have had any unexplained periods, or if you have a history of breast cancer, blood clots, stroke, or liver disease. When using Depo-Provera, there may be a possible decrease in bone density.

So if you're not ready to get pregnant, be ready with effective birth control: Depo-Provera. Ask your health care professional if prescription Depo-Provera is right for you.

See what Depo-Provera is all about. Go to: www.depo-provera.com

Birth control you think about just 4 x a year.

Depo-Provera Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension

Please see important product information on adjacent page.

* Women aged 15 to 44. Source: Henshaw SK. Unintended pregnancy in the United States. Fam Plann Perspect 1998;30:24-29,46

© 2001 Pharmacia & Upjohn Company, a subsidiary of Pharmacia Corporation UX0011398.02 9/01

Ads show questionable motives in tough times

Watching television, there is one thing that stands out more than the new fall television shows, or even the constant news coverage of terrorism. At least it stands out to someone like me, a Communication major, who also writes a column on television. Those little things that occur in two or three minute intervals that break up our favorite programs: commercials.

Over the past few weeks many of these nuggets of information and manipulation have been noticeably different. Sure, there are still the old annoying Cleo the Psychic adds and those "Seven Up Yours" commercials, but one theme has reigned supreme over the past few weeks from America's advertising companies: "You love America, and since you love America, live your life as normal" or "Make America Great Again." Translate those messages: "Go to the mall and buy stuff, that is the best way you can fight terrorists." Company after company has ad campaigns that have just begun airing that spread, either a message of patriotism or a plea to consumers to return to normal by buying their stuff. Investment firms like Payne Webber, Merrill Lynch, airlines like American and Southwest, and especially car companies have began to spread this message.

On the surface the message seems legitimate enough; if these companies fail, great damage will be done to the U.S economy. Consumers can help by continuing to buy. However, we don't need this thrown in our faces every commercial break.

Ad campaigns have always been foolish and manipulative enough over the years, but using a national tragedy to sell soda or cars is unnecessary, and just plain corny. If companies want to have ad campaigns that allude to the tragedy, that is acceptable in small doses, but draping the American flag and patriotic music all over an ad to increase profits is not. Make no mistake about it. I've got no problem with the American flag unlike a certain know-it-all physics professor from around here does. Heck, fly as many flags as you want. I'd just rather not see it as a tool used to sell things.

Tube Notes Show Spotlight.

Undeclared (Fox, Tuesday 8:30)

There is no place like home, except maybe for a co-ed college dorm. That's the tagline for the new Fox show "Undeclared," one of the few pleasant surprises of the new fall television season. The dramedy chronicles the lives of a group of college freshmen at a fictional California University. Unlike other depictions of college life (cough.... "Felicity") this one actually has some element of realism to it. Out are all the melodramatic introspective moments and plush apartments and dorms in the middle of New York City, and in are boozing, parties and dorms that actually look like dorms.

The show centers around Steven (played by Canadian born Jay Buchal) as a likable, dorky but not too dorky (an actual realistic person on a teen TV series for once!), college freshmen whose biggest problem is that his father has for some reason followed him off to college, potentially ruining "the best years of his life." Buchal has a unique acting style that seems awkward at times, and is heavy on facials and stressing certain words. Still, he has a certain onscreen charisma that makes the character likable, as is the obvious intention. The rest of the cast (all Steven's hall or roommates) is far from bit players and all help to drive the series. Each one of the characters has their own quirks that help keep the ensemble fresh, and moving in a wide variety of potential plotlines. There's Steven's roommate, the British lover boy Lloyd (Charlie Hunnam), Ron (Seth Rogan), the stereotypical freshmen partier, and Lizzie, the introspective tok, there is some of that) female, plus a few others.

The main strengths of the show are its smart dialogue and offbeat topics. This is no surprise considering that the executive producer of the series is Jay Apatow, the man behind both "The Larry Sanders Show" and the short lived but quality NBC series "Freaks and Geeks," two shows which were entertaining for precisely the same reasons "Undeclared" is. Whether it's hiring a local townie (Will Ferrell) to write term papers for them in one episode, or Steven being relegated to sleeping in the lounges along with dozens of others because their roommates are all having sex in this week's episode, the show topics manage to be offbeat and clever. After all, teen angst and untequited love have been explored to death on television, dealing with roommates having sex and cheating on term papers hasn't.

It's not as if "Undeclared" is completely unique from all other teenage series, it does at times resemble the status quo. Still, it manages to mix in enough originality to separate it from the pack. Ratings for the show have been decent, so hopefully "Undeclared" will make it through the semester. Who knows, maybe it will even make the Deans List. Either way, it is off to a solid start. Grade: A/B

Kurt Polesky is Collegian Staff Member

COURTESY OF MARC BAPTISTE

Macy Gray's latest offering, The Id, is a strong step forward.

The Id a memorable, but restrained affair

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

MACY GRAY
The Id
Epic

I don't think I'm alone when I say that singer Macy Gray is, at the very least, unique. Her debut album, 1999's On How Life Is, matched her peculiar personality with a bunch of songs that greased their way into the pop mainstream with very little difficulty.

On her follow-up CD The Id, Gray takes her abnormal public persona and runs with it. You only need to look at the album's title to get a hint about what the subject of the songs might be about – a manic tour through Gray's tumultuous mind, dealing with her kinky sexual desires, extreme jealousy, and downright hatred of some people. Most of the tunes are free-styling fun and Gray adds her trademark flair that is oh so funky. The Id is certainly an enjoyable listening experience, but even with the blatant theme of the CD, Gray still seems to be holding back on the potential talent she has to spread her wings as an artist.

Break out the bellbottoms for "Relating to A Psychopath," an excellent first track that shows quite bluntly, Gray's understanding of how the public eye sees her. The pulsating disco beat and the fragmented staccato lyrics make you want to get down and shake your booty. It's a promising first song, and also one of the CD's best tunes. "Sexual Revolution" soon follows, and it is sounds a lot like a rehashing of the same song, only without the same positive effect on the listener. The songs become so blended and interchangeable that you hum the melody to one and sing the lyrics to the other.

You don't get any easier a glimpse into Gray's consciousness than with "Gimme All Your Lovin' Or I Will Kill You." The song is neither here-nor-there, but the title alone makes it a winner. Similarly, there is "Freak Like Me," which is the closest Gray gets to her breakthrough hit "I Try."

Songs like "Boo" and "Harry" are pleasant surprises, given their certain kick just because of Gray's scratchy, helium-pitched voice. They offer a mellow respite from the aforementioned, hip dance songs. On the former song, Gray confronts a cheating mate; in the refrain of the song she asks, "Who are those bitches on my answering machine?" In "Harry" the title character is a guy who Gray doesn't want a serious relationship with, but rather a no-strings attached booty call whenever it's so needed. The witty lyrics and mellow melodies give both songs a shot of soulful flavor.

Gray welcomes some guest performers to help her out, including the gifted Erykah Badu on "Sweet Baby," a duet with Sunshine Anderson on "Don't Come Around," and rapper Slick Rick for "Hey Young World (Part 2)." It's a shame, though, that these notable musicians contribute to three of the CD's worst songs. This is especially true with the latter, which not only grates the nerves with its Michael Jackson-like children's chorus in the background, but also has a sound that is not typical of Gray's style thus far. The song may be an attempt to branch out musically, but its old school R&B feel makes it stand out like a sore thumb.

Angie Stone and Mos Def, though, are two guests who accompany Gray on "My Nutmeg Phantasy," a much-needed highlight that comes later on, giving a new breath of life to the album. The song is propelled by its gospel-rock melody whose bright attitude would have made the song a perfect closer for the album. Instead she rounds out the CD with two diametrically opposed songs; the haunting "Oblivion" and "Forgiveness," as close to a ballad as Gray has ever gotten. Gray goes out on a limb with these superlative displays and shows that she can do more than just the disco-dancing ditties and the calm melodies that she has given up until now. Then there is, for some reason, the inclusion of "Blowin' Up Your Speakers," which is a smorgasbord of ambient sound effects that give you a headache and make you want to turn off your speakers instead. I can only guess that it was included as an artistic gesture of Gray's id exploding after such an outpouring, but its presence on a musically driven album is nonsense.

The Id is a worthy sophomore effort for Gray, which is more than can be said for many artists lately. There is plenty of energy and enough memorable songs to want to listen to the CD several times through; however, the few potholes are very noticeable. The Id makes you want more, and Gray, perhaps on purpose, holds back.

■ NY

continued from page 5

Vera Wang moved in an entirely different direction than the bold Johnson and De la Renta. Wang's collection was full of big city sophistication – with perfect little black dresses, elegant lines, fishtails and V-neck gowns.

Ralph Lauren also had his own take on ruffles and lace, evoking Southwestern images with his white and tan collection. Peasant blouses and a-line skirts were cinched with thick leather belts. Necklaces, feather earrings and fringed raps all harkened to Native American influences.

New York's Spring/Summer 2002 fashion shows were a celebration of America, melding influences from different cultures and time periods. While America cried, designers did what they could to show multiculturalism and American pride. And many would say they did it, finally, in clothes that normal people could actually wear.

■ Paris

continued from page 5

Buddhist-monk inspired look. "I've always been inspired by different cultures, and I discovered that in Buddhism orange is the color of peace and liberty," Gaultier explained backstage to Style.com. "I wanted to convey a positive message of global communion." Though a lot of his collection may not seem practical, his artistic energy, cultural diversity, and ideas make him a respectable designer.

Chanel showed a fun, rebel mood opening the show with sporty motorcycle outfits including two-toned sneakers and turned up collars - a reiteration of the current rock 'n' roll style. Classic Chanel style followed with the label's adored black and white. Skirts were long, sheer and belted at the hip.

Louis Vuitton's accessories will once again be a smart investment this season. After street inspired graffiti tote's, nature-inspired butterfly, mouse, and winking owl bags were shouldered down the runway.

Though Paris fashion may seem far away and beyond what us college students can afford, looks inspired by these designers for Spring 2002 will affect the fashions in stores. Ruffles, big belts and the nonchalant rock 'n' roll/motorcycle style will be looks to go for this spring.

■ mouth

continued from page 6

when they are grounded when mom and dad catch them tokin' and drinkin'. Oh, so it tells the story of the Kottonmouth Kings.

How do I sum up this album? Spoiled kids, who grew up in "the burbs" complaining about how tough they have it, running from the police, while they are trying to rage "against the man" in the only way then know how, smoking weed and drinking. That about does it. The lyrics are trite, unimaginative, and try and play on pop culture but instead end up getting very boring, very fast. The group has no rhyming ability, even less than Insane Clown Posse, to give you an idea about how bad they really are. The beats are simple and are pretty much repeated throughout the album, as is the melody. As for the theme of the album, guess: Weed. A stupid band with no talent makes a dumb and repetitive CD with no message and a sound that lacks a lot of everything, especially the audience's attention.

www.dailycollegian.com

New England's best? URI upends UMass

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis team journeyed to Kingston, R.I. Tuesday to face off against the University of Rhode Island. Since the Minutemen shut out the Rams 7-0 last season, UMass stepped onto the courts with momentum and perhaps, an edge. Yet, the Rams desire to avenge that loss proved to be a greater source of strength as they dominated the Maroon and White 6-1. The Rams, a non-scholarship program, finished in the lower half of the Atlantic 10 last season, but things change.

URI	6
UMass	1

"They're definitely better than they were last year," said assistant Coach Scott Wilkins. "Last year they lost to UConn 7-0 and this year they only lost 4-3. We usually consider ourselves at the same level as UConn. But we're young and inexperienced now. The guys worked hard but they just didn't get the win."

In doubles play all three UMass tandems failed to deliver, though the No. 1 tandem of Steve Prisco and Scott Sans-Leeb continued to show promise in its 8-4 loss. A back injury to sophomore star Rory Theis, who has been sidelined all season, has severely impaired the doubles play of the Maroon and White.

"Rory is a great doubles player and that would really help us out right now," said Wilkins. "Also, he would add experience to the singles line-up because we have a lot of youth and inexperience with guys like Reid, Scott and Phil, a returner who didn't play much last year."

The one shining spot for the UMass squad occurred at No.1 singles as Steve Prisco continued his winning streak breezing past Bill Moran 6-1, 6-4. In other action, junior Eric Reblin lost a close match to Mike Jacobs 6-7 (5-7), 6-3, 6-2. Also, freshman Scott Sans-Leeb lost a hard-fought match to Dave Gustein 6-4, 6-4.

"I'm pleased with Scott's effort," said Wilkins. "Even though he lost 6-4, 6-4, the guy he played was just hot. His serve was on and Scott had a lot of trouble breaking. Also, he was very positive and really used his head. I told him if he keeps that up, he'll be fine."

In terms of the Atlantic 10, the Minutemen finished second last year losing only to St. Bonaventure in the conference tournament. As a result, A-10 teams that the Minutemen do not usually face like Xavier and Dayton are coming to Amherst to challenge the squad in the spring. For that reason, the loss to the Rams will not jeopardize the team's ranking, if it increases its level of play come spring.

"Right now the loss to URI hurts our conference seed," said Wilkins. "But we have a lot more A-10 matches in the spring than usual. Xavier is coming to Massachusetts on its spring break because they really want to get us. So we still have more opportunities."

Right now the Minutemen will focus on their final match of the season against Connecticut, a solid program that compares to Massachusetts in terms of talent. After a 5-2 defeat at the paws of the Huskies last year in Storrs, Conn., the Minutemen look forward to hosting this rival next Tuesday on the Upper Boyden Courts.

"It's not a hard match to get up for because it's such a rivalry," said Wilkins. "This match can also really change the outlook of the fall season if we win. We're just going to keep working in practice and remain positive. We have to dig deep and the guys know that."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sportsmanship, as it should be.

Cage full of key conference matchups

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

It's crunch time.

The Massachusetts volleyball team faces a crucial two-game homestand this weekend as it plays host to conference foes Temple and LaSalle. Crucial, because the Minutewomen (9-8 overall, 3-5 Atlantic 10) are in the midst of a three-game losing streak and stand below .500 in A-10 play.

"Every match for us is critical for us right now," Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "We've got to start playing a little better. Every game right now is big for us. We can only get better than how we've been playing."

The Maroon and White dropped a non-conference match to Harvard Tuesday night, 3-1, a loss that came on the heels of consecutive road losses to conference opponents Duquesne and Rhode Island. Worse still was the loss of senior co-captain Lymarie Llovet, who fell victim to a severe ankle sprain against the Dukes on Friday night. Llovet is expected to miss the next several matches.

"We need a couple people to step up in Lymarie's absence," Kenny said.

"I think Janeen DeMarte has to be a leader and I think Nitia Small has to step up her performance," she continued. "Clare Baxter has been doing a good job lately too."

The major issue with UMass over the last few matches has been the inconsistency of the offense. In the two conference losses, the Minutewomen hit a combined .188. Tuesday night showed some improvement, as the home squad hit .285, but it was still not enough to down the Crimson.

"We still have moments where we hit .350 or better and then turn around and hit .150," Kenny said. "We need to do a better job on blocking, so we can dig few more balls. Our middle blocker hasn't been closing and our outside blocker hasn't been setting up correctly."

The task that looms at hand for the Maroon and White certainly isn't an easy one. Friday night brings archrival Temple and its 13-5 overall record (5-3 A-10) to town. The Minutewomen visited Philly on Sept. 22 and were rudely dispatched by the Owls 3-0. Lauren Vander Veen's 12 kills were not enough to stand up to a multifaceted Temple offense that had four players post double digits in kills.

"With Temple, we have to do something to slow down its offense," said Kenny, who led her squad to a split with the Owls last year. "They have four people they can go to every time that seem to want the ball every time. We just have to make sure we can defend that."

UMass Temple: Fri.	v.s. 7 p.m.
UMass LaSalle: Sat.	v.s. 7 p.m.

Saturday night, LaSalle will attempt to spike the Minutewomen. UMass trounced the Explorers 3-0 in their lone contest this season, with DeMarte and Llovet each tallying 10 kills. The Maroon and White will have to be wary of senior Kristin Russo, who is LaSalle's emotional leader on both offense and defense. Despite success in the past, Kenny is not taking the Explorers lightly.

"I know that we haven't played as well lately as we did that weekend in Philly," she said. "LaSalle is playing better than they did then, so we have to watch out for them."

Success for the Maroon and White, according to Kenny, is truly simple.

"We just have to perform better." Game time for both matches is 7 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The UMass volleyball team face a critical weekend full of A-10 foes.

■ field hockey

continued from page 14

not the same as game experience," said Shea, herself a former netminder. "The pressure, the speed and the entire tone are so much different.

"With Ashley playing like he is, with her confidence so high, it's a perfect time,"Shea added.

Egland's baked her second-straight donut of the season with help from the home fires, as the Minutewomen played only their second game of the year under the lights of Garber Field. Shea saw an especially motivated UMass defense playing out in front of Egland that fed off the energy of the crowd and bright home stage.

"There's something about playing under the lights," Shea said. "It's a real showcase for them because you get the fans coming out and all the people watching from the towers." Garber Field lies virtually in the shadow of Kennedy Tower.

The very nature of the team may be what makes it so dominant at nighttime play. Shea laughed that her players "rarely get to their studies before 11" and are used to handling pressure after dark.

"I guess I've just got a nocturnal team," Shea said.

Tocco credited the team's impenetrable defense to its great practices of late, in which a newfound enthusiasm has kept the Minutewomen in the perfect mindset for conference competition.

"Practices have been more fun, more upbeat," said the Reading native. "We've been cheering for each other a lot more, and we've gotten excited about practicing."

Wrong page. "Third and 48" is on page 10.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Four Seasons Wine Liquor
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE
KEGS CIGARS CLOVES
CIGARETTES TOBACCO
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome

Business | Education | Communications | Health | Law
GRADUATE PROGRAMS
MASTER'S: Accounting, Business Administration, Computer Information Systems, Health Administration, Teaching, Journalism, E-Media, Advanced Physical Therapy, Biomedical Sciences, Forensic Nursing, Molecular and Cell Biology, Nurse Practitioner, Pathologists' Assistant, Physician Assistant
FIRST PROFESSIONAL: Law, Law/Business Administration, Law/Health Administration
THIS IS QUINN BIMO. THIS IS QUINN BIMO, JR.
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
Hamden, CT 06518 • www.quinnipiac.edu • 203-582-8672/1-800-462-1944

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates Visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

LSAT INTENSIVE REVIEW
• Intensive classroom format
• Scheduled just before the LSAT
• 2/3 of our students score 158+
• 40 cities nationwide
• $349
prepmaster.com

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
FOUR DAYS ONLY! Fri., Oct. 9 thru Mon., Oct. 22
ONLY WESTERN MASS SHOWING NEW 35 MM RESTORED PRINT
40th ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEFINITIVE HEPBURN MOVIE
AUDREY HEPBURN
BREAKFAST AT TIFFANY'S
Curtain Daily 7:00
Value... Added Footage 24 Extra Seconds Free
"It's Fun Night At The Movies"
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
Curtain Daily 7:00
Downtown Northampton
Academy of Music
Movie-Line 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

Attention: Science Majors
Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare
College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
▶ First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
▶ Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
▶ Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area
College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
▶ Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
▶ Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
▶ Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree
For more information and an application:
▶ College of Chiropractic
1-888-UB-CHIRO
e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/chiro
▶ College of Naturopathic Medicine
(203) 576-4108
e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy
UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT

Depo-Provera
Contraceptive Injection
medroxyprogesterone acetate injectable suspension
Birth control you think about just 4 x a year

You've just waited way too long for this

It's been exactly 211 days since "Third and 48 Across the Nation" last hit the pages of The Collegian. That's the day our ex-Sports Editor said we "went too far." He thought that us covering the International Wife Carrying Championships was done in bad taste. Phooey.

"Third and 48" is back. And every other Thursday, you will truly experience the most non-housebroken column in sports journalism history.

The key to our world renown is that we have never created artificial content. The quotes and facts you see surrounding the "Third and 48" logo are absolute in their authenticity. So just sit back, and enjoy.

"Third and 48" is your source for the atypical sports culture.

A Love story f./ The Int'l X-mas Tree Olympics

It's your classic love story.

Boy meets girl.

Girl throws Christmas tree.

Bos falls in love with girl.

Girl moves into boy's mother's house.

"At first I was in shock. I was dumbfounded," said Mark Ferreira, a U.S. Postal Service employee, recalling the time he saw his present girlfriend hoist a Christmas tree and toss it into the air. "I had never seen a girl do that before. But then I was like, 'hey, that's better than your average girl.'"

Her name is Stephanie Abati. Currently a veterinary assistant from East Bridgewater, Mass., Stephanie had no clue that when she chucked the holiday tree that wintry night, its potency would parallel one of Cupid's arrows.

And neither did Ferreira.

"That was my first time [seeing a girl throw a tree]," he said. "I didn't know if I should be scared or turned on or what."

But in the end, it was love. That single timber hurl brought together two beautiful souls and Stephanie now resides with Mark and his mother in the humble abode.

"I'd like to make [tossing Christmas trees] a yearly event to commemorate our love," Ferreira said.

But wait. There could even be a brighter future, beyond the romantic gates.

"Third and 48" Tuesday let the love doves in on a little secret, one we have been exploring for weeks.

Every year in Oregon, in the Willamette Valley, Two Barns farm hosts the International Christmas Tree Olympics.

Thinking this was pretty out of the ordinary, we went and questioned David Stutz tone of the holiday tourney's originators about it.

"Hey, its not wierd!" said Stutz, after we told him that we thought it was. "It's almost mainstream, really...well sort of."

We then asked him how it all came to be.

"When we bought our farm, it came with derelict Christmas trees, and for the first Christmas, we had a party and invited a bunch of friends to cut their own trees," Stutz said. "We encouraged people to take as many as they'd like, and as we were in harvesting trees, people were being silly...running through the dense, closely spaced trees, throwing trees around; that kind of thing."

"The follow up use of trees as athletic equipment was obvious."

Last year's champion goes by the name of "Maynard." We couldn't get a hold of him, though. We assume he probably off flinging little conifers in the snow.

This year's Xmas Tree Olympics a.k.a. "the day for this annual festival of trees, chainsaws, mud, puzzles, and reversion to childish states of mind," will fall on a weekend during the middle weeks of December.

"Now we pre-harvest a bunch of trees and set up obstacle courses, prune them so they can be used for caber tosses, etc, etc.," Stutz said. "People actually compete pretty seriously."

Made up of five events, including the Sprint, Hammer Throw, Caber Toss, Tree Darts, and Steeplechase, the Xmas Tree Olympics are, according to the website, "in time for the new millennium, a new celebration of the brotherhood of man."

But does the "brotherhood of man" clause mean that Ms. Abati, Cupid's Xmas tree queen, won't be allowed to participate because of her sex?

Hell no. As long as you can heave the holiday lumber, you're welcome.

"The toss would be her strongest event, easily," said Ferreira of his girlfriend. "Me, I'd be good at the tree lift [like a bench press.] A couple years ago my tree fell on my head and I had to lift it off me so I think I'd be pretty good. The tree fell like 15 times that year. I was pissed.

"I think that we'd be hard to beat if we were to compete."

Although "Third and 48" believes Ferreira would contend below his sweetie pie's level and is jealous of her talent, we still felt his "tips to throw a Christmas tree better" were worth printing:

"Trees are better when they don't have ornaments on them – they're lighter and easier to throw," he said. "Another good tip is to find a tree that is dead or hasn't fanned out yet. You get better trajectors that way."

In the golden forest, that information is pretty handy.

Shotokai

The Bingham and Young University Shotokai Karate Club will be holding a Special Training Camp Saturday Nov. 3 and from Monday Nov. 5 to Saturday, Nov. 10. No word yet on how Sunday, Nov. 4 will be spent, although unconfirmed suspicions place the BYU Shotokai kids at the devotional by Elder Ben B. Banks at 6 p.m., in the Marriott Center.

Wargamers and Roleplayers

The Guild of Wargamers and Roleplayers (GOWAR) has reserved room 245 and the Cardinal Room in Memorial Union building at Iowa State University for Oct. 13, 2001, to play various games. Games will include Dungeons and Dragons (3rd Edition,) Battletech and G.U.R.P.S.

"Because of the Memorial Union's present room reservation policy, the Guild must reserve its meeting rooms week by week," the Guild's website informs. "The Guild's staff tries to post these weekly reservations by Wednesday morning for the following Saturday of each week."

Mud Wrestling

"Pride. Tradition. Respect."

Three words.

Three words that have something in common

No, they don't all begin with the same letter. Actually, they would all have the same sounding first letter (an "eee" sound) if it weren't for that brainless "R."

So, what these three words have in common is their uncanny ability to represent a nationally treasured athletic competition. These three words, according to the sport's official website, define the most exuberating and breath-taking challenge in the world: mud wrestling.

"Mud wrestling has long enjoyed a long history of popularity," mudwrestling.org says. "Unlike so called modern sports, such as basketball, football, and soccer, mud wrestling has resisted the trend to change the format of the competition to increase the sports marketability."

Damn straight.

The marketability factors of mud wrestling have always pretty much been consistent. There's mud, there's flesh and there's mud-throwing flesh. What's more profitable than that?

Recently, students from the University of North Carolina held an event cherished by all: the third annual, Rock and Wrestle.

Upon hearing of the triumphant return of Third and 48, Andrew Gray, one of the event's co-coordinators, was jubilant to sit down with us and discuss the world of mud wrestling. What follows is the transcript of that conversation.

So just sit and rock. Taen wrestle, wrestle and rock. This is like so good that it's off the rood of the third and forty-8-schnitzel pretzel van.

Third&48: Where did mud wrestling begin, and in your opinion, where is mud wrestling now?

Gray: It started as a joke that we talked about for three months. My girlfriend said, "You can't have a mud wrestling tournament." So to prove her wrong, we had it in my back yard.

T&48: Is mud wrestling "All-American?"

Gray: A good percent of our traffic is actually from international people. Twenty-five percent is from Germans. I'm not sure why.

T&48: Is mud-wrestling sexist?

Gray: Not really at all. If you look, we started with guys and girls mot together, that's not really safe. We try not to focus on the sexiness of it. We try to keep focus on the athleticism. The thing that was most amazing about the last tournament we had was the array of people. It was on graduation day last May, and the parking lot had pick up trucks and Lexuses.

T&48: [504c485]: Mud has become a very popular topic in the world of music today. Have you seen the video "Turn off the Light" by Nelly Furtado? Is mud wrestling with Nelly Furtado considered the, "Super Bowl of mud wrestling?"

Gray: I don't know what the Super Bowl of mud wrestling would be, but I don't think it would include NellyFurtado. Caitlin, the champion of the 1st and 3rd events would definitely be involved though. I don't know. We really like to create this rock and roll thing while wrestling. At the last one we had a Black Sabbath cover band that made it really heavy.

T & 4-T-Ate: Keeping with the mud in pop music topic, recently Limp Bizkit's front man Fred Durst signed a band called, Puddle of Mudd, from the South, to his record label. [Their song, "Control," contains the lyrics: "I like the way you look at me/ I like the way you smack my ass/ I love the dirty things you do/ I have control of you."] What do you think the correlation to mud wrestling and Puddle of Mudd may be?

Gray: We haven't really done much cross familiarity with music and wrestling. Actually mostly just with wrestling and the internet. We're one of the most popular mud wrestling sites on the Internet. No one is really publishing mud wrestling. There are sex sites and there are back yard wrestling sites, but there aren't really other mud wrestling sites.

T&48: What now?

Gray: We're working with some serious players to develop this into TV. Hopefully something like "Battlebots," on Comedy Central. We've actually talked to some companies who really seem interested. Mud wrestling isn't really making as much money as we thought it would be, but I plan to run mudwrestling.org for the rest of my life. People have been begging for the next tournament, but have to wait because it really has to be outside. It would become a big mess if we did it inside. The other thing we've had to resist is going the "girls gone wild" way. There's a company that approached us and wanted us to do that, but we don't really want to exploit it that way.

***

Official merchandise for Rock and Wrestle and other mud wrestling paraphernalia can be purchased online as well.

"Actually, everything we do here was approved by my grandmother," Gray said. "Before we started anything, we got it approved by her."

Roller Hockey

Just a reminder, the University of North Carolina at Charlotte Roller Hockey C team will face division rival The Ugly on Oct. 22 at 8 p.m. at the Charlotte Sports Center. Admission is free. All you 49er fans remember how The Ugly fell 10-1 to the roller hockey fury that is the UNC-Charlotte C team on Aug. 27.

Defenseman and Captain Tom Williams sees that whuppin' as just a minor precursor to the upcoming thrashing.

"We've got speed, we've got an excellent rookie goalie," Williams said. "Our team has bonded quickly, and they don't have the depth that we have. They're not as together as a team."

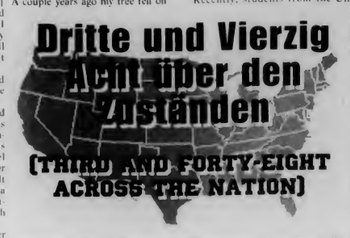

Table Tennis

The United States of America Table Tennis will hold an Eastern Tournament on Oct. 27-29. The tourney will be held at the Boston Table Tennis Center, in Medford, Mass. For more information contact the BTTC at 617 953-1707

Though he did participate in the writing of this column, Ryan Benharris relinquished his title of "Third and 48 coeditor" to Ken Campbell last year. Benharris doesn't even go to school here anymore, so next time you see him, please don't say "Ugh, you're still here. I thought you graduated."

Eric Anderstrom remains a "Third and 48 co-editor... and the rumor that he has a larger role in the column's inscription process than Campbell has been confirmed.

Comments? Questions? Be safe to email us at Thirdand48@yahoo.com.

EVERY MON.!
1/2 price Wings-n-Things 9pm-close
EVERY TUES.!
Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes
BEER!
12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts
THE HARP
IRISH PUB
Full Menu! From Burgers to Lobster!!
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA 548-6900
THURS. 10/18
N.B.F.B (rock 'n' roll)
FRI. 10/19
Traditional Irish Seisiun
SAT. 10/20
The King Bees (hip shakin Blues)
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships
$2,000!!
Applicants must be full-time sophmore and junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Relations Office by Friday, November 9. Four scholarships will be awarded and each recipient will receive $2,000. A complete application must include a resume, academic transcript, essay and a letter of reference
For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317or jag@admin.umass.edu
UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

THE SPITKICKERS TOUR
FEATURING
DE LA SOUL BIZ MARKIE

Friday October 19
Chapin Aud.
Mt Holyoke College
S. Hadley, MA
8 PM
ALL AGES
tickets.com purchase tickets online at tickets.com advance tickets at Strawberries
or call (800) 477-6849
B Side Records - Northampton
For The Record - Amherst

Junior Justin Houck is one of UMass' most well rounded players.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Water polo gearing up for a playoff run

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Among the Midnight/Lappas Madness, the beleaguered football team, and the bright, shiny new hockey team, the most successful Massachusetts team of the fall is quietly producing a marvel of a season.

The Massachusetts water polo team heads into a trio of games this weekend, well rested and hopefully inspired. Coming off of two straight weekends in which the Minutemen took two of three games, No. 14 UMass (16-3, 15-3 College Water Polo Association) heads into weekend battles with the United States Merchant Marine Academy, Connecticut College, and No. 19 St. Francis.

The Minutemen are coming off a two-week rest, during which they had time to regroup and begin a run for the playoffs, which begin in a week and a half. Led by Goaltender J.R. VanderWall with 131 saves on the season and an impressive .665 save percentage, the Minutemen will look to stifle all three teams, though the matchup with St. Francis will certainly prove to be the most challenging.

Head Coach Russ Yarworth has used a good portion of the team's two-week layoff to attack the mental game with his crew.

"I told them 'you know what you want to do, let's do it now,'" Yarworth said.

After the double overtime loss to Queens College he stressed the importance of "playing offense the way we practice it, we need to play the same style in the game."

The defense, which Yarworth says he has been pleased with, will have to keep a strong wall up, so that the offense can find the groove it needs to score more goals. Led by senior Mike Foley (29 goals, 8 assists), the offense will look to strike against all three teams and prove itself before the crucial tests coming up in the next few weeks.

Yarworth also said that the team has used its two-week vacation to "lick [its] wounds, and re-focus for the last push [to the playoffs]."

The Maroon and White will be looking to take all three matches this weekend, but the focus is definitely on St. Francis. The Minutemen take on the Terriers Sunday, at 11:30 a.m., but will first have to dispatch the Mariners of the Merchant Marine Academy Friday night, and then the Camels of Connecticut College.

"The Merchant Marine Academy is a solid team," Yarworth said. "But we will prevail if we stick to our game plan. Connecticut's program is only two years old, so we should be able to handle them as well."

This weekend the Minutemen will need to step up their offense. Yarworth plans to use some different schemes, including rotating his two-meter men, to throw off the defense of the three opponents.

"This week, I sat them down, and railed on them for ten minutes about the offense in the Queens game," Yarworth said. "We are going to do what we have to do to win the Eastern Division Championship. At this stage, we're just about done with conditioning, so we will be able to focus on just playing water polo."

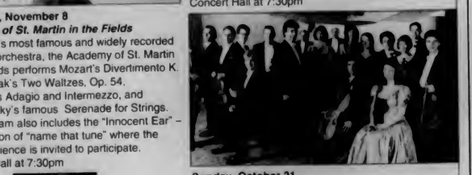
"Now we have to just get this thing rockin' and rollin'" Yarworth said.

UMass will use the next three games as a warm-up for the final regular season match with Harvard, and then the playoffs, which begin with the East Coast Athletic Conference Championship, October 27-28.

It should be an exciting weekend for the Minutemen, who return home next week, on Wednesday, Oct. 24th for the matchup against Harvard. That game will take place at the Pratt Pool at Amherst College. Game time is 7 p.m.

J.R. Vanderwall is one one the top goaltenders in the country.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN



There will be a SPORTS meeting tonight @ 6 p.m. Please call Eric or Jim if you cannot attend. New writers are welcome.

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
2001 - 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $10, $15 for five college students

Thursday, November 1
Theatre de la Jeune Lune in"Tartuffe"
In approaching Moliere's masterpiece 'Tartuffe,' Jeune Lune boldly seeks to re-discover the sensation this play caused when it first appeared in the time of Louis XIV.
Sponsored by Bose Corporation.
"Stirs theatrical juices like no other company" -- American Theatre
Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Thursday, November 8
Academy of St. Martin in the Fields
The world's most famous and widely recorded chamber orchestra, the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields performs Mozart's Divertimento K. 138, Dvorak's Two Waltzes, Op. 54, Bruckner's Adagio and Intermezzo, and Tchaikovsky's famous Serenade for Strings. The program also includes the "Innocent Ear" – their version of "name that tune" where the entire audience is invited to participate.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Sunday, October 21
Gypsy Caravan II
A Celebration of Roma Music and Dance
Thirty-three dancers and musicians from India, Macedonia, Romania and Spain come together for a celebration of Roma Music and dance rarely performed in public.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

Thursday, October 25
Kronos Quartet
This exhilarating, risk-taking quartet will perform music inspired by the part of the world that connects northeastern Europe with the Mediterranean and the Orient.
"What can you say when a string quartet starts its program with hobo songs and ends with encores of Indian film music and surf rock? "Thank you" would be nice for starters." The Washington Post
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

For tickets call:
545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to www.fineartscenter.com

Eleanor Bateman
Alumni Scholar in Residence Program
Fall 2001
An invitation to all interested students, faculty and staff to join the Office of Alumni Relations in welcoming...
Dr. Cynthia Shepard Perry '72 Ed.D.
Ambassador to Sierra Leone and Burundi
United States Executive Director for the African Development Bank with Designation of Ambassador ...for a reception and book signing event.
Dr. Shepard Perry authored the book, "All Things Being Equal: One Woman's Journey"
Top of the Campus, Campus Center
Thursday, October 18, 2001
5:00 - 6:30 P.M.
Dr. Shepard Perry will also be attending the School of Education's Marathon Conference: Today's Leaders Shaping Tomorrow's Future
October 18 - 20, 2001

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Open Public Lecture with Dr. Bruce Stapleton, Redskins: Racial Slur or symbol of succes? Thursday, October 18, 7pm @ Student Union Ballroom Free Admission (Donations Accepted) Call for for information 413-545-4932 JWECC

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1-2 females to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490 $6500

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$350 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands, Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

Substitute Teachers, Cushman Scott Children's Center. In our toddler/preschool classrooms. $7/hour. Contact Ellen Edge at 549-1167 or e-mail ellen@cushmanscott.org. We are an equal-opportunity employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conducting a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Amherst from November 1 through November 8, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until October 26, 2001 For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield, MA 01089. PVPC is an EOE/AA employer.

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, Please Contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065. x 105, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Attention work from home $1200-$5000 per month. 800-953-7104

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

FREE Refrigerator, old but works. 253-9862

MIDI Guitar: Roland GR303, left handed strung right handed; GM70 interface; extras $650 256-4113

African Drums: Djembes Djun Djuns 529-2212 Oneworld Drums

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Dijata Bumpus. Call 413-731-1450. In Amherst.

LOST AND FOUND

Bracelet Found Downtown Amherst. Call to identify. Nicole 253-4791

MUSICIANS WANTED

Experienced rock band auditioning for new vocalist. Experience preferred but not necessary. Call 822-1589 or 348-5784

ROOMMATE WANTED

1-2 Females to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

#1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

- 2 HSCN Bulletin Board
- 3 CBS 3 Hartford
- 4 CBS 4 Boston
- 5 ABC 40 Springfield
- 6 PBS 6 Springfield
- 7 HSCN Music Channel
- 8 PBS 8 Hartford
- 9 HSCN Sci-Movie Channel
- 10 NBC 30 New Haven
- 11 Fox 61 Hartford
- 12 PBS 24 Hartford
- 13 NBC 40 Springfield
- 14 Entertainment Channel
- 15 UMATV (Academic Channel)
- 16 WB 59 New Haven
- 17 ESPN
- 18 TNT
- 19 TV Weather Channel
- 20 Weather Channel
- 21 C-Span
- 22 CNN
- 23 CNN Headline News
- 24 Lifetime
- 25 TBS
- 26 TNT
- 27 A&E
- 28 E!
- 29 Discovery
- 30 Nesbitt
- 31 Cartoon Network
- 32 Sci-Fi Net
- 33 TV Land
- 34 USA
- 35 Comedy Central
- 36 HBO
- 37 BET
- 38 Cinemax
- 39 Bloomberg Financial Network
- 40 College TV Network
- 41 MTV
- 42 MTV2
- 43 VH1
- 44 Q Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 18, 2001

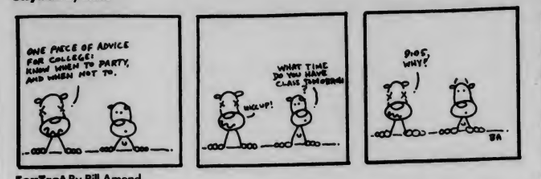
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow UK (N)		Frontline "Dangerous Straits"		Mystery! "Second Sight"		This Old Hse.	Hometime
WFSB 3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Agency (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI 6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Popstars 2 "Episode 1" (N)		Charmed "Enter the Demon"		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Friends (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Never Say Never" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Popstars 2 "Episode 1" (N)		Charmed "Enter the Demon"		News		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Friends (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Never Say Never" (N)		News	Seinfeld
WTIC 8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 2 -- Indians or Mariners vs. Athletics or Yankees						News	Tonight Show
WWLP 9	32	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Never Say Never" (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY 10	6	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Frontline "Dangerous Straits"		Mystery! "Second Sight"		News	Nightline
WGGB 11	28	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		5th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK 12		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	News	Shipmates
WTBS 13		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	★★★ "The Untouchables" (1987, Drama) Kevin Costner. Sean Connery.						★★½ "Renaissance" (1989) Kiefer Sutherland.
A&E 14		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Sanctuary"		Biography Close-Up: Sesame Street				Ultimate Reality (N)		Law & Order "Censure"
CNN 15	23	Moneyline (N)		Evening News	Crossfire	Wolf Blitzer	The Point	Larry King Live		CNN Tonight	Greenfield	Sports	Moneyline
COM 16	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★ "Bye Bye, Love" (1995, Comedy) Matthew Modine.				Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC 17		Wild Discovery: Wild Australia		Wild Discovery: Australia		Would You Believe It		Would You Believe It?		Science Mysteries		Justice Files
ESPN 18		Sportscenter		Gameday		NFL Tonight (N)		NFL Football: Buffalo Bills at Jacksonville Jaguars. (Live)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE 19		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★★ "Blue Sky" (1994, Drama) Jessica Lange.		Crisis	Diary (N)	Dismissed (N)	Music Videos
MTV 20		Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Music Videos (In Stereo)		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)				Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
NICK 21		Oddparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Spongeb	Pick Toons	Family Ties	Family Ties	Cheers	Cheers	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
SCIFI 22		Star Trek		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Farscape "Out of Their Minds"		Outer Limits "Glitch" (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Secrets of Forensic Science
TLC 23	28	Trading Spaces		Daring Copers		Secrets of Forensic Science		Great Egyptians		Egypt's Lost City
TNT 24		NYPD Blue (In Stereo) PA		Pressnder "Mirage" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "White Lie"		★★½ "The Quick and the Dead" (1995, Western) Sharon Stone.				Martin	Martin
USA 25		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Secrets" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Skin Trade"		JAG "The Prisoner" (In Stereo)		JAG "Ghosts" (In Stereo)
HBO 26		(5:00) ★★ "Entrapment" (1999)		Real Sports		Inside the NFL (N)		★★★ "Meet the Parents" (2000, Comedy) Robert De Niro. PG-13		Curb Your Enthusiasm		G-String Divas	G-String Divas
MAX 27		★ "Battlefield Earth" (2000, Science Fiction) John Travolta. PG-13				★★½ "Traces of Red" (1992, Mystery) James Ivory. R				Going to California (TV) (N)		Leap Years (ITV)
SHOW 28		★★½ "Company Business" (1991) Gene Hackman. ITV. PG-13				★★★ "Double Jeopardy" (1999, Suspense) Tommy Lee Jones. R



Dilbert By Scott Adams

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Skybox By Blake

Monty By Jim Meddick

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"Get high off breath."

–Flyer

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 56 LOW: 32	HIGH: 63 LOW: 38	HIGH: 63 LOW: 39

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Chance is sure to play a pivotal role in your affairs today, and your reactions to the unexpected will make all the difference. Don't get careless.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Good intentions alone are not enough today; you have what it takes to combine thought with action in order to maximize your own profits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Someone may be leading you by the nose today, but you're unwilling to change things simply in order to gain a little freedom.

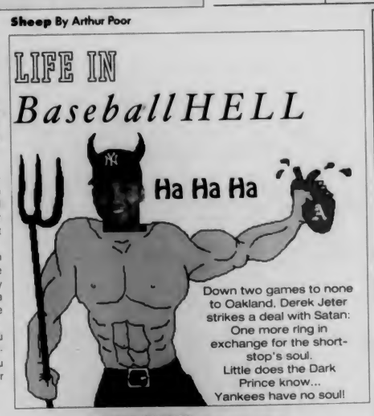
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – This is no time to sit around feeling sorry for yourself! Get out and track down those resurrected goals, and you can enjoy more than expected.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This may prove a low-energy day, but there is still much you can accomplish even without running at high speed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Now is no time to be vague or unspecific with those under you. If you're in control today, you must demonstrate it in no uncertain terms.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can accomplish something rather impressive today, but you must take care that you don't begin believing your own publicity!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Money matters loom; concentrate on special interests that might put a little more money in the coffers. Sample something new during the evening hours.



GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Progress is measured in the smallest of degrees today; don't get frustrated, even when you feel yourself slowing down. Practice makes perfect.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone is bound to ask you a lot of questions today, and it will be up to you to decide whether it's best to tell the truth right now – or not.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You can show a great deal of promise today, doing what you enjoy doing and experimenting just a little. Follow the rules, but be creative.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may be able to give a strong commitment when it is asked of you today – but you can still offer moral support as necessary.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2026 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Stroganoff

Chicken Chow Mein

fruit & cheese special

DINNER

Roast Turkey

BBQ Ribs (F, B, H)

Ginger Black Beans (vegan) (W Basics)

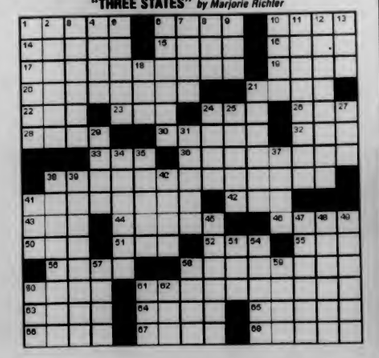
Ratatouille (vegan)

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!
Thurs. Xaivier rock $2 cover
Sat. Art Steele Band blues $3 cover
Sun. Funk and Monk jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst
413-253-4400
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

The Universal Crossword

Edited by Timothy E. Parker May 16, 2001

ACROSS
1 Wounded helper?
6 "Dracula" author Stoker
10 Church section, perhaps
14 Professor Hall
15 Pro follower
16 Praise
17 Conversation opening
19 Recipe qtys.
20 It follows the 180th meridian
21 Insignificant speck
22 Language suffix
23 Mandela's org.
24 19th in a Greek series
26 Monopoly quartet (Abbr.)
29 "Don Giovanni" emperor
32 Jibbing
33 Pie-mode connector
36 Table protector
38 Venomous semiaquatic creature
41 Type of vinegar
42 When you might get there (Abbr.)
43 Add I phone
44 Conservative banks
46 Instinctive motive
50 Transmit sick
51 Tokyo, once
52 Whipped cream unit
55 It merged with Time Warner
56 Part of U.S.A.
58 First name in boxing
60 Second-hand
61 Library sale
63 Cubbies feature
63 Repair
64 Actor Penn
66 Immigrant's Museum island
66 They may be liberal
67 Zip, to Zapata
68 Frozen dumplings



DOWN
1 Tube of name
2 Sin's kin
3 Baggage, e.g.
4 Weight watcher
5 "Wildlife" Lovely?
6 Character with Woody and Diane
7 Offshoot
7 Toothed tool
8 Ingested
9 Villains
10 Counterfeiter
11 Gas-station sign
12 Bernhard's Berlitz book topic
13 Bradley and Sullivan
18 "Ich bin ___ Berliner"
21 Capital on the Gulf of Oman
24 Soft end of the Mohs scale
25 Web celebrity
27 Be a cheer-leading fan
28 Make him/her/it/one
29 Mare foal
30 Beginning of a tape
35 Partner of dangerous
37 Blink's hairy barn
39 Aluminum foil alternative
35 Site of an ill-fated Rolling Stones concert
40 Icon-bombarder of "Catch-22"
41 Ask, in an undignified way
48 Lizard in a Tennessee Williams title
47 Go off on a tangent
48 The puck stops here?
49 Electrical resistance unit
54 Famous film mother
57 Thesis might be split
58 "Coming of Age in Samoa" author
59 "Scenes From a ___" (1991)
60 "Batman & Robin" villain
61 Taxpayer's ID
62 Mad Hatter's drink

PREVIOUS PUZZLE ANSWER

(c) 2001 Universal Press Syndicate
www.unipress.com

"THREE STATES" by Marjorie Richter

Today's Edition

Night Editor: Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician: Tiboro Girazyo-Blum
Copy Editor: Jessica May
Production Supervisor: Rifat Abdul
Production Staff: Francesco DiMeglio, Sarah Vandorfin

INSIDE: The return of "Third and 48." Finally.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Anke Bruemmer powered the UMass defense in its 4-0 shutout of URI.

Garber chilling effect

Minutewomen take advantage of cold Rams

By Jesse Greenspon
Collegian Staff

It was cold outside. So cold, in fact, that the gametime temperature hovered just above the freezing point, and that was without even taking into account the arctic winds that were whistling in from the northwest.

UMass	4
URI	0

Normally, these conditions are not ideal for playing field hockey, and the University of Rhode Island was playing like the weather was affecting it. Unfortunately for the Rams, the Massachusetts field hockey team was treating the frigid weather like it was just another sunny day at the Del Boca Vista retirement home in Florida, and the Minutewomen came out on the front end of a 4-0 score.

"We can pretty much deal with anything," UMass Head Coach Patty Shea said, who has seen her team pick up wins in all kinds of weather throughout her five-year tenure, including rain, cold and even snow. "You can't control the weather so you can't let the weather become an excuse. You have to control what you can control, and that is your play."

"Yes [it was freezing]," sophomore midfielder Kristen Hopwood added. "But once I started running I didn't notice it."

It didn't take the Maroon and White long to get on the scoreboard, as Stacey Blue backhanded an Erica Whiston pass into the corner of the URI net less than 10 minutes in.

With just over 21 minutes remaining in the half, Whiston added to her team's lead when she decided to do it herself, plugging a rebound of a Heather Kenney shot right through the opposing goaltender's five-hole. It was Whiston's fifth tally of the year, and moved her into second place on the season-scoring list.

"We finished on our plays," Shea said. "And when you throw the ball toward goal, good things happen."

The two teams went into halftime with the score 2-0, but when the second half rolled around, the Minutewomen continued applying offensive pressure. In the 21st minute, Hopwood flipped a shot over Rams goaltender Danielle Dangoia after another Whiston shot was deflected directly in front of the net. For Hopwood, the goal was especially significant because it was her first career score.

With just over five minutes remaining, Lindsay Abbott capped off the scoring for the Maroon and White with a goal that wasn't even really her own. The senior fired a shot off Dangoia, but it was deflected from the goalie, off a defender's foot and into her own net. Because Abbott took the shot and was the closest UMass player to the ball, however, she was credited with the score.

One player for UMass who almost completely took the night off was goalie Ashley Egland. It was not that she was playing poorly, but instead the fact that nothing was getting by the stingy Maroon and White defense. Egland had the luxury of stopping only four URI shots on the day, and was replaced by Christine Tocco after the fourth Minutewoman goal.

"They kept it to the sidelines and their individual defensive footwork was phenomenal," Egland said about her defense, despite the fact that captain Kerry Ann Iaggassar was out with an injury for the 10th straight game. "And they kept the ball in front of them."

UMass will next compete this upcoming weekend when it hosts conference rivals St. Joseph's on Saturday and Temple on Sunday.

Bruemmer, defense help Egland rest

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts goalkeeper Ashley Egland got some comforting news prior to last night's field hockey game against Rhode Island at Richard F. Garber Field. A very reliable source informed her that she would be getting some vacation time.

Fresh off a week of award winning field hockey – as in 0.28 goals-against average, .964 save percentage and Atlantic 10 Player of the Week – the sophomore stopper had certainly earned it. But it was not her coach foretelling of bench time for Egland. It was a teammate who has given her a little help along the way as the top scorer on the team.

"Anke said to me, 'Ash, you're going to get a break tonight,'" said Egland, who kept the Rams off the scoreboard in 4-0 win for the home team. "I had no doubt the team would come up as one for this game, and they did."

Egland's second-straight shutout last night did indeed prompt head coach Patty Shea to grant Egland some time off, and with 10:21 to play the call went up for freshman Christine Tocco. Coach Shea said the move was fueled equally by the excellence of Egland and the need for Tocco to get up against live competition.

"As a keeper, you can practice all you want but it's

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 9

Rocky mountain road trip for UMass

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Going into the season-opening matchup with lowly Niagara, UMass hockey coach Don "Toot" Cahoon didn't do much scouting of the Purple Eagles. He was more concerned with how his own fledgling squad would play.

One would think that with a road double-header against No. 7 Colorado College on the horizon, his strategy would change.

Think again.

"I haven't prepared much for them," Cahoon said. "I am more concerned with dealing with our own issues."

UMass
No. 7 Colorado Coll.
Friday,	9:35 EST
Saturday,	9:05 EST

With a youthful squad that will regularly showcase 10 underclassmen on its roster each night, it is understandable that Cahoon will spend more time on his own team's agendas.

But the Tigers (0-2) will have a pair of players this weekend that will be impossible to ignore: Peter Sejna and captain Mark Cullen.

Sejna, the 5-foot-11 Slovakian, is a smooth-skating sophomore who blew up for 58 points as a rookie. The Slovak's speed is lethal, but his nose for the twine, especially in clutch situations, could be even more dangerous. He netted 29 goals in only 41 games last year including three game winners.

As dodgy as the Slovakian speedster is, senior captain Mark Cullen is even more elusive. Cullen was limited to 31 games last year due to a compression fracture of the C7 vertebrae. The injury is especially pertinent to a hockey player because it is a hindrance on neck movement, a key means of vision on the ice. But even with a ten game absence, Cullen showed his mettle by finishing with 53 points, a team leading 1.71 ppg and a berth as a second team All-American.

Stopping the Tigers dashing duo would be tough enough if the UMass defense was at full strength, but with senior stalwart Randy Drohan not making the trip, the order will be even taller.

"Randy has a personal situation that he needs to take care of," Cahoon said. "That's why he's not coming with us [this weekend]."

At the beginning of his final year as a Minuteman, Drohan has stepped up his work ethic and emerged as a solid blue liner. He was arguably the team's best defenseman in the Niagara game, and there was no doubt that he was the most physical.

With Drohan out, captain Toni Soderholm and Samuli Ialkanen will have to take their game to another level. The pair is two of Hockey East's elite defensemen, and this weekend they will have to prove out.

In the offensive zone the Mass Attack is as fast as any team in the history of the program. Rookie speedsters Greg Mauldin and Tim Vitek showed some promise playing with senior sharpshooter Martin Miliko, while fellow freshmen Craig McDonald and Matt Walsh (both sat out the opener) will have a chance to break into the lineup this weekend.

The Minutemen have depth and speed is abundant, but the go-to line will likely be the Tim Turner line. Turner, the team's top returning scorer combined with linemates Jimmy Callahan and Thomas Pock for two goals and four points against the Purple Eagles.

Pock was especially impressive in the first game of his sophomore season with a power play goal and one helper in UMass' 4-2 win in Amherst.

This weekend will be a true test for a team trying to grow up at light speed. Cahoon made a decree when he took over the reins in Amherst. He promised he wouldn't pull any punches as far as scheduling and with the approaching two game set against the No. 7 team in the country, he certainly wasn't kidding.

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Thomas Pock had one goal and one assist in UMass' opening game with Niagara.

Bjork was in Boston. Read about it in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Read about the U.S. National Development Program in Sports.

ARTS p. 5
SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 32 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, October 19, 2001

Racial profiling still a problem says NAACP

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

On the evening of Oct. 18, John Reed and Lee Charlton, of the Cape Cod and New Bedford chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) came to the University of Massachusetts to speak to students about the issue of racial profiling, in the area and elsewhere, which they feel is still very much a problem despite the modern advance of civil rights.

Reed introduced himself as a UMass graduate who, in addition to his role in the NAACP, is a high school teacher in his hometown of Dorchester and also a licensed anti-profiling police trainer in Barnstable. When he was at UMass, he said, he was the first black Student Senator from the Southwest housing area, and he founded the Malcolm X Cultural Center inside Berkshire Dining Hall where the presentation was held. Also, he and Charlton are on the Massachusetts Attorney General's Task Force on Racial Profiling.

Reed began by describing his childhood in Dorchester, saying "We had one issue; how to get out. There was either the right way, or the wrong way, which is the joint, or possibly the Army...Opportunity is a mental set, you are all here because you are putting in the time to get something, but if you, as a minority, walked off-campus, how would you be treated?"

Reed spoke of how his NAACP office receives calls every day from people who feel that they have been pulled over in their cars or otherwise harassed simply because of the color of their skin. "What is the profile, and do you fit into it?" he asked.

Nonetheless, racial profiling is still very much an issue; he went on, telling the story of how students of color at the high school where he teaches always have to be told by him to "pull their pants up," or to stop wearing bandanas in gang colors.

"What do people who are not used to seeing dress like that see?" he asked the attendees. "If you are driving a nice car around here at 1 a.m., could you be stopped by the Amherst Police Department?"

Reed then turned it over to Charlton, who expressed his belief that a significant part of the problem is the qualification and background of the police officer, since higher-up detectives and such may be well trained while street patrol officers lack the benefit of this luxury.

"Police, unless educated, have no options, and they will use brute force if they have to...The patrolmen are not equipped with anything but a nightstick and handcuffs, and they think that if they show any gentility at all the people they are dealing with will take it as weakness...If they see a black person driving a nice car they figure you either stole it or you're pushing drugs...There are 28 documented cases this year alone in New York of white police officers shooting black police officers, and not one of a black police officer shooting a white one; this is a mental image that they have. They've been brought up thinking that black is wrong, black is guilty."

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

NAACP members John Reed (pictured) and Lee Charlton spoke here last night about racial profiling.

While Charlton conceded that the situation with respect to equal rights has gotten much better in the time he has been alive, he urged students of color to stay involved and active in the society in which they are minorities, the most important component of this being registering to vote. "If you don't vote, you don't count," he said.

Reed took back over and ended the presentation by noting that part of his job with the Attorney General's office includes studying traffic stops - since all tickets now denote the race and gender of the operator - to determine if a disproportionate number are minorities, and then speaking with individual police departments to find out why this is the case while attempting to retrain them. Lastly, he encouraged those in attendance to become involved, intimating that those who are the victims of the problem must be the most vocal in pursuing its end:

"It doesn't matter what generation you came from, it matters what you give back. That's why I'm here."

Literature is available from the NAACP and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), which describes what those being stopped or questioned by the police can do to preserve their rights.

Faculty Senate supports libraries

By S. J. Port
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate addressed the crisis over library funding, and voted on the motion requested by the Rules Committee to establish an Ad Hoc committee on Undergraduate Education yesterday.

Director of Libraries Margo Crist addressed the Senate as representative for libraries across the state that will be negatively affected by the recent proposed Educational and Reference Materials (ERM) budget cuts. Crist opened by saying that this was not the first time and would certainly not be the last time she addressed the Senate on issues concerning library budget cuts but hoped, this time, to focus on the immediate concerns created by the ERM budget cuts.

The ERM budget is separate from the University of Massachusetts budget. It is a line item in the state budget, existing in the Board of Higher Education budget, which is both funded and authorized by the state legislature. Recent reductions in the ERM budget from $14 million to $11 million would leave the UMass libraries with "a little under a million less than we had to work with last year," Crist explained.

She added that although the ERM budget is shared among 29 state funded higher education libraries, the UMass-Amherst libraries receive thirty percent of the funds, and "that means that UMass gets thirty percent of the increases and thirty percent of the decreases."

"Facing a million dollar reduction: Can we maintain a quality research library with significantly less in the acquisitions budget?" was the question Crist and colleagues posed for the Senate.

"In the library, our answer would be 'yes'," Crist said. "To quote a Midwestern phrase: we're moving forward, we're praying for rain but we keep on hoeing."

After explaining that she and her staff maintain as positive an outlook as possible, Crist delved deeper into the issue presenting statistical data to support her plight for restored ERM funds. The libraries' acquisitions calendar is designed so that all book allocations for the selectors are completed in August. That month, the libraries also determined how much endowment money they would have to spend in the coming school year. As the school year opens in September, the process of renewing journal and magazine subscriptions begins and runs through until October. By November the library must commit and pay for all subscriptions for the year until the following December. Now October, the library is in the middle of this process and fearful that the budget cuts will harm any plans they have for the following school year. This is especially true since, according to Crist's research, the national inflation average from 1986 to 1999 has been 9% for serials and 4.5% for monographs, with the consumer price index being 3.3%. For the library to maintain its current acquisition of books and journals requires a minimal annual increase of 5-10%.

"The restoration of the ERM is essential," says Crist. "We may not emerge from this as the same kind of library."

Crist presented the other "Factors Impacting Collection Building" with the following arguments: about one half of the UMass book use is by undergraduates, last year the Library acquired less than one-third of the new title output offered by its major book vendor, books go out-of-print very quickly, journal tables of contents can be accessed electronically and technology facilitates the delivery of journal articles, and back runs of journals are available in paper, microform or electronic format.

Crist also noted that the library acquisitions budget is consistently funded near the bottom of their peer group and has historically been an inconsistent combination of ERM and campus resources. She concluded her address by reiterating that the proposed ERM budget cuts would not only result in the "severe reduction of materials acquired" but that "the new solutions and the new library therefore may not look like the old one."

Research Library Council Chair Robert Rothstein read the motion following Crist's address.

"[The Senate] call upon the Governor and the House and Senate leadership to restore the current level of ERM funding and thereby avoid devastating cuts to our libraries".

The Senate unanimously passed the motion.

Next on the agenda was new business from the Rules Committee concerning the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee on Undergraduate Education.

The motion made by the Faculty Senate to establish an Ad Hoc Committee was quickly passed. In addition, an amendment was made to add two members to the committee. The committee will work to coordinate ideas between several already existing councils, but will not replace these already established bodies.

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

GEE WHIZ!
Isn't Amherst beautiful?

Judicial case poses repeat to some in SGA Senate

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

A decision is still pending on whether the Student Government Association Student Judiciary will hold trial for recent allegations made towards the Elections Commission and Speaker Aaron Saunders.

Former Senators Steve Morin and Steve Castillo filed a judiciary case on Oct. 11, and as of today must be notified by the Student Judiciary as to whether the case is up for trial.

Eight days is allowed for the Student Judiciary as well as Attorney General Mike Marrin to review the case and notify the petitioners of their decision. As of last yesterday, neither Morin or Castillo had been notified.

The case filed accuses the Elections Commission and Saunders of not following Title 8, Chapter 4 and Chapter 21 of the SGA Constitution. The Constitution states that there must be at least one Elections Commissioner and one Elections Assistant present at each polling station at all times.

The case filed was a copy of a case filed last year in which members of the SGA petitioned against the Elections Commission as well as former Speaker Jim Eltringham. The case went to trial and resulted in the termination of the Senate under the ruling that the Elections were unconstitutional.

The pending case has thus been called a "joke" by some members of the SGA and according to others, the consequences of the SGA's prior actions.

The case has stirred up a variety of opinions on parties within the Senate as well as those from the outside.

"Everyone is entitled to feel how they want to and take it into the context that they want to," Morin said. "It's really mixed though, some people believe it's the right thing to do, and other people feel that if the same argument that disbarred the elections last year and called them unconstitutional will do more damage than good, but that's what they said last year."

Other members of the SGA have different feelings on the situation, calling the case entirely different from last year's case. Saunders explained that last year's candidates and voters were affected by the outcome of the elections, but this year they were not.

"People see it as a joke. There is a big difference in the fact that candidates and voters were not affected this year," Saunders said. "They want to stir things up and get our focus away from students, and I don't have any

Turn to SGA, page 3

Sexual assaults result in three arrests; suspects held on bail

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Two individuals reported being sexually assaulted on the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus on Friday, Oct. 12.

At approximately 10:48 p.m. that night, officers from the Amherst Police Department were approached by two females who were allegedly assaulted by three men just minutes earlier. The females are not UMass students.

The incident took place in the "maze" near the McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Because the incident occurred on campus, the UMass Police Department was notified and assumed jurisdiction over the case.

An officer on patrol pulled over a vehicle at 1:30 a.m. driving along Route 9 that matched the description of the motor vehicle involved during the alleged assaults.

Police arrested 19-year-old Luis G. Sumba of Northampton, Mass. on the charges of rape of a child with force, and 20-year-old Luis F. Sumba of Northampton for attempted rape, and indecent assault and battery on a person 14 years of age or older. Edgar Guzman, 22, of Amherst was arrested for attempted rape, indecent assault and battery on a person 14 years of age or older. Because the three suspects were unable to make bail, they were held for arraignment in Northampton District Court this past Monday.

According to the University police, none of the suspects or victims had any affiliation to UMass as employees or students.

Massachusetts General Law states that if convicted of raping a child, a person can be sentenced for any number of years.

"Whoever has sexual intercourse or unnatural sexual intercourse with a child under sixteen, and compels said child to submit by force and against his will or compels said child to submit by threat of bodily injury shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for life or for any term of years," M.G.L. Chapter 225, Section 22A states.

The UMPD was busy with other arrests that weekend as well, when they apprehended two students in lot 21. Michael D. Guetti, 20, of Pittsfield, Mass. was arrested for possession of alcohol by someone under the age of 21 along with Michael Cunniff, 19, also of Pittsfield.

On Saturday, during a routine traffic stop on Commonwealth Ave. the police arrested 21-year-old Suk Moon and charged Moon with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

That same night, at approximately 8:00 p.m. 18-year-old Michael Sandler of Randolf, Mass. was arrested for possession of alcohol by a person under the age of 21. He was spotted by police in lot 22.

Following the report of a disturbance in lot 32E, the police arrested 21-year-old Darren Labbe of Salem for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Another report of assault and battery came in at 1:45 a.m. near the Campus Pond.

That incident is still under investigation by the police.

Assault and battery was a common crime this week as police arrested 20-year-old Shawn Rodriguez of Springfield, Mass. for disorderly conduct and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon on Monday. Arrested with him in Coolidge

Dormitory at approximately 7:30 p.m. was 19-year-old Moses Williams III, charged with disorderly conduct, assault and battery and possession of a class D substance, and Jimmy Gonzalez, 20, of Springfield for assault and battery and disorderly conduct.

Native American mascots discussed

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

The issue of American Indian mascots has been a topic of heated debate within the Native American community for years. Some feel that the mascots of sports teams such as the Washington Redskins and Cleveland Indians are antiquated, racist stereotypes, while others feel that they are meant as tribute, and should be received accordingly.

Dr. Bruce Stapleton began researching the issue of Native American mascots when he read of a defamation lawsuit that seven American Indians had filed against the Washington Redskins. He eventually wrote a book on the topic of Native American mascots, titled Redskins: Racial Slur or Symbol of Success? Last night, in the Student Union Ballroom, Stapleton delivered a lecture on the topics covered in his book, and discussed the ideological gap within the Native American community regarding the names.

"These mascots are based on some type of stereotypical Hollywood version of Native Americans," Stapleton said. "Native Americans are everyday people. We don't run around with ponies, with tomahawks in hand. These images of Native American life are so distorted."

Most of Stapleton's lecture dealt with the different schools of thought surrounding the issues.

Stapleton, a District of Columbia resident, focused most of his lecture on the Redskins. He began his speech by giving a short history of the team and its controversial mascot. He explained that, although the Redskins have faced intense pressure from politicians and Native American groups to change their name, the organization has refused to do so.

He described the historical context of the word "redskin". The first known usage of the word is found in the letter of a European colonist, who in 1698 wrote, "There would not be so much to fear if we Red Skins were treated with such mixture of Justice and Authority as they did understand".

Despite the fact that the word "redskin" has traditionally appeared in similarly negative contexts, Stapleton said, there remain many people, both within the Native American community and outside of it, who do not find the word offensive. A recent survey found that only 36.6 percent of Native Americans find "redskin" offensive [as compared to 46.2 percent of the general population]. This placed it well behind words like "injun" and "squaw" with 90.6 percent and 47.2 percent of Native Americans finding them offensive, respectively.

Nonetheless, the word is generally defined as being derogatory, Stapleton displayed the American Heritage Dictionary's recent definition for "redskin" and compared it to the virtually identical definitions of words like "nigger" and "kike."

In researching his book, Stapleton asked Redskins fans for their attitude about the controversy. He shared several of their responses, most of which expressed indignation at protestors.

"Just another example of the politically correct left making an issue out of a non-issue," said one respondent. "To hell with any American Indian tribe that feels bad about it." said another.

But while many fans may feel the team name is inoffensive, many Native Americans disagree. Suzan Shown Harjo, the Cheyenne/Muscogee activist who filed a lawsuit against the Redskins, calls it "an odious word with lineage to bounty-hunting days." Indeed, one of the possible origins of the "redskin" refers to the practice of offering rewards for Native American flesh.

Still, there is no consensus among American Indians regarding the names. Some see the mascots as symbols of respect, while others feel the issue is unimportant. Stapleton mentioned that Barbara Simeroth, a Cherokee, has said that the name is one of only few ways in which Indians are still remembered.

Stapleton, though, ultimately feels that the names are unacceptable. He displayed a political cartoon that asked, "Would African-Americans like to be mascots?" Below the question were two cartoons of blacks with swollen lips and bones through their noses, wearing helmets that read, "Washington Blackskins" and "Kansas City Zulu Chiefs".

He said that he feels that the reason the names are widely accepted owes to the abundance of their use.

"Any propagandist will tell you that if you repeat something enough times to people, they'll start believing it," he said. "The Nazis were masters of that. [They knew that] if you hear that Jews are despicable people enough times, you'll accept it."

At the end of his lecture, he discussed scenarios in which the name could potentially be changed. He suggested that if the team were to lose its appeal of the defamation lawsuit, it would improve the chances that the name would be dropped.

"A ticket or merchandise boycott probably wouldn't work, though," he said. "The fans are giving them unconditional support, no matter what."

Senator John Kerry working on small business relief legislation

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

For the past week, the U.S. Senate has debated enacting emergency legislation designed to relieve small businesses, from software development firms to restaurants, affected by the events of Sept. 11.

If approved, the American Small Business Emergency Relief and Recovery Act of 2001 (SBA) would combat bankruptcies, business closures, and layoffs related to the attacks with low-interest and no-cost recovery loans from the federal government. Currently, economic relief approved by the Bush administration only applies to the airline industry, and the disaster areas in northern Virginia, Washington D.C., N.Y., and N.J.

Senator John Kerry (D-Mass.), Chairman of the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, sponsored the legislation because he believes that Congress must help small businesses nationwide to resuscitate the flagging economy.

"From Philadelphia to San Francisco, small businesses, from bagel suppliers to computer vendors to tour bus operators, are reeling," Kerry said. "Small businesses in America are among the first to feel the pain when economic disaster strikes, but that also means that they are central to the re-birth of a strong and vibrant national economy."

Thirty-five senators have co-sponsored the legislation separating small businesses eligible for relief into three categories.

The first category is made up of small businesses located either in or near the buildings or areas attacked or closed for security measures qualify for the SBA's economic injury disaster loans. Businesses such as brokerage firms located in one of the World Trade Center towers and independent souvenir shops shackled by airport closings could choose to receive either a two-year interest free loan or a four-year loan at two percent interest. In addition, the SBA would extend the deadline for applying for disaster loans to one year.

The second group is made up of small businesses not damaged, destroyed or impeded, but nonetheless were affected by the attacks.

These qualify for 7(a), or federally guaranteed seven percent interest, loans under the SBA. Businesses such as banks, hotels, and travel agencies could apply for 7(a) loans with the option to defer payments for one year.

The third group is composed of small businesses impeded by federal security actions. These could receive capital and investment finance, procurement assistance, and management counseling from the SBA. The legislation would waive the borrower's fee on 7(a) loans and provide access to venture capital for businesses such as Internet and shipping companies.

Before the events of Sept. 11, Infotree Inc., a software development company located in Westford, Mass. would sell software to 80 percent of the travel agencies to which it advertised. Ilen Yang, president of Infotree, said the company "is the largest software provider to the travel industry in America."

But now, no one will purchase the demos that Infotree sends across the country, Yang said. Instead, his customers "just want to survive, no one even calls to request demos anymore."

If the Senate passes the SBA, Yang said Infotree would use the money to "avoid costly layoffs and ensure that the company remains afloat for the next six to nine months."

"The Senator hopes Congress will approve as much funding as possible," Dana Hanson, Kerry's press secretary, said. "Small businesses represent the backbone of the economy and allow capitalism to work; we need to invest in their recovery."

Campuses turn green all over

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

Although many of the nation's college campuses have initiated sound environmental practices, they still need to make improvements in some areas, according to a report published Oct. 4 by the National Wildlife Federation's (NWF) Campus Ecology Program.

"State of the Campus Environment: A National Report Card on Environmental Performance and Sustainability in Higher Education," an ecological survey of colleges and universities, revealed that schools nationwide have implemented green programs in energy and water conservation, recycling and waste production, and landscaping. However, they need to improve recycling, environmental education and transportation management efforts, the report said.

"A surprising number of colleges and universities, of all types and sizes and in all regions of the country, are taking a lead role in striking a balance between the needs of people and the environment," said Jillian Kinzig, manager of NWF's ecology program.

"The best campuses in this survey are providing a green campus for others to follow."

The independently financed conservation organization said they commissioned the Princeton Survey Research Associates (PSRA) to conduct the survey, generating 1,116 responses from presidents, provosts and chiefs of administration and operations at 891 of the nation's 4,100 colleges and universities.

According to the PSRA, each school received three modules of the survey. The management module asked school presidents about environmental support programs; the curriculum module asked academic provosts about environmental courses and teaching, and the operations module asked chiefs of administration about environmental management.

"These results give a good cross-sectional snapshot of environmental performance on campuses throughout the country," said Mary McIntosh, survey leader and vice president of PSRA.

"This data should inspire further discussion about the importance of sustainability and how to achieve it."

The NWF said they established a simple grading system to illustrate the survey's findings, evaluating the nation's schools on energy efficiency, water efficiency upgrades, recycling, environmental lessons in the classroom, landscaping and transportation.

According to the NWF, the nation received an "A" in a category if 90 percent of campuses surveyed supported activities related to that category. While the grades do not reflect the quality or depth of the programs as individual schools, they depict the prevalence of those practices within higher education, the NWF said.

Eighty percent of responding schools use power-saving lighting, earning campuses an "A" for energy efficiency, the survey said. In addition, one-fourth of the schools meet some of their energy needs from renewable sources, and 12 percent power at least part of their fleet vehicles with alternative fuels.

The survey said America's colleges and universities also received an "A" for water efficiency upgrades. Seventy-two percent of schools reported using water-conserving toilets, showerheads and faucets.

Although 65 percent of responding campuses support recycling programs, the nation's schools received a "C" for recycling, the survey said. While the responding colleges and universities recycle all grades of paper as well as building and construction materials, they only divert 26 percent of waste from landfills and incinerators.

According to the survey, eight percent of responding schools require their students to take an environmental studies course, earning campuses a "C+" for environmental lessons in the classroom. Although 68 percent of biology and 55 percent of political science departments offer undergraduate environmental programs, only 12 percent of engineering and 11 percent of education programs offer such courses.

While most campuses provide students with bicycle racks, the nation's schools received a "C-" for transporta-

turn to NWF page 3

UMass and Baystate Medical to share students in new program

By Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

Looking for a better way to deal with the shortage of nurses, the University of Massachusetts and Baystate Medical Center (BMC) started a new program this semester to help counteract the predicament.

It's a three-year project in which 16 third and fourth-year students can have hands-on experience with Baystate facilities.

We must look to innovative new partnerships between academic institutions, such as UMass, and hospitals like Baystate to deal with the challenges of ensuring an adequate and qualified nursing workforce and the development of professional nursing practice in the 21st century," said Sharon Smith, Vice President of Patient Care Services at Baystate, in a news release.

The students involved in this collaboration can benefit from paid internships at Baystate, and scholarships will be available to Baystate Health System (BHS) employees. Baystate contributed more than $475,000 throughout the program to assist with the costs of training for students and professional-development expenditures needed for the nursing staff at the hospital.

Timothy Teehan, director of Nursing Staff Development at Baystate, said that this project is a "win-win" situation for both UMass and Baystate.

UMass and Baystate faculty will supervise the students and nurses, acting as "cultural brokers" on a news release. Both the Visiting Nurse Association and Hospice of Western New England. Thirty-two students are expected to complete this program.

"Considering the breadth of the training and the geographic reach of the project, everyone involved will need some level of support," said Eileen Breslin, Dean of School of Nursing, in a news release. "Our faculty members are ready to provide that support, and we believe their assistance will increase the likelihood that these students will choose to remain at a Baystate facilities after graduation."

The faculty will see towards the retention of new graduates and support staff development through sharing their experiences as well as assisting with projects that deal with those issues.

"If this region can keep four-dozen nurses who have had the benefit of state-of-the-art university training as well as hands-on clinical experience in a Baystate setting, we will all benefit," Breslin said. "Today's nurses absolutely must understand and be comfortable working with many different types of medical technology, and they need the critical thinking and research skills that only a university education provides."

Breslin and Teehan both said that the collaboration was good for both worlds and that both sides will benefit off each other.

"BHS will benefit from the expertise of faculty and staff at UMass who, with their access to the latest research will bring new ideas and new ways of doing things to the clinical setting, and assist us in measuring the effectiveness of our activities," Teehan said.

"At the same time, they [students] need good, solid experience working in a variety of clinical settings, from clinics to trauma centers," said Breslin. "It gives the community a chance to recruit highly skilled nurses trained right here in western Massachusetts."

The project not only includes Baystate, but also includes Franklin Medical Center, Mary Lane Hospital, Wesson Women and Infant's Unit, and the Visiting Nurse Association and Hospice of Western New England. Thirty-two students are expected to complete this program.

"Unless we do something quickly to replace the region's highly trained nurses as they retire or leave the profession, health care resources at this end of the state will suffer," said Breslin.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the Collegian Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiburcu Ginzes-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

ZANNA has it...
Sweater Dusters

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY

T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS
UMASS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for fraternities sororities intramurals bar crawls special events

MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Campus Perspectives

Have you noticed any bad trends lately?

By Martha Olivo

Yogita Mehra
Graduate student
Resource Economics
"I've been here since the summer and there are hordes and hordes and hordes of people since school began. And the weather is getting cold."

Kate Saylor
Freshman
Undeclared
"With all that happened on Sept. 11, there's a lot of violence targeting specific groups."

Francis Gensheimer
Freshman
Undeclared
"The way people treat each other. They don't have enough respect for each other."

Rebekah Reger
Sophomore
Psychology
"Talking on cell phones in class."

Jesse Laughlin
Sophomore
Undeclared
"The leaves changing color. I'm sick of it—means it's getting cold."

Ethan Sullivan
Freshman
Engineering
"People are putting American flags on their cars and they weren't before. And the ads to sell flags. I think it's wrong to capitalize on bad events."

Kirsten George
Sophomore
Nursing
"Girls who wear club clothes to class."

Redevelopment authority reviews streetscape improvements

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

The intersection of Boltwood Walk and Main Street is receiving some improvements to go along with the parking garage, which will add 50 parking spaces to downtown.

The Amherst Redevelopment Authority heard a presentation on a newly updated version of these plans at its October 10th meeting.

Redevelopment Authorities are boards towns can create to oversee areas in need of economic revitalization. Although Senior Planner Connie Kruger admitted in an interview preceding the meeting that "nationwide, redevelopment authorities were much more active in the 1970s," the fact remains that as long as redevelopment zones remain demarked, they and all work performed in them remains the jurisdiction of the Authority, which meets rarely. Its last meeting was back in March.

Senior Planner John Tucker presented the plans for the board's approval, referring to its correlation to the parking garage.

"While we are doing this, we're turning it into a downtown sidewalk improvement project," Tucker said.

Tucker explained that sidewalk improvements throughout town are being made according to a "template." A template is a standard set of design techniques used to give all the sidewalks that use it the same kind of character while simultaneously making them feel less congested. He pointed to North Pleasant Street as an example of this new method's effect when complete and in operation.

Pedestrian movement on Boltwood Walk will be improved with the project, Tucker went on, describing how the sidewalk will pull out into what is now the street and be flanked by railings, both concepts being designed to reduce the slope which can make the walk inconvenient. Less Street will be closed off and terminated as a public way, cut off from traffic by a series of beams that will still allow fire trucks and other emergency vehicles access.

To pacify a concerned bicycle committee, painted hash-lines will denote a separate lane by the park that only bikes may use. One corner of the small park across from Pinocchio's will also be eliminated. One parking space will also be eliminated from the parking project to make way for a handicap walk.

"Blood was shed over this," Tucker said. "We put a lot of accessibility into everything we do now."

At the behest of the Board, Tucker also presented a concept drawing he created of proposed changes to the Starbucks driveway. Although not technically within the Redevelopment District but nonetheless is nearly enough that knowledge of its progress is beneficial to the Redevelopment Authority in looking at its jurisdiction in context.

Kruger highlighted one thing about the Starbucks driveway which is making matters easier for the town: the fact that they, not the business, actually own the driveway, the business owners only having an easement guaranteeing their right to access the 12-foot-wide space. While Starbucks is looking to expand at the rear of its property, the town will have no problem converting the driveway into parking garage access for both cars and pedestrians.

"It's been much cleaner for the town to acquire the property and give an easement rather than have someone else give the town an easement," Kruger said. "That has caused things to become a zoo in some places.

"[This access method] will be both economical and in keeping with the theme."

Outside the entrance to the garage there will be a large, ornamental, spoked wheel. Tucker explained that this symbolizes not only the transportation facilities the parking garage is supposed to improve but also commemorates the history of the area, which during the 1800s was occupied largely by blacksmiths who spent much of their time making wagon wheels.

Redevelopment Authority member Frances VanTreese was concerned about the color scheme being used in repainting the street.

"The painted traffic lines seem a bit garish," VanTrese said. "They don't fit into the subtlety of the rest of the plan."

She wondered if other colors or schemes could be used, to which Tucker responded that while this would be preferable, the state's requirements as to what paints may be used on roads are so strict that there really aren't any other options. Other than this concern, Kruger noted a difficulty that lighting is going to be a problem as its installation will be even more than the previously predicted $66,000 out of a $200,000 town appropriation. The appropriation was to cover aesthetic improvements like lighting and benches.

These were the only problems, however, and the project received the Authority's unanimous approval. Construction will start in the spring of 2002. The parking garage will be completed in the spring and not, due to construction delays, in December as originally planned. Tucker also noted that numerous historical artifacts, mostly pieces of 12 houses which once stood there, are being turned up in all the digging that is going on in the area. They include glass, pottery, a fire hose nozzle, and wooden irrigation and leaching pipes. These are being given to the Amherst History Museum, which is planning an exhibit centering around them.

■ SGA

continued from page 1

interest in playing that game."

Morin disagreed, stating that it's not about getting revenge with the SGA over last years decision, but following the rules.

"If rules are going to be created and filed, then the rules should be followed for the reasons that they were created," Morin said. "I don't believe it's a way of getting revenge or targeting the leadership, principally the same body and leadership aren't in the SGA anymore. Two members of the SGA Coordinating Council couldn't vote to ratify the elections, and that goes to the fact that people had issues with the elections."

SGA President John Sheehan responded to the allegations stating that he was in shock over the fact that a case was filed. Sheehan continued by explaining that the SGA did the best they could under the circumstances at the time of elections.

Chancellor of Elections Sam Blasiak expressed to the Senate that he was to blame for the problems.

"I'm more than happy to take responsibility, after all it is my responsibility," Blasiak said.

Senator Brian Thompson expressed his thoughts on the case by explaining that he was happy someone took the initiative to look into the situation.

"I'm glad that someone has taken the initiative to look into the leadership's actions, and I hope that [the Judiciary] hears the case. I'll be interested to see what the Senate has to say about it, but I don't think it will affect any of the business we do here."

The Student Judiciary has yet to make any decisions regarding the case as of press time, however a decision must be made today or the case will not be heard.

"As of now, no one has tried to contact me to my knowledge, but if the case is brought to trial or not I'd hope that the Student Judiciary would notify me because they haven't yet," Morin said. "The University has my number and address, so they can contact me."

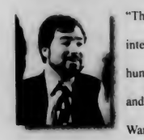
■ NWF

continued from page 2

tion, the survey said. Only one-fourth of the responding schools promote the reduction of single-occupancy vehicles by offering discounted bus passes, faculty or staff carpooling programs, and emergency rides home.

The survey said 60 percent of campuses surveyed practice integrated pest management (IPM) by minimizing use of pesticides and herbicides through careful choice and location of plants, natural insect and disease control, and continual monitoring, earning schools a "B-" for landscaping. Half of the campuses report planting native irees and shrubs, while 37 percent provide food and shelter for wildlife.

On the Net: National Wildlife Federation: http://www.nwf.org



ETI Educational Testing Institute
Massachusetts Teacher Test Preparation
5 Week programs with guaranteed results in Communication and Literacy
Delivering what you need to prepare for success:
• Literacy and communication skills
• Test content and test taking strategies
• Supportive setting and individual attention
• Proven test preparation book and curriculum
• Custom programs and private tutoring
Record of outstanding results:
• Pass rates improve from 12% to 71%!
• Average scores improve over 12% per section!
Join ETI and guarantee your success!
800-399-5448 or consult: www.massteachertest.com

LSAT INTENSIVE REVIEW
• Intensive classroom format
• Scheduled just before the LSAT
• 2/3 of our students score 158+
• 40 cities nationwide
• $349
prepmaster.com

College Street Motors
- Complete Foreign & Domestic Car & Truck Repair
- Oil Changes
- General Maintenance
- 24 hour AAA Towing
- Brake Jobs

500 College St.
Amherst MA 01002
Phone : 253-3200

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Mardi Gras
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE

"That's what you'll find at New England School of Law. Our international law courses continue to expand in areas such as human rights, international organizations, environmental law and international business transactions. We offer the unique War Crimes Prosecution Project, an international law clinic, and conferences through our Center for International Law and Policy. We've even pioneered a program incorporating international law components into domestic law courses. We're looking to the future of our students and the world."
—Michael Scharf, Professor
Director, Center for International Law & Policy
Chairman, Board of Directors,
International Law Students Association
J.D., Duke University School of Law
New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu
ABA-accredited
Member of the Association of American Law Schools
SEE US AT THE LSAC BOSTON FORUM, MARRIOTT COPLEY
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 10-4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Feeding Afghanistan:
A worthwhile effort

The U.S. is pursuing a worthwhile goal in its attempts to feed Afghanistan's hungry. Not only is it worthwhile for the obvious humanitarian reasons, but also because now more than ever, the U.S. needs to win the respect of Muslims abroad.

There is, without question, a war of allegiances going on in the Middle East and Central Asia. Arab nations are unsure whether to support us against the Taliban, or whether to oppose the nation which it has historically seen as an oppressor. The role of these countries cannot be overstated. Yet America has made little attempt to present its case to the Muslim world.

Recently, National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice agreed to grant an interview to Al-Jazeera, the world's only independent Arabic language news channel. It was the first attempt by anyone in the White House (or any U.S. politician, for that matter) to try to appeal to everyday Arab citizens. While Rice is to be commended for her willingness to speak on such a channel, one has to wonder what's taken the Bush administration so long.

The only previous interaction that the U.S. government has had with Al-Jazeera came in the aftermath of the bombings, when the station was running virulently anti-American propaganda. The State Department filed a complaint with the government of Qatar, in which Al-Jazeera is based, and asked that the network discontinue running anti-Western material. This decision was a complete disaster, and was seen by most Muslims as an attempt at censorship.

Meanwhile, rumors abound in Muslim countries that Israel was somehow responsible for the attacks of Sept. 11. A recent poll showed that 48 percent of all Pakistanis believed this to be true. An absurd rumor that all 4000 Jews that worked in the World Trade Center mysteriously declined to attend work that day has a legion of followers, not only in the Middle East, but also in this country. Yet President Bush and his advisors have yet to address the rumors. This may be due to a perfectly reasonable willingness not to promote the rumors any further. When one considers the extreme importance of Pakistan and surrounding countries in our affairs with Afghanistan, though, it becomes clear that the U.S. must work to convince them that Osama bin Laden, and not Ariel Sharon, was behind the attacks.

For this reason, the U.S. must release its evidence that bin Laden was connected, instead of merely alluding to it. Promises were made that most of the information must be shared with the public, with some of the most classified information shown only to foreign diplomats. Now, those promises seem to have been forgotten. Concerns that the information may be dangerous if disseminated may be warranted. But surely some evidence giving credence to the assertion that bin Laden was behind the Sept. 11th attacks could be provided.

The U.S. has developed a reputation for being unconcerned with the opinions of outsiders. In the 1990s, when we saw ourselves as invincible guardians of the world's only superpower, our lack of consideration to such matters was seen as acceptable. But now, as America fights a war on terrorism, such arrogance cannot be tolerated. We need all of the friends that we can get.

Information from Salon.com was used in this article.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

The Collegian
is always accepting student columns and letters. Although we can't guarantee your piece will be published, we continue to appreciate and encourage your involvement.

E-mail us at
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

A day of exploration

Prepare yourself for an onslaught of the first person. As you strap yourself into bucket seats at the Bluewall, dining hall planks and living room couches, make sure you have a box of tissues and a bottle of scotch within reach. I'm going to disrupt my weekly feed of political rhetoric for a moment to tell you about why I broke the streak.

Because of the sad events I witnessed and participated in Thursday afternoon, you won't have to listen to my progressive pleas for six days. The World Bank, NAFTA, and the Religious Right will have to wait until next Wednesday before I resume criticizing their shortcomings and rallying their opposition. So hang up the telephone, shut the television off, and close your textbooks.

I know my colleagues at the newspaper will appreciate the streak. Like myself, they sacrifice their personal hobbies, academics, and debauchery to provide the UMass community with information about the secular spheres they live in. This semester, while writing stories for the news department and columns for the editorial page, I managed to attend every meeting of the five classes I am enrolled in. Although this violates every tenet of writing I have learned at this university, notice that I used the past tense in the previous sentence.

For the past three-and-a-half years, I have not served as a model of academic consistency. I have spent morning lectures languishing hangovers, semi-conscious on dormitory kitchen floors. I have skipped exams to visit girlfriends attending universities on the eastern side of the state. I have read more magazines, websites, pamphlets, and newspapers than textbooks. But this semester I had resolved myself to terminating this immaturity. No more grades that insult my intelligence, teachers ignorant of my name, and early morning sobriety tests. And to my credit, I thought I had accomplished my goal.

On Thursday, buoyed by a renewed enthusiasm and fueled by a ethereal confidence, I decided to skip my early morning journalism class to prepare my resume and writing portfolio and attend the humanities career fair at the Fine Arts Center. Five minutes after I opened the streaky glass doors guarding the Fine Arts Center from artistic sensibility, my hope dissolved into a depressing anthrax that dripped down my throat and melted the augurs of a fulfilling future housed within my heart.

As I surveyed the rabble of dissatisfied employees drinking coffee and chatting amongst themselves, I decided against writing an article I once courted about the university's budget. The reality that UMass siphons funding from its melange of academic departments would not surprise anyone. Perhaps only I choked on a Newport when I learned that the university spends less on academics than its peer universities at Rutgers, Nebraska and the University of Connecticut.

> "Surely, employers from newspapers, publishing houses, and linguistic communes from across Mass. know that a degree from UMass demands little, if no, attention from the economic table whose scraps I had hoped to fetch."

Surely, employers from newspapers, publishing houses, and linguistic communes from across Mass. know that a degree from UMass demands little, if no, attention from the economic table whose scraps I had hoped to fetch. My fellow students knew why schools in Boston cost two to three times the tuition at the university, why had I allowed naivete room between my heart and my head? At 11:30 a.m., I counted 12 students wandering about the center, their jilted eyes beyond tears.

The Campus Career Network billed the fair as a "day of exploration for UMass Humanities Students." Thrown into an oasis, my fellow spelunkers and I explored the room for employers promising even the most degrading of jobs. We found 13 booths where we had been promised 18, co-ops and internships where we expected jobs. For journalism hopefuls, only two of the five media companies abandoned their pride to attend the fair. They spoke politely, pitied my prospects at prosperity, received my resume, and gave me pens and mousepads.

Before I left the Arts Center, I spotted my roommate filing through the propaganda she received as she walked into the fair. We sat down and discussed the paucity of potential present amongst us, our voices struggling to overcome the maudlin symphony music reverberating the despair that blanketed the sparse booths at this pretentious fallacy. An officer of the field experience office approached us and asked my roommate if she could assist her. When my roommate asked her what booth belonged to one of the companies advertised on the fair's pamphlet, she responded, "They are not coming, they didn't call or anything." Shortly after we stood up and left the fair, I tossed the 10 resumes I had skipped class to prepare into a recycling bin. "I should have gone to class," I told my roommate, a frown stapled to my face.

I realize that the career network has never sponsored a career fair before. I realize our country has entered a severe recession, companies are laying off employees, and job prospects are minute. But now, I realize that the $40,000 my parents and I have bled to finance my education will serve only to sharpen my conversations at dinner parties and punctuate the writings I pen from my parents' living room.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

It only takes one: get active in your campus community

JAMIE LOO

There are a lot of things on this campus that make me bitter. I could only get into one class in my major and one in my minor this semester. The Hatch is rarely open at reasonable times for the average student. There are potholes everywhere, which destroy our cars and delay the PVTA buses.

Orchard Hill is slowly being taken over by Commonwealth College students and squeezing out non-honors students. The housing freeze is over and there are still students living in lounges. Our library is losing reference materials and periodicals and we have the largest collection in the area. It's been freezing but there hasn't been any heat in my dorm, and later this winter I'll be baked like a turkey because there will be too much of it. In many courses you will never see the professor, but rather be taught solely by teaching assistants. I'm paying $60 to park in dirt at the admissions building about two blocks from my dorm. It's also tough to get an escort service that late at night. Oh yeah, and the dirt lot doesn't get plowed in the winter so I'll have to dig my way out, or according to some students, I'll have to pay to get my car towed out of my spot because of the mud. I'm sure you can relate to many of these gripes and can add many more.

One thing that really concerns me is the huge spending gap between the athletics department and academics. I like sports, but if supporting the athletic department is going to create a situation where I can't graduate on time, then my priorities shift. Sure, it brings national prestige to the school if the athletic program is good, but what does it do for the student body? I'll openly admit that I almost chose UConn over UMass (go ahead boo me, hate my guts if it will make you feel better) but quite obviously I saw the better choice and came here. One of the biggest turn offs I found at UConn was the amount of money they spent on athletics. When I was looking at the school, I saw this huge map in their admissions office, with spaces marked as "new." I asked the tour guide what was being built assuming it was a new library or dormitory, maybe classrooms. They were new intramural athletic facilities, which would cost a few million. The new fields were going to be great because the other four intramural facilities they already had were becoming old, and run down. Apparently, the majority of the student body at UConn participates in athletics, because if they can't actually play for the school, it will just become an extra-curricular activity. A few million for new intramural facilities? That factor alone also determined the student body, which would be mostly athletes, and I didn't want to be in that environment. There simply wouldn't be enough diversity of opinion, and if you were non-athletic, what would you do there for fun?

But athletics is only one aspect money is being mishandled at UMass. The list I made at the beginning of this column must strike a few nerves or inspire other problems you have. And what's being done? Nothing. Or at least not enough for administration to look over the rims of its bifocals and break out the school rioting code. Nothing is being done because we're not asking for things to be done. Most of us sit back and think that things cannot change. We're not directing our anger towards productivity, and then we label the people that want change. We label the people that go to student protests as the angry graduate students, radicals, hippies and students looking for reasons to protest. If you don't know one, I dare you to approach and talk to a "hippie." You'll probably have more in common with you than they think. "Hippies" are also students, who suffer from the same problems with this campus that everyone else does. "Hippies" also have trouble getting parking permits, and into the same class you need to graduate. And some of those angry graduate students are great teachers when we don't have professors, but they're not getting paid enough to be teachers and students at the same time. Basically, we're all getting screwed by the system together and the few people that are trying to organize and fight the system every day are being discriminated against by the rest of the campus. If you're not going to do anything to try to make your life better, then don't criticize the leaders that are trying to fight for you. I mean, I've listed enough things that if we all pooled our anger together we could take over Whitmore. Students have taken over Goodell, which was administration before.

> "If we don't struggle to make things better now, we will never get things accomplished and students of the future will have a tough time getting back the things we let slip away."

On occasion I've heard students complain that there is nothing to fight for anymore. We cannot organize ourselves to be a Civil Rights movement or to match the anti-war protests of the 1970s. I say that they are completely wrong. We are surrounded by injustices every day, large and small that deserve attention. They might not be huge moral crusades, but whatever your gripe is, it's obviously significant enough for you to complain to your friends over dinner. If it's something that inconveniences you daily or bothers you more than once a week, isn't it somewhat important in your life? If we keep letting administration rob us of our education and basic services that other college students have, there will be nothing left. And once something is taken away it's even tougher to get back, which is a lesson we can take from the Civil Rights Movement. After reconstruction from the Civil War, things improved for blacks, but only for a short period of time. Things became too comfortable for one group of people, and worse for another group. In the following years, the government did not do a good job enforcing laws or fixing the problems in the past, until things got so bad that there needed to be a large revolution. The Civil Rights Movement was a long and bloody battle, and happened at the absolute breaking point for blacks.

Is that how things are going to get, to our sanity's end? Are we going to return as alumni to see our campus completely ruined? If we don't struggle to make things better now, we will never get things accomplished and students of the future will have a tough time getting back the things we let slip away. As students we are not demanding enough from this administration and are too content with sitting back pessimistically, thinking that we can't question the system or make a change. Change only takes one person. Take a step to do something: talk to your SGA senator, organize an interest group, join a registered student organization. Don't let your problems linger and become overly comfortable. A comfortable situation can only lead to a rude awakening.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian columnist.

Funky tour rats

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

How many of you guys have been to a show and been outraged at the scum around you? Why do people even think about taking advantage of one another, at a hippy concert nonetheless? I simply wonder if people realize what they are even doing, by just using people as they travel from city to city with their favorite bands. In my opinion, these people are the only negative aspect of the entire jam band scene. Every other second spent on tour or attending a show is full of bliss, except for when I encounter these people. I am not sure if it is just me, but nothing else makes my blood boil more than tour rats.

For those of you who do not know or understand what I am speaking of, a tour rat is an individual who chooses to follow his favorite band, yet have no personal attachment for the band or even care about the music. A tour rat can take many forms. They can be everywhere and hide almost anywhere. When walking anywhere inside or outside of a venue, please watch underfoot as you might just step on a tour rat. A tour rat tries to blend in with his/her surroundings. Many times it is difficult to decipher exactly who is a tour rat and who is not. While trying to figure this out, please use these tips.

1) Is the person in question asking for something from you? (Please do not confuse with legitimate venue staff)

2) Does the person in question expect other "kind" people to help them stay on tour?

3) Does the person in question ruin the jam band scene?

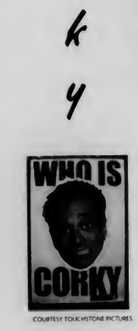
If the answer to one or more of these questions is YES, you have a legitimate tour rat candidate. Please do not pay attention to these people, or even think about giving them money. Why should they get in the show for free, when you yourself had to spend your hard earned money? May I place as evidence of this behavior the current state of the jam band nation. The biggest band, Phish, is currently on a possibly permanent hiatus. Why is Phish on break? Some may say that the band needed a break. I truly believe that the band realized that everybody needed a break, especially from the tour rats. Climaxing during Fall 2000, the tour rats finally had made the scene unbearable. It was very difficult to even get into the Pepsi Arena in Albany because so many people were just standing outside with that mysterious "one finger in the air" pose. It got to the point where I vowed that it would be my last Phish for a while.

Unfortunately, I didn't know how true I was when they began their hiatus almost a month after this show. From what I have heard and read, the common tour rat also ruined the Grateful Dead scene too, by mooching off the scene for so many years. I just hope that the String Cheese scene doesn't turn ugly. I have a gut feeling that it won't, simply because many of the fans will not stand for it.

New Groove of the Week: Psychedelic Breakfast

These grooveosters from New Haven are lighting up the New England jam band scene. With their complex arrangements and powerful jams, these guys will be here to stay. On any given night they break out tributes to some of their favorite bands. Most common are covers from Phish, the Dead, Zeppelin, Zappa or even the Red Hot Chili Peppers. With their varied setlists and exciting performances, PB has been a Bitterfield favorite throughout their two-year career. They are finally beginning to gain wide acclaim around the scene. Check them out when they play the Springdale Turn Hall in Holyoke, Mass. on Friday, Nov. 2.

Upcoming Shows:



John Brown's Body and Almighty Senators at the Iron Horse on Saturday, Oct. 20, 10 p.m. Dispatch, with support from Addison Groove Project, Sunday, Oct. 21 at the Calvin Theater in Northampton. DJ Harry and Dr. Didg, downstairs at Pearl Street on Wednesday, Oct. 24. String Cheese Incident playing at UNH on Thursday, Oct. 25, here at the Mullins Center on the 26th and at RPI in Troy, N.Y. on the 27th. Support your local music scene and have fun!!!!

COURTESY DAVE SIEGEL

Tour rats – can't live with them, can't tour with them either.

Corky Romano

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

One can't understand the true twitching of Chris Kattan in this still.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

Corky Romano – it's a rough time.

Corky dumb, insulting and corny

By Nick Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

CORKY ROMANO
Starring Chris Kattan and Peter Falk
Directed by Rob Pritts
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

Why did I see the Chris Kattan picture Corky Romano? Well, in a moment of weakness, I honestly believed it would be a funny movie. Now, I wasn't expecting Happy Gilmore funny or for that matter Wayne's World 2 funny, but a reasonable movie at best. Instead, I wasted five dollars on an hour and twenty minutes of a nonsensical, practically humorless, and mind- numbing movie, that would have been better off being released directly to video as a Blockbuster Video exclusive or better yet not being made at all. I find myself dumber after seeing this movie.

The plot boils down to this, mob boss "Pops" Romano has a heart attack after being indicted by the FBI, and it is suggested by his second-in- command that his "black sheep" son, Corky, should go undercover and destroy the evidence they have on Pops. Corky is unlike the rest of his family – he is happy-go-lucky, and more clueless than is humanly possible. He honestly doesn't believe that his family is in the mob, despite the estate and the highly publicized affairs of his family. So he goes inside the FBI as a highly decorated agent Corky Pissant (a joke that doesn't get overplayed enough to be funny). All this happens in the first thirty minutes, and what followed led to a small amount of laughs from a sparse, slightly amused audience.

The best word to describe Kattan's performance is spastic. From the second we meet Corky, we see that under pressure, he tends to freak out. Half the jokes are over his jittery body movement - one of his trademarks from his presence on "Saturdas Night Live." So for over an hour we see Kattan vibrate in different situations. He's either just inhaled a kilo of coke or being electrocuted; he shakes and acts as if he has mixed Stacker 2, espresso, and Jolt Cola. However, for some strange reason, we laugh at these repetitious movements. Perhaps because he mixes it up a bit, he might not always shake rapidly, he might also throw some twitches and stutters in there for good measure.

The supporting cast consists of Peter Falk (TV's "Columbo") as the patriarch of the Romano family, "Pops" Chris Penn (Sonny from Reservoir Dogs) as Corky's brother with latent homosexual tendencies, and Richard Roundtree, better known as Shaft. And despite how you feel about their collective past work, this film will have you asking, why? None of the characters were written well, and as if to play a cruel joke on the director and screenwriter, the actors seem not to even care about the character or the film. At times, it's evident they are just reading through their lines to get their paycheck.

Speaking of the script, I should perhaps change it to the lack of a script. Not only was it unfunny for a majority of the movie, but it also was extremely predictable because the small story that is featured could be read from a comic wrapped with Bazooka Joe chewing gum. It goes from one situation to another, and all revolve around Kattan jittering or dressing up in disguises that range from a skinhead smack dealer to a Girl Scout selling cookies (the first being perhaps one of the funniest moments in the film with Corky sporting a fanny back with pink swastika). My thirteen-year-old cousin could write funnier material. And I believe that Corky Romano is the first project written by a hundred monkeys on a hundred typewriters, and although it's not Dickens or Shakespeare, it is a start.

Jokes in the film revolve around homosexuals, mentally challenged people, the elderly, and those who are illiterate. Even though sometimes these politically incorrect jokes can bring levity to the topics, in Corky Romano, they are just insulting, not so much to those groups, but to the viewers who expect and demand a higher quality in their controversial comedy.

Kattan's SNL character, the missing-link Mr. Peepers, has more depth and humor in a five minute skit that has him humping anything from a fish tank to Katie Holmes, than this entire film could even hope to muster. Corky Romano is dumb, insulting and should have never been made. The script is unfunny and just plain moronic and besides Kattan (who at times does bring a smile to the face), the cast and characters have no dimension or reason for being. The film is of such poor quality, that it is blatantly obvious when facades and cheap special effects are being used, and the music is trite and without any reason besides distracting the audience from possibly the worst film made in the last ten years. Kattan should stick to SNL characters and SNL movies. A film version of "Goth Talk" would be better than this straight-to-video movie. A terrible movie, and I do not, will not, and cannot recommend it to anyone, even if you are drinking.

Suicide Kings

By John Reid
Collegian Correspondent

THE SUICIDE MACHINES
Steal This Record
Hollywood

Punk rock is growing up, getting a little older and maybe even changing its image. The fourth release from The Suicide Machines is here. The Detroit-based ska/punk fusion has been on the map since their 1996 release of Destruction by Definition, which featured such great songs as "Vans Song," "Hey Ska," "Our Time," and the Tony Hawk classic "New Girl." It was a "skater punk" album, and was followed in 1998 by a politically charged 22-song album entitled Battle Hymns. This was the band's most complete album and most controversial by far.

I speak for most Suicide Machines listeners when I state I would like to forget about the release of The Suicide Machines in 2000. Although many radio listeners have heard "Sometimes I Don't Mind" float through the pop airwaves, as far as the rest of the album, it did not seem to reach the expectations of listeners.

Now let's give the band some credit; they put out two great albums in the 90s which, by mainstream standards, went almost unrecognized. Among skate scenes and an act on the Vans Warped Tour, they were well respected. What the Suicide Machines have done, and the expectations of this album, are open to discussion. Desperately hoping the album to be incomparable to the others, but at the same time still The Suicide Machines. They never seem to put out two albums of the same style.

The sound of Steal this Record sounds like the first three records all rolled into one. Still, nobody seems to have too much to say about it. Listeners

Turn to SUICIDE, page 6

COURTESY BOB ALFORD

Suicide kings: music about fuzzy lambs and shiny happy people.

Comedians kick it in Bowker

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

Green eyes will be looking back at you, tonight at Bowker Auditorium. Straight off the "NY Kings of Comedy," Gerald "Green Eyes" Kelly, Rasheed and Paul West will be ripping up the stage with their comedy acts from 8 to 10 p.m.

Kelly has been seen on HBO's Def Comedy Jams, Showtime At the Apollo, and BET's Comic View. He has worked with comic superstars Eddie Murphy and Martin Lawrence, and has opened Jay-Z and Mya shows. An eight year veteran of the comedy stage, he shares the spotlight this evening with rising talent West, who has become famous for uncanny impressions and clean-humor take on life.

This evening's event is sponsored by the Black Student Union, and tickets are $5 for UMass and Five College students, and $8 for general admission.

Following the performances "The X" will host an after party from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m. DJ Playtime will emcee the event. Tickets are cheaper with a stub from the Bowker performance.

The Kings of Comedy originally featured Steve Harvey (from the WB's "Steve Harvey Show"), Bernie Mac (from Fox's "The Bernie Mac Show"), and Cedric the Entertainer and D.L. Hughley (from ABC's "The Hughleys.") A touring show, it ended up being the largest grossing comedy show in American history. While it garnered little press, a subsequent documentary/show shot by Spike Lee was theatrically released. The show was released to rave reviews heralding a return of impressive, touring stand-up comedy. Its influence spawned several offshoots, including the "Queens of Comedy," a touring show featuring four female comediennes, and tonight's show.

COURTESY BJORK

Bjork: she's a devil with a grass dress on.

Björk in Böstön

By Simeon Bittman
Collegian Staff

BJORK
October 12
Wang Theatre

Bjork's gliding elegance and playful cuteness soaked the crowd's hearts with love last Friday night when she performed at the Wang Center in Boston. She evoked nostalgia for the faithful fans, and brought new appreciation for her latest CD, Vespertine, by seamlessly choreographing beautiful orchestral music with electronics.

Since her days with the Sugarcubes, a band founded in the early 90s, Bjork honed in on human emotional staples like love, anger and frustration and she did it with a child like sincerity. The hit from her first solo CD, "Human Behaviour," ushered in the deranged complexities of the human psyche in a way that showed she was bewildered by people's actions. It was the way the physically modest 30-something-year old presented her observations, from a seemingly naive child's perspective, that helped to drive the message home.

Her take on people and their relations with others has affected her fans because they wished to think like children again when things were more pure and cute while also retaining the more experienced viewpoints of adulthood. She has helped her fans grow up alongside through combining the experiences from her entire lifetime into the music she releases now.

Yearly progression is what it has to appear to be as Bjork's most recent CD showcases, released in 1997.

Bjork waited before she let the electronic music scene in the late eighties setup the underground rave scene was blossoming in Europe and on the West Coast of the U.S. She brought to the new scene a classical music background and a knack for writing in a very direct, girl derived way. Some say she wrote so simply because English is her second language, the first being Icelandic. Others, like punk poets and musicians from her early days in Iceland, say that she just had a way of writing straight from the heart. Either way, Bjork combined her talents and tastes into her music, and the result was the graceful timbres of strings and brass, the advancements in musical technology, and the pure voice of a girl who can scream with the glam rockers or be soft like the Victorians.

"You're on your own now...we won't save you. You're rescue squad...Isssss tooo exhausteeeeeed!" is from a song called "Army of Me" released on her album Post. Bjork performed a version of the song with a hardcore, angry group named Skunk Anansie. The drawn-out words of the quote denote her powerfully controlled screaming voice while the words written straight represent the softness of her voice. The original version of the song has loud explosions, electronic tweaks and a strong rhythm.

Old fans of Bjork purchased their tickets ranging from forty dollars to over one hundred dollars just to hear her sing the old tunes they may have cried to or beat up their pillow during. Others came to hear her new tunes. Style kittens aware of Bjork's innovative fashion sense came to see her latest variations on bird attire (did anyone see the swan dress she wore to the Academy Music Awards this year?) She wore it during the first half of her set at the Wang Center, along with a red dress made from 2,000 microscope slides individually painted red by Alexander McQueen. Looking down the aisle, punks dressed up, forty-year-olds, and teen candy ravers were crying, smiling, and hugging, truly revealing their reasons for coming: emotional outpour.

Matmos, an electronic duo, tweaked knobs, blasted beats, and cuddled with each other in the background while the choir members from Greenland danced barefooted in front of their microphones. A musician named Zeena Parkins jammed on the harp and accordion among other things. A pit orchestra from Boston hid just below the front of the stage. All sounds were almost perfectly combined in the large, aristocratic auditorium.

Bjork is an icon because she can elevate people and give them piece of mind. Her style is inspiring to musicians, and it rings unobtrusively in the ears of people with cultured musical tastes. Bjork's performance at the Wang Theatre was verification to her fans that she knows what's up.

COURTESY DENNIS KELLEY

Counting Crows played Tuesday night at Smith College.

Counting Crows... They've been hangin around Smith

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

Adam Duritz has got the sensitive male thing down. His performance is an open and honest dialogue with his audience. It's good friends having a good conversation over coffee. Well, except for the stage and the people and the lights and the no coffee. But the Counting Crows are good at making these things fade away.

Tuesday's night concert packed Smith's John M. Greene Hall, which doesn't look much bigger than a high school auditorium, with what seemed like some of the band's biggest fans. Or fans of a noticeably heftier Duritz.

The Seattle natives The Actual Tigers opened. Duritz announced their recent album release with an eagerness that inexplicably made me really want to like these guys. Excepting for a bland song titled "Bad Day," which was obviously created to go the way of the single, their brief set was enjoyable. And when they could actually get the crowd out of their seats, they were good. Their rhythmic numbers, which incorporated bongo and some great percussion, were by far their best. Imagine Paul Simon circa Rhythm of the Saints, except not as good, meets bongo-heavy Guster, except not as hackneyed.

It did take us to the end of their set to realize that Duritz said "The Actual Tigers," and not "The Actual Tires," or "The Actual Tigris," as in, "and Euphrates." But, their name turned out to be apropos, and the stage a veritable fertile crescent of cuteness. The fashionably hip Tigers looked fresh from the thrift store, all the way down to their old New Balances.

Me: Oh, they're called The Actual Tigers.

My friend Amanda: The Actual Tigers? Boy, are they. Grrrrrrowl.

The Smith concert was one in a series of smaller college stops along the tour, which is, ostensibly, a testing ground for their next release. Their most recent album, This Desert Life, was released in 1999, and it seems like the band hasn't stopped working since. The new songs, for which we were the willing test subjects, were polished and poised for recording. And as an added bonus, or maybe a trade-off for not singing "Round Here" and "A Long December," Duritz began every new song with his explanation. They were punctuated with biographical tidbits that make you think he hasn't told this to any other concert audience. This is different. We're special.

Well, probably not. But, as Amanda pointed out it's like being on VH1 "Storytellers." It may seem tame, but if you really like the Counting Crows, it's probably better than "Behind the Music."

Duritz is an incredibly open and honest performer. He combines his ever-popular and surprisingly effective "my girlfriend just broke up with me, and I don't want to sleep alone tonight" jaded act with a child-like happiness for just being alive. His movements are near to mime at points, but it never feels cheesy or contrived. He feels the lyrics like it's the first time he's ever sang them. Balancing on equipment, a little bit like a tightrope walker and a little bit like a kid at a playground, Duritz sang with a youthful ecstasy.

But, clearly, Duritz has been there. His songs of faded romance are universally affecting. And these, teamed with the sad, sensitive, intellectual artist that he's so good at epitomizing, can't fail to get the ladies. And more blissful romances, which turn into failed romances. And yet more songs. Duritz may have gone through some relationship rough patches, but this is a win-win situation for the band, especially when it turns out a sometimes heart-breaking/sometimes exultant song like "Anna Begins."

When he sits down to polish his glasses, the band becomes more than the Adam Duritz backup band. They're more than accomplished musicians, whether playing electric or acoustic guitars, pianos, organs or the mandolin. Their energy is unwavering. Mandolin and rock have never gone quite so well together as during "Omaha." To be expected, "Mr. Jones" was on the set list. This did more for the band than get recognition. This soft acoustic version was a testament to the musicians' subtlety.

By the end of the concert, no one in the audience was prepared to relinquish their band. Duritz invited the Tigers out for a collaborative and jubilant rendition of "Hangin Around." Proving that, despite some sadness, he and the band are capable of having real and infective fun.

COURTESY GEFFEN RECORDS, INC.

Counting Crows just gets more sassy with every photo we run.

■ suicide

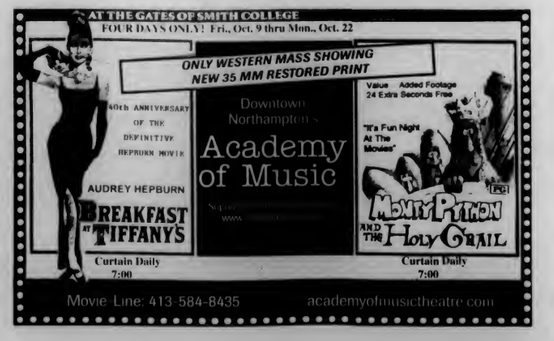
continued from page 5

have enjoyed what they've done, nevertheless it's also nice to see a band evolve and still make good music. If you throw out their self-titled release, the Suicide Machines progressed on the albums prior, but now it sounds as though they are trying to re-establish themselves into the ska/punk genre in a weird grown-up way. They are still making the same statements and their ideals remain similar, but they've seemingly lost their indignation. The album's opening track "The Killing Blow" strikes a chord to the bands older sound, with a matured chorus: "And you can't take back/ The things you did/ Strange how you change/ When you get older." The aging of the band is also apparent in the booklet; Jason Navarro (vocals) is holding his baby daughter. They seem to be making that "we are playing for the love of the music" statement. To put it another way, they are in it for the fun and the love of being rock musicians.

The album as a whole is no different from any of the prior albums except for the one cover song, "It's the End of the World as We Know it (and I Feel Fine)" by R.E.M. It's an unusual track on the album and they don't do any thing special with it. Compared to the album in its entirety, it is awkwardly placed. The track dulls the excitement of the bands self-written music when listening. Conversely, the energy on this album gives it an underground skate board video sound. The vigorous harmonies of Dan Lukacinsky (guitars/vocals) are found in every track. What is interesting is that all of the new songs were written together, as a band. On every track, the changes are tight and fast, which says a lot for the music. The album is put together well, and the good vs. evil cover portrays the bands sound well, from the happy chanting ska songs to the angst-powered punk rock.

The Suicide Machines are touring Japan with The Chinkees (Mike Park) and Potshot. The United States and Canada leg of the tour features Ensign, Big Wig, and Story So Far. The U.S. leg starts in California and gets as close as Philadelphia. According to the band's website and Hollywood Records, there has been no talk of any singles being released. Which means no radio single yet, but I am sure it will find it way into an extreme video somewhere across this country. For as longs skaters like Tony Hawk have ESPN as a medium to show the X-Games to the world, bands like The Suicide Machines will always be heard. They stuck to their guns and proved successful. They had a brief change of image, but as skaters themselves, they wrote music to skate to, which has become a major change in the times as far as generational movements go. They jumped into the computer age by adding the feature of a modest menu, which can connect to the website or fix a player error.

The Suicide Machines couldn't make a bad punk record. They influenced many with their first and second releases. Sadly, this album will be the one nobody talks about. It doesn't jump out and say wow, after listening to the older stuff. Still, it is no Blink-182 or Sum 41, thankfully. If you are looking for a fast, new, and in-your-face CD to skate to, you found a winner. The Suicide Machines play songs as a soundtrack to go skate to. They are also recognized as a powerful live act in any scene. For the extremists in the generation, you can either steal this record, or go buy your own piece of the generation.



COURTESY BMG

Bjork took fans on an emotional ride in Boston.

SKYDIVE !
AT
JUMPTOWN / MSPC
TANDEM JUMPS $185

Show us your college ID, and make your first TANDEM JUMP for only $185. Want to learn to SKYDIVE? Static Line first jump course is only $160, and the Accelerated Freefall course is $285. Call 1-800-890-JUMP to schedule a skydive or request a brochure. You can also register online or find out more at our website: www.jumptown.com

UMass' two birds of prey

St. Joseph's and Temple await Minutewomen

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

In the United States, hunting birds of prey is a highly illegal event.

Nonetheless, the Massachusetts field hockey team will head down to Philadelphia to do just that, taking on the St. Joseph's Hawks on Saturday and the Temple Owls on Sunday.

It will be two pivotal conference games for the Minutewomen (6-7, 3-0 Atlantic 10), who are riding high after three straight wins against LaSalle, West Chester and Rhode Island.

"Conference momentum is huge," Maroon and White Head Coach Patty Shea said. "And winning does a lot for your momentum. Now we are starting to see results happening exactly when we wanted it to happen – in conference."

In contrast to UMass, Temple has been diving like a bird with clipped wings. After beginning the year 4-0, the Owls have struggled mightily of late, and have dropped nine of their last 11 games. Even in conference, where it generally finishes near the top of the standings, Temple has failed to perform up to expectations, and has dropped both of its A-10 contests.

St. Joe's, on the other hand, has been soaring high, despite the fact that a 2-1 loss to Drexel recently ended a five-game win streak. Coming off that game, the Hawks will undoubtedly be looking to get back on track against the Maroon and White this weekend.

Leading the St. Joseph's offense will be Brett Dymarczyk, who is leading her team in scoring with seven goals despite playing in only nine of her squad's 13 games. Backing her up will be well-rounded standouts Kelly Butler (four goals, five assists), Kathy Sokalski (five goals, three assists) and Antie Schmoltze (four goals, three assists).

Sokalski has especially shined in pressure situations, with four of her scores proving to be the eventual game-winner.

"We always have a barnburner with St. Joe's," Shea said, whose defense will be assigned to try and shut down the potent Hawk attack.

On the year, St. Joseph's has posted an 8-5 (2-0 A-10) record, with big wins against Providence, Temple and Richmond. Of course, it has not come close to playing as many big name teams as the Minutewomen, and according to UMass midfielder Kristen Hopwood, that should give her squad the distinct advantage.

"We are undefeated in conference and that is the important part," the sophomore said, who knocked home her first career goal in Wednesday's 4-0 win over Rhode Island. "We are playing teams other teams in our conference wouldn't dare to play."

Whether or not the Maroon and White practices well will be another factor going into this weekend's games. So far, UMass has tended to play a lot better after a good practice, and it is hoping to continue that trend before traveling down to Philly.

"An important key for us is to take what we are doing in practice and carry it over to the games," sophomore netkeeper Ashley Egland said, who is coming off two straight shutouts. "We have had fabulous practices before all our wins and we had a horrible practice before the game against Providence (a 1-0 UMass loss)."

One certainty about the upcoming Atlantic 10 action is that these contests are important for all those involved, especially the Minutewomen.

"This weekend is crucial," Egland said. "It is just a critical two games for us."

And because of this, it is another certainty that all three teams will be giving it their all.

"Our conference hates us," Hopwood said. "It's going to be an all-out war."

Game time is 12 noon for both contests.

GERARD UNVERT-SALESSARY

The UMass field hockey team is focused on starting a winning streak.

National Development Program a college hockey training ground

By Dave D'Onofrio
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON – In its 6-5 win over Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Saturday night, the Boston University hockey team got goals from six different players. Six Terriers also had assists. However, of the 14 total points BU scored, eight came from the same place.

Ann Arbor, Michigan.

That's the home of American hockey's latest incubator for raw, young talent – the U.S. National Team Development Program. Now in its fifth season, the program has already produced dozens of Division I players, including seven skaters on the current Icedogs roster.

Senior Pat Aufiero and juniors John Sabo and Freddy Meyer came to BU through Ann Arbor, as did freshmen Justin Maiser, Brian McConnell, Brian Miller and Ryan Whitney.

USA Hockey set up international precedent in 1997 when it established the program under the direction of former coach Jeff Jackson, who sought to provide a training ground for America's elite athletes at a young age.

"Its main goal was just to increase the overall level of American hockey by taking top hockey players and placing them in a very intense training environment," said Jenny Wiedeke, communications and marketing manager for the NTDP.

The program recruits 16- and 17-year-old players from across the country, moving them to Michigan for their junior and senior years of high school. They attend one of two Ann Arbor schools while playing with the under-17 or under-18 national teams for a nine-month, 50-plus-game schedule.

When they're relocated to Ann Arbor, players don't live in dormitories or apartments, but with a host family. Area families open up their homes to a player, taking on the responsibilities of housing, feeding and making living conditions comfortable for him. In turn, the player has to live under the rules of the house, including being home by curfew.

"It's almost like living at home, except with a different set of parents," Wiedeke said.

A typical day's work in the NTDP exceeds 13 hours, according to McConnell. Just like the average high school student, they wake up around 6:30 a.m. to get to school in time for the first bell. They sit in the same classes as everyone else, and when 2:30 p.m. rolls around, they, like other high school students at Pioneer and Huron High Schools, leave their studies behind for the day.

That's when the intensity begins.

While most students head home, the players head to the rink and ready themselves for two hours of unrelenting hockey. After that, it's two more hours of physical fervor, usually in the form of either weightlifting or boxing exercises. Finally, at some time after 7:30, they get to go home and begin their homework.

"They're just like every other student there," Wiedeke said, "except they have a very hectic schedule."

Wiedeke said the players miss about as much class time as a Division I athlete, with game days and travel days spread between August and April. For that reason, both high schools where NTDP players take classes have counselors dedicated specifically to the players.

The players also get involved in their new community by organizing youth hockey camps and appearing at local schools, as well as serving big brothers to members of an area youth team.

"They would go to practices and skate with the youth team and kind of act as a role model, which in a 17-year-old, you don't see a lot of," Wiedeke said.

On the ice, the national teams face off against teams from the North American Hockey League and the United States Hockey League, clubs filled with athletes looking to gain another year of hockey experience before entering the college game, Wiedeke said. She noted the players of the NAHL and USHL are bigger, stronger and older than the national team, but the stiff competition only helps to advance the learning curve for Team USA.

"It's just accelerating them so they can not only immediately go to college, but immediately be an impact player," she said.

Players are lured to participate in the NTDP by a nationwide recruiting campaign. Most of the talent comes from the Northeast and the Lakes region, Wiedeke said, although scouts leave no rink neglected.

"We have a bunch of scouts all over that literally scour youth hockey tournaments, and we try to determine who the elite athletes are at that age level," Wiedeke said. "Also, USA Hockey hosts these 'select festivals' where the top kids from each region will go each summer to play against each other. That's kind of almost our backup."

Between the two teams this year, nearly every region of the country is represented, including non-traditional hockey hotbeds like Florida, Arizona and California. As the native state of 10 players, Michigan boasts the most players in the NTDP.

Because the NTDP heavily ransacks the nation's rinks, Wiedeke said the talent level of program players is so high that college coaches and recruiters consider national team games "one-stop shopping," and it's a common occurrence for a dozen college scouts to be seen at a game.

BU has gobbled up the fruits of the program for the past three years, starting with Aufiero in 1998. The next year, the Terriers brought in Sabo, Meyer and a goalie from Winthrop by the name of Rick DiPietro. This year, BU was able to nab the "Fab Four," as Wiedeke called them.

"Whenever they go out to BU for a visit, they always come back, whether or not they choose to go to BU, they always have great visits out there," she said. "They just gush over coach [Jack] Parker and especially Mike Boyle being the strength and conditioning coach. That really impresses them a lot.

"I think also it's almost a chain reaction: if you get one, maybe someone will want to go out and play with his buddy or his linemate."

Parker agreed, saying Maiser might have slipped through BU's fingers if not for his teammates, who committed to BU early.

"The thing that's helped us is we got a Minnesotan," Parker said. "I don't think Maiser would've come to BU, if not for the fact that he was at Ann Arbor and playing with McConnell and Whitney who really liked BU, and he was happy to go with him."

In terms of recruiting solely through the program, however, Parker was less convinced.

"I think you get good players, but if they weren't on the national development team they would've been some place else, the U.S. Junior League or if Aufiero stayed home and played at Winchester High School, we would have recruited him there," Parker said.

"I think [NTDP players] are more ready to play, they're very, very well coached, but again, take Aufiero and [captain Chris] Dyment," Parker said, comparing his two senior defensemen who are both former Middlesex League all-stars. "Aufiero left Winchester High School to go play. Dyment stayed at Reading High for his senior year; they were both big stars their junior year of high school.

"They both came to BU, and they've been 1 and 1-A as far as that goes. I don't think Pat pulled away from Chris at all. He might have gained a little more confidence playing in a more difficult and challenging league than Chris was. They get great coaching out there. The kids come very well prepared."

One player well-served by the program was Meyer, who spent more than two years in Ann Arbor. When Sabo and DiPietro left for BU after finishing with the under-18 team, Meyer stayed with the NTDP, volunteering to play for the younger team and serve as a leader.

Enduring the long bus trips and doing everything he could to help set the example, Meyer played half the season with the team before – to the dismay of his younger mates – heading to BU in December of 2000.

The example of an NTDP player being ready on arrival, Meyer played in just 25 of 42 games that season, but played well enough to earn Hockey East All-Rookie Team honors.

Wiedeke said this year's crop of freshmen could make a similar impression on Babcock Street rather quickly.

"BU definitely has four of our stronger players from last season," she said. "I think all four of them will have an immediate impact."

Of the freshmen, McConnell landed the first blow, scoring just 2:40 into his first collegiate game. And don't think the National Team Development Program had nothing to do with it.

"I don't think I could be the player I am now if I hadn't have gone out there," he said. "It's great for hockey. It's amazing."

COURTESY BU MEDIA RELATIONS

PAT AUFIERO

COURTESY BU MEDIA RELATIONS

JOHN SABO

Juniors & Seniors
Come to the
POST-GRADUATE VOLUNTEER FAIR
Monday, October 22
11am - 3pm
Newman Center Cafeteria

Jesuit Volunteer Corps
Peace Corps
Maryknoll Associates and Many More Groups

COME AND TALK WITH THE VARIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.
Representatives will be present at tables to distribute brochures and other materials and to answer questions and concerns.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates • We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES BEDS & SETS
"BYOB"
THE AREA'S BEST SELECTION FOR COLLEGE LIVING

Bernie Choiniere

Christian Rock Concert
Sponsored by the Newman Center

An awesome evening of Christian Rock with a fresh new voice in contemporary Christian Music.

The Mercy House Band will be opening at 7 pm followed by Bernie Choinere. Join us in this celebration of faith and share in the search for peace. Donations will be given to the Red Cross Relief Fund.

Date:
October 19th
Time:
7-10 pm
Place:
Newman Center
Tickets:
Free

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Research Interviewers. No selling or cold calls. Set your own schedule Evenings and weekends Competitive pay- 20+ hours per week. Hadley location. PVTA acessible. For more infor call FMI Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Portuguese, Japanese, Polish, Norwegian, orTibetan. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public Schools 413-549-9857 An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Attention work from home $1200-$5000 per month. 800-953-7104

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute Teachers, Cushman Scott Children's Center. In our toddler/preschool classrooms. $7/hour. Contact Ellen Edge at 549-1167 or e-mail ellen@cushmanscott.org. We are an equal-opportunity employer.

Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridership Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conducting a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Amherst from November 1 through November 8, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until October 26, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield, MA 01089. PVPC is an EOE/AA employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

RECREATION POSITIONS

Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information, Please Contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at 256-4065, x 105, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

ENTERTAINMENT

Montreal Weekend Specials From $89 Includes round trip motorcoach from Boston/Springfield or Hartford. 3days 2nights Hotel Downtown Montreal. 1 Breakfast 1 Dinner free admission to Club Dome
Nov. 2-4 $89
Nov. 9-11 $99
Nov. 16-18 $99
Nov. 23-25 $99
Nov. 30-Dec. 2 $99
Dec. 30-Jan 1 $109-$119
Contact Global Tours: 533 Main Street, Melrose, MA 02176 781-665-4100

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are still booking for fall semester. Call 537-8527

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warantee 413-584-8857

FREE Refrigerator, old but works. 253-9862

African Drums: Djembes Djun Djuns 529-2212 Oneworld

FOR SALE

DrumsMIDI Guitar: Roland GR303, left handed strung right handed; GM70 interface; extras $650 256-4113

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Dijata Bumpus. Call 413-731-1450. In Amherst.

LOST AND FOUND

Bracelet Found Downtown Amherst. Call to identify. Nicole 253-4791

MUSICIANS WANTED

Experienced rock band auditioning for new vocalist. Experience preferred but not necessary. Call 822-1589 or 348-5784

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

The Collegian Classifieds is the place to advertise.

Call today 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 - HSCN Bulletin Board
2 - CBS/8 Hartford
3 - CBS Boston
4 - ABC/40 Springfield
5 - NBC/30 Springfield
6 - HSCN Movie Channel
7 - Fox 61 Hartford
8 - HSCN New Movie Channel
9 - UHF 16 New Britain
10 - Fox 61 Hartford
11 - FOX 24 Hartford
12 - NBC/30 Springfield
13 - International Channel
14 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
15 - WB 59 New Haven
16 - UPN 20
17 - UPN 27
18 - UMATV (Student Channel)
19 - Weather Channel
20 - Guest to Guest
21 - C-Span
22 - CNN
23 - CNN Headline News
24 - Lifetime
25 - USA
26 - TBS
27 - TNT
28 - ESPN
29 - ESPN2
30 - Sci Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nesn
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 19, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Life 360 "Voice" (In Stereo) (N)		Nova (In Stereo) (N)
WFSB (3)	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N)	Danny (N) (N)	That's Life "M.Y.O.B." (N) (N)		48 Hours (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ (4)	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N) (N)	Danny (N) (N)	That's Life "M.Y.O.B." (N) (N)		48 Hours (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB (5)	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	Mole It: The Next Betrayal (N)		Thieves "Bad Moon Rising" (N)		Once and Again "Acting Out"		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI (6)		Nanny (N)	Just Shoot Me (N)	Friends (N)	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N) (N)	Raising Dad (N)	News (N)		Friends (N)	Raymond
WHDH (7)		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Providence (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX (8)	8	Sabrina-Witch	Friends (N)	Friends (N)	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N) (N)	Raising Dad (N)	News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Med Abt. You
WVIT (9)	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTIC (61)	11	Simpsons (N)	Friends (N)	Sainfeld (N)	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: National League Championship Series Game 3 -- Teams TBA						News	Raymond
WWLP (22)	22	News (N)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	Providence (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Dateline (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY (57)	8	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Life 360 "A Place in Time" (N)		Time Goes By	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (N)
WGGB (40)	20	News (N)	ABC News	Seinfeld (N)	Frasier (N)	Mole It: The Next Betrayal (N)		Thieves "Bad Moon Rising" (N)		Once and Again "Acting Out"		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WSBK (38)		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (N)	News	Frasier (N)	★★½ "Body Call" (1997, Comedy) Jamie Foxx, Tia Carrere (N)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier (N)	Sth Wheel (N)	Shipmates (N)
WTBS (72)		Roseanne (N)	Roseanne (N)	Fresh Prince	Friends (N)	★★½ "The Devil's Advocate" (1997, Horror) Keanu Reeves, Al Pacino						★★★ "Deceived" (1991)
A&E (43)		Night Court	Newsradio (N)	Law & Order "Breeder" (N)		Biography: Drew Barrymore		"Force: Lord Edgware Dies" (2000, Mystery) David Suchet				Law & Order "Soundbite" (N)
CNN (47)	23	Moneyline (N) (N)		Evening News	Crossfire (N)	Wolf Blitzer	Wa Point (N)	Larry King Live (N)		CNN Tonight	Greenfield	Sports	Moneyline
COM (48)	30	Saturday Night Live (N)		Daily Show (N)	Stein's Money	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live	Live	Sat. Night Live
DISC (49)		Wild Discovery: Bats, Deities		Wild Discovery: Snakes		U.S. Customs		Secret World of Air Freight (N)		Lost Baggage Center (N)		Justice Files "Fatal Attraction"
ESPN (50)		Sportscenter (N)		Sports Reporters		College Football: Boise State at Fresno State (Live) (N)						Sportscenter (N)
LIFE (51)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Drowned and Dangerous" (1997, Drama) Yasmine Bleeth (N)				"Gone in a Heartbeat" (1996) (N)
MTV (52)		mtvICON	Making Video	Becoming	Music Videos (In Stereo)						Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK (53)		Oddparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats (N)	SpongeB	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Kablam!	Family Ties (N)	Family Ties (N)	Family Ties (N)	Family Ties (N)
SCIFI (54)		Star Trek: The Way to Eden (N)		Chronicle "Baby Got Back" (N)		Invisible Man (In Stereo) (N)		★½ "Timerider" (1993, Comedy) Alex Winter, (In Stereo) (N)				Invisible Man (In Stereo) (N)
TLC (56)	28	Trading Spaces		Daring Capers		Police, Camera, Action!		Navy SEALs		U.S. Marshals: The Real Story		Police, Camera, Action!
TNT (57)		NYPD Blue "Little Abner" (N)		Pretender "Prison Story" (N)		★★½ "Overboard" (1987, Comedy) Goldie Hawn, Kurt Russell						★★ "Wildcats" (1986, Comedy) Goldie Hawn
USA (58)		Walker, Texas Ranger "Lucas"		JAG "Rivers' Run" (In Stereo) (N)		Nash Bridges "Liar's Poker" (N)		★★ "Return to Cabin by the Lake" (2001, Suspense) Judd Nelson,				★★ "Jawbreaker" (1999)
HBO (59)		(5:30) ★★★ "Shiloh" (1996)				★★½ "Bar" (2000, Action) Jamie Foxx. (In Stereo) (R) (N)				★½ "Devil in the Flesh" (1997) Rose McGowan,		Curb-Entrhsm
MAX (60)		★★★ "Lethal Weapon" (1987, Drama) Mel Gibson, (R) (N)				★★★ "Tigerland" (2000, Drama) Colin Farrell. (In Stereo) (R) (N)				★★½ "Bedazzled" (2000) Brendan Fraser, (N)		Nightcap (N)
SHOW (55)		★½ "Mambo Cafe" (1999, Comedy) Thalia. PG-13 (N)				★ "Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2" (2000) (R) (N)		A. Rice-Feast		Stargate SG-1	Going to California (HV)	Chris Isaak (N)

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Monty By Jim Meddick

Scarecrow By W. Bird

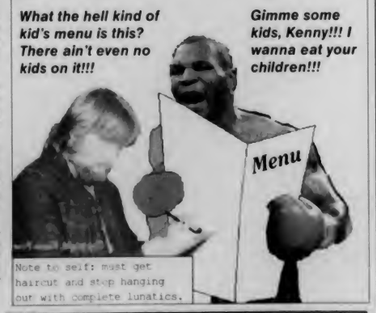
Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"A witty saying proves nothing."

-Voltaire

Amherst Weather



Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 61 LOW: 39	HIGH: 62 LOW: 37	HIGH: 65 LOW: 43

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21) – Someone may have a valid complaint to lodge with you today, but you will be loath to do much about it just yet. See what develops. Step by Step.
SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21) – Stamina is an issue today, and you must guard against wasting fuel of any kind as you proceed cautiously along your charted course. My favorite girl
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – A few important questions must be answered today before you continue along your chosen path. A difficult issue arises after dark. I'll be loving you forever.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Now is no time to be satisfied with the routine or the ordinary. Today you'll have a chance to excel in no uncertain terms. Hangin' tough.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care not to give too much early on today, leaving yourself with only a little energy when you'll really need it later. The right stuff.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – The more you try to seek a way out today, the more likely you are to feel trapped somehow in a tangled web of your own making. Freedom lies within. Please don't go girl.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – What you see before you as you wake today may seem somehow daunting, but with a little thought and planning, you can overcome any obstacle. This one's for the children.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may become a leader of sorts today – without even knowing it! What you do very likely will be remembered for some time to come. Games.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're not going to want to reveal something specific about yourself just yet, but the process of concealing it may get rather complicated. Valentine girl.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A special dream is likely to seem closer than ever today, but you may have to wait a little while still before it comes true.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A surprise is in store for you today, and you must be sure to keep your eyes and ears open at all times. After dark, certain risks increase. Didn't I blow your mind?
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Avoid becoming too competitive today, or you may find yourself alienating someone who should really be on your side. Cover girl.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Iron Mike Tyson's first (and last) trip to Kenny Rogers' Roasters

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Pot Roast

Fish & Chips

Spinach Noodle Bake (vegetarian) (W basics)

Wild Barley Pilaf (vegan)

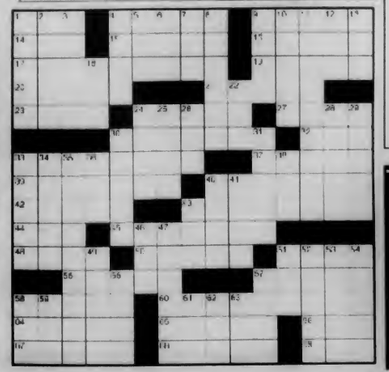
Dinner

Veal Parmesan

Baston Scrod

Tofu Fajita (vegan)

Savoy Stuffed Peppers (vegan)



Shear Bliss
Family Day Spa
253-2322
Fall Specials!
#1. Free makeover with every Facial $35 value
#2. Free spa manicure with every Haircut & Color $22 value
#3. Parents-bring in kids for haircuts and get $5 OFF YOURS!
479 West St. (on Rt. 116 So. Amherst) (UMass/Hamp. Bus Rt.)

ACROSS
1 Cobalt "smoke"
4 Clothes maker
8 Lab
14 Hitchcock
15 Moor
16 Part of a jacket
17 Pupil's time period
19 Distract
20 ___ of the crime
21 Clemente's aunt
22 Hand-me-down
24 Nonsense
27 Pays
30 Far East temples
32 Shaker Backbone
33 Texas city
37 Ms. of a brunet
41 Demolish
42 Rhythm
43 Diving dart
45 Goodness sakes
46 Golfer Nicklaus
48 Loners in lairs
49 Essay topics
50 Bishops council
51 Benchwarmer's baby
52 Speed
57 Dimmi Tal (che)
59 Union demand
60 Final (foul)
64 Brisk speeds
65 Feeding
66 Fern, holly one
67 Bits of grape
68 Jane Wyman
69 Snake shape

DOWN
1 Domineering
2 Maintain pain
3 Woman of song
4 ___ eating
5 Home run
6 Animal chewing fat
7 SFO info
8 Wrote verse
9 Strategy
10 Rotary dial
11 Surgical procedure
12 Hardware item
13 Ivy-league rowers
18 Small number
22 Actress Lupino
24 Cowgirl Evans
25 ...cool
26 Where tigers roam
28 ___ angle
31 Unknown
34 Verbotens
35 Pleasantries
36 Tease
38 In the olive oil
40 Garage unit
44 Ripe, in the wash
46 Cable receiver
48 Sixth sense
47 Mexico trail
49 Sicily grapes planet
51 Sign of zodiac animal
52 Hoover essay
53 Fixates
54 Vaults
56 Disorderly jumble
57 Short notice shot
58 Army discipline
59 "The Greatest" of Ali
61 Tall mo.
62 Like Abram
63 Actress Clarke

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

Editors on Staff
Night Editor — Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician — Martha Olivo
Copy Editor — Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor — Adi D. Husainovic
Production Staff — Alicia Upano, Mike Kulak

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Battle of the not-so-frequently victorious

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

For 29 minutes and 59 seconds last Saturday, it looked like the Massachusetts football team was on its way to win No. 1 of the 2001 season.

Up 17-0 with 35 ticks lingering in the first half, the Minutemen defense primed itself at New Hampshire's 35-yard line for the Wildcats' closing offensive cracks.

And when New Hampshire's Michael Hurley was tackled at the UNH 49-yard line with no time visibly left on McGuirk Stadium's scoreboard, UMass' half-concluding safeguard seemed to be complete.

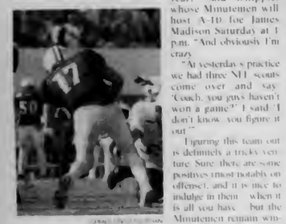
UMass vs. JMU
Saturday @ 1 p.m.

The Massachusetts band even began to march its way onto the field.

But the compilation of steel and brass was soon pushed back to the sidelines when a referee signaled that Hurley had called a timeout with one second remaining.

On the ensuing play, Wildcat Stephan Lewis caught a 49-yard Hail Mary hurl — after it ricocheted off a pack of Minutemen — to solidify six points for New Hampshire and enact the momentum it needed to outscore UMass 29-7 in the second half and cruise to its 35-24 victory.

"We have to learn how to finish," said UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple, recalling the play that ultimately sent his Minutemen to their fifth straight loss. "That's the big thing — learning how to finish a half, learning how to finish a game."



It has been a tough start. UMass is 0-5 (0-3 Atlantic 10). In those five losses, it has scored just 67 points. And in that same stretch, its opponents have tallied 186.

Still somewhere in his stomach, Whipple somehow senses hope for the near future.

"I don't know why, in my gut, I feel better than I have all year," said Whipple, whose Minutemen will host A-10 foe James Madison Saturday at 1 p.m. "And obviously I'm crazy.

"At yesterday's practice we had three NFL scouts come over and say, 'Coach, you guys haven't won a game?' I said 'I don't know, you figure it out.'"

Figuring this team out is definitely a tricky venture. Sure, there are some positives (most notably on offense), and it is nice to indulge in them — when it is all you have — but the Minutemen remain winless. And it will be hard to take Whipple's evaluators seriously until UMass does, finally, come out on top.

Redshirt freshman Matt Guice is improving slowly

However this week, if any is the right week to be making such statements of audacity. Like the Minutemen, James Madison (1-5, 0-3 A-10) has also lost five straight football games. And even though the combined scores of those games compute to only 95-120, the Dukes' confidence cannot be insolubly at the moment. Their last victory came in their opener vet sus Elon, a 42-21 conquest on Sept. 1.

James Madison is led by quarterback Matt Lezotte. The 6-foot-2, 190-pound redshirt freshman turned some heads in his team's 44-43 double-overtime loss going 34-for-58 for 376 yards with three touchdowns. But in the Dukes' latest loss to Richmond (17-20 Lezotte went 15-for-28 for only 117 yards and was picked off three times.

Lezotte will go head to head with UMass' version of the redshirt freshman signal caller, Matt Guice. Coming off his best game thus far for the Maroon and White, the 6-foot-2, 207-pounder broke the school records Saturday for total offensive yards (416), total offensive attempts (79), passing yards (403) and passing attempts (65).

"I went to Matt Guice last Monday and I said 'I'll tell you where we're at. I'm putting this thing on your shoulders,'" said Whipple, with the knowledge that power runner Omari Howard would not be playing and quat back Kevin Quinlan was questionable. "We are going to throw the football and you're going to get it done — somehow, some way — and you're going to come of age. That's a lot to put on a redshirt freshman's shoulders in a program of our magnitude and I think he came through on his own self."

The Minutemen and Dukes are similar teams in similar situations. Both are young, both are feeling the hurt of several wounded company, and both are desperately in need of a win. The last time these two matched up, it ended in a 28-26 UMass victory. I predict Saturday's score to be as close, with quite possibly the same result.

Last week the Minutemen tasted triumph for a short while. And thoughts of a winless season are not the most comfortable emotions. To say this season, UMass must put something together this Saturday.

"I think our guys — from Saturday's game, know they can win," Whipple said. "Before the game, I don't think they knew that."

The offensive line's health has been a major deterrent in recent weeks for the UMass football team.

Jeff Deren and the Massachusetts men's soccer team have won live straight games.

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN

Streaking strides

Minutemen make attempt at seven straight

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

With vacancies in its last five games, the Massachusetts men's soccer team certainly realizes the playoffs is right around the corner and the all-tricky run to end it has arrived.

With six matches remaining in its regular-season schedule, UMass is currently tied with Rhode Island for second place in the Atlantic 10 standings with 12 points apiece. Richmond, the only team that is undefeated in the conference, is currently holding the No. 1 spot with 13 points.

This weekend the Minutemen have a chance to take over that top spot as they face off with a pair of conference rivals — the St. Joseph's Hawks and the Temple Owls.

Today at 3:30 p.m. in the friendly confines of Totman Field, the Maroon and White will put its five-game winning streak on the line against the tough Hawks.

All seniors into the match with a 7-4 overall record and a 3-2 mark in the Atlantic 10 conference. After suffering a heart-breaking 2-0 loss to Richmond last Friday, the Hawks regrouped and shut out George Washington 5-0 two days later. St. Joe's has won three out of its last four matches.

UMass is coming off a 3-2 win over non-conference opponent Siena. And in order to get his players ready for the stretch run toward the postseason, Head Coach Sam Koch rested his starters for half of the match.

"To get ready for a team like St. Joe's, we have to make sure that we are healthy," Koch said.

Senior back Shaun Green suffered an injury to his left leg in the match versus Siena. The Marshfield, Mass., native was going for the ball on the right side of the field when a slide tackle from one of the Saint defenders wounded him.

As of Wednesday, he was questionable for today's match with the Hawks, but his coach feels that he will be ready to play.

"He was cleated, but he's OK," Koch remarked. "He will be alright for Friday."

Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m., UMass duels with another A-10 opponent at Totman Field, except this time it is against a team that has struggled all season long.

UMass vs. St. Joe's
Today @ 3:30 p.m.
UMass vs. Temple
Sunday @ 1 p.m.

The Temple Owls are currently 2-4-1 overall and 1-4-1 in the Atlantic 10 conference. The squad is trying desperately to stay out of the cellar of the conference standings.

They currently have a five-game losing streak going, but the Minutemen know that they should not take any team easily, especially during this time of the year.

We have to limit our touches and move the ball a little quicker," said Koch, about what his team needs to improve on. "We want to try to make as easy as possible for the guy with the ball as we can."

Coach Koch was a little disappointed after the game against Siena for the way his team gave up the two goals. He said that his squad "showed some sloppy play."

This weekend, Koch hopes that his team can improve on the shoddy play and extend its winning streak to seven games.

"Soccer is a simple game; we just have to make it as simple as possible," he said. "If we can do these things, we will have a good weekend."

Michelle Luttati and the UMass women's soccer team enter a pivotal conference weekend.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

with sound leadership and smart play at her midfield position.

"[Kat] is probably the smartest player on the team as far as decision-making," Rudy said.

Rudy also points to No. 11's terrific work ethic both on and off the field as leading to the Colorado native's success.

"She has really worked hard and maximized her potential as an athlete and as a student-athlete," Rudy said.

Freshman forward Stephanie Santos added another award to her increasing list of accolades this week, as well. UMass' leading point-scorer was named the A-10 Freshman of the Week after scoring two goals in last weekend's victories at Totman Field. The goals were her fifth and sixth of the season.

Both Machamer and Santos will lead Rudy's offensive attack against two strong goalkeepers in their respective home nets. In five conference games, Hawks goalie Christy Ganc has posted 20 saves, while Owls freshman keeper Jackie Mauro kept her team close in two tough losses to George Washington (2-1) and Richmond (1-0). The Philly native made 13 saves in the two matches.

But the Minutewomen have been nearly untouchable in their last eight games, winning seven of them and allowing just four goals in those seven victories. UMass has netted 27 goals against quality competition in the same time span, including La Salle and Rhode Island—both top five teams in the A-10.

Knee-deep in the A-10 schedule, UMass must use these games against struggling teams in Philadelphia this weekend to continue its momentum and gain more confidence before taking on the teams that are enjoying the same success as they are.

In the final four games of the season, the Maroon and White will take on three of the top six teams in the A-10, including the only other team undefeated in conference play, the Dayton Flyers.

It's "Air O'Quinn" as the UMass keeper skies for a save.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Looking for love in Philly

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Can the city of Philadelphia become the City of Sisterly Love for the Massachusetts women's soccer team this weekend?

The Minutewomen (8-2, 5-0 Atlantic 10) roll back into Philly after a weekend at home to take on two more A-10 rivals.

The City of Brotherly Love last played host to the ladies in Maroon on Oct. 7. That trip resulted in a 1-0 nail-biting victory over fourth-place LaSalle. Katelyn Jones' goal in the 67th minute gave the Minutewomen their sixth win on the season.

UMass @ St. Joe's
Today @ 7 p.m.
UMass @ Temple
Sunday @ 1 p.m.

This weekend, the Maroon and White will take on two teams that could be considered lesser opponents, ninth-place St. Joseph's (4-4-2, 1-1-2 A-10) and tenth-place Temple (6-3-1, 1-3-1 A-10).

UMass holds a lifetime 10-2 record combined against this weekend's opponents with its last loss coming on Oct. 2, 1998 against Temple at home — the only year a Jim Rudy-coached UMass team ended with an overall record below .500 (10-11).

With next week's trip south to third-place Richmond and fifth-place George Washington, Rudy will be making sure his team isn't overlooking this weekend's opponents.

Both St. Joe's and Temple have lost three of the teams' last four games on the pitch and could easily be overlooked by a team looking ahead to key conference matchups that could determine the success of the 2001 season as a whole.

Senior Kathleen Machamer will lead the Minutewomen into battle in Philly. The reigning A-10 Player of the Week and UMass/WHMP Player of the Week is second on the team in scoring after racking up three assists in her team's 5-0 shellacking of St. Bonaventure on Friday, Oct. 12 and scoring a hat trick against Duquesne — a 7-0 UMass victory.

Rudy's "crafty left-footed senior" has impressed her coach

Volume CVIII Issue 33 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, October 22, 2001

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Touche!
Two fencers display their swashbuckling skills.

Film series explores Jewish-Latino links

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Relations between Ashkenazi (Jewish people of Germanic decent), Sephardi (Jewish people of Spanish or Portuguese decent), and non-Jewish Latinos in Mexico were discussed on Thursday, Oct. 18 at 7:00 p.m. as Amherst College Spanish professor Ilan Stavans led the first in a series of four Latino/Jewish film festival and lecture meetings before approximately 40 people at 251 Herter Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

This UMass Department of Judaic and Near Eastern studies sponsored program, free and open to all students, faculty, staff, and community members, held high hopes for its coordinator, Judaic and Near Eastern studies professor Aviva Ben-Ur.

"Cultural cross-pollinization is an important part of today's global experience, and it also has been important to both Latino and Jewish communities for centuries," said Ben-Ur in a recent press release. "We hope this program will help forge new alliances between the Pioneer Valley's academic and non-academic Latino and Jewish communities."

After welcoming comments by Ben-Ur and Stavans, the presentation began with the Mexican film, Novia Que Te Veo, which translates to "May I See You A Bride." Ben-Ur explained that the use of a film screening during the festival was done to enhance the learning experience.

The award winning film depicted the friendship and coming-of-age tale of a young Ashkenazi woman named Oshinica (Claudette Maille) and her Sephardi friend Rifke (Maya Mishaliska) in Mexico City throughout the 1950s and 60s and how each of them had to deal with their (and others) differences in ethnicity.

Based on the novel by Rosa Nissan, the Guita Schyfter directed 1993 film was produced in Spanish, Ladino and Yiddish but was shown at the festival in its English subtitled version.

After the film, Stavans conducted a brief question-and-answer period, in which topics such as the difference between the Spanish and Ladino languages, the authenticity of the film, and the current state of the Ashkenazi and Sephardi Jewish communities in Mexico were discussed.

The evening concluded with light, kosher refreshments from the Black Sheep Deli and Bakery in Amherst representative of the Latino and Jewish cultures.

"I think it [the overall festival] went very well," said Ben-Ur. "The feedback has been very positive."

She added how pleased she was to see faculty from a variety of different departments in attendance and receive positive e-mailed comments from students the next day, hoping that such signs indicate the audience would grow over time with the next event in the series.

Ben-Ur explained that the inception of the festival came about during her research on Sephardi Jews and their interaction with non-Jewish Latinos.

"I noted the story was much bigger than that, and I wanted to explore everything," she explained, noting that a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities first enabled her to make this film/lecture series possible to do just that.

Ben-Ur chose Stavans as the first speaker of the series because she believes he is a representative of the Latino/Jewish nexus.

"This is what he teaches and writes about," she said, "His memoir, On Borrowed Words, is about Latino identity. He is an intellectual and personal leader."

Before showing Novia Que Te Veo, Stavans attempted to place the film into context.

"This story is about Modern Jewish Mexican history," he said, "There is also Ancient Jewish Mexican history, and the two are in no way connected."

Forty thousand Jewish people lived in Mexico at the time of the film, and that minority is shrinking today, Stavans pointed out. Most Jews from Spanish-speaking countries, such as Mexico, find themselves having one or two constructions: Ashkenazi or Sephardi.

"When I was growing up [in Mexico] as an Ashkenazi," he explained to the audience in order to set up the plot for the film, "it was a faith worse than death to marry a Sephardi Jew or even a non-Jew."

Stavans showed his appreciation in reviewing a film that portrayed how many Mexican Jews live in a "sort of time bubble" and must grow up with a sense of living in a rented house, feeling as though they (he himself) do not belong in a particular country.

He pointed out that the only thing he disliked came about from the film's intention to educate, noting that life was not always as series as the film portrayed and issues of the differences between Ashkenazi and Sephardi Jews were not always the main topics of conversation.

In any case, responses from both the community and UMass student body have indeed been very positive, Ben-Ur said.

"I just came from San Diego, where there was a large Jewish community and never heard a discussion such as this," Vilmarie Vega explained, noting her enthusiasm for the film and the evening overall, "Around me in high school, I noticed a community of Mexican Jews and I was confused. I just am so glad that this is all being talked about."

Vega also noted that eating from a sampling of kosher food was "a plus" because it was something new for her.

Senior Linguistics and Anthropology major Anna Cohen-Cole, conveyed a similar reaction.

"I hadn't expected the refreshments and to be able to talk with anyone after. I thought it was really nice," she said, "I am Sephardi, so it was really great learning a bit more of my history," remarked Cohen-Cole, adding how it was nice to hear people from the community speak about their different connections with film.

Freshman Theater major Kei Ravedon explained how interesting it was for her to hear a story she had heard before and learn more about Jewish/Latino relations.

"I like the fact that it took the issues of politics and worked it into a romance and made it more personal," she said, "Seeing a girl my age going through life but at the same time showing the history made it more interesting."

Both during her welcoming comments and afterwards, Ben-Ur made sure to thank the festival's many sponsors, who provided, she said, both spiritual and financial assistance.

"This could not have been possible without so many individuals and groups," she said, especially, she added, since many of the movies in the film/lecture series were very difficult to locate.

Providing an example, she noted the particular cost of Novia Que Te Veo was $150, making her grateful to utilize Amherst College's copy instead of purchasing it.

Any interested University professor is eligible to borrow the tape and, to the best of Ben-Ur's knowledge, students who wish to see the film (again) may watch it on site at the Amherst College Library.

Ben-Ur will return the tape on Nov. 2, as one of her students is giving a presentation (equipped with film clips) on topics covered during this event in her introductory Judaic studies course.

Two soldiers die in helicopter crash

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The names of two U.S. servicemen who were killed in Friday's helicopter crash were released by the Defense Department on Sunday morning.

Spc. Ionn J. Edmunds, 20, of Cheyenne, Wyo. and Pfc. Kristofor T. Stonesifer, 28, of Missoula, Mont. were killed when the Blackhawk helicopter they were riding in crashed in Pakistan.

The two Army Rangers were on a support mission in Operation Enduring Freedom, the Pentagon said. While the cause of the crash is still under investigation, the Defense Department has ruled out hostile fire, contrary to a Taliban claim that they had shot it down.

In a briefing with reporters, Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff expressed his condolences to the families of Edmunds and Stonesifer.

"They and all who are participating in Operation Enduring Freedom are heroes. They put their lives on the line on behalf of freedom and on behalf of America, and they do it each and every day," Myers said. "I'm so very proud of them and their comrades in arms."

Myers adamantly denies that the Taliban had anything to do with the crash.

"I think it's pretty well established the Taliban lie. In this case, any claims that they shot this helicopter down are absolutely false," Myers said. "This was a middle of the night landing. There was a significant amount of dust when you get close to the ground, the rotor wash brings up the dust and makes landing very, very difficult. We think that had something to do with it."

Special Operations Forces attacked two sites in Afghanistan as part of what the Pentagon describes as "limited" ground operations.

"Under the direction of the president and the secretary of Defense and under the command of U.S. Central Command, General Tom Franks, Special Operations Forces, including U.S. Army Rangers, deployed to Afghanistan. They attacked and destroyed targets associated with terrorist activity and Taliban command and control," Myers said at Saturday's briefing. "U.S. forces were able to deploy, maneuver and operate inside Afghanistan without significant interference from Taliban forces. They are now refitting and repositioning for potential future operations against terrorist targets in other areas known to harbor terrorists."

The ground troops were deployed in southern Afghanistan, parachuting from a C-130 cargo plane onto an airfield. Myers presented a short video of the attack, which showed U.S. soldiers entering a building and discovering a room filled with weapons.

"These troops are clearing the airfield building by building, and you're going to notice at one point in the tape the troops come across a small weapons cache including rocket-propelled grenades, a machine gun and ammunition," Myers said. "These weapons were subsequently destroyed."

U.S. forces encountered "light" resistance the airfield and a separate Taliban command and control facility near Kandahar.

"As you would expect going into Taliban-held territory, you would meet resistance, and we met resistance at both objectives. the airfield and the other objective. It was. I guess you could characterize it as light," That's probably easy for us to say here in this room. For those experiencing it, of course, it was probably not light. And there were casualties on the other side. the exact number we do not know yet."

A USS Enterprise crewman prepares an F-14 strike aircraft for a mission on Oct. 7 2001.

COURTESY PETTY OFFICER 2ND CLASS JASON D. MALCONE U.S. NAVY/DOD

There were three injuries incurred during the operation, though Myers described them as "not life threatening."

"The mission overall was successful. We accomplished our objectives," Myers explained. "We have two primary goals in Afghanistan. One is to eliminate the support to al Qaeda, primarily the Taliban; and the other is to eliminate al Qaeda. We are going about that from the military part in a very measured and a very careful way."

Meyers explained that the two targets were chosen for their intelligence value, but would not go into specifics about how the mission was carried out.

"One of the primary reasons we conducted these missions on these two objective was to gather intelligence, and we are in the process of evaluating the intelligence that we brought out. But one of the messages should be that we are capable of, at a time of our choosing, conducting the kind of operations we want to conduct," Myers said. "We used a variety of aircraft. I will not go into specific types. Again, that gets into the tactics, the techniques and the procedures. We used a variety of aircraft for this particular operation, and I'll just leave it at that. The next time we conduct an operation somewhere in this world on this globe, people would have an understanding of how we operate and I'm just not going to divulge that."

In addition to the ground attacks, aerial operations continued.

"On Friday we struck in 15 planned target areas. These included AAA [Anti-Aircraft Artillery] sites, anti-aircraft sites, with dispersed armor and radar at those sites, ammunition and vehicle storage depots, and military training facilities including armored vehicles, trucks and buildings," Myers said. "We again flew four C-17 missions in support of humanitarian relief delivering approximately 68,000 rations and bringing the total rations delivered via air drops to date to approximately 575,000."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

Bradley U. student senate fights for right to distribute condoms

By Elizabeth Kinder
The Bradley Scout (Bradley U.)

(U-WIRE) PEORIA, Ill. – After years of frustration over the issue of condoms on the Bradley University campus, the Student Senate Monday passed the condom distribution empowerment resolution.

The resolution, authored by senators Amanda Scheldorf and Matt Trager, was passed by a majority vote of senators.

"I don't believe in giving up a fight," said Scheldorf, a Geisert Hall senator. "You fight until you win."

The resolution states that Student Senate agrees to inform the student body that all students have the right to distribute condoms on campus without punishment by the university.

It goes on to say that "empowered and encouraged to take it upon themselves, as individuals, to openly protect the health of their fellow students by distributing condoms."

Trager, a senator from the St. James Apartments, said they are "doing what we can do as a student organization with the window the administration has given us to help our constituents."

Trager said he supported the resolution because he is concerned about the health of the students in his constituency.

"One could argue that students have the responsibility to make their own decisions when it comes to safe sex, but the reality is that students won't use condoms if they are not there," he said.

Scheldorf said that last year, as a Heitz Hall senator, she worked hard to push this issue and get the condom referendum on the all-school ballot passed.

"A lot of people saw the referendum on the voting ballot last year and asked if it would do anything," she said. "This year, we decided to do something about it."

The referendum asked students if they would support the distribution of condoms on campus by student organizations.

The referendum was approved by 75.7 percent of voters, or 1,090 students.

Trager said he thought students felt nothing would be done about condom distribution after the referendum passed last year.

"They thought the issue would never be seen again. I didn't want the effort that was put to get the referendum on the ballot to fade out," the junior political science and economics major said.

All-School President Brian Weidner said he is in full support of this resolution.

"There is no other choice but for Senate to support something like this," Weidner said.

He said he made sure the resolution was what all campus organizations would want to see and represents a new focus for Senate.

"This resolution represents a paradigm shift for Student Senate," Weidner said. "Our motive now is to reflect a new mentality of empowerment through action."

Scheldorf said the resolution empowers students on an individual level to make change.

"This lets students know that we can use ourselves to make our campus a safer and healthier place," she said.

But not all senators support the measure.

Wyckoff Hall senator Lisa Eakman said she thinks the resolution is not the best way to approach the issue.

"Steps need to be taken to ensure more safe sex on campus, but I don't know if condom distribution is the answer," the freshman international studies major said.

Turn to BRADLEY, page 3

International Briefs

By Arjun Mahalingam
Collegian Correspondent

India

The Indian and Pakistani militaries exchanged fire on Tuesday, Oct. 16 across the disputed Kashmir border.

In a press conference, George Fernandes, newly re-instated Indian Defense Minister, said that Indian soldiers killed 30 militants who tried to cross a cease-fire line that separates the Pakistani- and Indian-controlled portions of Kashmir.

The Pakistani government meanwhile, issued a statement that Indian forces killed a woman and injured 23 other civilians.

The events marred U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell's visit to both India and Pakistan.

In a press conference in Pakistan, Powell said that they rescheduled 379 million dollars in Pakistan's bilateral debt as well as voted for new International Monetary Funds (IMF) loans to Pakistan. He also stated that, "the Kashmir issue is central to the relationship (between India and Pakistan) and can be resolved if all parties engaged with a willingness to address their concerns in mutually acceptable ways."

He also mentioned that the United States would help Pakistan strengthen their economy and broaden their commercial ties. Powell left the next day for India where he met with India's Minister for External Affairs, Jaswant Singh to discuss India's role in the war on terrorism. In a press conference in India, Powell explained that all countries have problems with terror, pointing toward India's troubles in Kashmir.

"The problem of terrorism is not limited to Afghanistan," Powell said. Referring to his statement in Pakistan that Kashmir was a "central" issue in India Pakistan bilateral relations, he said that by that he meant it was an important issue, and not the only issue. Powell had also extended an invitation from President George W. Bush to Prime Minister Vajpayee to visit Washington on Nov. 9, and the invitation was accepted.

Israel

The Israeli Palestinian peace process took another blow when Israeli Tourism Minister Rechavam Ze'evy was shot dead on Oct. 17 at Jerusalem's East Hyatt Hotel, according to a statement released by the Israeli press agency. The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, in a leaflet sent to news agencies, claimed responsibility for the attack, stating that the killing of its leader, Abu Ali Mustafa, by an Israeli rocket bombing on Aug. 27, was the reason behind the assassination. The leaflet also stated that Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, "has to know that Palestinian blood is not cheap and that those who target the leaders of the Palestinian people are not safe from being targeted and assassinated themselves."

This assassination came after Israel and Palestine called a truce on Sep. 26. Ze'evy was a controversial hard line conservative member of the government. The shooting came two days after Ze'evy and other ministers resigned from the government, citing the easing of restrictions on Palestine.

Sharon announced that he would accept the creation of a Palestinian state but only if there would be more restrictions placed on it. This is the second such announcement after the Palestinian Authority turned down its first one in January. Immediately after the assassination, the Israeli Government announced in a press conference that it was severing all contact with the Palestinian Authority temporarily.

"Full responsibility falls squarely on Arafat, as someone who has controlled, and continues to control, terrorism, and as one who has not – to this day – taken even one serious step to prevent terrorism," Prime Minister Sharon said in a special memorial session to Parliament.

The government also took a further step by not allowing Yasser Arafat from using the international airport in Gaza. "This despicable act is further evidence of the need to fight terrorism," White House Press Secretary Ari Fleischer said in a released statement.

The Palestinian Authority in a statement to the press condemned the killing stating that it was "extremely damaging to the Palestinian cause."

Belgium

The European Union leaders in Ghent, Belgium released a statement saying that it fully supports the war against terrorism.

"The European Council confirms its staunchest support for the military operations which began on Oct. 7 and which are legitimate under the terms of the United Nations Charter and of Resolution 1368 of the United Nations Security Council," the released statement said.

The members of the European Union also stressed the need for a new stable government in Afghanistan.

"As soon as that goal is attained, the European Union will embark with the international community on a far reaching and ambitious program of political and humanitarian aid for the reconstruction of Afghanistan with a view to stabilizing the region," the report stated.

The report also stated that the EU would mobilize 310 million Euros towards humanitarian aid for the Afghan people. The Prime Minister of Belgium, Guy Verhofstadt, said in a press conference that the United States had asked the EU for judicial assistance and to help stop the proliferation of biological, chemical and nuclear material and cracking down on forged documents like passports and visas.

Belgium currently has the rotating European Union Presidency. The EU foreign ministers met in Luxembourg to hold talks on plans to re-build Afghanistan. The council also stressed the need for differentiating the terrorist attacks from Islam and encouraged a "dialogue of equals between our civilizations."

The EU troika visited Pakistan, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Iran "to forge the International coalition against terrorism" according to a report released by an EU commission. The council meeting took place in the midst of a controversy due to a decision by the leaders of Britain, France and Germany to hold a prior meeting amongst themselves before the council meeting. Eleven of the fifteen council member countries belong to NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization). NATO members have provided the American Military with access to their ports and airspace to carry out their war on terrorism. The European Union has also decided to, "dry up the sources of terrorist funding."

Iraq

The United States recently sent a letter to Iraq via Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, warning Iraq not to take advantage of the current situation in any way.

Meanwhile, Iraqi authorities have started evacuating key military installations around the country in preparation for a possible military strike by the United States, according to the Iraqi Press Agency. America has stated in the UN that its war on terrorism may extend beyond Afghanistan. US President George W Bush said in a special press briefing that he was watching Iraq "very carefully" and that Iraq should allow International Weapons Inspectors into their country. "There's no question that the leader of Iraq is an evil man. After all, he gassed his own people. We know he's been developing weapons of mass destruction," Bush said. "And I think it's in his advantage to allow inspectors back in his country to make sure that he's conforming to the agreement he made after he was soundly trounced in the Persian Gulf War. And so we're watching him very carefully."

Iraq is on the US official list of countries sponsoring terrorism.

China

The Asia Pacific Economic Co-operation (APEC) held it's ninth meeting in Shanghai on Oct. 21. It was the first gathering of the 21-member organization this year and the most important meeting of the leaders of the Asia-Pacific region since the Sept 11 terrorist attacks.

Leaders from Australia, Brunei, Canada, Chile, Chinese Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Peru, the Philippines, Russia, Singapore, Thailand, the United States and Vietnam attended the meeting. The meeting came at a time when global economies were experiencing a slowdown. Economies all over the world became even more uncertain after the Sept 11 terrorist attacks.

The discussions in the APEC meeting were broadly based on "Meeting New Challenges in the New Century: Achieving Common Prosperity through Participation and Cooperation," had an in depth exchange of views on the current macroeconomic situation, the negative impact of the September 11 Incident on economic development, human capacity building and future development of APEC, and reached a broad consensus and issued a Leaders Declaration.

"Today, at the beginning of the 21st century, we have found the world situation and that of the Asia-Pacific both encouraging and worrying," President Jiang Zemin said.

The leaders attending the APEC reached an agreement on these issues and issued the APEC Economic Leader's declaration and the APEC Economic Leaders' Statement on Counter-Terrorism. They strongly condemned the Sept. 11 attacks on counter-terrorism as a threat to peace and security of all nations.

Solid steps were also taken on ensuring the convention of the fourth ministerial meeting of the World Trade Organization and another round on global trade discussions. APEC economies had a combined GDP of over 18 trillion U.S. dollars and accounted for 44 percent of the global trade in 1999. Three members hold permanent seats on the U.N. Security Council. Zemin also met with U.S. President George W Bush. The two leaders discussed Sino-US relations, terrorism and the maintenance of world peace and stability.

Russian President Vladimir Putin and Bush held a bilateral meeting after the summit meeting. In a joint press conference after their talks, Putin said that there was some progress made on the issue of the Anti-Ballistic Treaty (ABM.) They also discussed economic cooperation between their two countries and the formulation of a strategic partnership framework guiding relations between Russia and the United States.

Zemin openly supported the ongoing war against terrorism. He also said that the meeting was a step forward in the Asia-Pacific cooperation process and has strengthened APEC members' confidence and resolve to overcome their current economic difficulties and to restore global economic growth.

On the Net:

The State Department: http://www.state.gov.
The Defense Department: http://www.defenselink.mil.
The Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs: http://www.Israel-mfa.gov.il.
The European Union: http://europa.eu.int
Asian-Pacific Economic Cooperation: http://www.apec-china.org.cn
The Iraqi Presidency: http://www.urukhnk.net/iraq

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Extra, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lillen Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Managing Anxiety
A GROUP FOR WOMEN WHO STRUGGLE WITH ANXIETY DAILY
Understand the causes of anxiety
Learn to reduce worry and "what if" thinking
Gain skills to manage anxiety and reduce stress
Thursday Evenings, 5:00-6:30 PM
Beginning October 25th, 2001
To register for this four session group, please call
Everywoman's Center Counseling Services
(413) 577-0077
TTY/TDD
Program is open to women from the five colleges and the community at no fee or charge and made possible by Amherst Town Funds, Five Colleges Inc., UMass Graduate Student Senate, UMass Student Affairs and the generosity of our donors.
For more information about all EWC programs, call (413) 545-0883.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins $3.75 4.25
Nachos Especial $3.95 4.40
Sweet Potato Fries $3.75 3.75
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome 1995
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Volunteer Bulletin

By Marcella Gojek
Collegian Correspondent

Oct. – AMHERST FRIENDS of the HOMELESS –Volunteers are needed to canvas for Shelter Sunday.
Contact: Tom Plant/Hill Boss 253-5296

October 28 –MassPIRG –Open Spaces is holding an educational hike in the Holyoke Range from 12-2 PM starting from Notch Reserve, Rt. 116, South Granby.
Contact: Matt Bolus 545-0199 or stop by 452A of the Student Union.

Oct.31–MassPIRG –Volunteers needed for "Trick or Can" food drive for the food bank.
Contact: MassPIRG 545-0199

Oct./Nov. – SPRINGFIELD PUBLIC SCHOOLS – Math and English tutors needed for students who failed the MCAS in the spring. Tutors will receive 2h. training and spend 12h. tutoring 1 or 2 students.
Contact: Linda Honan 545-2396, e-mail honan@educ.umass.edu

Nov.1-December 31 –SALVATION ARMY – Bell-ringers needed to staff kettles and help raise funds for local Salvation Army projects in 2-3 hour shifts.
Contact: Sabrina Moran 586-4732

Nov.3 –MADD-Red Ribbon Campaign, 2-5pm – Volunteers needed to hand out red ribbons (in support of safe and sober driving throughout the holiday season), assist w/ demonstrations, staff the info table, and help participating stores.
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

Nov. 4 – Kids Day 2001. 11am-5pm – Volunteers needed to staff a MADD information table (can sign up in 3h. shifts).
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

Nov. – Drivers needed to deliver ribbon orders from Easthampton office (mileage will be paid for).
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

Nov.13–MassPIRG—Volunteers needed to staff an "Open Mic" fundraiser for area shelters.
Contact: MassPIRG 545-0199

Dec. 1/Dec. 2 – Volunteers needed to hand out programs and candles at vigils to honor those killed/injured in drunk driving crashes.
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

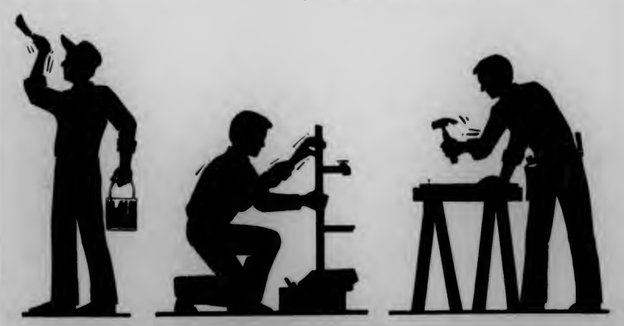
Dec.8 –SALVATION ARMY –Volunteers needed to help out at a Christmas party for low-income area children.
Contact: Elizabeth Cowart 586-5243

Dec.8 –SALVATION ARMY –Volunteers needed to visit local veterans.
Contact: Linda Sopp 586-5336

Ongoing – Legislative Issues Telephone Network – Supporters needed to contact elected officials concerning drunk-driving related bills.
Contact: Laurie Broussard 413-527-8254

Ongoing – SERVICENET – Volunteers needed to help with fundraising for shelters.
Contact: Lisa Davol 582-9512

Ongoing – AMHERST REGIONAL MIDDLE SCHOOL – Volunteers needed for applying magnetic strip to all books, magazines, videos etc. in library collection, anytime between 8am-3pm.
Contact: Mrs. Jones 549-9866, 7:30-3 M-F



Ongoing – AMHERST FAMILY CENTER of HCAC – Volunteers needed to staff monthly fundraising and community events.
Contact: Mary Rives 549-4969

Ongoing—FAMILY OUTREACH of AMHERST - Low-income women's support organization needs childcare for meetings once a week.
Contact: MorningStar 665-9806

Ongoing –Volunteers needed to post posters for Stavros Center for Independent Living at UMass Bulletin Boards.
Contact: Sandy Miliefsky 800-804-1899

For more volunteer opportunities or to learn how to get credit for volunteer work, call the Office of Community Service Learning at 545-2015 or stop by 610 Goodell Hall.

The Daily Collegian publishes the Volunteer Bulletin as a public service.

Decisions, decisions.
Spectators look over the choices at a Food Services booth.

■ Bradley

continued from page 1

She said she thinks students distributing condoms could lead to dangerous results because of mishandling and tampering.

Eakman said she believes the referendum from last spring is not an accurate count of students to base the resolution off because "only one sixth of the student body voted, and this year's incoming class was not here to vote.

"Senate should take a different route to ensure safe sex other than handing out condoms, like offering STD testing and educational incentives through the university," Eakman said.

Eakman said she believes the resolution is a "Band-aid approach" to a large problem.

But Scheldorf said the Band-aid is necessary right now.

"You put the Band-aid on first, and then you work to heal it. This is the first step in helping the issue," she said.

Ed Dillon, campus affairs chairman, said the resolution doesn't call for action from the student body, administration or Senate, and is just one step of many.

"We will work with the administration and student body to find middle ground in order to satisfy and hopefully resolve the condom distribution issue," Dillon said.

Sam Felder, board member of Vox and the Bradley Feminist Society, said he thinks this is only the beginning of addressing this issue.

"Bradley is one of few campuses that as a university does not actively provide for the health of its students," he said. "Not distributing condoms is a problem, and if the first step is encouraging students themselves, than that is a good start."

Felder said he hopes the university eventually will allow residential life staff members and the Health Center staff to distribute condoms.

"But this is a long-term process, and I myself will actively pursue as an alum and hope that others will too," Felder said.

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

VALLEY Furniture and Crafts
15% off Bookcases
320 Avenue A, Turner's Falls
Call for Directions
Open Mon. Sat. 10-4

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer!"
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

In phase two

US must be careful

With the U.S. military entering what is apparently the second phase of Operation Enduring Freedom, sending ground troops into Afghanistan, it is again important that our soldiers take the high road.

Civilian casualties must be avoided. To not be cautious in our attacks gives the Islamic world further reason to believe that the United States is waging war against Islam and not the terrorists who so horribly attacked our nation. We cannot allow ourselves to stand on the same moral plain as those who would attack us.

That said, the apparent strategy of the United States – to as aggressively as possible, aid the revolutionary forces within Afghanistan – seems to be the ideal way to fight the war. Aiding and abetting internal forces makes it all the more likely that, when the Taliban finally falls, there will be groups ready to move into power to maintain what little stability is left. It should be noted that stability in Afghanistan, truthfully, is an awfully relative term, especially with large swathes of the population starving and generally disinterested in the long-term issue of nation building.

If the United States is serious about re-establishing ties within the Islamic world, and especially within Afghanistan, it must work to establish somebody's credibility in the region. By supporting the Northern Alliance and other revolutionary groups within Afghanistan, the United States is tactically using the Taliban's own people against them. By bolstering the strength of the Taliban's allies, especially in a nation where alliances can shift on the direction of the wind, the US has bettered its own chances of winning the offensive against the Taliban.

And for the Taliban's part?

Their own inaction further dooms their political standing in the region. Already a shunned a nation-state – only Pakistan, also now against it, had recognized the validity of the Taliban – the seizure of foodstuffs meant for starving refugees has to be considered a final evidence of the fundamentalist Islamic governments real interests. Instead of attempting to bring a certain morality to its people, at its very base, the Taliban cares only about its own existence. Such a callousness, to actually steal from the hungry, pulls the shroud back on the real Taliban. What had once been a political body unlike any other in the world – most nations set on religious moorings seem to be built on violent overthrows – the Taliban apparently had the support of more than the majority of its people. Any government, in the end, will lose that support if it behaves against the obvious best interest of its people.

Morality might be one of the best interests of the Afghanis, but eating definitely is, and the perception of that further tightens the proverbial noose on the Taliban.

The United States has craftily and carefully created a position for itself that is almost rock solid. From here on out, it is only strengthened by the measured and tactical actions of our own troops in the region. Replicating My Lai would be a horrendous blow to the perfected image that the United States has clearly worked on.

If our soldiers remain within the boundaries of war, and if the United States can avoid the moral ground that our attackers occupy, the rest of the world will always be with us, and that includes the nations of the Middle East.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

SOM: The beat goes on

KEN CAMPBELL

I love getting phone messages. You know, you go out somewhere, you come back, and there's a message waiting for you. It makes me feel good, because that means that even though I was out somewhere hanging out with people, there were other people that wanted my time and attention too. It's a pretty good ego boost.

What's not cool however, is hearing threats on my machine. Sandwiched right between a message from my grandmother and one from a friend of mine was a lovely little diatribe. It follows in full. I warn the gentle reader that it contains strong and offensive language.

"Dude you're such – I can't even believe, like, you left your name on the thing. You're such a fag for writing the article – straight up, why would you even like say that about the entire school? Uh, I'm going to write a rebuttal article 'cause I, uh disagree with everything you said. You're obviously a fag or else you wouldn't say half the shit you said. Um, and you're just pissed because we get laid more and we get more chicks and you probably didn't get it anyway, so whatever. I don't even know why you write for this article because you have no writing skills anyway, 'cause I see people who write good and you're not one of 'em. Uh, you're a loser [laugh] and I hope you die. Alright? Peace."

"New message, sent Monday, at 11:59 p.m. from, an outside caller, 41 seconds."

Apparently this had something to do with the anti-SOM column I wrote last week. Surely, this caller is a future Fortune 500 CEO. This brilliant monologue should be inscribed in bronze and placed on the addition to the SOM.

First of all, who do you think you are? Eminem? Homophobic remarks aren't cool, and are especially confusing since I'm straight. Second, nobody can write good, Slappy. However, one can write well. I happen to think I am a good writer who can write well. Ah, fun with grammar, even if it is redundant. Thirdly, when making a threatening phone call, be sure to enunciate and properly articulate your comments.

Next, if the SOM kids are off having so much sex, then why are they bothering to call me? I'm assuming that, if one would be so inclined to survey students at the University of Massachusetts, they would not be likely to make threatening phone calls in the midst of coitus. So the simple action of making a threatening phone call at night when, statistically speaking, is when most sexual activity is going on, kind of disproves the argument that SOM gets you laid.

So negating that, lets move on to the other reason that anonymous threatening phone calls annoy me so much.

It's just they're so damn unoriginal.

That's right. I said it.

Any moron with an opposable thumb can make a threatening phone call, so you have to be distinctive. You have to make your threat "pop." If your threat is boring and commonplace, how is it going to paralyze me with fear? You have to have pizzazz when you tell some one that you think that their opinion is in error and wish to see that their vital functions cease.

C'mon people, if you're going to tell some one that you "hope" they die, at least use your imagination.

How would you like me to die? Would you yourself like to kill me, or are you just praying for a random occurrence to take care of the job for you?

Let's be serious here folks. If you're going to threaten someone, you might as well do it right. Leaving a rambling, incoherent and horribly grammatically incorrect message on my machine is so boring. Whatever happened to waking up next to a dead horse's head? How about a fish wrapped in a Daily Collegian? Am I the only one who watches the Godfather?

Why don't would-be assassins take the time and effort to cut letters out of magazines, paste them into a threatening message and mail it? Is a poisoned pen pal too much to ask? Where's the dedication? Huh? Society has truly fallen low when instead of a receiving the bloody appendage, lets say a toe, of a loved one in the mail, all you get is some one hoping that you die.

> "Bottom line folks, if you disagree with someone, the intelligent, rational, and might I add, civilized way is to convey to the other party that you have another viewpoint. You make your argument against the other person's argument, not against the person"

And hope? Hope isn't even a strong word. Wish, want, need; these are words that convey to the intended target that you indeed do not want them to live.

I blame TV, really. Its just sucked the imagination out of kids these days. Gone are the days when threatening someone with bodily harm was a skill, a craftsmanship executed by professionals with large hairy knuckles and deep gravely voices. When you were threatened back in the day, by God, you were threatened. You got scared. You wanted to appease the threateners so that dire circumstances would not befall you.

But now?

"I hope you die."

So, so weak. So uninspired. So ordinary. Is this the best the SOM can churn out to oppose me?

"I hope you die."

I mean, I know you Management folks aren't really what we in the biz like to call well read, but I would imagine that somewhere along the line you had to take freshmen writing. Didn't any of it sink in? Alright, maybe Ye Olde English Writing Program was a while ago. Use some of the terminology that you picked up in those classes of yours.

Tell me you'd like to see me "downsized." There's always the old stand-by "terminated." Here's a good one: "Your current biological functions are no longer needed at this time; we'll keep your resume on file." How about "We've decided to discharge your soul from its current receptacle." My personal favorite: "We're giving you the pink slip... of DEATH!"

Bottom line folks, if you disagree with someone, the intelligent, rational, and might I add, civilized way is to convey to the other party that you have another viewpoint. You make your argument against the other person's argument, not against the person. This is what separates us from the squirrels. When they discuss politics, someone's fur always ends up ripped out. So, if you disagree with any of my views, that's fine. It's your right. Just keep it civil, or if not, at least keep it funny. Just don't decide my right to life based on 90 lines of satire.

And I won't base yours on a 41-second anonymous, unoriginal death threat. Alright? Peace.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

Listen up!
There will be a meeting this Wednesday night at 6 p.m. in the Collegian office for students interested in writing for Ed/Op. If you can't make it, email us at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com or stop by and talk to Matt or Dan.

One last time: remembering Mr. McCarthy

REGAN MCKENDRY

Thesis statements. Just about every college student knows what one is, and has written more than they care to think about. You know how they go: A statement that summed up the purpose of your paper, with a list of supporting topics, or a methodology, that would be covered. But how many of you remember when you first learned about the thesis statement and all its glory? I do.

Freshman year English class – high school, not college – was when I first learned the actual form to write a paper in. Mr. McCarthy taught four of the five sections of freshman writing at my high school, including my own. In addition to the joyful reading of such works as "Great Expectations" (taught, we did a ton of writing in that class. Mr. McCarthy was not the typical English teacher. Rather than majoring in English and literature in college, he was a writing major, and his assignments showed it.

As students we wrote a minimum of once a week. Whether it was a simple paragraph or a multi-level paper, each piece was treated as an opportunity to improve our skills as writers. I still remember one of the largest projects of the year, in which I wrote a report and made a presentation stating the case that Gene Roddenberry could be classified as a hero. (For those of you who don't know, he was the creator of Star Trek.) It was a difficult sell to some, but the project was a learning experience on many levels, the level of which was don't tape Star Trek trading cards to a poster board if you'd like to keep them afterwards.

Aside from the writing, Mr. McCarthy meant numerous other things to me as well. He was a person with whom I could discuss why the Red Sox had blown yet another great season. We could discuss current events and other news issues (without ever getting into a fight.) Or we could even laugh together recalling this past week's episode of Frasier.

It was his sense of humor that I remember the most. Every other sentence out of his mouth had a hidden joke within, some that it seemed only I understood. Anytime a student complained about how unfair something was, they were met with the charade of a violin playing. Even punishments were inventive (my friend Jason can tell you how many times he had to emulate the cross.)

Sophomore year I was fortunate to again have Mr. McCarthy for American Literature. As our curriculum was novels rather than a textbook, there was definitely more literary analysis involved. Yet contrary to what some might think, all this meant more writing. With every paper that was written, my writing improved. By the end of the year, it was astonishing to look at the difference in my papers at that point, versus those I had written at the start of high school. I actually was starting to enjoy writing, but at times it was still frustrating to have an assignment that did not compel me at all.

After two years of writing for Mr. McCarthy, it was time for other teachers. However, the love of writing and the skills that I had honed remained. I put the same vigor into all papers that I had for the rest of high school (and into college as well). Junior year, when my friend Neil suffered a seizure and had to stay overnight at the hospital, I turned to poetry as my way to cope. That was the first poem of the dozens I wrote during the next two years. Senior year when my friend Mike spent four days in a coma and a month in a hospital following a skiing accident, writing in a journal is the only thing that helped me keep my sanity. Looking at those experiences and others, I can't begin to imagine what they would have been like had I been unable to use words to help me through a difficult time.

When graduation neared, I began to look back on the seven years I had spent at my high school. (Don't get any bright ideas – the school is grades 6-12...thus seven years!) When thinking about those who had made a definite impact, the one who always came to the top of the list was Mr. McCarthy. From a trip as a sixth grader with Leo and him out here to the Basketball Hall of Fame, right up to my college entrance essays that he edited and critiqued, Mr. McCarthy was always there to help and have fun.

And later when I returned back to my old school for visits, he was always there to greet me with a smile and a joke, equally concerned about what was going on in my own life as well as informing me what was taking place at Austin. No matter when I visited or how busy he was, he always made time for me. It seemed like it would always be that way.

Mr. McCarthy died on Thursday, Oct. 4. He succumbed to brain cancer after a four-year struggle. The first tumor appeared late in my senior year and he kept it secret from most students at first. I was one of the few he informed on graduation day of why he had missed some days of school that spring. Whenever I visited school he updated me on his condition and miraculously, he was able to continue teaching up until this current school year. It was only this September that his condition severely deteriorated.

When I found he was near death I felt helpless. I turned to the only thing that I could think of: writing. I went down to CVS, bought a card and in words, as I would be unable to in person, said good-bye to my mentor. It was probably the most difficult thing I have ever had to write. The card was FedEx-ed to Boston and arrived the day he died. I'll never know if he got to read it while alive, but I know now that he knows what was said.

The funeral was the day after Columbus Day. I went home and worked 45 hours the three days prior, burying myself in my job. The day of the funeral I skipped class to drive to West Roxbury with two of my siblings for the funeral. Austin had canceled classes for the day so any and all that wanted to attend would be free to do so. Most of the faculty was there, as were four busloads of current students, numerous alumni, and Mr. McCarthy's friends and family. The crowd numbered around 400, filling St. Theresa's.

The hour and forty minute mass was a fitting tribute, equally sad about the loss and celebratory about the life of a great man. Father Morris from school gave a homily that helped all to remember. However, what probably said the most about Mr. McCarthy's impact were the two and a half pages in the back of the program full of excerpts from letters and cards that he had received from students and friends. It was in these passages that a person, even if they never met Francis Gerard McCarthy, could understand what type of person he was and the impact he had. In the middle of all those was one from my card:

"I can't begin to describe the impact you have had on my life. You always had a joke for my offbeat sense of humor; a ploy to make me laugh at my own gullibility; a lesson I so desperately needed to learn... In addition to all that, you cultivated a love of writing from down deep within that will never go away. You continually challenged me to do more, to achieve higher, to do better."

After 51 years, 27 of them teaching at Austin, Mr. McCarthy is gone. No more can I go to room 211 to talk about why the Sox blew another season, whether Niles and Daphne will truly stay together or what role writing is playing in my life currently. (Personally I like to think that he would have been proud to see one of his most opinionated pupils returning to the joy of personal writing via editorials.)

Mr. McCarthy knew my writing and all its intricacies better than any person on this planet. As is the case, he also knew that conclusions were always my biggest challenge. I usually am able to draw the reader in with a strong introduction and then progress through my papers in a logical, convincing manner. Yet when it came time to tie everything together and wrap it up, I continue to struggle.

Perhaps I should just slide it under your old door at Austin. And with a little luck, when I return, written on it, along with all the necessary corrections, will be the inspiration and guidance that I have come to appreciate with all my heart, one last time.

Regan McKendry is a Collegian Staff member.

This week:
Depp's Hell,
Drew's Boys

Mulholland fails

Naomi Watts (left) and Laura Harring

David Lynch

Justin Theroux

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Johnny Depp's From Hell seized the top spot at the box-office this weekend, earning an estimated $11.6 million. It was the second straight week in which profits were off and Hollywood executives blamed the nation's growing fear of anthrax. It was also the second straight week that Hollywood executives have ignored the generally poor quality of their films.

From Hell stars Depp as Sherlock Holmes. Well, not really. Instead, he's a distinguished Scotland Yard detective with an opium habit. Holmes was a Yard consultant with a cocaine habit. There's a big difference there, especially when it comes to paying royalties. Anyway, the film chronicles Depp's attempts to capture Jack the Ripper. Stylish and longer than the average horror film, From Hell's debut was considered a success. Its distributor, Twentieth Century Fox, expects the film to do well with in the pre-Halloween market.

Taking second place was the unbelievably expensive Riding in Cars with Boys, a movie loosely based on the

At the movies
with Sam Wilkinson

The leader who demands the inclusion of Camilla

Watts' landlord warning her to stay away from Laura Harring

Theroux pulled away from a series of vices story of author Beverly D'Onofrio. For some reason, it cost $47 million to make, although nobody is quite sure what that kind of money was spent on. Critics' reactions made it seem as though it probably wasn't the movie. Boys brought in $10.8 million. If it's lucky, Boys might break even.

This week's only other new entrant was The Last Castle (reviewed in this issue) which, despite good word-of-mouth reviews, struggled to a fifth place finish. Earning $7.1 million, the Robert Redford film was critically panned. While Dreamworks, the film's distributor, hoped the film would do better, it conceded that such an awful opening weekend probably spelled disaster for the prison film.

Rounding out the top-five were Training Day, which earned a third place finish with $9.5 million, and Bandits, which took fourth with $8.4 million, rendering it a total failure, especially considering its hefty $80 million price tag.

After The Last Castle, Serendipity took sixth place with $5.8 million. It was followed by the "it's unbelievable that they actually made this" Corky Romano, which suckered $5.3 million out of the hands of innocent filmgoers. That make Romano profitable, indicating that, in Hell, the devil is wearing mittens. The Chris Kattan starring vehicle was followed by Mike Douglas's Don't Say a Word ($4.4 million), Ben Stiller's Zoolander ($3.3 million) and Hong Kong's Iron Monkey ($3.2 million).

On the art-house circuit, Richard Linklater's animated Waking Dead made $22,000 on four screens. Joining it was an adaptation of Arthur Miller's Focus, starring Laura Dern and William H. Macy, which raked in $13,000 at 18 theaters. David Lynch's Mulholland Drive (reviewed in this issue) brought in a cool million at 247 theaters nationwide, including our own Pleasant Street.

Even though they said the same thing last week about this week, Hollywood executives are serious when they hope that next weekend will be better than this week. Well, they might be serious. After all, Bones, a starring vehicle for Snoop Doggy Dogg, is one of next weekend's bigger releases. Although it looks like a hackneyed Candyman rip-off, somebody actually put his or her paycheck on this thing working out. And because Hollywood refuses to realize that most movies starring music stars fail miserably (Glitter anyone?), On the Line is being released as well. It stars two members of N'Sync. Smell the profits.

Other releases include K-Pax (Kevin Spacey's first appearance since last year's disastrous Pay It Forward), and the horror(able?) film 13 Ghosts.

Lynch's artistic vision undermines latest film

MULHOLLAND DRIVE
Starring Laura Harring, Naomi Watts and Justin Theroux
Directed by David Lynch
Playing at Pleasant Street Theatre

David Lynch's Mulholland Drive is indulgent abstraction. It is a pastiche of scenes originally shot for a television pilot – Lynch's Twin Peaks was one of the most popular if misunderstood television adventures ever – which horrified ABC television when it was first screened. Left with his remnants, Lynch began to weave.

He started with disparate images: a horrific car crash; confused detectives; a man horrified by a dream in a diner, a woman entering Los Angeles for the first time. She is the main character, Naomi Watts' Betty Elms, an aspiring Canadian actress. He enmeshes her in a cold Los Angeles. He surrounds her with strange characters – Justin Theroux's Adam Kesher, an ego-driven movie director, and Laura Harring's Rita, the amnesiac car-crash victim – and then he sets her free on a path that leads to his ultimate destination.

Using Betty's naiveté, Rita's amnesia and Theroux's ego, Lynch launches a barrage after barrage at the film industry. In Betty, Lynch has a character eaten and spat out by the film industry. In Adam Kesher, he has a film director whose creative vision is stymied by the machinations of producers and a shady coterie. In Rita, he has a woman (possibly an actress) without definition, as malleable as he wants her to be. All three, in their own ways and in the film's story arc, skewer Hollywood.

Few critics have examined the possibility that Lynch could be anything but strange and eccentric. He is often praised for his singular artistic vision, often only because it is so dissimilar from the typical Hollywood fare. Most critics have praised Drive as Lynch's return to his Twin Peaks/Lost Highway days after the successful, but decidedly un-Lynchian, Straight Story. But riddling the film are horrid portrayals of a Hollywood that is faceless and uncreative.

Watts' virginal Betty is consumed by Hollywood in a harrowing sequence towards the middle of the film. Betty had been, to that point, a naive bumpkin. At her first audition, in front of a movie executive, a casting agent and a director, Betty's other side appears. She is suddenly sultry and sensuous, aggressive and off-putting, dangerous and desirable. Her tryout in a success – she is immediately offered the role – and then she is shuffled away by the casting agent. Betty is advised to avoid the role she just won because the director is a "nobody." Betty is noticeably confused and unsure of the advice she is being given. She does follow the casting agent though to another audition for Kesher's struggling movie.

Meanwhile, Kesher's movie, undefined and apparently unimportant, is on the ropes. Although the script is apparently very popular in Hollywood ("six of the biggest actresses want it," Kesher says), he is told by his producers and two Italians, presumably mobsters (played to perfection by a manic Dan Hedaya) that his leading lady has already been chosen for him. Kesher, egomaniacal in his work, is infuriated. It is his movie, isn't it? It is his vision? Who are these outsiders to force his hand? Kesher is later visited by the Cowboy (a Lynchian character if ever there was), who tells him that the rest of the movie is his. "But not the leading lady," he warns.

Kesher makes cupasetic. He casts the mob's Camilla, an amorphous actress who goes throughout the movie undefined. When there is a sudden shift in the film's perspective, Camilla becomes Rita, leaving us to wonder why Lynch played the sleight-of-hand. As with all characters in the film, Rita's two-facedness is blatant.

And even if the crowd was missing the point, Lynch uses a late-night vaudevillian show to hammer home his message. Half magic show, half spoken performance art, the piece's master of ceremonies states that art is a recording, done again and again with varying effects. Not exactly a subtle statement about the general boredom of Hollywood productions.

Lynch uses his three characters to skewer a Hollywood that has aggressively shunned him. His cuts at impotent directors, demanding producers, uncreative productions and the general Los Angeles malaise are hardly disguised attacks on those he hates. But Lynch's fringe career isn't totally Hollywood's doing; his own aggressive independence hasn't made him friends in Tinseltown's inner circles. After the Drive debacle, Lynch swore off television forever. With a television culture that seems to embrace blandness over substance, it doesn't

Turn to LYNCH, page 6

All photos courtesy of www.davidlynch.de

Camilla on the set of Kesher's movie

A typically Lynchian character

Watts and Harring meet alone at the local "greasy spoon"

Superb acting, action set Castle apart from the others

James Gandolfini and Robert Redford wage a battle of wits and weapons in The Last Castle.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

THE LAST CASTLE
Directed by Rod Lurie
with Robert Redford and James Gandolfini
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

The Last Castle is the product of a tryst between The Shawshank Redemption and A Few Good Men. The battle of wills that forms the tension for Castle is straight from these two parents – what happens when roles are reversed, and the better man isn't where he should be?

Robert Redford plays general-turned-prisoner Eugene Irwin, a three star hero whose one mistake cost the lives of eight American soldiers. Sentenced to a maximum security stockade, Irwin meets the warden Colonel Winter. Winter, played to the hilt by James Gandolfini, respects and admires the general. Hell, he even has a copy of Irwin's book. But when Irwin accidentally insults him, it sets forth a contest of egos that draws a line in the sand.

Irwin adjusts slowly to prison life, and we watch as the hapless inmate Aguilar (Clifton Collins Jr.) tries to salute the general. Schooled by the warden that saluting is not allowed between prisoners, Aguilar is forced to stand at attention and salute through a rainy night. When the punishment goes on longer than allowed, Irwin interferes, earning him a rebuke from Winter and his adjutant, Captain Peretz (Steve Burton). Irwin's punishment for stopping Peretz from hitting Aguilar is to move a pile of rocks all day.

The rocks were part of the prison's original wall, which Winter (who is obsessed with history) is forcing the prisoners to rebuild. Irwin, like Redford, is 64, and many inmates – like prison bookie Yates and tough guy Beaupre (played by Mark Ruffalo and Brian Goodman, respectively) – bet that he isn't going to make it.

In a completely unsurprising move, Irwin does finish the punishment. He distributes the cigarettes he won in the bet to the general inmate population, earning him their trust. He uses this trust to build a sense of pride among the prisoners. The old wall, he says, is theirs, not Winter's. Rebuilding it becomes a way of building up their

Turn to LAST CASTLE, page 6

Hampden Gallery needs student art work

A call for submissions for upcoming November exhibit

By Martha Olivo
Collegian Staff

I'm sure you remember where you were when you learned of the Sept. 11 attacks.

I've heard people say that the terrorist attack was to generation Y what the JFK assassination was to young Baby Boomers. The same was said about the O.J. Simpson verdict for Generation X. How should we feel knowing that our flashbulb memories were caused by the loss of thousands of lives instead of just one or two? Should we mourn the loss of landmarks as well as the blissful naiveté that cradled but then dropped so many people who were carrying on just the way we were that day? Should we feel nervous at the airport, the post office, the town hall, at home? Should we feel threatened by foreign substances and foreign people? Should we really be fighting back?

There are no finite answers to these questions. But, according to Anne LaPrade, curator of the Central and Hampden Art Galleries, we should be reacting. LaPrade is organizing an exhibit called Rapid Response to be held at the Hampden Gallery in the Southwest residential area from Dec. 16-22. The exhibit will contain the reactions of the campus community to the events of Sept. 11.

These works "don't have to be illustrative," LaPrade said. "They can be examples of people continuing to do what they're doing as affirmations that life goes on." According to LaPrade, anything goes. "We encourage anyone, student or otherwise, artist or otherwise, young or old, to respond visually or in writing to the events and aftermath of Sept. 11, and to submit the response for inclusion in Rapid Response," LaPrade said. All works will be accepted, all displayed.

The idea for Rapid Response came to LaPrade after seeing the work of students in her painting IV class. They were turning in works related to the terrorist attacks, but LaPrade's first reaction was to ask them not to address the events so soon.

"I believe that art comes from reflection, that ideas need time to percolate," LaPrade said. But, on second thought, she recognized that an immediate reaction through art might be therapeutic. She pointed out that this exhibit, which will take place during finals, a time when the Hampden Gallery is normally empty, is quite different from what can usually be seen on gallery walls. Usually, works on display have been "refined over time," LaPrade said. "But this time we're looking for the rapid response."

It is not just creating that will heal, however. As Klaus Postler, a graduate student of fine arts who works with LaPrade, pointed out, people will see great variety in the works on display and "hopefully be able to say, 'Oh, I felt that, too'."

In order for such variety to be possible, LaPrade is asking that submissions be kept fairly small – two-dimensional works should be no larger than 8.5X11 inches and three-dimensional works should have a base no larger than 9X12 inches. Submissions should be labeled on the backside with the title and medium of the work, artist's name, address and email address. The gallery will also be accepting anonymous submissions. All work should be dropped off at the Hampden Gallery in Southwest between Nov. 13 and 20, Monday through Thursday and Sunday, 2-5 p.m. Everyone is welcome to submit multiple works.

To commemorate this exhibit and the terrible events of Sept. 11, curatorial intern Veronica Beur is raising money to pay for the publication of a book containing all of the works displayed in Rapid Response.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS PICTURES

Robert Redford aids prisoner Mark Ruffalo.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS PICTURES

Redford and Ruffalo plot the prison takeover.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS PICTURES

Robert Redford portrays a prisoner who was once a general.

■ Last Castle

continued from page 5

confidence, and when Winter realizes this, he decides to destroy it.

Aguilar takes a rubber bullet to the head, which kills him. His death is no accident. Winter ordered the head shot, something he's done in the past, the inmates tell Irwin.

Irwin gets sucked into the inmate's rage over Winter's harsh policies. Irwin decides that Winter needs to go, and cites regulations that say if a warden loses control of his facility, he will be dismissed.

What follows is unclear. Lurie never shows you the preparations for the uprising, just the plan, laid out on a chess-board. Although Irwin tells his troops, and the audience, exactly what he's planning, the audience has no idea how they are going to pull it off.

When it does happen, it's a tour de force that can only be truly appreciated on the big screen. The battle between the guards, who have the best in non-lethal weapons, and the prisoners, who use medieval tactics and a trebuchet, is really, really, well . . . cool. The use of non-lethal weapons and phalanxes means that while the fight rages on, it's not a bloody one. Lurie doesn't need to fill the screen with blood to make it seem like a battle is going on.

The movie, while seemingly unoriginal – is entertaining, and that makes up for a lot. Plus, its got three great performances by some of Hollywood's best actors: Redford, Gandolfini, and Delroy Lindo (as General Wheeler.) The story is an excellent balance of drama and occasional instances of comedy.

And it also has a trebuchet, a type of catapult, which is just fun to say. Say it with me now. Trey-boo-shay. Wasn't that fun?

■ Lynch

continued from page 5

really seem like many are sad to see Lynch say goodbye.

If he'd cut his ties with Drive in television, he certainly isn't helping himself with Mulholland Drive. There is no denying the sheer strangeness of the film. Describing it as only as a caustic Hollywood critique would be inaccurate. Lynch has littered his film with his own oddities: the aforementioned Cowboy, the seemingly paralyzed leader of Hedaya's cabal that is spoken to through glass, a man who dies at the sight of a horrific caveman and the presence of a perspective shifting small blue box. Lynch can't seem to temper his own vision so his movies end up being so loosely organized as to easily tatter. In the last half-hour of Drive, the movie comes apart completely. What were once defined storylines fall aimlessly to the wayside as the mercurial director chooses to let his vision wander.

Lynch is definitely an auteur. His constant use of tight shots and confined set pieces creates a panicked feeling. It is most apparent during Betty's first tryout: there are at least six people stuffed into an intensely small room, thus making Betty's sudden transformation from clueless to sensuous all the more amazing. Further, his use of soundtrack is impeccable. At no point during the film did the music do anything but add to Drive's visual experience. But his focused use of both cinematography and his soundtrack is ultimately undercut by his total lack of loyalty to a single storyline.

The art house crowd might love it, but Lynch's refusal to keep himself bound ruins what had been a vitriolic Hollywood critique. Instead of creating a viciously strange satire of a culture that, more and more, seems totally foreign to America, Lynch's lack of focus shatters the film. What could have been a good television show and what seemed like a good cinematic idea instead ends up a critique not focused enough for most to take seriously.

SENIOR PORTRAITS

Sponsored By
The Index Yearbook

Class of 2002
Senior Portraits
October 22nd.-26th.
Make your appointment
now by calling:

1-800-OUR-YEAR or log
onto www.ouryear.com
Access #147

You can start placing your orders for the 2002 Index Today!

DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

COURTESY THE FINE ARTS CENTER

Voila! The viola!

Kathryn Lockwood, a faculty violist, will perform chamber music with Nadine Shank, piano, and Frederic Cohen, oboe, on Oct. 30 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.

Teach Thinking about a career in teaching?

Teacher Certification Information Session
Wednesday, October 24 at 6:30 pm
Room 138 Hasbrouck Lab
University of Massachusetts

Come for a general information session on how to become certified to teach K-12 math or science and to hear what it's like to teach. Session led by veteran teacher Jack Czajkowski

REFRESHMENTS PROVIDED

Questions: Contact the STEMTEC Student Services office at (413) 545-0626 or wtyler@k12s.phast.UMass.edu

STEMTEC is an eight-college project funded by the National Science Foundation

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Bump this!

Freshman Amy Chan and the UMass volleyball team went 1-1 this weekend. Read all about it in tomorrow's Collegian.

Illinois junior is world class on wheels and in water

By Jake Horvatic
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

(U-WIRE) CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Somehow wheelchairs and swimming pools don't seem to mix. Water and metal just don't mesh.

But Illinois junior swimmer Lauren Reynolds hasn't let that incompatibility keep her out of the pool.

In fact, she has combined the two to earn a gold medal, two silver medals and a world record despite having limited use of her legs. Her three-medal performance at the 2000 Paralympics Games in Sydney, Australia, earned her Wheelchair Sports USA's Female Athlete of the Year in 2000. Reynolds will be honored in a ceremony in Warm Springs, Ga., on Oct. 20.

"Out of all sports, they chose a swimmer. It's an honor for the sport of swimming, and that's what I am most proud of," Reynolds said. "But it's also great to see that years of hard work and dedication are being recognized."

Lauren's mother, Barbura, is proud of what her daughter has accomplished so far and is excited for what the future holds.

"I was shocked when I learned that she would be receiving this award, but so happy," she said. "She works so hard and never gives up."

Reynolds, a 22-year-old native of Basking Ridge, N.J., was born with osteogenesis imperfecta, commonly referred to as "Brittle-Bone Disease." She has broken about 70 bones, most of them in her legs, but has not let any of this keep her out of the pool. She is not completely paralyzed or without any use of her legs, but she is confined to a wheelchair for long distances and around the pool.

"I use it to get around campus because it is quicker," Reynolds said. "And you'll never find me on the pool deck without my chair because of the chance I may slip and fall. And when I have books to carry, I definitely use my chair."

Reynolds began swimming at the age of five and began team competition when she was nine. Swimming competitively came with hurdles, as her hometown swim team had never had a disabled member. She credits her parents with helping her overcome this initial difficulty.

"Their support has always been there, and I learned from them at a really young age to work really hard at everything I do," Reynolds said.

Barbara Reynolds said swimming has been the best sport for her daughter because it provided her with a sense of discipline that has transcended Reynolds' life.

"Lauren has been goal-oriented and strong-willed since birth. I think swimming is a great outlet for all those who love the competition and want to be a part of a sport, despite certain obstacles," Barbara Reynolds said.

When she was 14, Lauren Reynolds suffered a torn rotator cuff and couldn't swim. It didn't impede her competitive spirit, though, and she took up wheelchair basketball instead. She excelled at basketball so much that Illinois offered her a scholarship. But swimming was her first love and she quit wheelchair basketball to focus on swimming after her freshman year.

Reynolds left Illinois during the fall 2000 semester to train for the Paralympics, which were held two weeks after the end of the Sydney Summer Olympics.

Reynolds lived in Colorado Springs, Colo., in the summer and part of the fall, practicing at the United States Olympic Training Center, one of only four such training facilities in the country.

At the Paralympics, Reynolds set a world record en route to winning a gold medal in the 400-meter freestyle.

"It has been my goal since as long as I can remember to win the gold, and break the world record in the 400-meter free[style]," Reynolds said. "I was completely shocked that I actually did it."

Reynolds also won silver medals in both the 100-meter freestyle and the 400-meter freestyle relays at the Paralympics.

In her first semester as a member of the Illinois swim team, Reynolds is anxious to experience collegiate competition, but because of a shoulder injury will have to wait a little longer.

Reynolds' teammates and coaches also are looking forward to her return but say she is a great presence around the pool, even though she's not able to practice right now.

"It's hard for her [not being able to swim] because she really wants to swim," Illinois head coach Sue Novitsky said. "But we are being very cautious, and she's contributing as much as she can."

In terms of those intangible contributions, her teammates said they feel she is very helpful.

"She is somebody that a team needs to have around," sophomore swimmer Lisa Fish said. "She makes me want to give all I have to my sport and to my teammates."

Despite accomplishing some of the most incredible feats an amateur athlete can, Reynolds doesn't let it go to her head. She is busy focusing on her major, speech and hearing science, and hopes to become a speech pathologist after she graduates.

"I've always wanted to get into a field that helps others," Reynolds said, "I want to be able to work with patients one-on-one because I feel I can understand some of their pain."

As for her swimming career, Reynolds' main goal is to qualify for the 2004 Paralympics in Athens, Greece, which her mother believes will happen.

"I am continually amazed at what she accomplishes," Barbara said. "I'm sure she will probably go to Athens."

■ shutouts

continued from page 10

for first place in the Atlantic 10 standings with four matches remaining in the regular season.

"Everybody is fighting to get into the playoffs, so it's crucial to get that No. 1 spot," Head Coach Sam Koch said. "Bottom line is we got to play well and do the things we need to do to continually improve every week."

Junior forward Yuri Morales was the hero against St. Josephs on Friday as he ended the 99-minute marathon with a firing shot past SIU goalkeeper Kevin Dougher in over-time.

After the ball was kicked high in the air by the Hawks defenders in the SIU zone, Morales captured the ball at the center of the box and blasted the ball through the net, giving UMass a 3-2 win and its sixth victory in a row.

"I just saw it coming down. It was like in slow motion," Morales said. I trapped it and fired away."

It was the Morales' third goal of the season. The Santa Cruz, Calif. native is usually setting up his teammates rather than scoring himself, as he is the A-10 leader in assists this season with nine.

"He hit it really well and the keeper had no chance," Koch said. "Under the circumstances it was a big time goal."

One circumstance that Koch is referring to was that UMass did not play one of its best games against an opponent that came to battle.

The Minutemen got on the scoreboard first in the match when junior forward Jeff Deren continued his scoring streak and netted his tenth goal of the season in the 14th minute. He now stands atop the leader board in the A-10 conference for goals scored.

Sloppy play hurt the Minutemen for most of the match and it cost them two goals.

Ten minutes after the first UMass goal, Hawks midfielder Ryan Dougherty tied the match at one, when senior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn failed to drive the ball out of the UMass zone.

Junior forward Andrew Ecker was able to regain the lead right before the end of the first half when he netted a shot from the right side of the box – making the score 2-1 at halftime.

Nine minutes into the second half, St. Joe's was able to knot up the score once again. This time undermanned due to a red card given out to forward Jim McGuigan, SIU showed great teamwork as forward Andrew Duffy scored on perfect pass from forward Andrew Kulinski – evening the score 2-2.

"We gave up two bad goals and made a game out of it," Koch said. "St. Joe's did a great job of making it difficult and you have to give them credit, but we made it a lot harder than we needed to."

Nine minutes into the extra session, Morales put an end to the Minutemen's inauspicious play and scored the game-winner for UMass.

"We didn't play as well as we needed to, but the key thing is we got the win," Koch said. "This was a good wakeup call."

Coach Koch told his players before the match with Temple that they better not let down or there would be an awful amount of running in practice this week. Sunday, the entire team responded to the skipper's demand. One man in particular, who responded, was Myers.

He scored an astonishing four goals against the lowly Owls – three in the first half and one in the second. He doubled his output of the season so far in one match. He is only the seventh man in school history to pull off this amazing feat.

"I just tried to come out and do my thing and my teammates helped me," Myers said. "It feels great to get in the record books."

The Maroon and White's 5-0 victory over Temple cannot only be attributed to Myers' four goals, as co-captain O'Quinn recorded his fifth shutout of the season.

"O'Quinn came up big when he had to," Koch said.

"The squad learned from their mistakes on Friday and all around it was a great performance," Koch added. "It was fun to watch."

Sports Meeting
Tuesday
@ 5:30 pm
Everyone Must Attend

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE - REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2002

THE WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24 @ 7:00 P.M.
IN TOBIN 204

This test may be taken only once.
Students should pre-register for ENGLWP before Pre-registration ends.
Students do not need to register for the test.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior Adonis Kinney (above) and the Minuteman offense racked up over 300 yards in the air for the second straight game Saturday against James Madison.

■ finally

continued from page 10

Five losses and two weeks amid them to think about those failures (amongst other tragedies of larger significance) had really battered the minds of this UMass football team.

As the Maroon and White surely recognize, it's not so amusing to float on that other side of victory. For over a month, Whipple and the Minutemen had been petitioning for something reminiscent of success. And Saturday, they finally got it.

Sure, there are five dates left on the schedule, but no more are the nerve-wracking thoughts of a possible winless fall term. Today marks the inaugural week of winning No. 2. And that's an entirely new emotion.

What is worse: losing five straight and then finding a win, or winning one and then losing six in a row?

According to James Madison's skipper Mickey Matthews, the latter holds true.

"This is the low point of my career at James Madison," said Matthews, whose Dukes fell to 1-6 (0-5 Atlantic 10) Saturday, dropping their sixth straight decision. "I wanted to throw up watching us play. It's the worst effort we've given defensively in three years."

When the Dukes' Dennard Melton picked off UMass' Matt Guice just 2:29 into the game and ran it back 37 yards for the touchdown, it looked like the Minutemen were on their way to their sixth loss. But on the next series, Guice engineered a 91-yard drive that ended in a Neal Brown touchdown reception.

"That happens, that's football," said Guice, whose 332-yard, 5-touchdown performance earned him A-10 Rookie of the Week honors. "Something like that's going to happen and you just have to bounce back. And I think we did a really good job, especially coming back on the next series and getting a touchdown. Nobody hung their heads and everyone was upbeat. I can't say enough about this team."

Last week, New Hampshire succeeded in a last second Hail Mary that totally reversed the game's momentum and killed UMass in the end. But this weekend, the Minutemen refused to let one play dictate the game's motions.

"I just didn't get the sense on the sideline that our guys were as worried or lost steam when things like that had happened in the games prior," said Whipple, straight off his 101st career win, about the Melton interception return. "It showed that they had gained some confidence and knew that they were going to play for 60 minutes."

Eric Soderstrom is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports...

...which is nice.

Aesthetics Skin & Body Care for Men & Women
34 Main St., Suite 1,
Amherst, MA 253-9879

Healthy Skin begins with a deep pore cleansing facial.
Also hair waxing
-brazilian bikini wax
-whole legs
-brow shaping
-arms
Therapeutic Massage

Massachusetts
Signing Bonus Program

Everyone had a favorite teacher.
Now's your chance to be one!

Whether you're completing your undergraduate studies or taking graduate courses– or if you're a mid-career professional looking for a new line of rewarding work– the Massachusetts Signing Bonus Program has a lot to offer:

On-campus Recruiting Information Session
October 24th, 2001 at 5:00 PM
113 Herter Hall

- A $20,000 SIGNING BONUS!
- ACCELERATED TRAINING AND CERTIFICATION
- JOB PLACEMENT ASSISTANCE
- CONTINUED SUPPORT AND SERVICE
- TEACH IN MASSACHUSETTS

All majors are welcome. Math, Science and Spanish or Bilingual teachers are strongly encouraged.

Find out more and apply online at eq.doe.mass.edu/mint
E-mail: mint@doe.mass.edu
Phone: 781-338-3232
Final application date: January 28th, 2002 EOE

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT
$350 - $500 A WEEK
Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!
Call Tony
(413) 256 - 6434

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Research Interviewers. No selling or cold calls. Set your own schedule Evenings and weekends Competitive pay- 20+ hours per week. Hadley location. PVTA acessible. For more infor call FMI Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Portuguese, Japanese, Polish, Norwegian, orTibetan. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public Schools 413-549-9857 An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

Attention work from home $1200-$5000 per month. 800-953-7104

EMPLOYMENT

RECREATION POSITIONS Amherst Leisure Services is hiring high-energy & enthusiastic workers for the following part-time positions: Youth Basketball Supervisors/Officials, Facility Supervisors, Adult Basketball Scorekeeper. Apply at Human Resources Office, Amherst Town Hall, Main Street. For more information. Please Contact, Mike Thomas. Sports Director at 256-4065, x 105, between 9:00-4:30. Work Study and Non-Work Study jobs are available.

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute Teachers, Cushman Scott Children's Center. In our toddler/preschool classrooms. $7/hour. Contact Ellen Edge at 549-1167 or e-mail ellen@cushmanscott.org. We are an equal-opportunity employer.

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.FluidVisions.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Montreal Weekend Specials From $89 Includes round trip motorcoach from Boston/Springfield or Hartford. 3days 2nights Hotel Downtown Montreal. 1 Breakfast 1 Dinner free admission to Club Dome
Nov. 2-4 $89
Nov. 9-11 $99
Nov. 16-18 $99
Nov. 23-25 $99
Nov. 30-Dec. 2 $99
Dec. 30-Jan 1 $109-$119
Contact Global Tours: 533 Main Street, Melrose, MA 02176 781-665-4100

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are still booking for fall semester. Call 537-8527

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warantee 413-584-8857

African Drums: Djembes, Drum repair, Didjeridoos. 413-529-2215 Oneworld

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Dijata Bumpus. Call 413-731-1450. In Amherst.

LOST AND FOUND

Bracelet Found Downtown Amherst. Call to identify. Nicole 253-4791

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

ROOM WANTED

2 Females looking for room to rent on bus route starting from January. Call 546-7156

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

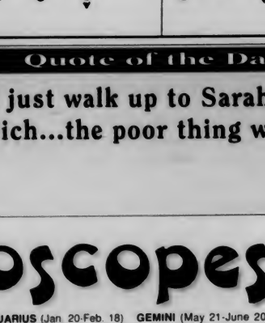
Spring Break! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sunscoastvacations.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN



#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

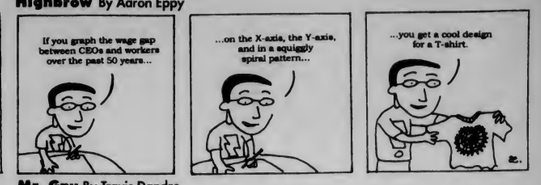
#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CPS-2 Harford
4 - CPS-1 Boston
5 - ABC-40 Springfield
6 - PBS-57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN-30 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC-30 New Britain
11 - Fox-61 Hartford
12 - PBS-24 Hartford
13 - NBC-40 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UMASS Academic Channel
16 - WB-20 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - CNN TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel & Adventure
22 - C-Span
23 - C-Span2
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nesn
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nickelodeon
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel



MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 22, 2001

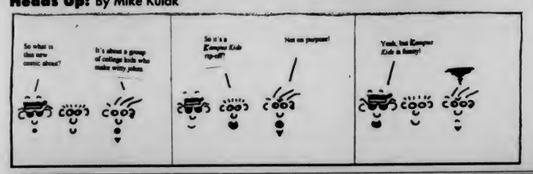
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre "The Cazalets" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 5)				Austin City Limits (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News 3	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Against All Odds"		News 3	Late Show
WBZ	4	News 4	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Against All Odds"		News 4	Late Show
WCVB	5	News 5	ABC News	Chronicle		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Philadelphia Eagles at New York Giants. (In Stereo Live)				Friends	Raymond
WLVI	56	Nanny	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Angel "Fearless" (In Stereo)		News				News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "September 10th"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Late Night
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	7th Heaven "Relationships"		Angel "Fearless" (In Stereo)		News		Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "September 10th"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 5 – Indians or Mariners vs. Athletics or Yankees						News	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "September 10th"		Crossing Jordan (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre "The Cazalets" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 5)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier			Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Philadelphia Eagles at New York Giants. (In Stereo Live)		5th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier		Hughleys	One on One	Parkers	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Frasier
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	Conan O'Brien		Biography: About Ben Stiller		Minute by Minute (N)		Law & Order "Savaged"
A&E	47	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Profit"		Crossfire		The Point (N)		Larry King Live		Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	23	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer		Crossfire		Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
COM	33	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Justice Files "On the Run"
DISC	32	Wild Discovery	Wild Style"	Wild Discovery		Supervolcanoes		Mega-Tsunamis				Cheerleading	Baseball
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		Sidelines	Monday Night	Figure Skating: World Championships – Exhibition						Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A Mother's Testimony" (2000, Drama) Kelli Jackson				Unpinished	Unplugged
MTV	69	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Music Videos (In Stereo)		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Road Rules	Making-Video		Family Ties	Family Ties
NICK	63	Oddparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Blue's Clues	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
SCIFI	64	Star Trek	The Savage Curtain	Babylon 5 "Acts of Sacrifice"		Farscape (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Decompression"		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	29	Without Warn.	Without Warn.	Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Labor & Delivery (N)		Medical Detectives (N)		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	59	NTPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Pretender "Bazooka Jarod"		Law & Order "School Daze"		Law & Order "Brother's Keeper"		To Be Announced		Law & Order "School Daze"
USA	60	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "The Brotherhood"		When Snakes Bite		Nash Bridges "El Diablo"				Martin
HBO	43	(5:45) "City of Joy" (1992, Drama) Patrick Swayze, "PG-13"				"The Patriot" (2000, Drama) Mel Gibson, Heath Ledger. (In Stereo) "R"		"Proteus" (1995, Science Fiction) Peter Weller. "R"				Riding In Cars	Big Momma's
MAX	44	"Anna and the King" (1999, Drama) Jodie Foster. (In Stereo) "PG-13"				Creature Features "Earth vs. the Spider"				"Tobacco 2" (1992, Science Fiction) Peter Weller. "R"
SHOW	65	"What Girls Learn" (2001, Drama) Scott Bakula. (N) (In Stereo) "R"				"The Thomas Crown Affair" (1999) Pierce Brosnan. "R"				"Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2" (2000) "R"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Mr. Gnu By Travis Dandro



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Skybox By Blake

Quote of the Day

"You can't just walk up to Sarah Jessica Parker with a sandwich...the poor thing wouldn't know what to do."

–Saturday Night Live

Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wendsday
HIGH: 66 LOW: 42	HIGH: 65 LOW: 49	HIGH: 71 LOW: 50

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You may not be able to avoid one particular error that you've been dodging for quite some time. However, recovery can be quick.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You're not going to have to limit yourself according to the established and accepted rules today. Indeed, it's time for you to make new strides.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your dependence on others is likely to be put to some sort of test today – but you're ready to do whatever it takes to come through.

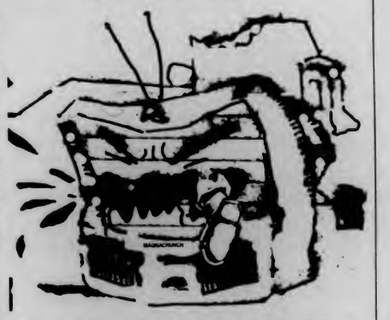
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – What appears out of the blue today is going to require a good deal of thought and study; be ready for a small adjustment that can pay off.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You can parlay a small opportunity into a very big profit today – provided you start early and don't stop until it's all wrapped up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may have to begin a difficult project today that will require a great deal of planning, foresight and physical strength. Prepare!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Your introduction to something new is bound to be exciting today – and perhaps a little dangerous, too. Use caution!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – An improvement will take place today that will allow you to excel at something you've only been experimenting with lately.



GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Contact with someone quite different from yourself is likely to open your mind a little more – and open a few doors for you as well!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Don't expect others to do your bidding today. Whatever you get, you're going to have to supply for yourself for the time being.

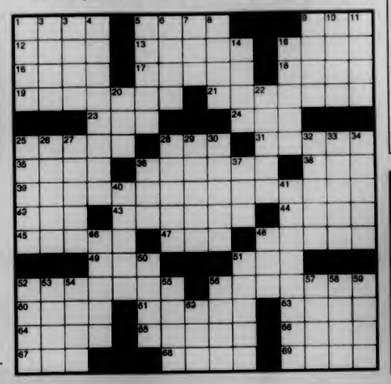
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – This is no time to spend foolishly. You will have to make a careful plan for your own cash flow. It may be time to accept a coming change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can prove to a superior today that you can, indeed, make it on your own – and in fine style, too! Don't let anyone down prematurely.

Goat By Cannon

Ya see, its a picture of a tv and, well its' eatin this guy and, uh...see, um, well...

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!
*1/2 price munchies 9pm-close
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia win $ and prizes 9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA 548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Golfer Nicklaus
5 Housetop
9 Prof's deg
12 Jai —
13 Serve the purpose
15 Sweetheart
16 — and groan
17 Zodiac sign
18 — Star State
19 Flubbed
21 Coats
23 Writer Follett
24 One, in Munich
25 Prior's superior
29 What an RN dispenses
31 — down
stopped talking 35 Rainforest plant
36 Baltimore player
38 Time period
39 Continental employee
42 Seine sight
43 Wrote on glass
44 Part of HOMES
45 Canon rival
47 "Of course!"
48 Crates
49 Debussy's sea
51 Novelty
52 Begged
56 Painters' tools
60 Thin strip
61 Newsman Jennings
63 Theory
64 Gumbo veggie
65 Kind of tooth
66 Bismarck loc.
67 Kicker's stand
68 Chatters
69 Bronte's governess

DOWN
1 Door frame
2 Felipe or Matty
3 "Misery" co-star
4 Fay Wray film
5 Black bird
6 Livy contemporary
7 Dory's need
8 Sticky fruits
9 Working stiff
10 Put up pictures
11 Membership fees
14 Horse's gait
15 Crepe cousins
20 Allow
22 Mature
25 Glue on 26 Prom queen
27 Bramble
28 Tennis star Austin
29 Agile
30 Dove shelters
32 Lumpy fruits
33 "Nancy" cartoonist Bushmiller
34 Sticky fruits
36 Baseball's Mel
37 Showed the way
40 Acted like a witch
41 Editor's concern
46 Nebraska city
48 "Silent" President
50 DC figures
51 Knox and Sumter
52 Story line
53 Huron, e.g.
54 Raison d' —
55 Like the morning grass
56 Smell terrible
57 Maelstrom
58 Raise (kids)
59 "For Pete's —!"
62 Hot beverage

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-13-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Nuggets

Chili Nachos

Broccoli Cauliflower Casserole (vegetarian)

California Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER

Omletes To Order

French Toast Sticks

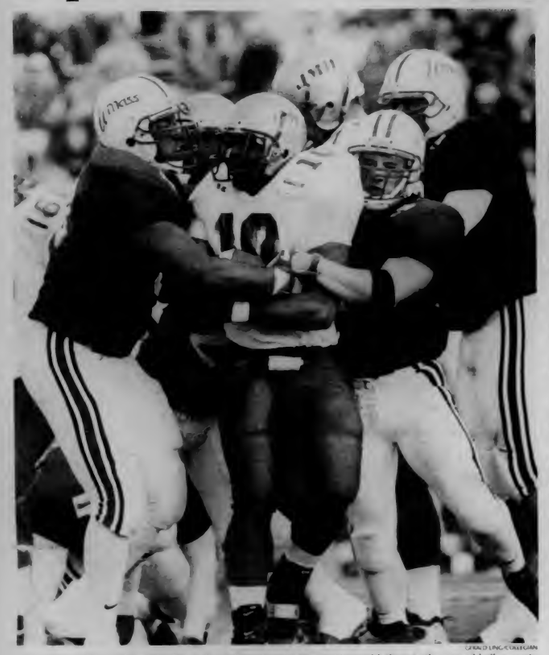
Scrambled Eggs

Baked Ham

Tofu Scramble (vegan)

Collegian Staff
Night Editor: Melissa Hommel
Photo Technician: Gerald Ling
Copy Editor: Ken Campbell
Production Supervisor: Jarrett Brimmer
Production Staff: Frank DiMaglio, Shannon Farrington

INSIDE: A paralympic hero is good for the gold



Monday, October 22, 2001 | 10

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Up in arms over pigskin's first victory

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

The UMass "D" smothered the Duke offense Saturday, shutting out James Madison in the second half en route to its first victory of the season.

Freshman Guice's 332 leads Whipple to 101st

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Over 60 bands, representing high schools from all over Massachusetts converged on Amherst for Band Day. The bashing display of power and class not only induced a raucous crowd response, but it inspired a once inconsistent UMass offense to 43 points and 438 yards of total offense.

UMass	43
JMU	20

Less than three minutes into the third quarter, redshirt freshman quarterback Matt Guice hit fellow rookie Jason Peebler on a 29-yard slant for six. Peebler's broken tackle and ensuing paydirt scamper cemented Guice's confidence, while locking up the Minutemen's first win of the season, a 43-20 victory over James Madison.

In only his sixth career start, Guice played like a grizzled veteran, as he wowed the crowd of 10,000 plus with rush escaping footwork and unorthodox heaves.

The freshman piled up 332 yards through the air (228 in the first half), continually frustrating the JMU defense by rolling to the outside and throwing on the run.

In his most consistent performance of the season, Guice threw five touchdown passes while limiting his turnover count to one opening-drive interception.

Granted, the pick was immediately returned for a touchdown by the Dukes Dennard Melton, but the only reason the interception occurred at all was because intended receiver Pete Cariello batted Guice's throw into the air.

"Matt [Guice] certainly had his best game of the season," Whipple said. "And he didn't let that interception bother him." Guice showed his resolve, as he bounced right back and led the Minutemen on an epic, 11 play, 91-yard drive, culminated by a glorious TD throw to Neal Brown.

On first and goal, Guice took a three-step drop and was immediately met by three rushing JMU defenders. The freshman took one step forward, eluding the trio of sixtown guardians before lacing a pass to Brown in the back of the end zone.

Brown's TD reception knotted the score at seven, also keying off an offensive shootout between two of the Atlantic 10's cellar dwellers.

The Duke offense would end up faltering just as the Minutemen's pistons began firing. The JMU "O" came out of the halftime locker rooms only to find a large Maroon and White barrier standing between it and the endzone.

After permitting an embarrassing 20 points in the first half, defensive captain Jeremy Robinson and company kicked an iron boot on the wheels of the once mobile Duke offensive machine.

Sophomore sack machine Valdamar Brower "Td" off on backup signal caller Mike Connelly on two occasions while Anton McKenzie returned from injury to lead the Minutemen with 7 solo tackles.

Starting QB Matt LeZotte hurt a portion of his throwing arm late in the second quarter, no doubt limiting the effectiveness of JMU's stuttering second half attack.

Before his unfortunate injury LeZotte's healthy and pinpoint accurate right arm was torching the Minutemen with 11 completions on 17 attempts and a 66-yard touchdown throw to Brannon Goins.

Cannon kicker Burke George accounted for the rest of JMU's fuel inefficient offense with field goals of 34 and 45 yards, respectively.

But in the end the Duke's just couldn't go blow for blow with a suddenly potent UMass offense.

The Maroon and White attack went into this week's practice rundown, but it came out of the garage with a tune up and a sleek new system. For the first time in weeks the power and flash running attack of Kevin Quinlan and Omari Howard was actually effective, probably because one-man wrecking crew Howard was healthy.

"[Howard] made a big difference," Whipple said. "[He and Quinlan] compliment each other really well. We didn't have both those guys last week."

Quinlan broke numerous JMU ankles with 64 yards of dashing and darting while Howard was content with rumbling and bumbling to his 78-yards on 13 carries.

The presence of a running game limited Guice's throws to 47, a far cry from last week's 63, while also keeping the defense off balance with a mix of power running, passing, scat running and scrambling.

The freshman QB did more to keep the "D's" head spinning as two receivers, Adonis Kinsey and Brown, caught six passes each, while Peebler grabbed three balls.

"Matt [Guice] did a really good job of distributing the ball," Whipple said. "He just saw things a lot better today."

With a 43-point explosion it looks like the UMass offense has finally found itself. Hopefully it won't take a couple thousand brass-toting band members to keep it awake for the remaining five games.

Feeling good after win

It hasn't been like this since the week prior to the opening game with William and Mary.

Blaring glee and friendly banter, the Massachusetts football team's locker room Saturday afternoon just seemed really odd.

Grins were of the plenty, and the players consciously rushed to get out of their sweat sanctuary and out to greet fans, friends and family.

For the first time this year, the gridiron laundry baskets were chock-full of maroon and white when the participating members of media exited the adjacent press conference room.

Finally, football seemed to border on the fun-side.

"I'm really happy for the kids," said Head Couch Mark Whipple, just after his team topped James Madison 43-20 for its first win of the 2001 season. "It's been a group that's worked hard and I couldn't give them any answers for why it wasn't happening."

It's been a rough last seven weeks.

Turn to FINALLY, page 7

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Junior Yuri Morales, No. 16, scored the game-winning goal for the Minutemen over St. Joe's in overtime on Friday at Totman Field.

Hawks, Owls have wings clipped

Pair of shutouts for Egland clinches A-10

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

It had been an uphill climb all season long for the Massachusetts field hockey team.

Since an opening day loss at New Hampshire, the Minutewomen had failed to pick their record above the .500 mark, and even fell as far as four games below .500 after an Oct. 10 loss to Providence.

UMass	1
St. Joe's	0
UMass	1
Temple	0

That type of struggling is now over.

This past weekend, UMass swept a pair of games against Atlantic 10 rivals St. Joseph's and Temple, winning both by a 1-0 score as it improved its record to 8-7 (5-0 A-10) and keeping the squad's five-game win streak intact.

Even more importantly, Sunday's senior day win against the Owls guaranteed the Maroon and White the No. 1 seed in the Atlantic 10 tournament, which will take place on Nov. 3-4 in Philadelphia.

"We fought hard, did what we were supposed to do and played as a team," senior back Anke Bruemmer said. "We have reached one of our goals [winning the A-10 regular season title] and going undefeated [in conference] is the next one."

Against the Hawks on Saturday, the two teams kept each other at bay for all 70 minutes of regulation, as neither squad was able to crack the other's defense. Even when the ball was in the circle, however, Lauren Bradley was there for St. Joe's, making seven saves, while Ashley Egland patrolled the cage with four saves for the Minutewomen.

With the weekend complete, Egland now has four straight shutouts.

In overtime against the Hawks, UMass didn't wait long to strike. A mere forty seconds in, Heather Kenney weaved her way into the opposing circle and whacked the ball to the front of the cage. Stacey Blue was positioned perfectly, and tapped the ball into the net for the win.

The loss dropped St. Joe's to 8-6 (2-1 A-10) on the year, although it will most likely have a chance for revenge in the conference tourney.

"We are the dominator in the league," senior back Jill Fantasia said, whose thought was finished by Bruenmer.

"People know we are strong so there is more pressure on us," the native German continued. "Honestly, everyone just hates us – it is always a battle and it is going to get worse."

Sunday's game against Temple was perfect weather-wise, as the crowd packed into Richard F. Garber Field to see UMass seniors Kaitlyn Byron, Lindsay Abbott, Kerry Ann Jaggassar, Bruemmer and Fantasia play the second-to-last games of their careers at home.

It was Jaggassar's first game back since an injury that took place on September 5, although the senior only played a few minutes before watching the rest of the contest from the sidelines.

Still, it meant that Jaggassar was well on her way to being ready for the Atlantic 10 tournament, and would add another dimension to a defense that has already begun to peak.

"It felt great [to play]," Jaggassar said. "At the beginning [of the year] it was tough [to sit out] because we were struggling, but it has given me a different perspective on the game. I have learned a lot more from the sidelines."

Against the Owls, the Minutewomen struck fairly quickly, when Erika Whiston picked up an unassisted score at the 16:28 mark. However, neither team would notch a tally for the rest of the game despite each having quality chances.

Early in the second half, a Bruemmer goal off a penalty corner was nullified because the ball was not stopped dead before being flipped back into the circle, although it was questionable whether or not the ball had actually been stopped. Temple had an even more controversial goal taken back with less than three minutes remaining when the ball got caught in a player's skirt before being fired into the goal.

At first, it looked like the score would count, but after a lengthy conference by the two officials, they took back the goal and signaled for a penalty corner. The Owls didn't convert on the penalty corner and the remaining 2:21 ran off the clock to give the Maroon and White the victory.

"It was two good wins," UMass Head Coach Patty Shea said. "They were low scoring games, but for the most part, we controlled both games."

The Minutewomen have only one more conference game, Richmond, to go, as well as a pair of out-of-conference contests against Dartmouth and Virginia Commonwealth, before heading down to Philly for the conference tournament.

"Our goal is to win the A-10 conference and go undefeated in conference," Byron said. "We want to make another NCAA tournament appearance, and in the back of our mind is the Final Four."

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Ashley Gilbert and Co. won a pair of 1-0 A-10 games and clinched first place this weekend.

Myers, Morales standout

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

The scenery surrounding Ruth I. Totman Field has been progressing since the start of the season. The leaves on the trees displayed a shade of solid green in early September.

UMass	3
St. Joe's	2
UMass	5
Temple	0

Now, in mid-October, an array of colors from fall foliage dangle from the trees – a sign of the changing seasons.

The scenery inside Totman Field has progressed since the start of the season as well. A team has grown and prospered over time.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team (11-3, 6-1 A-10) started the season unsure of where they would stand in the Atlantic 10 conference. With two wins over conference foes St. Joseph's (7-5, 3-3 A-10) and Temple (2-11-1, 1-6 A-10) this weekend, the Minutemen know exactly where they now stand – first place in the division.

The Maroon and White pulled out a 3-2 win over the St. Joe's Hawks on Friday. Then on Sunday, behind a stellar performance from sophomore forward Prah Myers, UMass shutout the Temple Owls, 5-0. The Minutemen got some help from the Fordham Rams as they defeated No. 1 Richmond over the weekend putting UMass in a three-way tie with the Spiders and Rhode Island

Turn to SHUTOUTS, page 7

Painful doesn't even to begin to describe Riding in Cars with Boys. Read the review in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Stephanie Santos leads the Minutewomen in scoring... as a freshman. You too can have game beyond your years by reading Sports.

ARTS p. 5 SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 34 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 23, 2001

GERALD LYNCH/COLLEGIAN

Town residents turn out for a ribbon cutting ceremony honoring new improvements to Amherst's downtown area.

Islamic veils subject of lecture at MHC

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

A New York Times reporter asked a Turkish military officer in 1997 about the effects of Turkish government officials wearing traditional Muslim dress. "Is it really the end of the world if civil servants begin wearing head scarves?" the reporter asked. "Yes," the officer responded. "It is the end of the world."

While much attention has been focused in recent weeks on the plight of women in conservative Muslim countries who are forced to wear veils or burqas, little mention has been made of more moderate Muslim governments. In Turkey, government leaders have not only refused to require traditional Muslim dress, but have actively discouraged it.

The politics of Muslim dress in Turkey was the subject of a lecture yesterday by Alev Cinar at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. Cinar, a research associate at the Center, described the way that the veiling and unveiling of Turkish women has been used as a political tool.

"A head covering is often seen as a symbol of political Islam, not only in Turkey, but all over the Muslim world," Cinar said. "The veil is becoming a more common symbol of Islam than the mosque." Cinar explained that while a mosque is a purely religious symbol, the veil is a representation of political ideology.

"The veil is hidden and mysterious," she continued. "As such, it allows for the mystification of political Islam.

"How," she asked, "did a simple head covering become a symbol of political ideology?"

Cinar explained that Turkey underwent a process of modernization in the 1920s and 1930s, in which Western traditions were promoted. Kemal Aaturk, the first President of modern Turkey, was determined to undermine the conservative Islamic legacy of the Ottoman Empire. In addition to altering the Turkish alphabet's letters from Arabic to Roman, and abolishing the Caliphate and Sultanate, Ataturk discouraged Islamic dress.

While veils were not officially banned, their use was frowned upon. Ataturk organized dance receptions, in which women were European ball gowns, and promoted the distribution of photographs and cartoons of women in bathing suits. In 1929, a nation-wide beauty pageant was held.

"Who is the prettiest woman in Turkey?" asked the semi-official state newspaper. "If all citizens give this issue due concern...the competition will yield beneficial results."

"They wanted to show that the government had such control over Islam that women who had worn veils only a decade ago could wear bathing suits in public," Cinar said. "The body of the beauty queen was constituted as a 'national body.' The secular [society] was presented as having ultimate control over women's bodies."

"Since European perceptions of Turkey were controlled by images of veiled women," she continued, "what better means could Turkey use to define itself from the Ottomans then women in Western clothing?"

Yet despite the proliferation of unveiled Turkish women, the Turkish government remained almost exclusively male. In 1935, the Turkish Women's Federation was dismantled by the state.

In the 1980s and 1990s, there was a resurgence of political Islam in Turkey. A conservative Islamic party became part of a coalition government, although it eventually lost its power. Some Turkish women began voluntarily dressing in veils as a political or religious statement.

The conservative Islamic party, known alternately as the "welfare" party, and the "virtue" party, began to use a veil as its symbol. Eventually, though, the party decided that veils were too feminine to be a suitable symbol.

The secular government became severely worried about the proliferation of veils, although it refused to actually ban the head coverings. A Turkish court ruled that university administrations could decide for themselves whether or not to allow Islamic dress.

"When the head of the Higher Education Council asked the court what [constituted] modern clothing," Cinar said, "a justice said, 'Go and look at Europe. Whatever you see there is modern clothing.'"

Cinar described a woman who worked for her as a teaching assistant at a Turkish university, and chose to wear a headscarf. Eventually, the woman was told that if she refused to remove the scarf, her grant would be cut off. The women refused, and left the university.

"The student herself did not see Islam as a political ideology," Cinar said. She added that the student had

Turn to TURKEY, page 3

Zoning, development hot topics for town Select Board

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Select Board met in preparation for a Special Town Meeting to be held on October 29. The greatest concern was over a single article that is a proposed change to the zoning bylaw intended to repair two loopholes.

These existing deficiencies could allow widespread development, which would jeopardize 1200 acres of potential farmland that the town is attempting to preserve. The problems came to light when the town was overruled in a denial of a developer's permit to build on some of the land in question. This is attracting national attention from developers seeking to set a precedent in overturning local zoning bylaws.

The deficiency, explained Planning Board and Zoning Subcommittee member Sarah Berger, is that the current bylaw directs that all proposals for subdivisions – multiple houses on large lots owned by the developer – must be "cluster developments," which are an alternate method of design which, while being somewhat more complex, allows the same number of housing units to be built while maximizing open space.

"The bylaw was designed to promote and protect the economic viability of farming by protecting land with that potential use and simultaneously allowing development elsewhere," Berger said.

Fellow Planning Board and Zoning Subcommittee member Frederick Hartwell explained further by describing how the old bylaw's key problem is that, while it requires cluster development plans, it still requires a "special permit," which the Planning Board has more legal right to reject, as opposed to the standard system which utilizes a "site plan review."

"A site plan review has a lower bar where the presumption is that if you're not in flagrant violation of the bylaw, then you'll be approved," Hartwell said.

Hartwell went on to say that the reason developers avoid clusters is that, in the 1980s when the method was first developed, it was assumed that there would be great demand to use the technique because of the money it saves in infrastructure. Therefore, state law originally required that all cluster plans fall under the special permitting process, as it was felt that developers would be happy to jump through this additional hoop to save them money. However, as time went on, it actu-

Turn to BOARD, page 3

UMass students respond to threat of bioterrorism

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts swings back into its normal routine after the terror of Sept. 11, concerns about new forms of terrorism continue to linger in the background of the national consciousness. Foremost among these new concerns: the threat of germ warfare, or bioterrorism.

At least half a dozen cases of anthrax, a bacteria that may be deadly if inhaled or touched, have been reported in the nation in recent weeks. According to the New York Times, however, the bacteria is difficult to obtain and maintain in living form, making it hard to transmit. Moreover, the bacteria only takes on its deadliest form if inhaled directly into the lungs; it is not communicable between people. Furthermore, public health experts maintain, the disease is highly treatable if caught early.

Still, new cases of the disease seem to develop every week, if not every day, and with the unleashing of anthrax on mail handlers, news agencies, and public figures comes deeper fear of a more deadly, more communicable, and less treatable germ falling into the hands of terrorists.

On campus, students are struggling between worry and composure. Angelica Tringale, a junior Nursing student, said, "America, in many respects, is not ready for warfare. We may have the military resources, but we are lacking in other areas. As a future health-care professional, I know all too well the huge shortage of medical personnel [in our country today]. If we go to war, where will we get the people to take care of our soldiers? We cannot send nurses, or doctors, to foreign lands and not expect our own nation to suffer dearly for it."

"What if a nation has diseases that we haven't even heard of, some humongous bacterial or viral cocktail?" Tringale went on. Still, she added, "I must trust the decisions of others, because I myself do not know what to do."

"I haven't watched the news in three weeks," said Senior English major Jessi Callantropo, echoing the fear expressed by Tringale. On the other hand, Callontropo, who is also an RA in Grayson/Field in Orchard Hill, added, "In the words of my mother, you can really only worry about so much, and then you have to let go of the rest."

Callantropo said that the cluster office in Field/Grayson, as well as the admissions office, where she is also employed, has issued rubber gloves to those who come in contact with a large amount of incoming mail. She added that, in her opinion, the email and memo sent out by the University last week was well done. "I think that the University has assessed the risk [of bioterrorism] and I think that if they go overboard it can make people unnecessarily upset."

Asif Savani, a senior Neurobiology Major and an RA in Field, said he agreed with Callontropo that the University had properly assessed the bioterrorism risk on campus, and said that, "they have really done all they can do for the time being." He also pointed out that the University has limited resources in its budget that need to be allocated carefully, and said he agreed with Callontropo that the University has a responsibility not to create panic. "To falsely give students a sense of danger won't ease the condition that students are in right now," he said.

In the event of a more communicable bioterrorist weapon, he said

Turn to BIO, page 3

TIBORA CIRCYC-BURKS/COLLEGIAN

Serving Up Soul!
De La Soul put on a kickin' concert at Mount Holyoke College on Friday.

MassPIRG to hold rally in support of public land

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG) is continuing in the fight to make the world a better place this week when they will be hosting a rally on Thursday to promote the Public Lands Preservation Bill.

The bill is specifically targeted at out-of-control development of open spaces that currently wipes out 44 acres of land every day. This includes many parks, public gardens and preserves.

"Most people take [this land] for granted," Andrew Spagnoli, a media intern for the campaign and a University of Massachusetts senior Political Science major said. "They see it when they're driving or when they're hiking, and they don't realize that development could possibly change the scenery around them."

The campaign is concentrating its effort to move the bill out of committee and on the floor "where it will certainly pass," according to Spagnoli. "The majority of state residents both students and non-students alike support the bill."

So far many legislators support the bill, including State Senator Stanley Rosenberg. However, the bill is currently stuck in the Ways and Means committee. The campaign, therefore, is trying to get people more aware of the bill and put pressure on legislators to finally pass a vote.

"Keeping it in committee is really a place to kill the bill," Spagnoli said.

The rally will take place from 10a.m. to 2p.m. on the Campus Center

Turn to MASSPIRG, page 3

Taliban is lying, says Pentagon

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

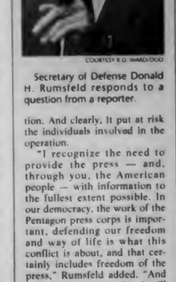
The Pentagon has denied Taliban allegations that two helicopters were shot down and one or more U.S. soldiers were captured.

"The Taliban have said they have shot down at least two helicopters, which is false. They have not. They have indicated that they have captured some Americans, which is false," Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld said at yesterday's briefing. "They have not. And we have absolutely no evidence at all that would suggest that that allegation that . . . is correct."

Members of the Pentagon press corps also received a stern rebuke from Secretary Rumsfeld at yesterday's briefing.

"At Whiteman Air Force Base on Friday, a number of you will recall that I was asked repeatedly about newspaper reports that had appeared that morning concerning U.S. Special Forces inside of Afghanistan — reports that appeared, obviously, as the result of someone in the Pentagon leaking classified information," Rumsfeld said.

"The fact that some members of the press knew enough about those operations to ask the questions and to print the stories was clearly because someone in the Pentagon had provided them that information. And clearly, it put at risk the individuals involved in the operation.



"I recognize the need to provide the press — and, through you, the American people — with information to the fullest extent possible. In our democracy, the work of the Pentagon press corps is important, defending our freedom and way of life is what this conflict is about, and that certainly includes freedom of the press," Rumsfeld added. "And you can be certain that I will answer your questions directly when I can and that we'll do our best to give you as much information as we can safely provide."

Transmitting classified information to non-cleared parties is a violation of federal law, Rumsfeld said.

"I think that the release by a person in the government who had access to classified information to the effect that the United States of America was planning and was about to engage in a special operation in Afghanistan clearly was a violation of federal criminal law, and second, it was something that was totally in disregard for the lives of the people involved in that operation," Rumsfeld said.

The briefing also contained a presentation by Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who updated the press on the weekend actions of Operation Enduring

Turn to PENTAGON, page 3

COURTESY R.D. WARD/DOD

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld responds to a question from a reporter.

National Briefs

California

By Jessica Zisko
The Daily Aztec (San Diego State U.)

(U-WIRE) SAN DIEGO – Two local college students are being accused of lying in two separate instances relating to the Sept. 11 attacks.

Grossmont Community College student Osama Awadallah has been charged with lying to a grand jury about his link to San Diego terrorists.

San Diego State University student Mohdar Abdallah is being charged with lying on an application for political asylum.

Awadallah, Abdallah and Grossmont student Yazeed Alsafi were arrested last month and taken to New York as material witnesses in connection with the attacks.

Awadallah is charged with two counts of knowingly making false statements after he denied knowing suspected hijacker Nawaf Alhazmi and Khalid Al-Midhar. Each charge carries a potential penalty of five years in prison.

Prosecutors said Awadallah wrote about meeting Al-Midhar and Alhazmi in a school journal obtained by the FBI.

During the grand jury testimony, Awadallah said before and after he was confronted with the journal that he never met Al-Midhar and he denied writing the names in the journal, according to a complaint issued in federal court in Manhattan. Eventually he said that he knew Al-Midhar, court papers said.

Awadallah has been denied bail prosecutors said Awadallah is a flight risk and dangerous because of his association with terrorists.

Prosecutors said Awadallah's phone number was found in the glove compartment of the car registered to Alhazmi that was abandoned at Dulles International Airport.

Alhamzi Al Midhar and another San Diego resident, Hani Hanjour, are the suspected terrorists who hijacked the plane that crashed into the Pentagon.

Awadallah's attorneys said Awadallah was confused during the questioning and did not intentionally lie. They said Awadallah has never denied knowing Alhazmi and testified that he saw Alhazmi 35 to 40 times between April and Dec. 2000.

Awadallah was not required to enter a plea last week because he has not been indicted or arraigned.

Abdallah, the SDSU pre-business management student who received asylum as a Somali refugee in July, is accused of hiding his Yemeni passport, which identifies him as Mohammed al-Midhar, the same surname as one of the San Diego-based hijackers.

Sources said there is no familial connection.

If convicted of the felony charge, Abdallah could be sentenced to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine. He is currently being held in the same facility as Awadallah.

Yazeed Alsafi, who applied to attend SDSU in Spring 2002, was released two weeks after he completed his second day of testimony before the grand jury. He was not charged with a crime and has returned to San Diego.

Colorado

By Jeff Hensley
The Mirror (U. Northern Colorado)

(U-WIRE) GREELEY, Colo. – Former Supreme Commander of NATO and Secretary of State Alexander Haig laid the blame of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on U.S. failure to oust Saddam Hussein in 1991.

Haig spoke at the University of Northern Colorado on Friday at the Milne auditorium in Kepner Hall.

"The failure of the United States to oust Saddam Hussein as the ruler of Iraq after the Gulf War was one of the worst strategical mistakes in history," Haig said.

"Iraq bought arms from Russia for many years and supplied U.S. enemies with these arms. Iraq also funded dozens of terrorist organizations, including al Qaeda, under the leadership of Hussein," Haig said.

This mistake also caused coalitions that were created to inspect Iraq for chemical or biological weapons to fall apart and may have caused the recent proliferation in anthrax attacks on heads of U.S. media, government and companies.

According to Haig, the anthrax used in these attacks could only have come from two places, Iraq or the al Qaeda network.

Haig also spoke about the roots of international terrorism.

Haig called terrorism "a perversion of classical guerrilla warfare" that began in the 1970s with nationalist movements under Arab leader Abdul-Nasser.

"In the 1970s, some Arab nations began to flirt with ideals of westernization encountered in Europe. Most of these movements failed and caused frustration that helped to align Arab nationalist sentiment against western ideals," Haig said.

United States support of the Shah in Iran for the protection of U.S. oil interests in the late 1970s also created Arab anger against western powers when the Shah was overthrown.

"This support for the Shah led to the first international terrorist incident targeting the United States. This incident involved the abduction of dozens of U.S. embassy employees in November 1979," Haig said.

Haig also explained policies the United States must follow to avoid losing the war on terrorism. He encouraged people to support the current Bush policy of battling terrorism.

He said it was essential to take a long-term approach to defeating terrorism.

"Even if the United States got rid of bin Laden and al Qaeda tomorrow, it would not be out of the woods with international terrorism," Haig said.

He went on to say the United States must make the effort to break international terrorism a global campaign.

"The United States has let its military deteriorate in the last 15 years to the point that it could not fight another Gulf War alone," Haig said.

Therefore, the United States must apply "all modern assets pledged from all NATO countries" to the battle against terrorism to "win this conflict handsdown, without the loss of hundreds of thousands of American lives," Haig said.

Some UNC students were interested by Haig's remarks.

"I really enjoyed the patriotic stance that Haig took. He directly answered the questions that were asked," junior David Bem said. "I think he clearly demonstrated the attitudes that Americans need to take at a time like this. His attitude needs to be shared by more people in this time of war."

Minnesota

By Maggie Hessel-Mial
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS – Juan Bates sat in the woods underneath a bridge and quietly listened to the noise of the slave traders overhead.

He heard the footsteps, the chains, the dogs barking. He knew he and the rest of the students he was with couldn't make a sound or they would be caught and taken back to captivity.

Bates was involved in an activity that many black men and women across the country are finding to be a valuable tool to connect with their ancestry: an Underground Railroad simulation.

Nearly 40 University of Minnesota students participated in the simulation, sponsored by the African American Learning Resource Center, Friday night at Camp Sunrise in Rush City, Minn.

Many said they were there to connect with the history of their ancestors. Others said they were looking for new experiences.

"I'm a strong believer that when you know your past you're able to know a little more about your future," said Faith Udeh, a College of Liberal Arts freshman. "If you see what you came from, you can see how far you need to go."

The Underground Railroad, begun in the 1850s, was a system of "safe houses" between which escaped slaves could travel to reach Canada or the northern states, where slavery was illegal.

Freed and former slaves — as well as white abolitionists from the United States and Canada — all played roles in getting between 30,000 and 50,000 black slaves to freedom. Before the railroad was started slaves had much more difficulty escaping.

Bates, a CLA sophomore, said his experience has given him something on which to reflect.

"This simulation really makes you think about what you take for granted," he said. "It makes you think about just how much freedom you have."

The group arrived at the camp not quite knowing what to expect from the night. They knew it would change them but weren't sure how or to what extent. Many were scared after hearing from friends who went through the simulation. They heard it can be tough at times.

"I'm really scared," CLA freshman Anisha Mack said. "But I want to really experience it."

Sitting with students around a fire pit, conductor William "Tongrit" Green explained elements of the Underground Railroad. The participants watched as Green showed them African traditions the slaves had embraced.

After what Bates said felt like forever, the participants were lined up and split into two groups. The group they were put into would soon become a team. They would all need to stick together to get to freedom.

Each group of approximately 20 students lined up and was given last-minute instructions on what to do while in the woods. The groups set out at 11 p.m.

"The conductor kept telling us that we needed to cooperate with the whole group," Bates said. "We had to do what we were told with no questions asked."

The group traveled through the woods, and members were forced onto the ground to crawl on hands and knees.

As hours passed and the simulation continued, intensity increased and the "slaves" felt a growing sense of urgency and anxiety. Group members knew nothing aside from what the conductors told them. At times each had to wait alone at a hiding station.

"I felt scared and exhausted," said Nicole Smith, a General College freshman. "There were times we were waiting in the forest for close to an hour, and I kept reflecting on how privileged I am."

The scariest moments for many students were when they needed to cross a swamp and river.

"The slave master was right there, and I really thought I would get caught," Smith said. "My legs wouldn't move; they were stuck in the mud. The idea of working as a team went out of my head, and all I wanted to do was get myself out of there."

But they all knew turning back was out of the question. It became even more obvious after the group encountered someone acting as Harriet Tubman, one of the most famous conductors on the Underground Railroad.

Tubman explained if anyone were to turn back she would be forced to shoot them to prevent the railroad from being found. One girl lost her shoe midway through the simulation but had to keep going.

"If you were really in that situation, you couldn't go back and get anything you dropped or you would be caught and returned to slavery," Bates said.

Close to three and a half hours after they started, the group was nearing the cabin where they had started. The students ran the final quarter mile with slave traders closing in behind them.

"All I wanted was to get inside the cabin," Smith said. "There was a line between slavery and freedom. Seeing the cabin was safe haven, but it felt like slavery was a couple of yards away and freedom was a hundred."

The group made it into the cabin but forgot to close the door as the slave traders closed in.

"Someone had to run and close the door," Bates said. "The slave traders were banging on the door trying to get in to find us."

After reaching freedom, the group met for an hour and a half to talk and debrief after their experience. Some talked about what the simulation meant to them; others reflected on how scared they'd been.

Tony Diggs, AALRC coordinator, said he decided to take the students on the simulation because he wanted to provide an eye-opening journey. The AALRC is a campus academic support unit for undergraduates.

"(The simulation) is something many of these students have never experienced before," Diggs said. "It can be fun, and it will last a lifetime."

Smith said she agreed.

"This helped me empathize with what my ancestors went through," she said. "This has changed my whole outlook on life. I realize how good I have it."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiburcia Gorczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE

Due to the end of daylight savings time, effective Monday, October 29, 2001 any vehicle with a valid Umass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00 pm on weekdays instead of 5:00 pm.

Parking is still prohibited In tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and reserved vehicle spaces.

Also excluded are lots which require 24-hour permits:

21 29 47 50 54 67 North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments.

This parking policy will remain in effect through March 29, 2002.
Parking Meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm

SENIOR PORTRAITS

Sponsored By
The Index Yearbook

Class of 2002
Senior Portraits
October 29-November 2
Make your appointment
now by calling:

1-800-OUR-YEAR or log
onto www.ouryear.com
Access #147

You can start placing your orders for the 2002 Index Today!

DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

MassPIRG

continued from page 3

Concourse and there will be representatives from MASSPIRG on hand to gather letters, signatures and comments to pass onto the Senator.

Campaign members will also be leading a hike in the Holyoke range on Sunday, Oct. 28 to look at some area and state land that might be threatened by developers.

"A lot of UMass students enjoy using state lands and appreciate their beauty," Spagnoli said. "It's important to recognize that we're losing that space. You can't get it back once it's been developed."

MASSPIRG is also working to pass legislation to protect lands across the country. Last year they concentrated on the protection of Arctic acres.

"We want to make sure that larger national parks don't succumb to short-sighted development," Spagnoli said.

Closer to home, MASSPIRG is working to alleviate hunger and homelessness in the area. They are working closely with local service providers to help the needy. They are also working with UMass administrators to look at campus operations and try to find a new way to use energy and save paper.

Turkey

continued from page 1

voted for a liberal political party. "My other graduate student [assistant] was a male who was wearing a beard," she continued, noting that beards are often an expression of political Islam. "There were no problems with it."

At the conclusion of Cinar's lecture, a critique was given by Benjamin Odhoji, a fellow research associate at the Center. Odhoji examined what he felt were the key points of Cinar's speech.

"The most important thing [in the lecture] is the way the body functions as a political and ideological text," Odhoji said. "Alev's main argument, as I got it, is that the new Turkish state instituted secularism through unveiling the female body...this new secular republic decided to redefine itself by unveiling the female body, thereby instituting a Western or European kind of modernism.

"The new Islam," Odhoji continued, "reveiled the female body. Both used the body as a side from which to articulate political and national projects."

Odhoji also discussed the ramifications of the Turkish beauty pageant.

"The beauty queen is presented as representing the nation," he said. "Her body is portrayed as representing Turkish secularism, and so her body is represented as a mark of modernity. Modernity is therefore inscribed on this particular body.

"All I wanted was to get inside the cabin," Smith said. "There was a line between slavery and freedom. Seeing the cabin was safe haven, but it felt like slavery was a couple of yards away and freedom was a hundred."

The group made it into the cabin but forgot to close the door as the slave traders closed in.

"Someone had to run and close the door," Bates said. "The slave traders were banging on the door trying to get in to find us."

After reaching freedom, the group met for an hour and a half to talk and debrief after their experience. Some talked about what the simulation meant to them; others reflected on how scared they'd been.

Tony Diggs, AALRC coordinator, said he decided to take the students on the simulation because he wanted to provide an eye-opening journey. The AALRC is a campus academic support unit for undergraduates.

"(The simulation) is something many of these students have never experienced before," Diggs said. "It can be fun, and it will last a lifetime."

Smith said she agreed.

"This helped me empathize with what my ancestors went through," she said. "This has changed my whole outlook on life. I realize how good I have it."

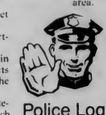
"At its heart, zoning is a way to moderate transition of land use so one type doesn't gain dominance," Hartwell said. "The town should not see this as a weakening of farm protection. It is not and it will save the town from legal attack...our attorney advised us that this case was a loser, but that we could delay it with appeals for five years or so. What we failed to anticipate was that they had the resources to wait that long. there were conservative legal organizations simply salivating at the chance to win against the People's Republic of Amherst."

"I need to really believe that," responded Board member Sarah Awad, noting how rushed she felt into making a recommendation for the very next week on such a complex issue, "being told to hurry automatically makes me not want to."

In the end, it was decided that Board Chair Carl Seppala would draft an endorsement of the bylaw change, which the Board will sign at a meeting just before the Special Town Meeting, at which time the Farm Committee will have a chance to present their recommendation based on a second legal opinion which they have not yet obtained. Seppala noted that taking an opposing position is not likely to be feasible, however.

"This bylaw did not creep up on them, to do this one week before Town Meeting is not helpful."

board



continued from page 1

ally became cheaper to develop quickly and on a larger scale, so few would voluntarily utilize the more complex design. State law no longer requires clusters to be specially permitted, paving the way for the proposed switch to site plan review.

The project which started all the trouble, Barkowski Meadows, is now through with its day in court, having emerged victorious, and Hartwell praised the developers for "laying everything out on the table" after the case and assisting the Planning Board in plugging the holes in its bylaw by detailing all the techniques they could have used. As he explained, rejection of the special permits denies developers their right to use their property.

Annoying Behavior
October 19
There was a concern over a suspicious letter that was sent to Bartlett Hall. The envelope was tested and came back negative. It was returned to the department.
October 20
Officer reported hearing gunshots on Clark Hill at 1:43 a.m.
Police dispersed a group of skateboarders outside of Crampton Dormitory.
There was a report of fireworks being set off near Brown Dormitory.
There was noise reported from the courtyard of James Dormitory.
There was the report of two individuals in the area of Durfee Conservatory, the suspects were not located and police advised that the doors be locked.
A picnic table was being used as a skateboard jump ramp outside of Lederle Research Lowrise. The individuals were dispersed.
October 21
Oranges were thrown at a Housing van outside of McNamara Dormitory.
Police responded to a group fishing in the Campus Pond.
A disorderly student left the area of Grayson Dormitory.

Disturbance
October 19
There was a verbal disturbance in Gorman Dormitory.
There was a report of two individuals disrupting comedy hour in Bowker Auditorium by punching in a window. One bleeding individual was sent to Baystate Medical Center.
There was a report of an individual harassing other people on Fearing Street.

Police Log

Medical Emergencies
October 19
There was a leg injury in Kennedy Dormitory. An ambulance was dispatched to the scene.
An ill individual refused an ambulance in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
An individual ran into a glass door in Fine Arts Center.
There was a skateboard accident in the academic area.
October 20
There were reports of an alcohol related illness in Mackimmie Dormitory. The individual refused treatment.
A report of an individual with a hurt arm came into the police station. The individual was alert and conscious and an ambulance was sent for him.
A band member was injured and an ambulance was dispatched.

Vandalism
October 19
There was a report of a truck being spray painted out side of the University Apartments.
October 20
There was a rock thrown through the windshield of a car on Stockbridge Road.
There was an incident of hate graffiti in McNamara Dormitory.
Police investigated graffiti on the side of Coolidge Dormitory.
A windshield wiper and a gas tank door were damaged on a car in lot 27.
October 21
There was a report of vandalism to a vehicle, and to a window in Hamden DC and Coolidge Dormitory.
There was water damage in McNamara due to sprinkler tampering.

-Melissa Hammel

bio

continued from page 1

he felt that the University would respond appropriately. He cited a meningitis scare on campus two years ago, mentioning that in response, the University educated students on the disease and held vaccination clinics. "I don't have a lot of faith in the University Administration in the way they allocate funding, and things like that," Sayani said, but in the case of a campus emergency, he remarked, "the University will pretty much do anything to keep from getting bad PR."

Overall, Sayani said he felt that the best way to counteract bioterrorism is through education and awareness. "We need to get to the root of the problem," he said. "no matter how much you boost up security, it's still important to know the motive of the crime."

"I think that [the recent events] have opened [students'] eyes a little," Sayani said. "I think it could be a good learning experience about international relations, to figure out how we could be so blind to let this happen to us."

Pentagon

continued from page 1

Freedom.

"On Saturday, U.S. forces struck in six planned target areas that included airfields and air defenses, command and control facilities, and terrorist forces and camps. We used a total of about 90 strike aircraft, with about 85 of them tactical jets, primarily off our carriers. The remainder were long-range bombers," Myers said. "On Sunday we struck in eight planned target areas that included airfields, command and control facilities, and Taliban forces deployed and in garrisons. We used, again, about 85 strike aircraft on Sunday, with about 75 tactical aircraft, principally from carriers, and the balance long-range bombers."

Food packages were also dropped over the weekend near Mazar-I Sharif in northern Afghanistan.

"We continued our humanitarian airdrop mission Saturday, with four C-17s delivering approximately 52,000 rations," Myers said. "We flew additional airdrop missions on Sunday, with four more C- 17s, and that brings our total of rations delivered to date to about 700,000."

REALLY REALLY IMPORTANT NEWS MEETING TONIGHT @ 5:30!! IF YOU WRITE FOR NEWS (OR IF YOU'D LIKE TO WRITE FOR NEWS) PLEASE BE THERE!!!

ROTC
AFROTC.COM

It took you 18 years to get into college.
It'll take about 18 minutes to pay for it.

Your next study break could pay for your education. That is, if you use it to log on to our Web site and find out how easy getting financial support can be. Because joining the Air Force ROTC can provide you with up to 100 percent of your tuition, fees and book costs — plus up to $400 of additional spending money every month. And money is only the beginning. You'll gain skills you'll use your entire career — like leadership, team-building, and physical fitness. To find out how, visit AFROTC.COM or call 1-800-522-0033, ext. 2091.

U.S. AIR FORCE R·O·T·C

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real barlclub setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

Managing Anxiety
A GROUP FOR WOMEN WHO STRUGGLE WITH ANXIETY DAILY
Understand the causes of anxiety
Learn to reduce worry and "what if" thinking
Gain skills to manage anxiety and reduce stress
Thursday Evenings, 5:00-6:30 PM
Beginning October 25th, 2001
To register for this four session group, please call
Everywoman's Center Counseling Services
(413) 577-0077

STUDENT TRAVEL
FREEDOM
Freedom to travel will never be compromised.
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Stretching the laws

Get back to normal

The criminal investigation of the World Trade Center attacks go on in New York City, and concerns grow by the day as to how people are being treated because of it.

In particular, there is growing concern over how the people who have been detained or arrested are being treated by authorities. Steve Shapiro, leader of the American Civil Liberties Union, says that it is not even known how many people are still being held in jail. Information has been tightly guarded, with the government winning gag orders that keep district attorneys from revealing things as small as the names of the clients they have involved in the criminal investigation.

Obviously, this is not an ideal situation. If situations like Yazeed Al-Salmi's, a 23-year-old college student from California, can legitimately occur, America needs to look closely at how it is conducting its investigation techniques and needs to make sure that the emotions of criminal investigators and jail workers does not cloud their vision. Al-Salmi, after a 17-day high-security stay in New York City's Metropolitan Correctional Center, alleges that guards shackled him and beat him physically. His lawyer, Randall Hamud, alleges that the prisoner was held in solitary confinement, as well.

The plight of innocent people like Al-Salmi's is not unexpected. People have feared it since the moment the Trade Centers rumbled and sank to the Manhattan ground. Racial profiling, vigilante justice, mob riots – all were feared to some extent. Attorney General John Ashcroft has promised to "aggressively detain" those under suspicion, while "respecting the dignity of the individuals."

Most likely, both of these cannot be done simultaneously. The United States has started holding material witnesses indefinitely in this investigation, a policy that, before September 11, was reserved for witnesses that were under suspicion of not appearing before a grand jury.

Extending the material witness policy to anyone that could potentially be involved and holding them against their will indefinitely is harsh at this point, working on six weeks since the attacks. Originally, it may have had a purpose. Authorities feared that if they didn't hold those integral to solving the case, that they would flee the country. Six weeks later, the government needs to realize that anyone who can flee the country already has. Holding everyone else isn't helping anything.

Our government has reshaped the way it works. While it may have served a purpose in some limited fashion weeks ago, authorities need to go back to the way things were. Authorities need to go back to the American way: innocent, until proven guilty.

Information from CNN.com was used to write this editorial.
Staff editorials are the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Staff.

Take refuge in your music

MELODY ZAGAMI

I would've written my column this week about the flag burning incident that occurred in Amherst last week, but I've decided it would be a complete waste of words and ink. Instead, I would like to turn your attention to one of the more positive things that has come from the current state of the nation: music. The VH1 concert for New York aired on Saturday night. I believe it's the Material Girl who sang, "Music makes the people come together." She couldn't be more correct.

If I didn't feel my duty to my reading audience was to present important topics (okay mindless drivel disguised as important topics) each week, I would write about rock and roll. Yup, I would spend every precious word on guitar gods and kings of the skins. I'm telling you right now that musical opportunity abounds in the Happy Valley. Our little five-college area is hopping week in and week out with diverse musicians playing all over the place. Your fat ass is sitting in your dorm room, working on your drinking arm when you could be at a club or bar, listening to music, getting yourself some culture, and, well, working on your drinking arm.

I was inspired to bring you this little public service announcement because I attended two great shows last week. For a few, fleeting, beautiful hours, I forgot about lost rescue workers, settling dust, and yahoos burning flags. In a time when you're afraid to open the mail, at least you can still rock and roll. You can seek solace in a lot of things right now. There is an escape and music is the best route.

I had the pleasure of watching The Counting Crows play at John M. Greene Hall at Smith last Tuesday. From 8 to midnight, a venue full of fans watched Adam and the gang do what they do best – entertain. Thursday, I went to the Amherst Brewing Company and saw Bootyjuice. Besides being really fun to say, they're a great little band. I listened and watched people sway to the beat, losing themselves in the rhythm and just having a groovy time, man.

With a name like "Melody" it is a prerequisite (much like your junior year writing course) that I should be musically inclined, right? My dad wasted five years worth of money on piano lessons. I know heart and soul, that's about it. I was taught to appreciate music at an early age and, like a bridge over troubled waters, it has been a huge part of my life.

My parents love music. As a couple of swingers back in the 80's, they listened to everything. They introduced me to all kinds of music and instructed me to respect not only Hall, but Oates, too. Because, as my father predicted, "He's going to be the punch line to a lot of jokes in a couple of decades." Good call dad.

My mother, although a Motown and British Invasion junkie, loved Culture Club. She even dressed as Boy George for Halloween once. My father, refusing to wear a real costume, put on a cap, his Santa beard and, with cane in hand, passed himself off as "Boy George's father." He spent the whole night saying how proud he was of his gay, make-up clad, braid-headed son and how he "missed him blind" when he's on tour. I hope you realize a normal, nuclear family is not only detrimental to the imagination and highly overrated, but it's just no fun at all.

High school was my introduction to real rock and roll. In a freshman-year typing class (most beneficial class my high school offered), I had a huge crush on this hot varsity hockey star/lead-in-school play senior. Every class he would beg our teacher, Mrs. Hibbard, to turn on ZLX (100.7, WZLX is Boston's classic Rock station). She'd always give in because she thought he was cute, too. She'd wear skimpy dresses and tight tops to outshine me in my dad's old jean/Lacoste shirt ensemble. We'd listen to the radio and every time a song came on he would quiz me on who the artist was. Now, for a while I'd been wandering aimlessly in the world of grunge rock (the year was 1994). STP, Nirvana, Pearl Jam and bad Gin Blossoms ballads were all I listened to.

I was rusty. I had forgotten all of the Stones and Allman Brothers albums my parents owned back when they were cool and not impersonating a gay pop star and his dad. I was worried that my dreamboat wouldn't think I was cool (I'm not) so I brushed up or began my ascent into the higher levels of your basic rock knowledge. I figured if I could rap with him about Clapton or Mark Knopfler I'd be golden. Certainly I wouldn't be asked on a date or anything or proposed to, but maybe a ride to school, or a "Hey knowledge of rock and roll goddess" wave in the hallways or cafeteria would have been cool. What else could a chubby, 14-year-old, bad dresser hope for? I borrowed Led Zeppelin III from a sophomore I knew. I fell in love. I raced downstairs demanding why these rockin' British dudes have been kept from me for so long.

My parents claim they only like "Stairway." I think they just did a lot of drugs and have flashbacks when they hear "Kashmir." Whatever the case, I bought albums, I school myself in the ways of Floyd, Cream, and AC/DC. I played air guitar in gym class and started dressing like Stevie Nicks (that's a lie, but I entertained the idea, quite a few times). As the semester progressed I was able to answer more of my dream boy's questions. "Hey Melody, what song is this, and who sings it?" He'd ask, pointing at me.

"I believe it's The Band's "The Weight" isn't it, and, if I remember correctly, it's off the live album," I'd say.

"I think you're right Zagami, good work," he'd praise.

I answered all of his trivia questions like I'd always known. The music not only helped me get through those awkward high school years, but also set the soundtrack to my life. If you do not seek solace in music, I don't give a what-what whether it's Jay-Z or Handel, you're missing out on one of the greatest gifts God has given man – the ability to express wells of emotion from a single note.

Rock and roll is a great American institution. If you need to escape, if you need guidance, or if you seek understanding, you need only to press play or go to one of your local watering holes. Sit back, and listen.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian columnist.

Me Thinks This: Personal Thoughts

BRIAN LOHNES

The brain heads in some interesting directions when you let it wander off into space. Not surprisingly, I let that happen a lot, probably too much, but what else are you supposed to do in class, pay attention? This is a collection of some of the ruminations that have passed through the big mass of lell-o that I call my brain.

Ashes! and flags. Thanks for making us a national joke. This story has been covered to exersone including CNN. In Saturday's Boston Globe, a story appeared about a patriotic gathering at Amherst College, which was interrupted and ruined by a group of "self-described anarchists" who burned flags and chanted, "This flag doesn't represent us." Maybe a flag with the words "I'm a white privileged anarchist" would suit you better.

I'll the girl on the front page of the Globe holding a burning flag that didn't even have the guts to put her name, you are a disgrace to your community, your country and your family. Why don't you catch the next flight to Afghanistan and tell them how much you hate America, you would have a captive audience there.

Remember when the Patriots went to the Super Bowl in Louisiana and the "flag line" was Janibalaya? That was dumb.

GEO. Small economical car or left wing labor organization...or both?

I posed this question to my girlfriend last week and she asked it with alarming quickness. How did they set the first clock?

I am going to Disney World for Thanksgiving with my family. It should be a rockin' good time considering that I can either hang out with my under ten-year-old cousins or my over-40 dad and uncle. Anyone want a ticket?

I am sure glad to be getting out of this place at the end of this year. I feel like I caught the end of the golden age of UMass my freshman year and since then everything has been heading downhill. Budget shrinking, departments shrinking, housing overbooked, SGA on the verge of being wiped out...again. I couldn't and don't tell people who are thinking of coming to UMass to study anything but engineering or business to come here. Why would I? Try taking a class English department. If you aren't a senior (sometimes that doesn't even help) you don't stand a chance. At the beginning of the semester in each of my English classes upwards of 50 kids showed up for each. This happens because UMass refuses to hire professors to fill the spots of those that leave, an interesting "phase out" strategy.

Ineptitude is another great theme for UMass. Consider having a table in the Campus Center. If you are an RSO, you fill out a sheet and hand it in with the dates you want to have a table. Since there are only a certain amount of tables (about 20) only that many groups can have one. On the sheet you fill out to get a table there is a contact number. We assumed that it was for the Campus Center people to call and tell us if the tables were booked up on our dates and we wouldn't have one. Wrong. My buddy Adam and I dragged ourselves to the Campus center at 8:30 every morning for two weeks to sit at a table. We get there one day and are told we don't have a table. We ask why we weren't contacted and the fellow in the office told us, "We have hundreds of RSO's, it would take all day to call everyone." YOU ONLY HAVE TO CALL THE PEOPLE WHO DIDN'T GET A TABLE...not every RSO on campus.

So the SGA is in danger of going through the same nightmare as last year. For freshman, the SGA is a large group of people who convene every week and fling poop at each other. Well, they couldn't even handle that. They would try to fling the poop and then the meeting would be ended because of a lack of quorum. I wouldn't trust that group with five bucks, let alone a budget of millions. It is frightening to think that these people are going to be the leaders of tomorrow and they can't hold a weekly meeting without all hell breaking loose.

Honestly, it seems to make more sense to let the administration take care of a lot of the matters the SGA tries to deal with because they have failed, and failed miserably in many times during my four years here. Hell, last year the whole body got tossed out and an election was held half was through the year. Nothing was accomplished, and now we are headed down the same road again. Happy trails.

Lastly, do all girls rearrange stuff constantly, or is it only my girlfriend? I leave for the weekend and come home to and behold, the bedroom is completely different. I think there might even be new furniture in there. At home, my room has been identical for the last 15 years. Same posters, same wall paper, same layout. I am afraid of going to sleep one night and waking up in a completely different room in my house.

Diary of a Mad Man, Part One. Long classes, long drives and long days at work all contribute to the swirling mass of thoughts in my head. Either that or its from sniffing all those glue sticks when I was a kid.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian columnist.

The Eternal Light of Freemasonry

"And God said, 'Let there be light, and there was light,'" begins the greatest story ever told. Just as the Divine Architect's effortless command illuminated His kingdom, so has the Ancient and Accepted Brotherhood of Freemasons spread throughout the world, carrying with it the sublime tenets of brotherly love, relief, and truth.

The spirit of Freemasonry is vital and alive, and extent in so many great things that serve as a reminder of that spirit. Those who have experienced Mozart's "The Magic Flute", heard Handel's "Messiah" or John Philip Souza's "El Capitan", read Goethe's Faust or Voltaire's Candide, the American Constitution, or the writings of Franklin and Washington, seen Chartres and Notre Dame Cathedrals and Rosslyn Chapel, a Chagall painting, the Washington Monument, a Shriners Hospital and parade, or even a John Wayne movie, have seen manifestations of the light of Masonry.

The image of Freemasonry as a secretive organization is misleading. Apart from the modes of recognition, there are really no secrets. We use symbols and allegory to teach the brotherhood of man under the benevolent patronage of "the One, all-Powerful, all-Wise, Everywhere-present God, Architect, Creator and Preserver of all things." The lesson is brilliant in its simplicity. And when two Masons who don't know one another meet, each one immediately knows that, as a true and lawful brother, the other is on the level. The only way to know this, of course, is through certain signs, tokens, and words whereby one Mason may immediately recognize the other as the same.

As brothers, we meet in the lodge, where all distinctions disappear upon stepping through the door. Here we gather, conversing, relaxing, and worshipping God by being mindful of the great gift of brotherhood He has given, and how pleasant it is for Brethren to dwell together in unity. And at the center of the lodge is the book, the light of Masonry. The book of any faith is welcome upon our altar, so long as it affirms the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God. By those things alone is Masonic philosophy bound.

SIMON PONGRATZ

My favorite Masonic passage comes from Joseph Newton, who asks when a man is a Mason. "When he knows that down in his heart every man is as noble, as vile, as divine, as diabolic, and as lonely as himself, and seeks to know, to forgive, and to love his fellowman...When he finds good in every faith that helps any man to lay hold of divine things and sees majestic meanings in life, whatever the name of that faith may be...When no voice of distress reaches his ears in vain, and no hand seeks his aid without response...Such a man has found the only real secret of Masonry, and the one which it is trying to give to all the world."

It's comforting to be in a strange place and see the familiar signs of Masonry all around, invisible to those who have not been tried by the square, and found true. Every proud bearer of the square and compasses is at once my brother and friend, the beneficiary of my charity, and the benefactor when I am in need. Our guide is the passage from Luke: "Ask and you shall receive; seek and you shall find; knock and the door shall be opened unto you."

The symbols of Masonry are for us reminders of the lessons that every Mason recognizes. Masons hold a trowel, which we use for spreading the cement of brotherly love and affection. As fallible beings, the rough stone, unpolished and unrefined symbolizes our souls. Life is the shaping of that stone into the image of the Creator. As George Frost wrote, "the stone that the Architect placed in your care must pass the strict test of His unerring square." Thus we fit our souls, as living stones, for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The black and white checkered floor of the lodge, which echoes the "Beauseant" of the Knights Templar, symbolizes that test. It is the yin-yang of Masonry, a reminder of man's dualist nature. That his heart is home to both day and night, and he is capable at once of great good and terrible evil. He is both divine and damned.

With the compass, we are taught to circumscribe our passions and actions within the bounds of all mankind, and the circle created is eternal. But the center of it all is the noble letter "G." It is in every lodge, and central to Freemasonry. It is the All Seeing Eye, the eye of God. The "G" serves to remind us to always remember the Creator, especially in the days of youth, when the evil days come not. We are all journeying upon the level, to that undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler ever returns. And soon shall the dust return to the Earth, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it. Each of us is but one grain in the hourglass of Time, whose sands run at a baffling speed.

The All Seeing Eye also serves as a reminder of all the lessons of Masonry. For as truth is so important to Masons, we remember that while our actions may be hidden from the eyes of man, the All Seeing Eye, whom the Sun, Moon and Stars obey, and under whose watchful care even comets perform their stupendous revolutions, pervades the whole, and ensures that justice will eventually overtake us.

These teachings are the essential truths of Masonry. Above all, they challenge us to know both ourselves and the nature of our God. They recognize that the unique spirituality that seems so different is in fact like the spoken in a wheel, all leading to the center. And they teach us that, as Masons, we must always live with love and care, upon the level and by the square. There is no lasting value in the temporal world, which comes into being and passes away in the blink of an eye. In the aftermath, only the essence remains, and the essence of Freemasonry is love – of God, of brother, or the sacred trust imparted to us in the gift of life by the Creator.

When all else has faded, that light will remain.

Information from Albert Pike's Morals and Dogma was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

Check out a review of I Was Born with Two Tongues in tomorrow's

Long Island hip hop trio still Rising at MHC show

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

In the world of live hip-hop, there is a severe lack of professionalism. Often, audiences wait from 10 minutes to over an hour between sets for the next group to go onstage. Likewise, once many groups get on, they have a hard time pumping up the crowd or they play only fragments of songs and then leave early. De La Soul, however, is not one of these lame acts. De La Soul has been in the game long enough that they know how to run a show and please a crowd.

In front of hundreds at Chapin Hall last Friday night, the rap triad from Long Island kept the party going as they promoted their new album, Art Official Intelligence Volume II: Bionix, as well as brought back some old school by performing tracks off their much earlier albums Three Feet High and Rising and De La Soul is Dead.

The show started out by showcasing amateur local acts Reks and U B Illin. These smaller acts may not have the name recognition of the headliners, but they definitely had serious talent that will no doubt bring them fame. Reks, also a threesome of rappers, warmed up the crowd while promoting their own debut release. Their high-energy and impressive lyrical craft charmed the audience into a sea of head-nodding. Within the first minutes of their show, a circle surrounded a group of break-dancers, symbolizing the audience's acceptance and appreciation for the hometown group. The positive sentiment continued to flow when the duet of U B Illin came on stage.

U B Illin, though slightly older than Reks, had the same effect on the crowd. Smooth Caribbean-influenced songs and Rastafarian lyrics kept the crowd swaying to their unique sound. But it was the amazing Biz Markie that got the girls screaming.

When Biz took the stage, the lights went down and the scratches started up. Not only did he succeed in mixing old school Nice n'Smooth with disco beats straight from Studio 54, he also performed a few Biz classics. Even though he didn't remember most of the words to "Just a Friend," Biz didn't mind and let the crowd take over. Toward the end of his set, he performed his rendition of "Benny and the Jets" as a request from the audience. However, the most impressive feat performed by the hip-hop giant was his beat-boxing. He used his mouth to make beats, scratches, samples and even put the mic up to his head and neck to make the hall vibrate with his personal version of drum-and-bass. Biz's humor and casual style kept the spirit of the show light and the crowd hyped.

But the tempo climaxed when Maseo got on the wheels of steel and started teasing the audience with a little "OOOH" from their 2000 release, Art Official Intelligence: Mosaic Thump. Posdnuos and Trugoy then strolled on stage to add rhymes to the hypnotic beat. In between songs the two interacted with the crowd asking, 'which side is real hip-hop?" and, 'where's the party at, on this side?' The crowd took the bait and screamed in response. Later, during a classic from Three Feet High and Rising, "Me, Myself and I," they passed the mics to people in the front row to sing along with the chorus.

Throughout the night, the triumvirate performed such old favorites as "A Roller Skating Jam Named 'Saturdays'," "Ring Ring Ring (Ha Ha Hey)," "Buddy," and "Plug Tunin'." They also touched on their recent stuff from Mosaic Thump with "All Good," "I.C. Y'all," "Declaration" and finished up the show with "You Don't Wanna B.D.S." that got Maseo out from behind the turntables and up to the front of the stage, proving that all three of them have superior rhyme skills.

Since their debut album back in 1989, Three Feet High and Rising, De La have been pioneers in the realm of hip-hop. Since then, they've put out five more albums; De La Soul is Dead, Bahloone Mindstate, Stakes is High, Mosaic Thump, and their upcoming, Bionix. Though not all of them have had the popular attention of their 2000-2001 releases, every one of their albums has been innovative and creative and has been supported by their loyal fan base. In the Art Official Intelligence combo albums, they have expanded their horizons and included featured guests on certain songs. Mike D from the Beastie Boys, Busta Rhymes, Chaka Khan, and Redman all added their unique sounds to 2000's Mosaic Thump. As stated in their show, Bionix will be featuring such artists as Slick Rick and Greg Nice, along with several unknown or new artists.

Plug One, Two and Three are true veterans of the hip-hop scene and it is obvious in their attention to detail, their ease and interaction with the crowd, and their confidence on stage. They are not arrogant; they do not profess to participate in the 'bling-bling' stylings of pop rap; they do not come on stage dripping in gold jewelry; nor do they have the attitude of novices. They are obviously well skilled in the art of putting on a show-they've been doing it for over ten years now. They have mastered the techniques of keeping the crowd rowdy, playing what their fans want to hear and making sure that in between sets there is always music bumpin'. There was never a dull moment while the acts switched or while Maseo was finding the right record to spin.

Rather than dissing requests for earlier stuff in order to pump up their upcoming album, De La always goes back into the early days to perform the classics that everyone grew up listening to and wants to hear. Too many groups that play shows refuse to play older stuff in order to get the word out about their new stuff. De La doesn't have to worry about kids buying their albums, they know that no matter what they put out there, it's going to be good and people are going to like it. It is refreshing to go to a show and be able to sing along to all the old tunes and hear familiar beats.

However, the group did manage to slip in a few new tracks. Maseo teased the crowd with his "favorite song from the new album," a new tune with a Latin beat. If the new songs have names, they weren't announced clearly at the show, but they were still great.

Considering that they ventured all they way from NYC to the hallowed halls of Mt. Holyoke College in rural Western Mass, De La Soul and their stage partners Biz Markie, Reks, and U B Illin played an amazing show. The beats and bass coming from the auditorium could be felt across the campus. De La Soul are truly professional hip-hop artists that have their skills polished.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Riding in Cars with Boys? Take the bus!

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

The pain of childbirth has nothing on watching a 10:20 showing of this movie.

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS
Starring Drew Barrymore, Steve Zahn
Directed by Penny Marshall

Sometimes a movie is so profound – so poignant – that the viewer laughs and cries for the individual in the movie because they feel that character's joy and pain, not just because something was mildly amusing in the story line. And sometimes a movie is so depressing; that you wish that any and/or all main characters would befall a horrible accident to take them out of the story line completely. Riding in Cars with Boys is such a film.

Based on the true story of writer Beverly D'Onofrio, Riding in Cars with Boys is the tale of a girl coming of age in the Sixties who gets pregnant at the age of 15 and marries the father. D'Onofrio, played by Drew Barrymore, had always dreamed of attending NYU, but becoming pregnant changed her life – and changed it for the worse. As the first few minutes of the film states, "If she had been from the south, she would have written a country song. But since she's from Connecticut, she wrote a book."

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

Brittany Murphy (left) was perhaps the only truly good thing in Riding in Cars with Boys.

The film is a series of flashes from the past to the "present" (the Eighties) when Beverly is trying desperately to get that book published.

The first half of the movie shows promise. Beverly is rejected by the quarterback of her dreams, and while crying in the bathroom she meets Ray (Steve Zahn), a bumbling idiot who tries hard to make her happy. After taking a birth control pill with a sip of water from the bidet (just to clarify for everyone how dim-witted Ray really is), he defends Beverly's honor by fighting with the offending jock. The two start dating, and Beverly finds out that she's pregnant. Best friend Fay (Brittany Murphy) defends Beverly at the shotgun wedding, where family members mention shame and dishonor in their toasts, then loudly announces that she is also pregnant.

The two closest people in Beverly's life, Ray and Fay, both defend her, which points out the major problem that Beverly has – she never defends herself and she blames everyone else, her cherubic son included, for any misfortune that befalls her. Granted, Beverly has every right to complain – her life gets progressively worse as she misses scholarship opportunities, finds out her husband is a heroine junkie, gets ratted out by her son and thrown in jail by her father for selling pot and having her best friend torn away from her.

Through it all, she has her son beside her. If she had just tried to be a better mother or had just tried to be happy with her life, the relationship between the two would have improved 10-fold, and we wouldn't be left with the bitter shells of mother and son at the end of the movie. And this is why the ending, where mother and son's relationship does a complete turnaround, is so annoying. It's too little, too late and it insults the audience's intelligence.

Throughout the film, director Penny Marshall continuously assaults us with the depressing. If she had held strong for the last five minutes of the movie and continued with the streak, the movie would have been better for it. The fact that suddenly everything is okay between the two is impossible to believe, and makes the last two hours and 10 minutes of the film null and void – causing the audience to question why it feels so miserable after coming out of a film with a "happy" ending.

Murphy, as the best friend, is hands-down the best actress in the movie. She portrays spunk, innocence, stubbornness and frailty all at the same time. Her character is amazingly well rounded. Zahn also portrays his character brilliantly, capturing the stupidity of Ray and playing a convincing drug addict.

Even Barrymore excels as a stressed and dream-crushed young mother. The acting is commendable – too bad the story is just too depressing and boring to adequately highlight the skills of the cast.

Riding in Cars with Boys can best be described as the last relationship you had that went terribly sour. Love, like the film, starts off great. There's happiness, laughter, interest and the occasional disappointment – the "Honeymoon period" you could say. But suddenly the magic fades, and it's just painful. And that pain compounds upon itself in a vicious spiral, leading you to the point where you're begging for an end to the relationship, or in this case, movie. At that point, any sane human being would end that relationship... or walk out of the movie. But for those who stick around, just to see how things work out, take one bit of knowledge from this movie and just run while you have the chance.

Please do not see this movie, even if you are a die-hard Drew Barrymore fan – this film is sure to disappoint, and leave you begging for the untimely end of the film's cast, or your own... whichever gets you out of the movie theater sooner.

'Gypsy Caravan' brings together "dying" cultures

By Sian Wu
Collegian Correspondent

The exuberant staccato rhythms piercing into the Sunday night air at the UMass Fine Arts Center drew curious onlookers as people started dancing. Some shy, some spastic - the dancers were mostly audience members of Gypsy Caravan 2, the performance that had just ended after two and a half hours of Gypsy music and dancing. After their final curtain call, "Fanfare Ciocarlia," a Rumanian brass band slipped down the handicap exit ramp, and outside to the front of the FAC, where they were received by surprised, but delighted audience members. There was a sense that people were looking for an opportunity for a celebration of the joys of life. Music seemed to trigger that need in the people that night.

The performance represented the diversity of Gypsies, also known as Roma, all over the globe. Performers included "Maharaja," from India, "Fanfare Ciocarlia," a Romanian brass band, "Esma Redzepova & Ensemble Teodosievski," from Macedonia, and "Antonio El Pipa Flamenco Ensemble," from Andalucia, Spain. Music is an especially important aspect of Rom culture. Not only is Rom music extremely diverse, but it is also seen as a sort of social glue within their communities. The art of playing music is passed down from generation to generation, and children often start learning music at a very early age.

Ranjana Devi, director of the UMass Asian Dance and Music Program, said this about music and dance in Gypsy, or Rom culture: "The reason why it is so important is because these are nomadic peoples. As they move across the Earth, they also celebrate moving with the Earth. They are not settled in one place, and so dancing and music becomes a way of communication with one another."

For those of you unfamiliar with Gypsies, they are nomadic peoples believed to have originated in Northwest India, around the 11th century. They have since migrated to the Middle East, across Western and Eastern Europe, and most recently, the Americas. Today, eight to 12 million Gypsies scatter themselves across Europe, making themselves the continent's largest minority. As a result of this constant moving over various continents, Rom music and dance reflects the extreme diversity of various cultures.

The first group, Maharaja, featured the sarangi, a string instrument that is vertically held and played with a bow, manjari, small cymbals, and the dholak, a double-headed drum. The instrumentals plus vocalist accompanied the literally dizzying dancers of high caliber skill. The dancers outfitted in brightly colored dresses and gold veils, showed off their astounding flexibility and agility as they moved to the striking instrumentals.

The group from Macedonia featured powerful vocals from an obviously powerful woman, Esma Redzepova. The lead singer and her ensemble used more recognizable instruments for the Western audience: an accordion, clarinet, trumpet, band drum, and modern-sounding keyboards. The songs they performed exhibited a wide array of emotions, from exuberance, sadness, sensuality, to reflection in prayer.

The tradition of brass bands in Romania originated in Turkish military bands in the early 19th century. "Fanfare Ciocarlia," the Rumanian brass band that played deep into the night outside the F.A.C. does not use sheet music. Their old instruments reflect the art of playing the music that has been handed down from generation to generation. The members of the band preserved that family dynamic during the performance, calling out to each other on stage, and seemingly walking on and off stage randomly. Their performance featured excellent trumpeters, booming tubas, and soulful singers. One could definitely see the celebratory nature of Rom music with this performance, as the dynamics on stage were less formal, and more natural.

The last group performance was by the "Antonio El Pipa Flamenco Ensemble." The group featured the male dancer, Antonio El Pipa. Fast and feverish snapping and stomping punctuated his dramatic, intense dance movements. The dance was accompanied by Spanish guitar, romantic vocals, and clapping by three other band members. Juana El Pipa, his aunt known for her raspy yet melodic vocals, also joined Antonio in a little dancing in the final piece.

As the performance drew to a close, all of the groups collaborated in one huge finale. Indian dancers, with their glittering skirts, danced with Spanish

Turn to caravan, page6

What's your Fashion Style?

COURTESY AMERICAN EAGLE

Is your style laid-back casual, high fashion, or Hawaiian shirt? Take our quiz and find out. The insight will change your life for the better.

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

Hey baby, what's your style? Sassy? Sultry? Trendy? Dowdy? Cooly? Wait, that's not a word. Find out what your ____y (fill in the blank) style is with Style File's life altering quiz.

1. When heading out to McMurphy's on a Wednesday evening to watch the Guitar Dudes, do you wear:

a. A shirt that says "Bad Girl", a glittery jean skirt and some killer knee-high boots.

b. Whatever you happened to wear to class that day, which would most likely be jeans, a T-shirt and a sweater tied around your waist.

c. I wouldn't go to McMurphy's, because that crazy kid in the Hawaiian shirt would spill some of his beer on my new Louis Vuitton handbag and dry-clean only leather pants.

d. I am that kid in the Hawaiian shirt.

2. It's 9 a.m., and you have an Italian class at 9:05 a.m. Do you:

a. Put on the outfit you picked out the night before, carefully arrange your hair, and put on a little lipstick and perfume, and make it to class by 9:15 a.m.

b. Mumble an expletive, throw on sneakers and a sweatshirt over your pajamas and sprint to class.

COURTESY DREW'S

getting there right as the teacher says "Bonjourno".

c. That would never happen. I always set my alarm for 7 a.m. so that I have plenty of time to straighten my hair, paint my fingernails to match my eyeshadow and get myself into a stunning little tube top number, because that wicked hot Collegian staff member is in my class.

d. Wear the Hawaiian shirt you've been wearing since you were at McMurphy's – it's good for the environment, cuts down on laundry.

3. Your friends are planning a trip to Sao Paulo for winter break, and you aren't ready to shake it in a bathing suit. When you head out to the gym, what do you wear?

a. I hit a spinning class in boot cut black lycra pants, a tight purple tank top, and my hair in a perky ponytail.

b. I go and play intramural volleyball in some mesh shorts, a Hanes T-shirt, and a bandana that has that "I'm not messing around" feel.

c. Work out? That involves sweat. I usually put on some very short bike shorts, a sports bra and some spotless Nikes. Then walk down to my silver Jetta and drive to that place where they do full body wraps to take off the inches. But, you know it's a pretty far walk to the parking lot.

d. For the heavy workout, which usually involves keg stands, and/or a tough game of beer pong, I like to take off the Hawaiian shirt – because it's special to me. I usually opt for a sleeveless white undershirt in such situations.

4. It's almost Halloween. What are you going to be?

a. Cinderella or some other pretty princess. Show me a long dress, sparkly earrings and a tiara and I'll show you a happy, happy girl.

b. A ketchup bottle, Hulk Hogan, or some other rather bizarre costume. I go for the laugh, not for the glitter and frills.

c. A Playboy Bunny. That's what Reese Witherspoon, my style icon, wore in Legally Blond. Anyway, what girl in her right mind would pass up the opportunity to wear stilettos, fishnets, and a puffy bunny tail?

d. Drunk.

Mostly A's - You love clothes and always try to look nice – however you understand that there are times when you just need to roll out of bed and hit the dining hall in your pajamas and flip-flops.

Mostly B's - You're more concerned with life than with looks. Having fun, getting to class, and seeing friends are higher up on the list than polishing your shoes. Just keep in mind, it's okay if you want to get glittery once and awhile.

Mostly C's – You probably have 30 pairs of shoes carefully lined up underneath your bed, with a chart to find the pair you're looking for. Your appearance is at the top of your list of priorities, and while it's great to take pride in yourself, why not explore other aspects of your personality and join a club?

Mostly D's – I'm amazed that you even got this far into my column. Don't you have a keg to tap or something? Style tip for you – Shout will take out all those nasty alcohol stains on your precious drinking shirt.

Any similarities in this column to actual people are purely coincidental, and do not reflect the columnist's views about particular genres of people – i.e. Hawaiian shirt wearers. Public Service Announcement - Have you hugged your Hawaiian shirt-wearing friend today? See? Nothing but love for my party animals. And nothing but fighting words for Tube Notes writer Kurt Polesky. If he took the quiz he would get mostly E's for ewww...are you really going to wear that?

COURTESY RALPH LAUREN

caravan

continued from page 5

Flamenco dancers. The beats from the Indian dholak drum mingled with the booming bass drum of the Romanian brass band. All of these cultures intermixed and joined with one another, to create a joyful, harmonious mix of different cultures, all of which are called Gypsy.

Gypsy Caravan offered music for virtually everybody: jazzy at some times, dance-inspired at others; it contained elements of Spanish passion, Old World folk and Asian traditions. Undefined by national and political boundaries, Rom music represents the experience of living a nomadic life. They do not communicate with each other through the filter of national or political identity, but by the joy and sorrow they encounter with moving across the earth.

"This show is really important because these are dying cultures that most people do not get to see," said Devi. "But when we are all together, we can really see the connections that people have with each other across the globe. We usually don't get to see that because we live in our own area."

If you are interested in Rom culture, there is a free film, Time of the Gypsies, directed by Romanian Emir Kusturica Thurs. Oct. 25th. in Herter 231.

All Staff Meeting this Wednesday @ 6:00pm in the Collegian Offices
you bring the bread we'll have the fondue

Teach Thinking about a career in teaching?
Teacher Certification Information Session
Wednesday, October 24 at 6:30 pm
Room 138 Hasbrouck Lab
University of Massachusetts
Come for a general information session on how to become certified to teach K-12 math or science and to hear what it's like to teach.
Session led by veteran teacher Jack Czajkowski
Refreshments Provided
Questions: Contact the STEMTEC Student Services office at (413) 545-0626 or wtyler@k12s.phast.UMass.edu
STEMTEC is an eight-college project funded by the National Science Foundation

The 2002 Japan Exchange and Teaching Program
Teach English in junior and senior high schools in Japan
Learn about Japanese culture and people
Gain international experience
Requirements
- Have an excellent command of the English language
- Obtain a bachelor's degree by June 30, 2002
- Be a U.S. citizen
- Be willing to relocate to Japan for one year

Applications are now available. The deadline for applying is December 5, 2001.
For more information and an application, contact the Consulate General of Japan in Boston, Federal Reserve Plaza, 14th floor, 600 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, MA 02210. Call (617) 973-9772 ext. 322 or 1-800-INFO-JET (1-800-463-6538). Applications must be received by the deadline. Applications are also found at many embassies and consulates.

Cultural Study in Nepal
6 Credits

Winter Intersession 2002
December 26, 2001-January 19, 2002
Integrating classroom instruction with cultural appreciation and adventure, UConn's unique Cultural Study in Nepal program allows students to earn 6 academic credits. This three and one half week program will be under the guidance of UConn faculty. Students will learn about Nepal's language, culture, history, economy and ecology, and develop a research project tailored to their specific academic requirements.
For more information, visit us online at continuingstudies.uconn.edu, or contact Pat Harkins at 860-486-5985, Patricia.Harkins@uconn.edu
University of Connecticut
College of Continuing Studies
International Studies Transforming Lives

INDEPENDENT

"It says something about individuals, and institutions. As the only law school in Boston not affiliated with a university, New England School of Law is able to focus all of its resources on your legal education. Located in the heart of Boston's legal community, the school offers innovative programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a student-run business law center and coursework on Internet Law. The results speak for themselves—94.6% of our 2000 graduates were employed within nine months. Don't follow. New England School of Law will help you lead."
– Lisa Kiele Price, Class of 1999
V.P. & General Counsel
Cape Air/Nantucket Airlines
New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu
ABA-accredited Member of the Association of American Law Schools

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Mike Johnson was one of the few Minutemen who came to play this weekend in Colorado.

hockey

continued from page 10

the second on tallies by Colin Stuart and sophomore sensation Peter Sejna, the latter of which rattled off both the skates of UMass captain Toni Söderholm and past Warner.

The Maroon and White got on the board at the 11:54 mark of the middle frame, as sophomore Scott Horvath feathered a pass from his own blue line to a streaking Matt Walsh, who broke in alone on goaltender Curtis McElhinney and promptly flicked the puck over the netminder's outstretched glove.

But that was all the Minuteman offense could muster, and the outmatched Maroon and White defense would see three more goals scored, sending the team to its most lopsided loss since a 9-2 defeat Nov. 18 against RPI.

"Friday night, I think we stood around and for whatever reason, we were really not ourselves," Cahoon said. "Saturday I thought we played much better. We really competed, we made some plays and we didn't look shell-shocked. I really thought the scores should have been reversed."

In the first game of the weekend, Mike Johnson was stellar between the pipes, turning aside 36 of the 39 shots he faced, but it was not enough as the UMass offense was anemic in putting up 13 shots on CC goaltender Jeff Sanger, who posted his 10th career shutout – a school record – en route to the 3-0 victory.

"We played with resolve on Saturday. There was definitely resolve throughout the locker room – we felt that we were going to be accountable for ourselves," Cahoon said. "I think that by and large we made a much better effort. Inexperience cost us a couple of goals, and bad breaks cost us a number of goals."

Again it was Kim getting the scoring going early on in the first for the Tigers. Stuart brought the puck in deep and wrapped it around to find Kim wide-open on the left side, who put the point-blank shot past Johnson's blocker to give CC the 1-0 lead.

The turning point of the game came at the 3:02 mark of the second period, when Horvath unleashed a howitzer that went past Sanger to his right. But the whistle had blown just before Horvath got the shot off, as matching minors to Callahan and Preissing neutralized the equalizer.

At the 9:11 mark of the middle frame, Preissing cut between two defensemen to spring a two-on-one breakaway with Joe Cullen. He then feathered a pass to the wide-open winger, who banged the puck home for a 2-0 lead.

Just over three minutes into the third, sophomore Reid Goolsby was sprung on a breakaway, but Johnson was not fooled and made a brilliant pad save and froze the puck. But on the ensuing faceoff, Goolsby took the puck off the draw and shot through a screen to find the back of the net and clinch the 3-0 triumph.

Despite the pair of losses, for a young team trying to gain experience and an identity, the trip certainly had its benefits, according to Cahoon.

"A lot of [the freshmen] got to see what a quality team is made up of," he said. "They got to see first hand the speed at the upper echelon of Division I hockey. They got to struggle through a sad performance and try to reassemble a weekend. That's important in a league like ours where you're not able to win every night."

soccer

continued from page 10

Philadelphia for a bruising encounter with Temple. But unlike the city's nickname, their was no love loss between these two sides as the tackles were flying in fast and furious from both sides, limiting the number of quality chances.

Also limiting the number of chances for the Maroon and White was Temple's defensive tactics. The Owls dropped nine women behind the ball when UMass pushed forward, leaving just striker Brandi Wright alone up top. Once the Owl defense won the ball it looked to get her the ball on a quick counter attack with numbers coming up in support from the back. This strategy nearly worked nine minutes in when Wright was able to get behind the UMass defense and lay the ball off for Briana Tharp whose shot was parried off the post by UMass keeper Julie Podhrasky before being cleared from danger.

This was one of the few quality chances that the Owls would create in the first half and it only seemed to be a matter of time as to when the Minutewomen would forge in front.

The breakthrough came in the 44th minute when Turman grabbed her third goal and second game-winner of the season off a cross from Bartlett. The chance resembled numerous others on the afternoon, a deep cross from the right flank, but in this case Temple goalkeeper Jackie Mauro could not handle the cross and it hit off the crossbar before falling straight to the feet of Turman who calmly placed the ball into the open net from six yards to give UMass a 1-0 lead. Luttati also assisted on the goal that helped take the wind out of Temple's sails going into halftime.

Senior Katelyn Jones (No. 13), holding the Minutewomen together.

"That was a big goal, that would have been huge for them if they had held us 0-0 going into half," Rudy said. "Their keeper made a few saves and we missed a layup or two, I think 0-0 would have given them confidence."

The Minutewomen doubled the lead just seven minutes into the second half when Wideberg opened her collegiate goal scoring account. She won the ball on the right flank and was able to beat her defender into the box before unleashing a right-footed shot that got past Mauro and locked up the match for the Minutewomen.

"The past couple games I've been thinking too much instead of just playing," Wideberg said. "In the back of my head I was like, 'finally' and it felt awesome. I needed that as a confidence boost."

Temple frantically pushed forward over the final 20 minutes but could not find a way past Kelly Nigh, who replaced Podhrasky at halftime, and the rest of the UMass defense. Nigh has now not given up a goal since Sept. 16 and the team has gone more than 530 minutes without surrendering a tally.

MANDATORY SPORTS MEETING:
TONIGHT @ 5:30.

Rivals meet for autumn ending

By Elena Ponesis
Collegian Staff

With inexperience and youth come erratic performances for the Massachusetts men's tennis team, who lost a disappointing match 6-1 last Tuesday to the University of Rhode Island, a team that UMass defeated 7-0 last season.

Yet, after a hard week of conditioning and preparation, coach Judy Dixon and crew are ready to rebound against its nemesis, the University of Connecticut. The squad lost to the Huskies last year 5-2 in Storrs, Conn. under adverse conditions, which included windy weather and a relentless UConn crowd. Today the Minutemen hope to avenge that loss on the Upper Boyden Courts and end the fall season on a positive note.

UMass	vs.	UConn
Today	@	2:30

The Maroon and White will step onto the courts with a vastly different line-up as Dixon has made some necessary changes to improve singles play for this crucial match. But the doubles tandems will remain the same with senior Steve Prisco and freshman Scott Sans-Leeb at No.1, Todd Champeau/Eric Reblin at No.2 and Reid Stubbs/Phil Rodrigues at No.3.

"We've shaken up our singles line-up a little bit," Dixon said. "Phil will play at No. 2, Scott will be at No. 3, Todd will be at four, Eric will be at five and Reid will be at No.6. In doubles play, UConn stacks their teams so that should help us. I would love to win the doubles point but I feel that this match will be won in singles play."

The Maroon and White must get match tough for singles play against the Huskies, who defeated the University of Hartford 4-3 and the Rhode Island Rams 5-2 earlier this season. UMass lost to both squads 6-1, which came as a surprise considering that the Minutemen blanked both squads 7-0 in the fall 2000 season.

"We've had a big talk about the loss to URI and what it means for the rest of our season," Dixon said. "We've picked up the intensity in practice a lot and I'm trying to get them hungrier with a lot of conditioning."

The fall season does serve as a warm-up for the more vital conference matches in the spring, so the Minutemen still have time to regain their status as a force to be reckoned with in the Atlantic 10 Conference. Right now, lack of experience plays a major role as freshmen Sans-Leeb and Stubbs are continuing to mature as players along with sophomore Phil Rodrigues who played few matches last semester. Also, the line-up lacks depth without Rory Theis, a solid doubles and singles player, whose back injury has kept him sidelined all season.

"I have a team that is very young and I only have so many people that I can play," Dixon said. "I'm really pushing them physically. This match could go either way. We may win and turn the whole season around. Or we may lose and say that the fall has been a wash without Rory."

Either way Coach Dixon need not worry about motivating the team to come ready to battle. The UMass men have a long, standing rivalry with the Huskies despite the fact that they play in the Big East conference. Last year, a brutal UConn crowd psyched out the Minutemen, contributing to their 5-2 loss. The two programs compare in scholarship money, overall records and talent ability from year to year.

"I definitely feel that we're mentally prepared," Dixon said. "It's a match that's easy to get up for just because it is UConn and we have such a history with them. Whether or not we put things together is another story. But we're motivated and it should be an exciting match."

MATT VUCCARO/COLLEGIAN

The UMass men's tennis team ends the fall season today at the Upper Boyden Courts.

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES, FUTONS, BEDS & ETC
BYOB*
*(bring your own beds)
AMHERST 253-BEDS
THE AREA'S BEST RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE LIVING

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
PRE - REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2002
THE WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24 @ 7:00 P.M.
IN TOBIN 204
This test may be taken only once.
Students should pre-register for ENGLWP before Pre-registration ends.
Students do not need to register for the test.

DJ MIKE
* every Tuesday
* no cover
positive ID required
McMurphy's

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

VALLEY Furniture and Crafts
15% off Bookcases
320 Wcmic A. Turner's Falls
Call for Directions
Open Mon.-Sat. 10-4

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY • 256-0011
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-3 a.m.
Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
Buy any medium or large pizza & get a second pizza of equal or lesser value
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out
Expires 5/31/02
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

GO ON DOMESTIC EXCHANGE!!! EXPLORE NEW PLACES!!! INFORMATION SESSIONS WEDNESDAYS AND THURSDAYS 5:00-5:45 IN 614 GOODELL OR CALL 545-5351

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Research Interviewers. No selling or cold calls. Set your own schedule Evenings and weekends Competitive pay- 20+ hours per week. Hadley location. PVTA accessible. For more infor call FMI Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$310 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridershop Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conducting a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Amherst from November 1 through November 8, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until October 26, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield, MA 01089. PVPC is an EOE/AA employer.

EMPLOYMENT

COACHES WANTED Amherst Leisure Services is looking for enthusiastic college students with a background in basketball to coach in the Amherst Youth Basketball league. These are volunteer positions, with an average commitment of 2-5 hours a week. Every coach will go thru a coaching certification program. There will be an orientation meeting for anyone interested in learning more about the coaching in the league on Monday, October 29, 2001 at 7:00 p.m. at the Bangs Community Center. The Bangs Center is located behind Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at thomasm@town amherst.ma.us

Substitute Teachers, Cushman Scott Children's Center. In our toddler/preschool classrooms. $7/hour Contact Ellen Edge at 549-1167 or e-mail ellen@cushmanscott.org. We are an equal-opportunity employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Bilingual Tutors/Translators for part-time, paid assistance during the school day to students speaking Portuguese, Japanese, Polish, Norwegian, orTibetan. Call ESL Office at Amherst Public Schools 413-549-9857 An Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

Attention work from home $1200-$5000 per month. 800-953-7104

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.FluidVisions.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Montreal Weekend Specials From $89 Includes round trip motorcoach from Boston/Springfield or Hartford. 3days 2nights Hotel Downtown Montreal. 1 Breakfast 1 Dinner free admission to Club Dome
Nov. 2-4 $89
Nov. 9-11 $99
Nov. 16-18 $99
Nov. 23-25 $99
Nov. 30-Dec. 2 $99
Dec. 30-Jan 1 $109-$119
Contact Global Tours: 533 Main Street, Melrose, MA 02176 781-665-4100

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are still booking for fall semester. Call 537-8527

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Computer Work Station 3 pieces wood. Good condition $50. Electric clothes dryer. Runs fine. $50. 587-9410

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warantee 413-584-8857

African Drums: Djembes, Drum repair, Didjeridoos. 413-529-2215 Oneworld

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Dijata Bumpus. In Amherst Call 413-731-1450.

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share room. Town Houses in Amherst. Lease starting Jan 1. 413-549-8162

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

#1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreak direct.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

00	Bulletin Board
01	CBS 3 Springfield
02	CBS 3 Boston
03	ABC 40 Springfield
04	NBC 5 Springfield
05	HSCN Movie Channel
06	CBS 58 Hartford
07	ABC 22 Hartford
08	NBC 30 Springfield
09	International Channel
10	UMASS Academic Channel 1
11	WB 59 New Haven
12	ESPN
13	ESPN2
14	CNBC TV (Business Channel)
15	Weather Channel
16	Travel & Travel
17	C-Span
18	CNN
19	CNN Headline News
20	Lifetime
21	USA
22	TBS
23	TNT
24	ESPN
25	Sci-Fi
26	Discovery
27	Nickelodeon
28	Cartoon Network
29	Sneak at Nite
30	TV Land
31	Comedy Central
32	BET
33	Univision
34	Bloomberg Financial Network
35	College TV Network
36	MTV
37	MTV2
38	VH1
39	The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 23, 2001

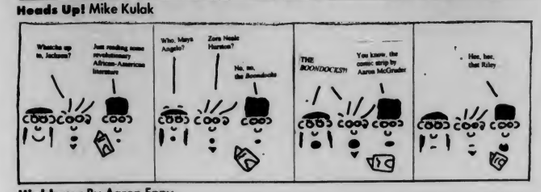
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	9	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Nova "Secrets of the Mind" ⧖		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N) ⧖		Positivly Conn.	Bargain Hunt
WFSB	3	3 News ⧖	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Mixed Messages" (N) ⧖		Guardian "Lolita?" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Look Closer" ⧖		News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WBZ	4	4 News ⧖	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Mixed Messages" (N) ⧖		Guardian "Lolita?" (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Look Closer" ⧖		News ⧖	Late Show ⧖
WCVB	5	5 News ⧖	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ⧖	Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City ⧖	Spin City ⧖	Philly "Philly Folly" (In Stereo)		News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WLVI	6	Nanny ⧖	Just Shoot Me	Friends ⧖	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo) ⧖		Smallville "Metamorphis" (N) ⧖		News ⧖		Friends ⧖	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra ⧖	Emeril (N) ⧖	Three Sisters	Frasier ⧖	Scrubs (N) ⧖	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends ⧖	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo) ⧖		Smallville "Metamorphis" (N) ⧖		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	9	16 News	NBC News	Extra ⧖	Hollywood	Emeril (N) ⧖	Three Sisters	Frasier ⧖	Scrubs (N) ⧖	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons ⧖	Friends ⧖	Seinfeld ⧖	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: NLCS Game 6 – Diamondbacks or Cardinals vs. Braves						News ⧖	Raymond
WWLP	22	22 News ⧖	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	Emeril (N) ⧖	Three Sisters	Frasier ⧖	Scrubs (N) ⧖	Dateline (In Stereo) ⧖		News ⧖	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ⧖		Nova "Secrets of the Mind" ⧖		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N) ⧖		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ⧖
WGGB	40	28 News ⧖	ABC News	Seinfeld ⧖	Frasier ⧖	Dharma-Greg	Dharma-Greg	Spin City ⧖	Spin City ⧖	Philly "Philly Folly" (In Stereo)		News ⧖	Nightline ⧖
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ⧖	News	Frasier ⧖		Buffy the Vampire Slayer ⧖		Roswell "Significant Others" ⧖		9th Wheel ⧖	Shipmates ⧖
WTBS	72		Roseanne ⧖	Roseanne ⧖	Fresh Prince	Friends ⧖		★★½ "Money Talks" (1997, Comedy) Chris Tucker, Charlie Sheen.		"Acceptable Risk" (2001, Drama)		James Bullard, Chad Bruce.
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio ⧖	Law & Order ⧖			Biography: Edward & Sophie		"Victoria & Albert" (2001, Drama) Victoria Hamilton, ⧖		Law & Order "Denial" ⧖
CNN	20	23 Moneyline (N) ⧖			Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire ⧖		The Point (N) ⧖		Larry King Live ⧖		CNN Special Report ⧖	Greenfield	Moneyline ⧖
COM	53	38 Saturday Night Live ⧖			Daily Show ⧖	Stein's Money		★★★ "Blazing Saddles" (1974, Comedy) Cleavon Little,				Bettleboits ⧖	Bettleboits ⧖	Daily Show ⧖	Sat. Night Live
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Humpback		Wild Discovery	Alaskan Wild		New Detectives "Cockblocked"		New Detectives		FBI Files		Justice Files "Doing Time"
ESPN	21		Sportscenter ⧖			NFL Films Presents (N)		PBA Bowling: Greater Detroit Open. (Live)				Wonderful World of Golf (N)		Sportscenter ⧖
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"In the Shadow of Evil" (1995, Suspense) (Nell Williams) ⧖		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	27		Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Criminal	Music Videos		Undugged	Primetime Vid	Real World ⧖	Real World ⧖	Real World ⧖	Becoming (N)	Dismissed	Jammed With
NICK	43		Oddsparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats ⧖		Spongeb.	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers ⧖	Cheers ⧖	Family Ties ⧖	Family Ties ⧖
SCIFI	63		Star Trek "All Our Yesterdays"		Babylon 5 "Hunter, Prey" ⧖			Parscape (In Stereo) ⧖		Outer Limits "Abdadon" ⧖		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	62	26 Without Warn.	Without Warn.	Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Caught in the Act				Unmasked: Exposing Secrets		Secrets of Stonehenge		Caught in the Act
TNT	42		NYPD Blue "The Irvin Files" ⧖		Pretender "Ranger Jarod" ⧖			Law & Order "Loco Parentis" ⧖		Law & Order (In Stereo) ⧖		Charmed "Size Matters" ⧖		★★ "Stepmom" (1998) ⧖
USA	30		Walker, Texas Ranger ⧖		JAG "Silent Service" (In Stereo)			Nash Bridges "Hit and Run" ⧖		★★½ "The Faculty" (1998, Horror) Jordana Brewster, ⧖		Martin ⧖	Martin ⧖
HBO	33		($:00)		★★½ "The Muse" (1999, Comedy) Albert Brooks. PG-13 ⧖							★★★ "The Legend of Bagger Vance" (2000) Will Smith. PG-13 ⧖		From Hell-Lk	Band of Brothers (In Stereo) ⧖
MAX	45		★★★ "What's Love Got to Do With It" (1993) Angela Bassett. R ⧖									★★★ "Lethal Weapon" (1987, Drama) Mel Gibson. "R" ⧖
SHOW	46		★★ "Better Off Dead" (1985, Comedy) John Cusack. "PG"					★★★ "Return to Me" (2000, Romance) David Duchovny. "PG" ⧖				Resurrection Blvd. (TV) (N)		Queer as Folk (ITV) (In Stereo)

Got Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Mr. Gnu By Travis Dandro



Got Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Skybox By Blake

Heads Up! Mike Kulak

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

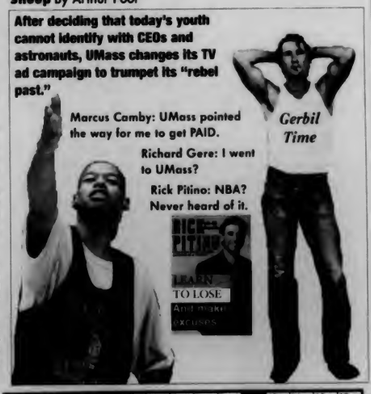
Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"Pimps is such an ugly word. We can call ourselves 'love brokers.'."

–Night Shift

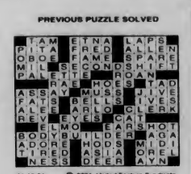


Amherst Weather

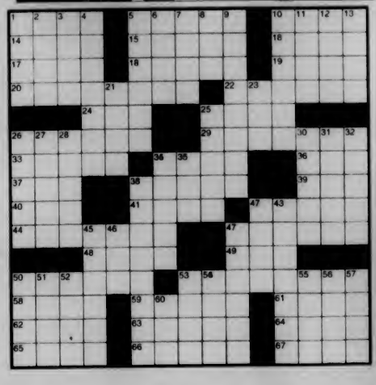
Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 63 LOW: 53	HIGH: 71 LOW: 50	HIGH: 70 LOW: 40

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may be disappointed that what you get today isn't what you really wanted, but after a while you'll be completely satisfied. A Zeppelin is way more chicken than anyone can handle.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You'll get the sense that something is just around the corner today that can prove quite beneficial to you in the long run. Take your friends advice when she tells you that you should lay off the Goldschlager.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – If it's adventure you seek, you may have it – but first you must make one or two correct choices that allow you to open the right doors. But beware, there might be a guy in a giant chicken suit behind door number one.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Keep everything in its place today, and do everything in its time. Order and symmetry are essential to your own spiritual health. Maybe it's time to keep the flask at home.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Seek the simplest route to your chosen destination today. There is absolutely no reason why you must go the long way at this time. Power hour + cake = bad news.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Though you are working with someone compatible, tension and conflict may simply be unavoidable today. It can be resolved, however, with ease. Just lay off the sauce.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Underlying tension must not be allowed to stand in your way today. Get it out in the open and that difficult issue is sure to evaporate.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – It's no good trying to make that person jealous; it's only likely to drive him or her further away. Rather, talk openly about what you want!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – It's time for those rockets and roman-candles once again – but take care that you don't burn yourself out prematurely today. You're a Cancer, that sucks.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Now is not the time to ignore even the subtlest rhythm changes. You'll discover that a growing problem makes itself known in small ways.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Someone may be trying to thwart your efforts, but you can maneuver with cleverness and subtlety and avoid any attempts at a real takeover.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care that you're not asking too much of too few people today. Keep your expectations within the realm of the possible, and consider resources.



Sheep By Arthur Poor



ACROSS
1 Chatters
5 Kit material
10 Superman's alias
14 Help a crook
15 "Hi!"
16 Malville title
17 Folk teachings
18 Cameo shapes
19 Becomes faint
20 Potatoes —
22 Marriott offerings
24 Kind of trip
25 Leaning Tower site
26 Lowest scores
29 Plumbing problem
33 Ouzo flavor
34 Rain hard
36 Sink down
37 "— My Party"
38 Football plays
39 Type of nose
40 Female ruff
41 Choir voice
42 Indian corn
44 Quick trips
47 Did the twist
48 Rod
49 Appropriate
50 Oddball
53 Cosmetic
58 Actor Ray
59 Sing like Bing
61 Sedgwick or Brickell
62 Claim on property
63 Gold measure
64 — out: distribute
65 Minus
66 Outbuildings
67 Ginger cookie

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-15-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Dressy event
2 "— Ben Adhem"
3 Freighter hazard
4 Sound systems
5 Album features
6 Strauss of jeans
7 Economist Greenspan
8 Sick
9 CIA files
10 Alaskan bear
11 Give off (heat)
12 Iditarod terminus
13 Pitch
21 Screenwriter James
23 "Born in the —"
25 Cartoon dog
26 1974 fight site
27 Use the door
29 Stair part
30 Tomato jelly
31 Surgical dressing
32 — on: incited
34 Throb
35 Thunder Bay's prov.
38 Security items
42 Travel guides
43 National songs
45 Chefs' attire
46 Doze off
47 Cows
50 Room part
51 Author Wiesel
52 Dangerous March date
53 Dull one
54 Fill the camera
55 Shangri-la
56 Beatles' meter maid
57 Ooze
60 Sidelines cry

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-3626 for more information.

LUNCH

Grecian Pocket Sandwich

Cajun Lightning Chicken

Vegetable Egg Rolls (vegetarian)

Sesame Noodles with Pea Pods (vegan)

DINNER

Honey Garlic Roast Pork

Tomato Basil Cod

General Tso Chicken

Black Bean Tofu Steak (vegan) (W basics)

Jamacian 3-Beans (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam White
Photo Technician — Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor — Jim Pignatiello
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak
Production Staff — Jess May, Cara Horowitz

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Freshman Stephanie Santos leads the UMass women's soccer team in goals (7) and points (18).

Philadelphia freedom for freshmen

Rookies net every goal in weekend

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – Usually when freshmen arrive on a team with tradition and a storied past it takes them at least a year to adjust to the college game, and then another before they really start to leave their mark on the team. That is the norm, but this year's Massachusetts women's soccer team is anything but normal.

UMass	2
Temple	0
UMass	1
St. Joe's	0

Five newcomers have come in and helped elevate the Minutewomen to the top of the Atlantic 10 and within shouting distance of their first conference title since 1997.

The Minutewomen went on the road this weekend and came home with a pair of shutout conference victories, an exhausting 1-0 double overtime triumph over St. Joseph's and a 2-0 win at Temple. As solid as the UMass defense was in recording its fourth and fifth consecutive clean sheets, the real story was the play of the Minutewomen freshmen who tallied all three of the team's goals on the weekend.

Stephanie Santos, Carly Turman and Erica Wideberg all scored for UMass (10-2, 7-0 A-10) and have been quick to make the jump from high school soccer. They are also quick to praise their fellow classmates.

"Steph has been doing amazing this season, Carly's been doing really well and Bri [Weymouth] has been awesome on defense," Wideberg said. "It shows the strength of our class and how much we contribute to the team."

The Minutewomen pulled out a dramatic 1-0 double overtime victory over St. Joe's in their first game of the weekend. Santos beat Christy Ganc in the Hawks goal for her seventh goal of the season in the 108th minute. Junior Alexi Rudd hit a through ball that found the streaking Wideberg who proceeded to cut the ball back and play it across the top of the box to Santos, who jinxed past one defender before netting the winner.

UMass had the better of the chances on the evening and were unlucky not to have put at least one past Ganc in regulation. In the 28th minute sophomore Michelle Luttati hit a long square ball to Rudd who unleashed a vicious 35-yard drive that beat Ganc, but hit the underside of the cross bar and was cleared by the Hawk defense. Rudd was unlucky once again in the 73rd when midfielder Martha Conover played her a short free kick and she hit a swerving right-footed shot from 25 yards that Ganc flung herself at and was able to deflect away for a corner.

Despite Rudd's efforts and those of countless others on both sides, the match remained deadlocked for 90 minutes of regulation and the first 15-minute overtime period. UMass coach Jim Rudy knew that if his team was going to pick up its fifth straight win, he would need to change things up and take a few chances. He decided to go with three up front as opposed to the traditional two, and the chance paid off, with the three forwards linking up to create the winner.

"We were dominating but we weren't getting in and I wanted to win, I didn't want to play for a tie," Rudy said. "I felt we needed an extra forward up there to apply some more pressure so we sent on Alexi [Rudd,] and it worked.

Prior to Santos' winner, the Minutewomen had a pair of great chances in the opening minutes of the second overtime. Just two minutes in, senior Brooke Bartlett was left open inside the box but her shot caromed of the underside of the crossbar and bounced away from danger. Just a minute later Wideberg hit a speculative chip from about 40 yards out that nearly caught Ganc napping, but she was able to scramble back and palm the ball over the bar for her ninth and final save of the match.

Two days later, the tired Minutewomen were back in action as they headed across

Turn to SOCCER, page 7

Puck results mixed in winless weekend

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. – Sometimes things just aren't as they seem.

The Massachusetts hockey team played a dismal game on Friday night, as it fell to Colorado College in a lackluster game 3-0. The Minutemen then improved their play significantly on Saturday, only to fall to the No. 7 Tigers 12-2 in a lopsided 7-1 score.

Colorado Coll.	3	7
UMass	0	1

On the weekend, the Maroon and White special teams were a mixed bag. The penalty kill was nowhere near as bad as it looked on paper, as it allowed four power play goals but fell victim to some bad breaks and some strong effort from its opponent.

"On Friday, the one thing that was a real plus was that we completely shut them down on the power play," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "We bothered them with a press, we angled well, and we didn't give them good opportunities. We tied their power play and completely neutralized it. Saturday, if we had been able to give the same effort, the score would have been very different."

The power play struggled as a whole, going 0-for-6 for the weekend and producing a minimal number of chances.

"On the first night, we were so exhausted from playing in our end that we were just too fatigued with our personnel to be able to execute," Cahoon said. "Saturday, on a couple of the power plays, we moved the puck really well and had couple of chances, but it wasn't executed to the degree we needed to."

Saturday's contest was a vicious one for the Minutemen, as they were called for 12 penalties for 51 minutes, including a five minute major and a game misconduct, assessed to sophomore Mike Warner for hitting from behind, as well as two 10-minute misconducts which were given to juniors Tim Turner and Jimmy Callahan.

"There's no room for that. It's a matter of frustration, discipline and maturity," Cahoon said. "Those are three areas that have to be understood in the growth and development of the program."

The Tigers jumped on freshman goaltender Tim Warner early, with Alex Kim netting a pair of goals on the man advantage. The first came at the 3:33 mark of the first, when a Mark Cullen shot found its way through a screen and Kim slapped home the rebound. The second occurred slightly more than 11 minutes later when Kim teed up a one-timer off a shifts pass from defenseman Tom Pressley.

Colorado College added to its lead in

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

Freshman Matt Walsh scored UMass' only goal in two losses to then No. 7 Colorado College.

Senior Evan Lutz and the UMass men's water polo team are 9-1 in CWPA league play.

The maroon monsoon

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The No. 14 Massachusetts men's water polo team flexed some offensive muscle this weekend, amassing 68 goals in four games against league opponents. Contributions came from the whole roster, but senior Greg Trayer led the team with five goals and five assists.

UMass	19
USMMA	4
UMass	19
Conn. College	1
UMass	12
St. Francis	11
UMass	18
Fordham	2

The Maroon and White easily defeated The United States Merchant Marine Academy, 19-4, and then proceeded to beat Connecticut College by a count of 19-1. The Minutemen had a slight hiccup against St. Francis, a team that they had been preparing for the past two weeks. But in an exciting, come-from-behind effort, UMass scored four goals in the fourth quarter to edge the Terriers, 12-11.

In the final match of the weekend set, the Maroon and White overpowered Fordham, 18-2.

The Minutemen now stand atop the Northern Division of the Collegiate Water Polo Association with a record of 9-1 (20-5 overall). UMass shares the No. 1 spot with Queens College, who the Minutemen lost to 6-5, in their only meeting of the season. Because of that loss, UMass remains behind the Gaels, due to the head-to-head tiebreaker rule employed by the CWPA.

UMass had no problems in its first two matches this past weekend.

The [Connecticut College and USMMA] games went according to plan," coach Russ Yarworth said. "The sign of a good team is when it wins the games it's supposed to win."

The Minutemen were led in the match against USMMA by senior Mike Foley (five goals), junior Justin Houck (four goals), and senior Evan Lutz and junior Ricardo Puig (three goals each).

Against Connecticut College, sophomore Dave Liebert and freshman Nick Koenemann shared the spotlight with four goals each, Junior Marcus Meyer and freshman Adam Zobler also contributed three goals apiece.

But the Minutemen found difficulty when they faced the Terriers of Saint Francis.

"We just weren't doing the right things, but the offense was a lot better," Yarworth said. "We were quite erratic."

The Minutemen trailed for the majority of the game, but scored four goals in rapid fashion to take a late lead. Trayer was the star of the game, with four goals, including the clinching tally.

"I read them the riot act [after the third quarter]," Yarworth said. "And then we came out and played our best quarter of water polo this year."

Senior Adam Foley netted three goals in the win, and seniors Carlos Ramos and Lutz each added a goal.

"The offense was there, and the defense wasn't," Yarworth said.

This was certainly a change for the Minutemen, who have been consistently solid on defense throughout the season. Earlier in the year, Yarworth mentioned that his team hadn't "been able to put the rock in the net." But that changed with this weekend's outburst, which will prove to be an important step toward the postseason for an offense that has been quiet at best against tough opponents.

"[St. Francis] was one we had to win, and we found a way to do it," Yarworth said.

UMass continued its winning ways into the afternoon battle with Fordham. Yarworth was able to give a break to the starters and get some of the bench players, who Yarworth affectionately refers to as "The Killer B's," involved.

"They were excited to be in and moving around in the water," Yarworth said. "I was yelling at them, and they were having a good time."

The goaltending duties in that game were split between junior Rafael Santana (six saves), and sophomore Rodrigo Gonzalez (four saves).

Along with Trayer and senior Adam Moore, J.R. VanderWall will be one of the key losses next year for the Maroon and White, and the goaltender position will be a focal point for Yarworth in the offseason With seven graduating seniors, UMass will need to see some production from the younger players next year.

Aside from the playoff ramifications of this weekend, Massachusetts also achieved a milestone that is impressive in any sport. With the Fordham victory, UMass accomplished its tenth consecutive 20-win season. This is a testament both to Yarworth, who has coached the team since its inception in 1987, and the skill of a squad that will be a contender in this year's Eastern Championship.

The Minutemen, who have been the ultimate road warriors this year, will play their second and final home match of the regular season tomorrow night at 7:00 PM. They will face the Harvard Crimson at the Amherst College pool in their final tune-up before the playoffs, which begin with the Eastern Conference Athletic Championships at the end of the month.

This guy is kinda like Dave Matthews. Intrigued? Turn to Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The No. 14 men's water polo team will host their final home game of the year today. Check that and the rest of the fun stuff out in today's Sports.

ARTS p. 5 SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 35 www.dailycollegian.com Wednesday, October 24, 2001

COURTESY OF SEA 2001

5-College student helps out in cleaning upthe South Hadley Beachgrounds.

Anthrax scare hits close to home

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

A Hazardous Materials Response Team responded to a report of a white powders substance on a returned DVD at Blockbuster Video in Hadley, Mass.

Hadley Police received the report at 12:19 p.m. Chief Dennis Hukowicz of the Hadley Police Department was on the scene, but declined to comment. Engine Two of the Hadley Fire Department responded, but referred all questions to the Department of Fire Services.

The District Four HazMat team was dispatched at 12:36 p.m. to 442 Russell St store. The area immediately in front of the store was cordoned off and the store was evacuated. Two team members, in protective suits, went into the store and took out the DVD and other movies that came in contact with the powder. The areas were then cleaned with a bleach and water solution.

"These guys received a DVD that had a white powder on it," Wayne LeMay, the team leader, said. "We suited up and went in, took the DVD in question. It could be anything."

According to LeMay, the team was in the store for 20 minutes.

If the substance does prove to be anthrax, the bleach and water solution used to clean the area would destroy the bacteria, LeMas said.

"It'll kill it," LeMay said. "These are the guidelines the state's Health Department have laid out."

Reports of suspected anthrax have been on the rise since cases were confirmed in Washington DC and New York.

"There's been no confirmed cases in Massachusetts, at least not to my knowledge," LeMay said. "We respond to four to nine or 10 of these kinds of calls every day. This is the first in this area."

The tapes and discs seized will be sent to a state lab, where they will be tested. The tests take 72 hours.

"These all potentially came in contact with the substance," a team member said as he placed an orange "biohazard" sticker on a large bag of videos. "They'll be held in a secure area until the results of the test, and then returned."

"We're trying to get a hold of the person who rented the movie from the computer," LeMay said. "They could end this all right now."

But right now, LeMay said, the Department of Health is taking precautionary measures.

"This is just a precaution," LeMay said. "It could be anything."

"I think its probably a joke, especially in this area," Angela, an employee at neighboring Radio Shack. "Blockbuster just isn't important enough."

Stop & Shop, which also neighbors Blockbuster, was told that there was nothing to worry about.

"They [the firefighters] didn't tell us anything," Bob Jones, a manager, said. "They said it wasn't a problem."

Employees at Blockbuster Video declined to comment.

Randy Hargrove, a Blockbuster spokesman, said that the Dallas, Texas based company is taking this very seriously.

"At this point the tape is being cleaned and the store has been cleared to open by the local authorities," Hargrove said. "We consider this a very serious matter.

"If someone is tampering with videos it's a senseless act. We can track who rented our video," Hargrove added. "If we find we've been the victim of a hoax, we will resort to legal action to protect ourselves. We are going to work with the authorities."

This is not the first time a suspicious white powder has appeared at a Blockbuster. So far, all have tested negative for anthrax.

"There have been a few incidents," Hargrove said. "But it's not widespread."

5-College students join CT River clean-up effort

By Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students joined others across four states in the fifth annual Connecticut River Source to Sea Cleanup this October.

Thirty-five UMass students joined 21other volunteers from Mount Holyoke College, Amherst College, Holyoke Community College, and Westover Job Corps Center to clean up a site in South Hadley. The 56 volunteers picked up at least one ton of trash in under two hours in an estimated 50 trash bags.

The entire project consisted of several hundred volunteers working in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. It spanned all 410 miles of the Connecticut River from the Canadian border to the sea at Long Island Sound.

While the total number of participants has yet to be tabulated, last year's cleanup drew 675 volunteers. Organizers expect to count at least as many this year.

Most of the UMass and Mount Holyoke students involved came from the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG). Wilhelmina Tsang, an organizer with Community Water Watch, the group responsible for this particular South Hadley site, said, "The cleanup is a great was for community members and student to come together and highlight the importance of keeping out waterways clean. It shows how connected we are by water, since the event spans four different states." She also commented on the UMass participation. "Thirty-five is a really good number," she said. "In the future it could be possible to do more than one site."

Tsang also mentioned that over 15 agencies, businesses, and organizations provided support. For example, Pizza Palace of Holyoke and Dunkin Donuts gave food and coffee, the South Hadley Conservation commission gave site permission for the cleanup, and the UMass and Amherst College physical plants provided equipment.

Tsang went on to say that Hampshire College had their own site, and Smith and Greenfield Community College worked in collaboration with the Deerfield Watershed Council.

Since the project first started 5 years ago, great progress has been seen. The Connecticut River Watershed Council states on their website that, "Following passage of the Federal Clean Water Act in 1972, communities and businesses stopped using the River as a dump. Through the hard work of the Connecticut River Watershed Council and others, water quality in the River and its tributaries is today dramatically improved. Salmon and shad are returning, and community riverfronts are being revitalized."

From Mount Holyoke College, sophomore Margaret Byrne, campaign coordinator for water watch group with MASSPIRG, helped to organize the event. She elaborated

Turn to RIVER, page 3

Government jeopardizes America's civil liberties

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

"Due to very explicit and offensive content about the New York and Washington terrorist attacks, this site has been closed down permanently by the hosting company. Sincerely, adult-host.nl"

The website referred to above was called "American Terrorism," and it dealt with the pursuit of information regarding U.S. policies abroad. It was one of many voices, online, in print, and voiced aloud, that was silenced in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks. It would appear that though American life has, for the most part, returned to a semblance of the normal routine, some aspects of our national landscape have been permanently altered. And that doesn't include just the Twin Towers.

As early as Sept. 13, according to Lycos-sponsored news source Wired News, Congress was considering banning encryption and allowing almost unlimited surveillance on the Internet. By Sept. 17, The New York Times was reporting that, "for Internet service companies, the aftermath...meant new scrutiny of the material that their online users can view." Websites that were taken down included both pro-terrorism and Islam-backlash-themed sites, the Times said.

Also on Sept. 17, the Times began reporting on extensive legal loopholes undertaken to detain and interrogate suspects in the Sept. 11 incidents.

According to Arthur C. Helton, an immigration expert quoted in the Times article, "all these people are being held on immigration violations, because the discretion enjoyed by immigration officials is almost complete."

Since then, what many see as the curtailing of civil liberties within the country in response to the terrorism has continued, on the fronts of both speech and prisoners' rights. And, according to media sources, the trend has grown more aggressive and alarming. Talk show host Bill Maher faced the withdrawal of advertisers and was threatened with the cancellation of his show, "Politically Incorrect with Bill Maher," after a remark he made on Sept. 11 about the suicide bombers that was seen by many as supportive of them.

Also, according to news pundit John Schwartz, the Federal Trade Commission had, "abandoned efforts, begun during the Clinton administration, to get new laws to enhance online consumer privacy and will concentrate its efforts instead on enforcing existing laws," as of late September.

Turn to CIVIL, page 3

COURTESY JOHN CAGGO

William Mann, Author of Behind the Screen, will be speaking at Food for Thought books on Thursday.

Gay and lesbian issues topic of reading series

Food for Thought Books will continue its "Reading Series" this week with two more lectures. The talks this week will focus on gay and lesbian issues.

Author Bill Storandt will give a reading from his recent book, Outbound: Finding a Man, Sailing an Ocean, on Wednesday, Oct. 24, at 7p.m.

The book is an autobiographical work that weaves a transatlantic sailing voyage, issues of gay identity, and the search for a long-term loving relationship together. According to the Food For Thought press release, Storandt undertook these journeys to find meaning in life after growing tired of leading a "listing, drifting life...in the 1970's and 80's as he struggled to make a livelihood as a percussionist while living in a handmade geodesic dome in Vermont."

According to Booklist, "Storandt excels at both writing and sailing, and the story of his courageous voyage across the Atlantic is artfully interspersed with that of his courageous coming to terms with his sexuality...one needn't be a sailor or gay to understand and enjoy Storandt's well-told tale of adventure on the high seas of water, self-discovery, and love."

Bill Mann will read from his recent book, Behind the Screen: How Gays and Lesbians Shaped Hollywood 1910-1969 on Thursday, Oct. 25, at 7 p.m. According to a Food For Thought press release, "Mann offers the first serious, thoughtful, non-sensational look at gay Hollywood, revealing just where and how three generations of gay film artists shaped American Cinema."

According to an Mann in an article published in Brill's Content magazine in April, "Too often, when the words gay and Hollywood have been paired, the traditional association has been scandal...reaching a more serious and thoughtful examination of the gay experience in American cinema therefore necessitated looking beyond traditional published sources."

"My intent was...to consider the gay experience as other populations have in American film history have been considered...[several books] have documented the experiences and contributions of women to American film...I determined that finally the same would be done for gay men and lesbians."

The talk will be aimed toward dispelling sensationalistic myths about gays and lesbians in early American film. Food For Thought press releases stated. "For every Rock Hudson or Tony Perkins forced to pretend to be straight, there were dozens of behind the scenes writers, designers and directors creating the magic for America's Dream Factory—and doing so openly and without charade."

The series is part of a regular program of readings and lectures sponsored and hosted by Food For Thought. The GLBT-themed talks at the store also coincide with the first installments of the UMass GLBT lecture series on campus.

On the Net: Food for Thought Books www.foodforthoughtbooks.com
The Stonewall Center http://www.umass.edu/stonewall.

Elizabeth Pariseau

UMass hosts conference on contaminated soils

By Emily Quirk
Collegian Correspondent

Informational booths displaying forensic and geochemistry equipment filled the lower level of the University of Massachusetts Campus Center yesterday, as the seventeenth Annual International Conference on Contaminated Soils, Sediments and Water kicked off its weeklong event.

The conference, presented by the Northeastern Regional Environmental Public Health Center, consisted of municipal and state officials whose responsibilities are to implement programs for contaminated soil cleanup. Also in attendance were several engineering and analyzing environmental service companies from Canada, the United Kingdom, Kuwait, Australia, as well as Mexico and the United States. The companies predominantly find, analyze, and remove toxic waste from spills, leaks in corroded pipes, and waste run-offs found in streams and large ports.

The conference and workshops will continue until Oct. 25, exhibiting information regarding environmental forensics, oxygenates, water quality and advances in bioremediation.

For the past two years companies such as Earthline Technologies, Polaroid Biotechnologies, and Foster Wheeler, have come to UMass to discuss innovative and more efficient ways to produce site, environmental fate, and human risk assessments, while presenting different methods of soil remediation and regulation.

Environmental Business Solution International (EBSI) uses a remediation process called oxidative chemistry, where organic chemicals are sent down into the ground and flushed through underground transits. These chemicals, mainly hydrogen peroxide, potassium permanganate and sodium permanganate, attack toxicits and pull the dangerous compounds away from each other, making them non-hazardous.

Turn to CONFERENCE, page 3

SCOTT KUPINSKA/COLLEGIAN

Pumpkins anyone?
The Umass Horticulture Club was out selling their seasonal wares.

Cultural Events Calendar

FILMS

SMITH – The films Framing an Execution: The Media and Mumia Abu-Jamal, and Money for Nothing: Behind the Business of Pop Music, will be shown at Smith College's Stoddard Auditorium on Wednesday, Oct. 24 from 7:00 – 10:00 p.m. A question and answer session with the filmmakers will follow the broadcast. This event is free.

UMASS – The film Time of the Gypsies will be shown in Room 231 of Herter Hall on Thursday, Oct. 25 at 7:30 p.m. A lecture by Ellen Kaplan, professor of Theater at Smith, will also be conducted. This event is free.

SMITH – Spike Lee's film Bamboozled will be shown at Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium on Sunday, Oct. 28 at 7:00 p.m. This event is free. The film will also be shown at Amherst College's Stoddard Auditorium at 9:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 30.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Moshen Makhmalbaf's film, The Cyclist, will be shown in Room 101 of Mount Holyoke's Dwight Hall on Sunday, Oct. 28 at 7:30 p.m. The film chronicles the plight of an Afghan refugee who enters a bicycle race to pay for his wife's medical bills.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Miguel Picazo's film Extramuros will be shown in Room 101 of Mount Holyoke's Dwight Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 30, at 7:00 p.m. This event, part of the Spanish Film Series, is free.

PERFORMANCES

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Jabali Afrika, a six-man African song and dance group, will perform at Mount Holyoke's Blanchard Campus Center on Friday, Oct. 26 at 9:30 p.m. This event is free.

AMHERST – Voices of Africa, an all-female African-American vocal percussion performing arts ensemble, will perform at Buckley Recital Hall in Amherst College's Arms Music Center on Saturday, Oct. 27 at 8:00 p.m. This event is free.

SMITH – I Believe a jazz concert featuring jazz pianist Trudi Pitts, will be performed at Smith College's Helen Hills Chapel on Sunday, Oct. 28 at 2:00 p.m. This event, a tribute to Otelia Cromwell, Smith's first African American graduate, is free.

UMASS – "Orientalism" in German art songs from Goethe's Westoestlicher Divan", a special event featuring lectures and performances, will be held at Benzanson Recital Hall from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 29. This event is free. Call 545-4245 for tickets.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – A Japanese Tea Ceremony will be conducted by Sohsu Socho Yamashita in Washman, Eliot House, on Tuesday, Oct. 30, at 7:30 p.m. This event is free. Call 536-4364 for reservations.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Chopping, a one-woman show by Magdelena Gomez, will be performed at Theater 314 of Mount Holyoke's Mendenhall on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 7:00 p.m. This event is free.

CONFERENCES

HAMPSHIRE – A conference titled Beyond the Boundaries of the Old Geographies: Natives, Citizens, Exiles, and Cosmopolitans, will be held at Hampshire College's West Lecture Hall on Thursday, Oct. 25 and Friday, Oct. 26. The conference is free. Call Christine M. Carey at 559-5542 for more information.

MEETINGS

UMASS – Everywoman's Center Counseling Services will sponsor "Managing Anxiety", a group for women who struggle with anxiety daily. Participants will learn to reduce worry and "what if" thinking, and gain skills to manage anxiety and reduce stress. Sessions will be held Thursday evenings, from 5:00 to 6:30 p.m. The first session will be held on Thursday, Oct. 25. Please call 577-0077 in advance if you wish to attend.

LECTURES/DISCUSSIONS

HAMPSHIRE – Hampshire Anthropology Professor Leonard B. Glick will deliver a lecture, "Revealing the Concealed: Male Infant Circumcision in America" in the East Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Oct. 24.

AMHERST – Professor Harry Harootunian, Director of the East Asian Studies Program at New York University, will deliver a lecture, "Constituent Ambiguities': The Persistence of Modernism and Fascism in Japan's Modern History", in Amherst College's Babbott Room on Wednesday, Oct. 24 at 4:30 p.m. Babbott Room is located in the Octagon.

UMASS – The ALANA Lecture Series will present an Anti-Columbus Day celebration, featuring a lecture from Decajeweiah "Splitting the Sky" John Hill about indigenous sovereignty and awareness, at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge, on Wednesday, Oct. 24.

SMITH – Dr. Abdullahi Ahmed An-Na'im, Charles Howard Candler Professor of Law at Emory University Law School, will deliver a lecture, "The Atrocities of September 11th in Islamic and Global Perspective", in Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium on Wednesday, Oct. 24 at 7:30 p.m. This event is part of the Kahn Liberal Arts Institute's Religious Tolerance and Intolerance in Ancient and Modern Worlds' project.

UMASS – Lisa Walker, Professor of English and Women's Studies at the University of Southern Maine, will deliver a lecture, "Lesbian Pulp in Black and White" on Thursday, Oct. 25 at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center Room 911-912. This event is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series.

HAMPSHIRE – Artist Sheila Pinkel will conduct a gallery talk about her work, "Among in Transition", at Hampshire College's Photolography Gallery on Thursday, Oct. 25 at 7:30 p.m. A reception will follow. This event is free.

SMITH – A "power panel", titled, "The Importance of Financial Education for Women", will be conducted at Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium from 4:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 26. Among the panelists will be Smith alumnus Gloria Steinem.

AMHERST – Georgianna Ziegler of the Folger Shakespeare Library will speak on "Sweet Rose of May: Ophelia through Victorian Eyes" at Stirn Auditorium in Amherst College's Mead Art Museum on Friday, Oct. 26 at 4:30 p.m. A reception will follow.

AMHERST – Novelist James Earl Hardy will read from his book, The Day Eazy-E Died, at Food For Thought Books on Friday, Oct. 26 at 7:00 p.m. Food For Thought is located at 106 North Pleasant Street.

AMHERST –Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham of Harvard University and W. Fitzhugh Brundage of the University of Florida will review and comment on David W. Blight's book Race and Reunion: The Civil War in American History, in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Saturday, Oct. 27 at 9:30 a.m. This event is part of the conference "Race, Religion and Nationalism: Three Books".

AMHERST – Nancy Ruttenburg of New York University and Valerie Smith of Princeton University will review and comment on Dale E. Peterson's book Up From Bondage: The Literatures of Russian and African American Soul, in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Saturday, Oct. 27 at 1:30 p.m. This event is part of the conference "Race, Religion and Nationalism: Three Books".

AMHERST – Mount Holyoke Professor Marion Katz will deliver a lecture, "Law of the Heart: The Interiorization of the Shari'a in Islamic Legal Theory", in Amherst College's Babbott Room at 4:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 29. The Babbott Room is located in the Octagon.

SMITH – Smith Professor John Davis will deliver a lecture, "Catholic Envy: The Visual Culture of Protestant Desire", in Room 201 of Seelye Hall on Monday, Oct. 29 at 4:30 p.m.

AMHERST – Joyce Horman will deliver a lecture, "The Pinochet Trial in Chile", in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall at 6:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 29. This event is part of Amherst's lecture series on globalization pressures on Latin America.

SMITH – Dr. William L. Brooks, Chief of Office of Translation and Media Analysis in the political section of the American Embassy in Tokyo, will deliver a lecture, "Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi's Year of Living Dangerously: Japan Confronts its Past, Present and Future", in Room 301 of Seelye Hall on Monday, Oct. 29 at 7:00 p.m.

SMITH – "The Ethics of Transracial Adoption", a panel discussion, will be held at Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium on Monday, Oct. 29 at 7:00 p.m.

SPRINGFIELD – Kim Gandy, President of the National Organization for Women, will deliver a lecture, "Women and Oppression: Contemporary Challenges", in Goldstein Auditorium of the Springfield Jewish Community Center at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 29. The Center is located at 1160 Dickinson Street.

SMITH – UMass Communications Professor Sut Jhally will deliver a lecture, "Why America Can't Think Straight about Race", in Smith College's Neilson Library Browsing Room on Tuesday, Oct. 30, at 7:00 p.m.

AMHERST – Chinese writer Wang Meng will deliver a lecture, "Dilemmas of Intellectuals in China", in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Oct. 30, at 4:15 p.m.

DANCES

UMASS – An evening of traditional and modern Israeli dancing will be hosted by Hillel House at 7:30 p.m. on Oct. 24. This event is free, and experience is not required. Instruction will be included.

UMASS – SASA DHAMAKA '01, a night of cultural dance, will be held on Friday, Oct. 26 from 8:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Tickets are $6 at the door, but can be bought in advance for $5 from the SASA Table in the Campus Center. Tickets are limited. This event is sponsored by SASA and ISA.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the five-weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew T. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hummel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibura Gitczyk-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppin Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

The Ground Round of Hadley
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL
BOOMER MUGS only $2.79
Budweiser BUD LIGHT MICHELOB Light
Nightly Specials
Sun.. Mon.. Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings
-$3.00
9 TV's, Smoking Section, Monday Night Football

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MMEC Rates
(On bus route)

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

A HIGHER DEGREE of success

2001 National Negotiation Champions
Student coach Lori Bronet-Dupel with team members Richard Knoeland and Thomas Sullivan Achieve it with an outstanding legal education
Skillful negotiation can lead to success in the courtroom or boardroom. With a law degree from Western New England College School of Law, you can create success on your own terms.
Just ask our 2001 National Negotiation champions, a team of full- and part-time students that triumphed over 175 law schools to take home the title.
To learn how our practical and collaborative legal program can help you reach a higher degree of success, attend an Open House for full- and part-time students.
Saturday, November 3, 2001
1:00 to 4:15 p.m.
S. Prestley Blake Law Center
1215 Wilbraham Road
Springfield, MA
Call 800-782-6665 or 413-782-1406 to register by October 29.
www.law.wnec.edu
Western New England College SCHOOL OF LAW
Practice what we teach.

■ civil

continued from page 1

Freedom of the press has also come under scrutiny since the disasters. In an Oct. 15 editorial for The New York Times, William Safire decried the lack of information given Americans about the investigations and military operations currently under way in retaliation for the attacks.

"Are we, as a nation, doing the right thing in counterattacking in great force?" he asked. "Yes. Are we forming alliances and cutting corners that will make us proud tomorrow? Dunno."

A new law is being considered in the federal legislature, however, that has a number of civil liberties groups, including the American Civil Liberties Union, up in arms over what they see as rights violations.

According to Alfred Hermida for the VVC Online, under the proposed Antiterrorism Act of 2001, "hackers could be labeled as dangerous terrorists under new legislation." The new bill would make computer hacking a terrorist offense and expand the abilities of law enforcement to catch and punish terrorists. This would include a possible sentence of life without parole for those convicted of computer hacking, and, according to Hermida, "serious criminal threats to those who help of shelter individuals suspected of causing minimal damage to networked computers."

As of press time, the law is still pending.

Floyd Abrams, a First Amendment specialist with the Manhattan law firm of Cahill Gordon and Reindel, explained in an interview with the Times, "hard times for the First Amendment tend to come at very hard times for the country…when we feel threatened, when we feel at peril, the First Amendment of First Amendment values are sometimes subordinated to other interests."

Not everyone is comfortable with this idea. Online shock-site Rotten.com, which has faced difficulties since Sept. 11, has encouraged its readers to contact their representatives in Congress to oppose the law. In a posting on the "News and Intelligencer" area of the site, the webmasters said that, in their opinion, "when Bush said the terrorist attack was an attack on Freedom, that is exactly correct. Except that it will be the U.S. Congress who tries to take it away from us. Don't let them."

As September gave way to October, and to bombing campaigns over Afghanistan, civil liberties groups and free-speech watchdogs have said that they have seen the government grow more and more restrictive, to the point where the curtailing of liberties in America and its protectorates has become dangerous. Terrorism suspects have been detained in prison since the week of Sept. 11, and the American public has not been made privy to their number or their names.

According to an Oct. 21 Washington Post article, FBI and Justice Department Investigators have said they are considering, "casting aside civil liberties" if certain prisoners maintain the silence they have held despite continuing interrogation. Sources quoted in the article said that while the FBI would have trouble getting evidence and confessions received under torture to hold up in an American court, they have considered extraditing suspects to countries with looser opinions on prisoners' rights.

Meanwhile, the curtailing of free speech rights continued. On Oct. 10, the Vancouver Sun Online reported that University of British Columbia professor Sunera Thobani was accused of a hate crime against Americans after delivering a speech at a women's conference in Ottawa on Oct. 1 that officials said had the potential to publicly incite hatred against Americans.

"This is just pure harassment," Thobani told the Sun in an interview, "they are trying to silence dissent in this country."

Joan Barberich, an employee of Food For Thought Books in Amherst, seems to share Thobani's opinion. "[This] is infuriating," she said of the governments' domestic counter terrorism measures. "Suddenly being an activist is anti-American."

She explained, "all of the avenues [of response to the Sept. 11 attacks] that are safe and reasonable should be taken." Still, she added, "I don't trust our government."

She cited the explosion of TWA Flight 800 several years ago, saying that, in her opinion, the case was still suspicious.

"Back then it would've been in the government's best interests to cover up [that kind of] attack. What if there are other things being covered up?"

Barberich explained in the interview that she was skeptical of the media.

"Juvenile, aggressive points of view are getting a lot of press," while more pacifistic views are being ignored, she said.

Senior Communications major Dan Cashman gave his thoughts on the matter.

"I think…on the level where a broader set of ideas about the country are not being accessed as widely. America's free speech is being threatened," he explained. "It's as if the idea of our country narrowed to one idea as soon as [the terrorism] happened in the name of unity."

He went on to explain that he felt that the rights of Americans were being lost.

"America to me as a reality is a grouping together of tons and tons of conflicting people and ideas…an extremely varied culture," he said. "Basically that's being lost."

Jonathan Dennis, also a senior Communications major, explained, "something seems kind of phony" about the insurgence of patriotism in the country since the terrorist attacks. He added, "I have a hard time taking it seriously."

He said that the terrorists' hatred is connected to the very symbols of American wealth, prosperity and dominance that many are displaying as shows of support for America. He added that curtailing dissenting views may plan into the terrorists' idea that all Americans are alike.

"It makes me nervous," he said. "We're all kind of a target."

The local opinions echo those of many on the national scene. In Colorado Springs, Colo., residents, according to a feature in The New York Times, "send a steady flow of Republicans east…so to many it has come as a surprise, bordering on outrage, that a government thought to be safely controlled by like-minded conservatives is trying to expand the power and size of the federal policing authority, increase surveillance and wiretapping powers, even consider proposals for national identification cards."

A Colorado Springs resident, quoted in the article, said angrily, "Let them try to make me sign up for a national ID card, I dare them."

According to Bob Barr (R-Ga.), "Before we being dismantling constitutionally protected safeguards and diminishing fundamental rights to privacy, we should first examine why [the] attacks occurred."

Information from the New York Times, Vancouver Sun Online, Wired News, and the Washington Post was used in this article.

Human Services: Upcoming event, ongoing plan

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

The Select Board issued an official proclamation turning the 13th annual Shelter Sunday door-to-door fund-drive an official holiday at their Oct. 22 meeting. They also heard a presentation from the Human Services Committee – which makes town-funded contributions to human service agencies – on their priorities for the upcoming year.

"Whereas…public funding has been reduced for human services has been reduced in recent years…and whereas hunger and homelessness are continuing problems…The town of Amherst encourages all citizens to support this fundraising effort," the proclamation reads, officially declaring Oct. 28 "Shelter Sunday" in Amherst.

The event, explained Board Chair Carl Seppala, is one in which the Friends of the Homeless walk door-to-door in town collecting money for local charitable efforts including the Amherst Survival Center, Grove Street Inn, Soup Kitchen, and Not Bread Alone.

Member Deborah Herbert headed up the Human Services Committee's presentation, and began by explaining the committee's mission as one of providing funding assistance to agencies providing human services, and one which once per year they are to report to Select Board on, the primary purpose of this being to set priorities, in order of importance, for the coming year.

"Our priorities haven't changed from last year," Herbert said, "and they are emergency, followed by preventative and support, and then planning and referral services. We get requests for money to help and we decide based on an established set of criteria."

The criteria funding decisions are based on, she said, are the documented need in the proposal, the lack of availability of other funds, or grants aside from the town of Amherst, and the uniqueness of the service to the area, the last of which ensures no money is spent on duplication.

There are a total of 15 beneficiaries this year, Herbert continued, including agencies such as Big Brothers/Big Sisters of America, and the Men's Resource Center's domestic violence programs, but she drew special attention to a program which is brand new this year:

The program, entitled the Family Outreach of Amherst, she said, is an effort made in conjunction with the Amherst Police Department, which found its inception in a $25,000 state public safety grant, as well as funding from the United Way. Formerly called the Helen Mitchell Domestic Outreach Program, it is now in its early stages, but once fully active it will refer domestic violence calls directly from the police to specially trained domestic violence counselors who can provide on-site service and support.

"The service team is meeting right now," Herbert said, "they are developing a plan and plan to provide service beginning this month."

More specifically, the grant comes from the Executive Office of Public Safety, which administers federal funds which come from the Violence Against Women Act.

Information from the EOEC's website describes the merits of the act from which the funding emanates, and which the Human Services Committee is now adding its contribution:

"The V.A.W.A. Program promotes a coordinated and integrated approach to improving the criminal justice system's response to violence against women, with a partnership among law enforcement, prosecution, courts, and non-profit victims programs," the website reads. "Since 1995, more than 130…programs have been funded… The S.T.O.P. grant has made it possible for police departments to provide…innovative programs such as Family Crisis Intervention Teams with the aid of civilian advocates stationed in police departments and collaborations with battered women's programs."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Goddam Llamas hosted a "Planned Spontaneous Concert of Wackiness"

■ river

continued from page 1

on specific pieces of trash and also what to do with it. "We found some really weird stuff in the river," she said, "there were big jagged pieces of scrap metal that turned out to be a car."

While Byrne wished more than four women from Holyoke could attend, she also said that, "the four women from Holyoke were doing really excellent work, we would have had more volunteers, but many of the MASSPIRG members at Holyoke had earlier agreed to go apple picking that day."

Byrne hopes that something beneficial could be done with the pollution. She said, "It would be really neat to bring the scrap metal and glass to a recycling center and hopefully use the money to fund a cleanup."

On the Net: The Connecticut River Watershed Council: http://www.ctriver.org

■ conference

continued from page 1

"Our company tries to find mechanisms [to break down toxic chemicals] that would take nature 100 to 100,000 years to do," said Mark Vigneri, President and CEO of EBSI. "After the treatment the only things left are chemicals naturally found in nature, and a small excess of peroxide."

Another consulting company, Earthline Technologies uses the dirt put through their chemical extraction soil washing plant in Ashabula, Ohio, as clean backfill material. Where the waste is placed after the extraction and cleaning process is a decision for the company that hired Earthline Technologies.

Companies such as Prosonic are consultants for large-scale institutions. Many companies, after attaining the test results from Prosonic, destroy waste removed from ground and water by sending it to an incinerator in northern Quebec around the Hudson Bay. Concerns that the atmosphere may suffer in this process are misplaced, said William Armstrong, a spokesperson for Prosonic.

"Any chemical burned hot enough will turn into water and carbon dioxide, so there is no real threat to the environment," Armstrong said. "Furthermore, the incinerator is way up north; it's far away from people. The only thing up there are polar bears."

INDEPENDENT

"It says something about individuals, and institutions. As the only law school in Boston not affiliated with a university, New England School of Law is able to focus all of its resources on your legal education. Located in the heart of Boston's legal community, the school offers innovative programs including the War Crimes Prosecution Project, opportunities for overseas study, a student-run business law center and coursework on Internet Law. The results speak for themselves—94.6% of our 2000 graduates were employed within nine months. Don't follow. New England School of Law will help you lead."
Lisa Kiele Price, Class of 1999
VP & General Counsel
Cape Air/Nantucket Airlines
New England School of Law
154 Stuart Street
Boston, MA 02116
(617) 422-7210
admit@admin.nesl.edu
www.nesl.edu
ABA-accredited
Member of the Association of American Law Schools

YOUR IDEA OF GOOD THEATRE
Slightly different music, because you're slightly different.

SCAPEGOAT WAX Okeeblow 9.99
ILL NINO Revolution / Revolucion 11.99
THE DEAD KENNEDYS Mutiny On The Bay 12.99
ORBITAL The Altogether 13.99
TIMBLESS Hank Williams / Various Artists 15.99
BILLY BOB THORNTON Private Radio 15.99
SUZANNE VEGA Songs In Red And Gray 15.99
THE GRATEFUL DEAD Nightfall Of Diamonds 2-CD Set 18.99
MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA.
www.mediaplay.com
Selection, pricing and special offers may vary by store and online.
Sale ends October 30, 2001
Cassettes available on select titles
83501 9731

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The rich get richer

Capitalism during crisis

While anthrax continues to become a more prevalent threat to Americans everywhere concerns about how to treat the growing population of those infected becomes a pressing concern.

Yesterday, it was confirmed that there were two more anthrax related deaths to offsite mail workers at the White House. While many of the reports of letters testing positive for anthrax have been addressed to media organizations and government offices there is also a major risk for postal workers all over the country. While at this point many assumed that the anthrax threat would be over, it seems that it has just begun.

Nearly 2,000 workers at one postal facility have come in contact with anthrax and will be forced to go through a full 60-day antibiotic treatment to fight against the illness. The postal service has begun to take more protective measures against anthrax with the installation of sanitation equipment, however soaring drug costs still cause a number of concerns. Because there are not a lot of existing antibiotics, the drug company that owns the patent can charge whatever they would like for the cure. Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson announced yesterday that he is ready to search for a generic drug to treat anthrax exposure. The drug currently used to treat anthrax is called Cipro and is patented by the drug company Bayer. Because of astronomically high prices, the government has given Bayer an ultimatum, either the drug company lowers their prices or the government will search for other means of treating for anthrax.

Bayer has already made a deal with the Canadian government to supply Cipro at $1.30 per pill if an emergency occurs within the country but has not yet answered the United States. If they refuse to lower their prices, they will be using the United States and the American people in order to make money.

The company is resorting to capitalism at its worst as a way to make money during crisis times, when we face a situation that should take precedent over profit. Rather than paying attention to the needs of the country as a whole, the company is feeding into the American public's fear of terrorism and anthrax. It is a basic system of supply and demand, because the demand is there the company is allowed to prosper at the expense of the American people.

The government is doing the right thing by putting pressure on the company to supply the drug. It is becoming a basic choice: money or the health, safety and security of the American people. Health should come first.

Information for this story was taken from The Boston Globe.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the* Collegian *editorial board.

Life and how to live it

MATTHEW DESPRES

Before you dirty your hands with the unrest in my head, here's Patti Smith:

"...I find I am unable to draw one line. It should be so simple, child's play to trace their dual silhouette. But I can't. I'm afraid that I won't do it right. I'm afraid that art is useless...I think of Picasso and how he reacted to the bombing of Guernica. How he translated his pain and horror into monumental work that moves and teaches us to this day. I return to my wall." (Interview, Nov. 2000)

I return to my wall. Beautiful. Finally, in the month since four planes fell upon the eastern seaboard, forever disrupting how we rise in the morning and sleep at night, a piece of truth that fits us all.

We all need our walls. We need our jobs, our classrooms, our canvasses, instruments and typewriters. We need our outlets: our books, our paintbrushes, films and sports. There's no shame in that. It's what we need to move on. It's why we choose to move on.

Much has been said since September – theories on what happened and why have poured forth from every device capable of showing the information towards us. Everyone has an answer, a solution, a formula for fixing things that's better than the next. Some folks seem to know exactly what to do with a situation the likes of which we've never seen before.

I don't. Politics escape me. I am unable to draw lines between the issues, the facts, the intricacies rooted too deeply for me to see. Afghanistan? The Taliban? Osama bin Laden? Names I know but don't understand. All issues previously ignored, now simply too big to sit down face to face with. Most people have been willing to dive into the enormity of it all, to wash themselves with the news each day and digest every sound byte, article and image that crosses their plate. It's a position I respect; I've just happened to take the opposite spot.

I've reacted not to the cries of war, but the voices supplying them. I've searched not for the peaceful protests, but for the folks heading into public to support them. I've read not into the texts of speeches and public addresses, but the eyes behind them. Do they believe what they say? Are they feeling what they

"Some artists have been railed against for taking to the small screen and plying their trade. Why? It's what they do – don't expect anymore than that. It won't change the world, but for a short while, at least, their craft makes what we do have a bearable place to be."

preach? Why?

I'm not ashamed to embrace the emotional side of what has happened. Watching people return to what they love and, even if just for a moment, allowing themselves a sense of genuine pleasure, has taught me more than I'll be able to comprehend for some time. The little things, the often insignificant, the markers you can point to as what helped one day turn into another.

Benefit concerts. Watching the Who take the stage at Madison Square Garden this weekend. Won't get fooled again? I hope not. Mick and Keith belting "Miss You" to an arena full of people who have no doubt uttered the phrase countless times in the past few weeks? Powerful. Bowie assigning "Heroes" to the real articles and McCartney giving us back "Yesterday?" Damn near perfect. Eclipsing these stars were the 6,000 or so heroes in attendance, the men and women of the New York Police and Fire Departments. By allowing us to watch them sing, dance and laugh for what was perhaps the first time in a month, they again helped a nation stand on its own two feet.

The nationwide telethon a few weeks backs that, like the Concert for New York City, aimed to raise money for family and friends of the Sept. 11 victims, also helped to raise my head out of the spiral it had been in. Neil Young begging us to "Imagine," Eddie Vedder mapping out the "Long Road" and U2 telling us to pick up and "Walk On" were moments more significant, for me at least, than anything else I've seen since.

Call me a pushover. Fair enough. Don't deny the comfort, however, in seeing familiar faces express our emotions. Some artists have been railed against for taking to the small screen and plying their trade. Why? It's what they do – don't expect anymore than that. It won't change the world, but for a short while, at least, their craft makes what we do have a bearable place to be.

The music – all of art – has helped us to humanize the impossible, to grasp the unimaginable. It's why we should continue to embrace it, to pursue it, to spread it as far as we can, into the laps of as many people as possible. The news is vital, of course, but it only takes us so far, and there's only so much we can shoulder at a time. With music, with art, there is something we all understand. We don't need to be taught the emotions we naturally feel, or educated on how to enjoy the songs we hear and the images we see. In the end, for all of us, it's as important to the healing process as any other factor. By peeling politics away we're able to boil it down to the often ignored human element – not race, not religion, not class – but a people as one.

"Perhaps when we humble ourselves as a people, will we communicate again" (Patti Smith)

Perhaps.

Matthew Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

Ed/Op Letters from the editor

SAM WILKINSON

There will be a meeting tonight in the Collegian office (113 Campus Center Basement) for anyone interested in writing.

In today's aggressive society, it's awfully difficult to take the time necessary to do the little things: a simple cup of coffee before the day begins, the casual conversation about the weather, a piece of correspondence at the end of the day.

I don't drink coffee, and I think I'm hoping too much that the fast-paced lifestyle around here affords time for relaxed conversation. But on my third point, the sent letter, I think I may have something. In a world dominated by "Hot Lesbian Slutty Car Mechanic" porno-emails, don't we as a society have time enough to compose letters to each other? Is it so expensive or prohibitive to compose for ten minutes and purchase the stamp? I think not.

Needless to say, I've had some letters to write that I've been putting off – lest you believe that I'm speaking down at you, I definitely don't take the time to write notes to friends – and no I think that I'll use my column this week to respond to some of the people that I've mistakenly missed.

Dear Ten People That Burned an American Flag at Amherst College:

Without being as insulting as I can be, you ten are pretty damn stupid. Apparently, most of you attend Hampshire College: so you figured that school has been critically pilloried long enough. You marched to Amherst College and stalked its good name by interrupting its pro-America rally by burning two flags while a crowd sang "God Bless America." Not only has Amherst College been incorrectly implicated by your own ignorant behavior, but most of you escaped the scene without being identified.

Except for you, Dan Griffin. You figured that you're a real tough guy, so you spouted off about American atrocities committed since 1492. Pray tell, when was America actually recognized as a nation? I'd hate to let facts get in the way of your drivel, but do they let anybody into Hampshire College? To falsely attribute the sins of the Spaniards and the Dutch and the Englishmen to America, thus rendering any serious critique of the American behavior in our region facetious by virtue of your own stupidity, is shocking.

If you really want to make a statement, burning an American flag at this point in our nation's war with Afghanistan is hardly the time to do it. You're crying wolf because you saw a mouse and you're only doing that because you saw the chance. Who honestly opportunistically looks for the opportunity to burn a flag? Flag burning is perhaps the most stunning form of political protest in America – to waste it on our current situation indicates a general lack of talent, skill or brains.

That said, I'd never suggest that you didn't have the right to do what you did. All I'm asking is that you think, even for the fewest of seconds, before doing something so incomprehensibly stupid as burn an American flag so as to soil another institution. I might not be the biggest Lord fell, but what you ten did is downright embarrassing.

Sincerely,
Sam Wilkinson

Dear Southwest Residents:

Hey. I don't mean to make it hard on you, but the reason a tunnel was built underneath Massachusetts Avenue is so that you would use it. Instead, you use the above ground crosswalk, stopping traffic for hours at a time while all three or four thousand of you cross the street in one long, single-file line. Would it really be so difficult to keep yourself contained to the underground tunnel, thus making it easier for traffic to use the roads built, interestingly enough, for automobiles? If that doesn't appeal, at least you'd be safer in that tunnel, rather than exposed to the miles and miles of traffic all itching to run you over for using the damn crosswalk.

Sitting in Traffic,
Sam Wilkinson

Dear Eeyann,

What has your gender ever done to you that you would so embarrass it with your amateurish behavior? Your frequent gallivanting with the opposite sex, as many as possible apparently, gives all of us a relatively bad name. But you don't care about that, as long as you're sexually pleasured for five or ten minutes by somebody, anybody, you seem to be quite all right.

To further irk me, you're the most disgusting of my gender. Rather than be straight up honest about the fact that you're in it for the lovin', you'd behave as if you're really a sensitive guy, emotional and tender and sweet to the core. But you're not. You just claim to like Sarah McLachlan on the off-chance that somebody's going to give you kiss and stroke your ego. Although it seems perfectly clear, apparently you can't be bothered to remember that your actions have repercussions, generally with any number of the women that you have involved yourself with. Clearly, you can't be bothered to think of such things when your Richard has gone without the necessary attention for almost two and a half hours. Perhaps you should.

If you're going to be a jerk about these things, at least figure out who the nice girls are and leave them alone. The nice ones in this world shouldn't have to be irreparably harmed by your own indulgent behavior. Stick to the doormats.

Honestly,
Sam Wilkinson

Dear Readers,

Two weeks ago, I went especially overboard in my attempts to crucify Amherst College and, apparently by extension, Sut Jhally. To say that I didn't make myself clear in that editorial would be aggressively understating the obvious.

Needless to say, to both the Amherst College students who have legitimately worked to get where they are (Jarrad, Vanessa, Shannon, the others...) and to Professor Sut: my apologies. Catch me on a bad week and you have no idea what I might write.

Humbled,
Sam Wilkinson

That's all I've got for this week, but if you couldn't tell, this column didn't take me very long to write. And it shouldn't be very hard for you to write a few letters, too. You might have time for a cup of coffee or a simple conversation, but some correspondence is never too much.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Letter to the editor

In his Oct. 11 column, Sam Wilkinson, Editor in Chief of the Collegian, accuses me of being an anti-Semite. He writes of me: "He drives a Volkswagen, a car originally designed by Nazis, and then goes on huge rants about how Israeli Jews are bad. He probably isn't an Anti-Semite; he just acts like it." A little later, ratcheting up the language, he speculates whether or not I am "a vicious anti-Semite".

In the larger scheme of things, especially in the global trauma of the post – 9-11 world, to be slandered by a conservative blow-hard in a college newspaper is perhaps an irrelevancy. But my own research tells me that even little lies, if left unchallenged, at some point transform into large truths so they must be confronted at source.

I know "evidence" and "facts" must be quaint concepts for someone who thinks of himself as a formidable "baaaad boy," but I thought journalists at least were still supposed to believe in them, so perhaps Mr. Wilkinson can actually tell his readers when and where he heard me ranting "about how Israeli Jews are bad." As I never have (and never would say anything so obviously false and racist), I am sure he will try and deflect attention away from this central question with a personal attack on some other irrelevant aspect of my life.

If students and faculty (and Mr. Wilkinson) are interested in what I really say about the Israeli/Palestinian conflict and its coverage by the media, they can listen for themselves as my class lectures are a matter of public record and I have made them available on the web via streaming audio at http://www.umtv.oit.umass.edu/~sumtv/m121/. Or they can watch my film, Edward Said On Orientalism (available at Video to Go & Pleasant Street Video), and evaluate for themselves whether Mr. Wilkinson's claims have any validity or if, in fact, they are malicious, ignorant and vicious lies.

I realize that in providing public access to my class lectures I am opening myself up to the danger of my words being taken out of context and distorted from their true meaning by unethical people. But the strength of my belief in the necessity for a democratic society to engage in dialogue, not controversial pieces, is strong enough for me to take this risk. I have always believed that the public university is a place where the most important and contentious events of the day have to be addressed, and therefore I welcome informed debate and dissent. Indeed if Mr. Wilkinson wishes to debate his accusations and evidence face-to-face in a public forum (rather than in the pages of a newspaper he controls), I would be happy to oblige.

Mr. Wilkinson also referenced me, sarcastically in his Sept. 26 column. All I had not even heard of him before someone brought this editorial to my attention. I will not speculate on why he seems to be so obsessed with me (down to knowing what car I drive?) but apparently he sees the progressive and democratic ideas I am associated with as a challenge to his conservative world view. In this, at least, he is correct.

When I first received a copy of the editorial slandering my name, I presumed that it must have been from the conservative propaganda rag, The Minuteman. Indeed Mr. Wilkinson seems to be much more suited to be the Editor in Chief of that publication (he very modestly describes himself as Bill O'Reilly with a brunt than of the largest college newspaper in New England, which presumably should hold itself up to a higher standard of editorial ethics. The fact that it does not reflects the real crisis of journalism in the United States.

P.S. For all those other drivers of used Volkswagens, our secret Nazi Party meeting is on at the normal time. See you all there.

Sut Jhally is a professor of Communications at UMass.

A Tale of Two Symbols:

Local residents need to redefine idea of patriotism

BILL LARKIN

Following the events of Sept. 11, the American people have regressed into a conformist thrive thirsting for revenge. They want to feel comfortable again, to blot from their eyes black responsibility with glasses tinted by lenses of red reprisal, blue shock, and white purity.

To engineer the murder of more than 6,500 people on American soil violates U.S. law and threatens the respect for human life upon which civilization rests. A sober mind, free from the manipulation of pandering denizens drenched in greed and vanity, demands the perpetrators face justice from the American legal system.

However urgent the need for reexamination of U.S. policy, our citizens must conduct it within the framework of the law. If we want to foster respect for humanity through adherence to the ruling of our judicial system, then perhaps we should start by listening to the Supreme Court, America's highest legal authority.

Although the court has protected flag burning as symbolic speech and recognized the right of individuals to remain silent, Amherst insists on maintaining the infallibility of the American flag. But how best to tackle the analytical temperance necessary for such demonstrations as citizens inebriated by their perception of a symbol translatable to innumerable concrete realities.

Last Thursday, a group of dissenters dressed in dark clothing interrupted the Amherst Assembly for Patriotism. After the 100 people who came to wave the flag recited the Pledge of Allegiance, the group of self-styled anarchists pulled out two American flags, and burned them.

How did Michael Hood, one of the two Amherst College students who organized the assembly, respond to the demonstration?

"We were trying to create a unifying patriotic message and then destroyed it," Hood said. "Now Amherst College is implicated as being unpatriotic."

Last month, following heated debate, the Amherst Board of Selectmen voted to limit the display of a series 29 new commemorative flags to patriotic holidays only. During that meeting, University of Massachusetts-Amherst physics professor Jennie Traschen said, "What the flag stands for is a symbol of terrorism and death and fear and destruction and repression."

The next day, members of Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda organization allegedly launched terrorist attacks against political targets in New York and Washington, murdering over 6,500 people. Since then, Traschen has received thousands of e-mails, letters, and phone messages calling her a terrorist. After she began to receive anonymous death threats, the police guarding Traschen's house installed a tracer on her telephone.

The Pseudo-Progressive surrogate at the heart of the Pioneer Valley reflects an ignorance to the history of the nation signified by the Stars and Stripes. Nearly all the houses thrust between shopping malls and service-sector businesses alongside route nine display the American flag in hopes of promoting patriotism.

However, a short visit to the W.E.B. DuBois or Amherst College libraries might dissuade them, if they cared to do so. But for those farmers, state employees, and venture capitalists that lived through the Vietnam War, the popular cloth of jingoism fares far better than the tenuous burlap of intellectual responsibility at deflecting the October frost.

A mildly enterprising history student at any of the schools in the Five-College area could compose a thesis defining the flag as an abstract symbol representing independence, freedom and prosperity. A more courageous scholar might equate the flag with racism, militarism and genocide.

The incongruous direction our past has winded through the centuries leaves a great area in which to debate the speech conveyed by the American flag. Some residents embrace the flag despite the atrocities committed on behalf of the nation it signifies. Some residents condemn the flag despite the philanthropy generated by its perpetuity. The debate between these groups force Americans to defend and clarify their own views, a requisite essential to the survival of a democracy.

Instead of fearing political dissent, Amherst should redefine patriotism by dedicating itself to recognizing the faults embodied by the Stars and Stripes and campaigning its representatives to eliminating them. By doing so, they would engender more adoration of the flag than any harassment of ideological minorities and conformist crusade possibly could.

Perhaps then, both surrogates will incarnate.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this article.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

Don't miss our From Hell review later this week.

Poetry plus Performing In Tongues

By Martha Oliva
Collegian Staff

Powerful imagery presented in words sung, spoken, and spit out is the shtick of I Was Born With Two Tongues, the Chicago-based Pan Asian spoken word group presented by the New WORLD Theater at Bowker Auditorium Saturday night. The spoken word genre requires the audience to warm-up, to adapt before they can take in the substance of a performance and the work of the Tongues was no exception.

The first piece, a sort of chant performed by Dennis Kim, was mostly indecipherable to my as yet unadjusted ears, but its chorus, repeated enough times to become clear, protested America's recent military actions, establishing the contemporary, concerned flavor of the Tongues' compositions. And throughout, Kim's voice was sensual and addictive. I would have been content to listen to him mumble into the microphone all night and, judging from the 'Mmmm...damn" that kept leaking from the lips of a woman two seats down, I wasn't alone.

Luckily, our ears did adapt and the Tongues slowed down their presentations somewhat so that by the last third of the evening, everything was coming through loud and clear. The turning point came in the form of a duet by Dennis Kim (of the sexy chant) and Marlon Esguerra that contained a passage on the uneducated's confusion of ph and f and employed that most familiar of f-words —yeah, you know the one. Having successfully caught the audience's attention, the Tongues held it for the rest of the night. The remaining performances were a mix of rousing successes and cliched flailings.

Anida Esguerra, a graphic designer, was guilty of over-generalizing in one of her womanist poems, using meaningless phrases and leaving out the all-important element of personal experience. Esguerra, however, made a stunning comeback late in the show with a poem that chastised Americans for their ignorant xenophobia and had the audience leaping to their feet as Esguerra, red-faced, spat out the last words.

Marlon Esguerra, a creative-writing teacher and the most theatrically reserved member of the group, performed a poem about his father that had the audience cringing. We imagined the end of the elder Esguerra's stint as a hotel bellhop, his broken English causing coworkers to laugh him out of the hotel lobby, back to his kitchen table, all the way to the back of the newspaper, into the vocabulary lesson of the crossword. Marlon's work was the most consistent of the group. He did a fabulous job of self-editing, choosing to perform fewer pieces, but hitting the mark with each.

His teaching experiences inspired one poem in which he explained the attitudes and quirks of each of his students and their corresponding grades. This pattern was easy for the audience to adjust to and held us rapt as we awaited the straightforward evaluation we knew was coming at the end of each line. By the time Esguerra concluded, after turning his evaluations on himself in the poem's second half, we knew him a little better. And, having really listened— he made it so easy!— we were enriched. Leave it to the teacher to show us the best example of performance poetry.

The second female member of the foursome, Emily Chang, was also the resident singer. She performed a mix of sung and spoken word pieces, sometimes changing gears in the midst of a work. Her singing voice was strong and clear, but she tended to showboat a bit, finishing nearly every musical phrase with embellishments that served only to interrupt the poetic flow and distract one from the content. Chang, and likewise Dennis Kim, did make excellent use of their accompanist, Darius

Turn to TONGUES page 7

Double dose of rock Darwinism

COURTESY WWW.QUEENSYCHE.COM

Queensrÿche spans 18 years and eight studio albums on live twin disc

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Queensrÿche
Live Evolution
Sanctuary Records

Queensrÿche's new double live CD couldn't be more aptly titled. It has been 18 years since the Seattle quintet burst onto the metal scene with its self-titled EP, and over 10 years since it tasted mainstream radio success with its fourth full-length release, Empire.

Countless metal bands have faded into obscurity during that time period, including some of the biggest acts that the genre ever produced. Bands like Judas Priest, Iron Maiden and Megadeth failed to find that magical formula for changing with the times, instead limping quietly off into the heavy metal sunset with shaky releases and diminishing fan bases. Quite simply, they didn't evolve.

Not so with Queensrÿche. Boasting a resume of over 20 million worldwide album sales and a Grammy nomination, the band signed a new contract earlier this year with the Sanctuary Group and, in the words of the label, immediately set its sights on tackling "one of the great forgotten art forms of the rock era...the classic gatefold sleeve, career-defining double live album."

Whether or not Evolution measures up to other heavyweight double live LPs really isn't important, because Queensrÿche isn't the typical "live" act. The songs on Evolution are pretty much chord-for-chord renditions of the studio versions with little or no deviation; even the sound bites from Empire are thrown in.

Whereas benchmark live sets like Kiss' Alive, Peter Frampton's Frampton Comes Alive and Yes' Yessongs are all defined by the artists' embellishment of their material on stage, Queensrÿche's strength is in the technical accuracy with which it brings its songs to life. This is not unlike the Canadian trio Rush, with whom Queensrÿche has been compared by critics for years.

Evolution consists of 29 songs broken down into four separate "suites" that chronicle the band's career. The first suite contains eight songs culled from the debut EP and first three full-length efforts. The second suite is comprised entirely of tracks from Operation:Mindcrime, the group's landmark 1988 concept album. The second disk opens with material from Empire and 1994's Promised Land, though only two songs within the six-track suite represent the latter. The set closes with a suite from '97's Hear in the Now Frontier and '99's QR.

Queensrÿche truly wears its influences on its sleeve during the first suite: songs like "The Lady Wore Black" and "Queen of the Reich" practically echo the sound that Iron Maiden was pumping out during the same time period. But it is also the early material that showcases Queensrÿche's true talent for making kick-in-the-pants metal, something that would be replaced over time with a hard-edged "progressive rock" sound.

The high point of the first suite is undoubtedly "Walk in the Shadows," from '86's Rage for Order. Geoff Tate's desperate vocal delivery brings a marvelous tension to the track, while bassist Eddie Jackson and percussionist Scott Rockenfield lay down a thunderous beat that evokes images of ten thousand marching feet. This is Queensrÿche at its fiercest, its loudest and its best.

The CD's second suite showcases the band's opus, the one album that will forever define the creative energy with which Queensrÿche attacked the late Eighties' metal scene. Mindcrime succeeds where other half-baked concept pieces, such as King's X's Gretchen Goes to Nebraska, fail miserably: it tells a coherent story through an incredible body of music that work as well as a collection of songs as it does as a whole.

What did raise a question in terms of Evolution's second suite was the band's lineup: would replacement guitarist Kelly Gray be able to fill the shoes of departed Chris DeGarmo on the axe-heavy material of Mindcrime? Though the band had opted to exclude the extended guitar solo numbers "Anarchy-X" and "Waiting for 22" from the '86's Rage for Order,

Fabulous falls flat and D's smart humor prevails overall

Fabulous doesn't quite live up to his name

TENACIOUS D
Tenacious D
Epic

Intelligence is sexy. So is a sense of humor, and there is no way you can have the second without the first. Intelligence is what makes Tenacious D not only hilarious, but a great listen, too. Or it could be the sex-obsessed juvenile antics behind diatribes about "Hard Fucking," "Kielbasa," or "Cock Pushups."

But it's probably intelligence. As much as it pains me to make the comparison, some gray matter is the reason Tenacious D shines more in one song than The Bloodhound Gang have in their entire career. The Gang may have stumbled upon a cheesily endearing 80s synth throwback with "The Bad Touch," but the D know to actively skewer musical traditions while wringing good songs out at the same time. Wah-wah funk guitars, black metal demonic voice-overs, Zepplin-style medieval lyrical romps (complete with a song about Dio), pornographic folk tunes, they're all sprinkled throughout. The D are exactly the two guys I want making a comedy album: they're smart and they listen to a lot of music. They even throw in some classic clichés like a road song and a quasi-political rant in "City Hall."

The skits layered throughout the album do the important job of establishing the personality of Jack Black and Kyle Glass for people who aren't familiar with the HBO show. Hearing the two place an order at a drive-thru or karate chop each other over a piece of schnitzel are priceless moments. The album is at its best, however, during the first half, when the music is as good as the material. "Kielbasa" and "Tribute," while hilarious, are genuinely good songs with cock-rock breaks and all-purpose riffage that can be enjoyed with or without the camp factor. Things tend to slack off a bit during the later cuts, and all in all this isn't the definitive statement that the mounting anticipation seemed to promise, but in the end it's more than worthwhile and joyously provides the kick in the ass planet rock needs every once and a while. (Michael Delano)

FABOLOUS
Ghetto Fabolous
Desert Storm

Last week in my review of la Rule's Pain Is Love, I referred to la Rule as the ultimate stereotypical rapper. I take it all back, Fabolous is in fact the most stereotypical. He's got the hip-hop checklist covered. Songs about "hos": check; ice: check, making it out of the hood: check, being a gangster: check, guest stars: check, the only thing that is missing is that he is actually wearing his shirt in the albums cover art. That's about as far from the hip hop norm that Fabolous strays.

The latest craze in the mainstream rap scene, the world was first introduced to Fabolous last summer when he was featured in Lil Mo's hit "Superwoman." Since then he's also joined Mary J. Blige on her remix of "Family Affair".

On those tracks and on his debut album, it is apparent that there is nothing particular unique about Fab's rapping style. His voice is youthful, and sounds similar to Cash Money's Lil Wayne, and his song topics sound like…well, every other rapper out there.

Ghetto Fabolous kicks off with the "Keeping It Gangster," the first of 14 tracks celebrating his ghetto fabulous gangster life. On "Young N" a track that features a nifty call and response chorus, Fab boasts that he has a "1980's flow." What? Fabolous is about the furthest thing from an old school rapper out there.

Even though the Ghetto Fabolous is noticeably uncreative, it still has a several catchy tracks. The Rockwilder produced "Get Right" is one them, even if it's too hot for the Collegian hook is a direct rip-off of Pharoahe Monch. The DJ Clue numbers significant O others

"Ride For This" that features la Rule and the radio hit "Can't Deny It" featuring Nate Dogg are also highlights.

The Latin flavor of "Get Smart" provides some welcome variety as well, where Fab says "he's the smartest young guy since Doogie Howser," and tells a female providing oral copulation of him, or as he calls it "CPR on his dick," that "if you lift up and say your jaws hurtin, it's for certain, you are the weakest link, goodbye." This is part of a trend where Fabolous seems to mention his penis in every song, seriously.

Fabolous' debut effort is far from fabulous, but fine for what it is. It's nothing new or different, but why actually be creative when you can make mad cheddar doing the same thing as everybody else…right? (Kurt Polesky)

FLATBUSH PARK LEISURE GROUP
customer satisfaction.
Metro Ride

FPLG seems fairly content to straddle the line between play-it-safe wedding reception band and a more adventurous jam outfit. Needless to say, it's during the more ambitious moments on customer satisfaction. where the band truly stakes their claim.

The men of Flatbush are Jamie Balmer on guitar, Ben Brenner on Tenor Sax, Max Baehr on bass, Karsten Krumbiegel on drums, Jeff Icuss on Alto Sax, and Jared Salvatore working the vocal pipes and keyboards. Tracks like "DEFA" find the group veering too close to background music territory, steered there somewhat by their polished but static sound and Salvatore's smooth but unaffecting delivery. Thankfully, however, FPLG loves to mix things up, and even "DEFA" floats by only so long before they inject it with some fresh sounds that would come off as a jarring transition in the hands of lesser talents. The subject matter is also far from passive; Salvatore sings of frustration and confusion, although only occasionally bestows the lyrics with real emotion, like on the beautiful "Cashew."

The musicianship at play here can't be faulted, and for a group with "leisure" in the title they're far more engaging than need be. So when FPLG pulls off the crazy experimental set they hint at here, it'll be one to look for. For now, the band's leisurely pace has enough sparks to liven any reception. (Michael Delano)

BIONIC JIVE
Armageddon Through Your Speaker
Interscope

Bionic Jive isn't a good band.

Bionic Jive has nothing to offer America musically.

Bionic Jive is the worst band in the history of bands.

Bionic Jive apparently got a contract after promising to play songs that sound like a mix of Korn, Insane Clown Posse and System of a Down.

Bionic Jive lead-singer Ako Mack certainly appears to have enough talent to serve burgers for the rest of his life.

Bionic Jive should be considered lucky if they are ever allowed to release another album, even if it is a children's album.

Bionic Jive apparently thinks that nobody is going to notice how aggressively they've ripped off their musical contemporaries, probably knowing that Korn wouldn't waste its time listening to Armageddon Through Your Speaker.

Bionic Jive apparently assumes that nobody listening to this album has more than one speaker – who in the hell only has one speaker? (Editor's note: if Armageddon is only coming through one of the speakers, what is coming through the others?)

Bionic Jive's family no longer admits that they are related to the members of the band, probably embarrassed to be related to somebody who joined a band called Bionic Jive!

Bionic Jive claims to have shot Lucifer in its fourth song, which is clearly a lie, as only the dark lord himself could be involved in the production of an album this ear piercing.

Seriously though, Bionic Jive suffers from a lack of creativity. There is no clear inspiration that comes through in the band's derivative songs. How typical of the corporate America. Instead of fostering whatever creative energies Bionic Jive might have had, the band was instead encouraged only to sound like that which is popular. Until Jive can create its own sound, it can expect limited commercial success and clear critical failure.

Bionic Jive absolutely sucks. (Sam Wilkinson)

SENIOR PORTRAITS
Sponsored By
The Index Yearbook
Class of 2002
Senior Portraits
October 29-November 2
Make your appointment
now by calling:
1-800-OUR-YEAR or log
onto www.ouryear.com
Access #147
You can start placing your orders for the 2002 Index Today!
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

Arts meeting tonight at 6 for all of our writers. Any interesting writers come on down too – we're in the Campus Center basement.

VALLEY Furniture and Crafts
15% off Bookcases
570 Avenue A, Turners Falls
Call for Directions
Open Mon.-Sat. 10-5

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Barbados Florida & More!
For details and the Best Rates visit:
www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

You could sit on your couch with a half eaten bag of chips and a can of stale soda playing Super Mario Brothers for the millionth time...or you could write for Arts.

Butterfly's insipid drivel

By Serge Pinsky
Collegian Staff

A friend once told me that you can judge an album by its cover. Well the cover of Butterfly Jones' debut album Napalm Springs features a close-up of a woman's crotch, but despite this fact, the record is terrible. Here's why.

Take a moment and make a list of every single mainstream rock band that has sold platinum albums (Sugar Ray, Smashmouth, and hey where do you think you're going Matchbox 20…your lowercase letters flow like The Nile on this list). Now think of each band's most annoyingly catchy and overplayed single. This is what the Butterfly Jones album would've sounded like if its members actually had talent. By the way, if this sounds good to you, chances are that you're still in high school and reading something that looks like that thing your dad curses at when he reads the stock section of it… this is called a "newspaper" and if you flip ahead a few pages, you'll see the comics, that's right, everything is gonna be ok. Oh and tell Mrs. Arase that she was wrong about my "mental handicap."

This album offended me with it utter unoriginality so much that at one point I actually vomited inside my mouth: "Daily Show" reference!

Halfway through the album, I had a flashback to a period in my life when I happily listened to Tonic and Collective Soul and believed they were good songwriters (I've mostly repressed this memory). But I suppose the music should speak for itself so let's take a look at it. The album opens with the title track, which I thought would be a social commentary about war but no, its a slacker love song that for some reason made me develop an eye twitch. The next track, "Suicide Bridge" is surprisingly upbeat for a song about killing yourself. It reminded me of a bad Robbie Williams song with a string section that sounds exactly like a sped-up version of the one in The Verve's "Bittersweet Symphony." Next, there is the single "Anywhere But Now" which was so bad that I had to drink to numb the pain that it caused. The rest of the album was awesome.

Upon sobering up, I came to the conclusion that people who like music like this are in frats. Hell, if I was around alcohol all the time, I'd like it too. Practically every song on this album could be a hit single—they're all catchy and easily digestible and have lyrics that make you ashamed to sing along. Here are some examples: "When people are mean, when people are bad, it usually means, that somewhere inside they are sad." That's right, psychology in pop song form! How about this gem: "happy girls are like little squirrels." Hmm, and I'm guessing that sad girls are like giraffes (my friend M-Club and I think this is the opposite of a squirrel). The lyric "She sets me up with a six pack, and it's cool dude" speaks to the frat brother who is still looking for that special someone. Hey! Quit looking at the cover of the album already.

The most bizarre thing is that one of the songs on the album called "The Systematic Dumbing Down of Terry Constance Jones" has a great message about how shallow and degrading Hollywood and the fashion industry are to women. Of course, the track sounds like a sub-par Goo Goo Dolls song, but nonetheless, the lyrics are admirable, especially when the band rhymes "Calista Flockhart" with "Howard Stern's shock art." Ironically enough, the booklet of the album has several pictures of a scantily clad woman, whose "front bottom" (a perfectly respectable British term that means…well, you know…) is on the cover of the album.

Napalm Springs is one of the worst and uninspired albums of the year. I have every reason to believe that it will be huge, even though I saw a copy of the album in the discount rack of For the Record where it is selling for a whopping $2.50. Do buy it if you want a great example of why pop/rock music today is awful. Lead Singer/Songwriter Michael Gurley does have a knack for hooks but it's just a shame that a brain clot or something has caused him to have no lyrical-writing ability whatsoever. Also, his fake British accent and Our Lady Peace-like vocal delivery don't help to distinguish this band from tons of others that sound exactly the same. I think that Phil Collins is rolling over in his grave right now, wishing he'd released his "bad" album so it could compete with this. He is dead, right?

In conclusion, I think if there is a bizarro world where everything is opposite, then Butterfly Jones would be the equivalent of Bob Dylan (who is plagiarized on this album as well). I'm sure plenty of people will like Napalm Springs, like my friend who told me to judge things by the way they look, but he's serving a life sentence in prison, and chances are good that if you like Butterfly Jones, you should be too.

The boys of Butterfly Jones present for your disapproval their bland music.

Queensryche, and their latest evolution.

■ Evolution

continued from page 5

hint suspiciously at the band trying to pander to commercial interests at the expense of musical integrity.

Then there is the Empire material. The title track provided a grim and realistic snapshot of drug crime when it was released in 1990, but rings somewhat hollow in the context of modern day, crime-riddled America. Tate misses a perfect chance to update the track during its "statistics interlude," but instead delivers an open-ended declaration about crack cocaine that says far less than the Eighties-era statistics in the original did.

"Another Rainy Night" and "Jet City Woman" close the suite, sounding so much alike that one is left pining for a shot of "The Thin Line," "Della Brown" or "Anybody Listening." Again, it seems that churning out the album's radio hits was prioritized over highlighting its greatest music.

Evolution's final suite brings to light both the band's lone studio stumble and its subsequent redemption. Hear in the Now Frontier was panned hard by critics and fans alike upon its release, and the strain its failure put on Queensryche was very likely the final blow that knocked DeGarmo from the lineup. The album's only contribution to the Evolution set is "Hit the Black," which also happens to be the weakest track on the live disc as well.

That weakness fades quickly once the O2K material within the final suite takes flight. The band attacks its five latest cuts with a renewed vigor that speaks volumes about Queensryche's future, even in the face of personnel changes and diminishing fan support. "Liquid Sky" and "Scared Ground" show a new focus on melody not seen on any previous tracks, and the album's closing song, "The Right Side of My Mind," features the tightest and most natural music of the second disc. If this set was truly meant to showcase an evolution, this chunk of material is certainly the modern man who strides upright into the future out of Queensryche's Cro-Magnum metal roots.

Will Live Evolution return Seattle's progressive hard rock sons to the prominence they enjoyed in the early Nineties? Probably not. But at the very least, this double live disc proves that a band must evolve on its own terms in order to sell records and still sound relevant. Too many of Queensryche's metal brethren have learned that very lesson the hard way.

The band will begin a U.S. tour in support of Evolution on Nov. 1 in Phoenix. It will play shows at Boston's Orpheum Theatre on Nov. 20 and New York's Beacon Theatre on Nov. 21.

■ Five

continued from page 5

with an exception here or there, such as Ben Folds. But Ondrasik clearly appreciates the instrument and uses it to express emotion that many current musicians can't seem to get across otherwise. "Rainy," for example, is a simple but unusually affecting song that clearly shows Ondrasik's sincere respect for the instrument. It's a love song that could very well be about an important person or Ondrasik's relationship with the piano. Singer and instrument gracefully play off each other, and the accompaniment of a cello gives the song a haunting, yet lasting impression.

The songs "Michael Jordan" and "Boat Parade" stand out as two songs that are totally different from all the others and throw the listener a curve ball. While each tune has its own satisfying sound, these two are distinctively dissimilar from the rest. In "Michael Jordan," Ondrasik sings that he would do anything to be the superstar basketball player (even though he doesn't even mention his name in the song), including "My piano, I'd burn it to ashes." That comes as quite a shock, since the piano comes across as though it's an appendage of Ondrasik's body. The lyric is cleverly conceived, though, putting the obsession into a perspective that can be felt by the listener. "Boat Parade" begins gently, with Ondrasik's voice sounding like its being recorded through a telephone. As it comes into focus, the steady syncopation turns up into a head-banging electric rock-out. Just when the listener is getting into the uncharacteristic arrangement of the song, it abruptly ends. While Ondrasik may be testing the water with "Boat Parade" to see if there's a favorable response to this harder-edged song, it is unfortunately too brief to register as anything memorable.

There's an overall patriotic feel to America Town, not only with the title, but the song "The Last Great American" as well. In response to the events of Sept. 11, Ondrasik decided to change the last line of the song, because he has seen the nation pull together as one. Originally, the song's protagonist buries himself alive since he's too ashamed to live in this country, but when Ondrasik performs the song live now, he ends it with the character standing proud. Even though the CD contains the original lyric, it helps remind us that this country is a tremendous place to live, and how not to neglect that fact.

America Town is a world of emotion on one recording, and is highly deserving of praise and accolades. It is clearly one of the best albums of the year, and Ondrasik is without a doubt a new talent to take notice of. It gives a new jolt of life to the often-uninspired rock genre of recent years, hopefully marking the beginning of Five for Fighting's illustrious career.

■ Tongues

continued from page 5

Savage.

Accompanists on piano now popularly prefer the term "collaborative pianists" because, as a friend told me, it keeps them from feeling like monkeys. Well, Mr. Savage, I hope I didn't make you feel like an ape because your bowing and pizzicato were just what the Tongues needed. Savage played the upright bass for both sung and spoken works, adding the depth of sound that spoken word performances require in order that their theatricality not suffer in the effort to get a point across. Poets are poets and can be read at one's leisure, but a performing poet must hold your attention steady and sometimes needs an edge to pull off a one-and-a-half hour set.

Well, pull it off they did, with a few snags caused by unfocused passion and its partner in crime, too generous editing. But the Tongues show real promise. After all, they got better as the show went on— not petering out the way one fears such things will end— and surely that speaks well for their future.

the STRING CHEESE INCIDENT
Fri. October 26
Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA
with special guest
Youssou N'Dour
Tickets available 9/11 on-line at SCI TICKETING
www.sciticketing.com
Tickets available on-line and at all Ticketmaster locations on 9/15 at 10 am ticketmaster
ticketmaster.com
To charge by phone call
413-733-2500
Moose locations

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Rollin', Rollin', Rollin'

The No. 14 men's water polo team will host its second home game this afternoon at Amherst College.

A Statement by Concerned Faculty and Staff for Peace in Afghanistan

We, the undersigned faculty and staff, oppose the continuation of the US war in Afghanistan for both moral and political reasons. We are outraged by the loss of life in the September 11 terrorist attacks and agree that the United States government has an obligation to take steps to secure the security of its citizens. But targeting Afghanistan or any nation to retaliate for actions by an international group of terrorists is both immoral and ineffective. It is immoral because civilians will inevitably be killed, causing more unnecessary suffering. It is ineffective because it will not root out this or other networks of terrorists located all over the world. To the contrary, US war actions of this sort will be perceived by those who are already angry at previous US policy in the Middle East and elsewhere in the world as more evidence that our country is a violent aggressor. Thus these actions may, in fact, produce more responses like the September 11 attack. As a consequence the US at the end of this aggressive process will have achieved neither justice nor improved security.

We oppose any restriction on our civil liberties of freedom of speech and association, including pressure on individual faculty, staff or students not to openly express their political opinions, no matter how unpopular they are. We also oppose various anti-terrorism bills before the Congress, which would suspend constitutional rights for immigrants who are suspects. We believe it is important to create a space for critical discussion and debate on the history of the US's involvement in the Middle East and Central Asia, as well as on foreign and domestic policy alternatives to war. In this spirit, we encourage other faculty to create a space for discussion of these issues in their classrooms, or to support student efforts outside of class to promote open and constructive discussion. We believe individuals should suspend "business as usual" and commit themselves to efforts to promote peace and justice.

As goals for the critical space of discussion and investigation called for above, we accept the five points of unity of the Five College Students for a Peaceful Response (SPR).

The Five Points of Unity are as follows:

1. Expressing sympathy with victims of terrorism; 2.Seeking and promoting peaceful alternatives to war; 3.Countering prejudice, specifically toward Arab and Muslim individuals; 4. Protecting civil liberties, and 5. Fostering discussion about American foreign policy.

We would like to add point 6: We urge the US government to cease its present war with Afghanistan and request that the United Nations Security Council establish an international tribunal to try those suspected of terrorism. The UN should determine the nations whose judges are represented on the tribunal. The Security Council should also establish a UN force to arrest terrorists and prevent terrorist attacks, and use other measures deemed necessary, such as economic sanctions on nations and banks that refuse to comply with the freezing of suspects' assets. Such international anti-terrorist mechanisms can provide citizens of the United States with more security than our present policy, and will not continue a war in Afghanistan that is counter-productive and a humanitarian disaster.

UMass faculty and staff signers include: Asya Al-Ashaikh, DPPA; Arlene Avakian, Women's Studies; Lee Badgett, Economics; Stephanie Bergmann, OEB; Joyce Berkman, History; Samuel Bowles, Economics; John Brentlinger, Philosophy Emeritus; John Brigham, Political Science; Elisabeth Chilton, Antropology; Marta Calls, School of Management; Arlyn Diamond, English; James Der Derian, Political Science; Carmen Diana Deere, Economics; Judy Dietel, Economics; Gerald Epstein, Economics; Martin Espada, English; Isabel Espinal, Library; Ann Ferguson, Philosophy and Women's Studies; Nancy Folbre, Economics; Lyn Frazier, Linguistics; Julie Gallagher, History and Women's Studies; Julie Graham, Geo Sciences; Laurie Godfrey, Anthropology; Laura Holland, Art; Julie Hemment, Anthropology; Kirsten Isgro, Communications and Women's Studies; Sut Jhally, Communications; Sangeeta Kamat, Education; Art Keene, Anthropology; Christine King, Nursing ; David Kristjanson, Economics; Elizabeth Krause, Anthropology; Karen Lederer, Women's Studies; Sara Lennox, STPEC and German; Margaret Levenstein, Economics Sara Lewis, English; Leo Maley, History; Stanley Malinowitz, Economics; Sandy Mandel, Everywoman's Center; David Mednicoff, Legal Studies, Near Eastern and Judaic Studies; Elizabeth Miller, Film Studies; Joya Misra, Sociology and Public Policy; Augustin Lao-Montes, Sociology; Anne Lundberg, Education; Sonia Nieto, Education; Ellen Pader, Landscape Architeture and Regional Planning; Enoch H. Page, Anthropology; Susanne Page, Center for Public Policy and Administration; Nancy Campbell Patteson, Women's Studies; Robert Paynter, Anthropology; John Pepe, Office of Waste Management; Kirk Peterson, UIS; Robert Pollin, Economics; Janice Raymond, Women's Studies; Tom Roeper, Linguistics; Srirupa Roy, Political Science; Chizu Sato, Women's Studies; Lisa Saunders, Economics; Lisa Selkirk, Linguistics, William G. Shepherd, Economics; Michael Simsik, Grants Office; Peter Skott, Economics; Linda Smircich, School of Management; John Stifler, Economics; Banu Subramaniam, Women's Studies; Peter Tamas, Education; Suzanne Tiranno, English; Ronald M. Trunzo, Housing Services; Jacqueline Urla, Anthropology; Carol Wallace, Every-woman's Center; Richard Wallace, Anthropology; Viera Lorencova Wallace, Communications; Eileen Walsh, Women's Studies; Beverly Weber, Comparative Literatute; Martin Wobst, Anthropology; Robert Paul Wolff, Afro-American Studies; Nicholas Xenos, Political Science; Christine Yario, Studio Art.

Tennis learn lessons in loss

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

Every coach desires success, measured by winning percentage and overall record. With a total of 242 wins to her credit as the Massachusetts men and women's tennis coach, Judy Dixon is no stranger to such logic. Yet, she also knows the importance of a hard work ethic, which her men's squad exhibited yesterday against the University of Connecticut despite a 5-2 loss.

Though the fall season serves as a warm-up to the grueling amount of Atlantic 10 conference matches that the Maroon and White play every spring, the team always manages to rise to the occasion mentally against bitter rival UConn.

UConn	5
UMass	2

Last year, the Minutemen traveled to Storrs, Conn., only to face a rowdy UConn crowd and bitter wind conditions which contributed to a 5-2 loss. Dixon and crew would have loved to avenge the loss with a win at home on the Upper Boyden courts, but they still took a lot of positives out of this last match of the season.

"I think this was a very well played dual match," said Dixon. "We were a different team today than we were the entire semester. There were many positive pieces to this match."

One main reason for her optimism is the play of senior captain No. 1 player Steve Prisco who again pulled out an amazing win (6-3, 6-4) against Husky No. 1 Mark Furman. Also, freshman and No. 3 player Scott Sans-Leeb rose to the occasion and prevailed against Andy Sweatt 6-2, 4-6, 7-6. Sans-Leeb's win ranks especially high in Dixon's playbook because of his mental toughness and positive attitude.

"Steve played as well as he could and the best he has all season," said Dixon. "[While] Scott worked extremely well today on his mental game. His intensity level was up and he was positive mentally. He had good focus and was active today rather than passive."

The rest of the line-up did not fare as well with all three doubles teams losing to their Husky opponents. The No. 3 tandem of Reid Stubbs and Phil Rodrigues lost a hard fought match 9-8 against the pairing of Adam Sadowski and Sam Sutherland showing some promise for next season. In singles, Stubbs also displayed more confidence and lost in three sets to Mike Louis, a fierce, sharp opponent that performed to his full potential yesterday.

"Reid played much better," said Dixon. "His confidence had been down. He had a focused effort and it was funny that he played a baseliner who has such a similar style to him. His opponent just had more experience and won the big points."

The UConn match concludes the fall season but that does not mean that the UMass men will go into hibernation during the winter months dropping their rackets in favor of pillows. Instead, the squad will take a ten-day break and then begin running and conditioning followed by footwork and lifting in three weeks time. Each player will also receive individual attention from the coaches in one-on-one matches. Prisco and senior Todd Champeau will not break for a few days but for good reason, as they will represent the Maroon and White at the ITA East Regional Championship in Princeton, N.J.

The Minutemen will start the spring season on Feb. 9 in Ithaca, N.Y. for the Cornell Duals followed by a match one week later against Ivy Leaguer Yale. The Minutemen will also host Boston College on Feb. 24 and A-10 opponent George Washington, who declined to play UMass last year due to poor weather, on March 9.

"Even though we lost to UConn, we won so much and I'm positive about the spring," said Dixon. "If Rory [Theis] can come back from his injury, we'll be a force to be reckoned with come February."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The men's tennis team is confident about the spring season that will begin on February 9.

UMass
INTRAMURAL SPORTS

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

3-on-3 Basketball (M/W/C).....10/29
Holiday Basketball (M/W).....10/29
Quickball (M/W).....11/28
Spring Basketball (M/W/C).....12/3

Mandatory clinics for spring basketball officials are scheduled in two parts. Clinics are scheduled for January 28th & 29th at 6pm. And for January 30th & 31th at 7pm. Call for requirements and locations.

www.umass.edu/umim

volleyball

continued from page 12

Massachusetts held LaSalle at bay and won, 30-18.

Kenny said of Small after the match, "That's how Nitia needs to play. She's old enough now to play like that for us." Senior Lauren Vander Veen, who saw limited action Friday night, also got involved in the effort.

The most important stat of the game, though, was UMass' hitting percentage, at .485. The Minutewomen converted on 18 of 33 kill attempts and were overall very solid in every aspect of the game. With only two attack errors, the Maroon and White looked nearly perfect. The one soft spot was the service game, which continued to be less-than stellar with two aces and five errors. Vander Veen and Baxter chipped in with three kills each.

The second game was more of the same for the Minutewomen. Their attacks were just as impressive, with 19 kills on 34 attempts for a .441 hitting percentage. The defense continued to be strong, with 15 digs and 4 blocks, which were split between Small, freshman Carol Matos, Vander Veen and Baxter. The service game also improved, with only three errors. One other star of the game was junior Iitka Stehnova, who contributed seven digs, three kills, and one of the two aces.

The Explorers gave UMass a better game in the third frame, but the Minutewomen held them off and won 30-21. Massachusetts led for almost the entire game, but LaSalle kept it close until late, when UMass surged ahead on the play of Stehnova and Vander Veen, and took advantage of some errors by the Explorers, who had six miscues to the Minutewomen's five. Once again, UMass' hitting was impressive, with 20 kills on 33 attempts, to achieve a .455 hitting percentage.

"Offensively, we played well. I haven't seen .400 [hitting percentage] in a while," said Kenny.

"[The match was] easier, we needed a match like that," she continued. "Hopefully, we can build on this."

The obvious key to the match was the improved attack. "We hit the ball tonight. That's the difference," said Kenny. "I like how aggressive we were on attack."

UMass was also much better in the error column, with a total of 11 errors, 12 less than the previous night's total. This is attributed to a continued, if more controlled, intensity shown by the team, one they will need to carry into the future.

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9

AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.

TUESDAY — KARAOKE — 80s MUSIC! HOSTED BY STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
FRIDAY — RED BULL PROMOTES: PIMP AND HOE PARTY W/ DJS BON BONS & IRISH WEDNESDAY — MASHED RECORDS PRESENTS: DEEP HOUSE W/CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, & JTB — HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
SATURDAY
THURSDAY — STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES — DRUM & BASS SUNDAY

SORRY, NO LONGER DOING SUNDAY BRUNCH. ALL COUPONS HONORED AT DINNER.

STUDENT TRAVEL
Get me the $%#!&@ out of here!
(We understand completely.)
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

COLLEGIAN SPORTS:

WE'LL PLAY HOCKEY ANYWHERE WE PLEASE, DAMN IT!

Cannons don't thunder for UNH

By Kevin Mealey
The New Hampshire (U. New Hampshire)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.H. - It was a game full of missed opportunities for the New Hampshire football team Saturday against the Rams of Rhode Island.

URI remained atop the Atlantic 10 after defeating New Hampshire 31-27. The Rams record is now 7-0 overall and 5-0 in the conference. New Hampshire now has a record of 4-3 overall and 2-3 in the conference.

Rams coach Tim Stowers was happy to come away with the win.

"We are very pleased that we found a way to win," said Stowers. "It's very satisfying to be 7-0."

The running game was the story for Rhode Island. Senior fullback David Jamison rushed 45 times for a total of 260 yards rushing. As a team the Rams rushed for 450 yards.

After the game, New Hampshire head coach Sean McDonnell only had nice things to say about Jamison's performance.

"He's one of the best football players in this conference right now," said McDonnell.

"I really appreciate watching a kid like that play football. Jamison is a warrior. He just keeps going and going and going."

UNH moved the ball with relative ease on its first series, getting to the Rhode Island 10-yard line. The Wildcats couldn't punch it in and had to settle for a field goal attempt. Unfortunately for the Cats, senior kicker Shawn MacLean wasn't on his game on Saturday. MacLean's kick sailed wide left and UNH came away with no points. Coach McDonnell realizes mistakes like that won't lead to many victories.

"Being down close and coming away with nothing, you can't do that against good teams and they're [URI] a good team," said McDonnell.

Rhode Island scored on its second possession to take a 7-0 lead. Quarterback Vince Nedjmyer scrambled for a 13-yard touchdown on what looked like a broken play.

On UNH's next possession, the Wildcats had a punt blocked, giving the Rams great field position and an early opportunity to take a commanding lead. The New Hampshire defense held strong and only allowed a field goal, which made the score 10-0 in favor of the Rams.

Junior tailback Stephan Lewis added to UNH's troubles when he coughed up the football giving Rhode Island possession deep in UNH territory again. URI moved the ball to the Wildcat 29-yard line when the drive stalled. The Rams went for it on fourth down and the UNH defense came up with the stop.

It looked like UNH would start the second quarter strong, marching down to the Rhode Island 5-yard-line, but once again couldn't punch it in for six. The Cats settled for a field goal and cut the Ram lead to seven.

The Wildcats tied it up after senior defensive lineman Mike Wells recovered a fumble on the URI 20-yard line.

With 3:30 left before the half Rhode Island was faced with a fourth down in its own territory. Jamison took a direct snap off right tackle for a Ram first down. URI took advantage of the momentum marching down the field and scoring with only 55 seconds left in the half to make the score 17-10 Rhode Island.

UNH came right back putting together, a scoring on the next drive and came up with a field goal with just two seconds left. The score at halftime was 17-13.

Mistakes continued to plague the Wildcats as they moved the ball into the red zone, but again couldn't score a touchdown. MacLean missed for the second time on the afternoon.

URI scored on its next possession making the score 24-13 Rams.

The Cats brought the game to within three points when Day hit senior wide receiver Brian Mallette on an 18-yard pass play making the score 24-21.

A late interception by freshman cornerback Aaron Thomas gave the Wildcats a chance to take the lead but again UNH couldn't capitalize on the turnover.

Rhode Island continued to pound the ball with Jamison and eventually scored to go up on top 31-21.

New Hampshire made one last-ditch effort by scoring on a 23-yard pass from Day to freshman wide receiver David Bailey. The extra point was blocked and the score was 31-27, which is how the game would end.

McDonnell shared his frustration after the game.

"I'm very disappointed," said McDonnell. "They [URI] gave us an opportunity and the difference was they found a way to win and we found a way to lose."

McDonnell did give credit to Rhode Island.

"My hat goes off to that football program over there," said McDonnell. "He's [Coach Stowers] done a tremendous job getting those kids to want to play hard."

Wildcat senior defensive end Jon Oosterhuis felt the team played tough but just didn't come through in the end. He did, however, vow not to let it turn out like that again.

"We played really hard and then we let up a little bit and they got a big play on us," said Oosterhuis. "That won't happen anymore."

New Hampshire has an even tougher task this weekend as they travel to Hempstead, N.Y., to take on Hofstra.

NFL's strange season continues

We have completed week six of the NFL season and I have shown why I do not like to make picks before the season begins. This weekend was the weirdest I had seen in a long time. Take these games for instance:

The Browns beat the Browns, at least the team that they beat used to be the Browns, the Falcons beat the Saints, shouldn't happen. The Steelers beat bland-as-hell Tampa Bay, which, looking at the matchup from the beginning of the season, that should not of happened. The Chargers got past the Broncos. The Bolts had just one win last year; they shouldn't have won this one. The Eagles beat the Giants on Monday Night, the same night the Yankees won the ALCS; that should not happen. Neither, by the way, should the Yankees outscore the Giants, which they did on that night. The Patriots clocked the Colts again, beating the Colts by a combined 82-30 in two games this year with Tom Brady as your quarterback, shouldn't happen. And the Daniel Snyder Comedy Hour known as the Washington Redskins won a game, which legally should not happen.

DR. DAVID ROSE

The two Super Bowl teams from last year, the Ravens and Giants are both 3-3 on the season. These are a sample of six teams that are tied or ahead of the G-Men and Ravens in the NFL standings: San Francisco, San Diego, Cincinnati, Cleveland, New England and Atlanta. What do these teams together have in common? Last year, these six teams had less wins combined (23) than the two defending league champs (24). They are all in the hunt for the playoffs and the Ravens and Giants are struggling to find any offense to go with their stingy defenses.

One of those teams, the Patriots, supposedly played a game against the Colts. I do not know whether they played the Colts from Indianapolis, because it was hard to distinguish New England's opponent from my brother's 1993 freshman football team at Rockville High School in the C.T. (0-8-1; wasn't pretty!). This was pathetic. What is even more pathetic is that David Patten's name is now next to Walter Payton's. How the hell does that happen? I'll tell you how; you plan the Indianapolis Colts defense. How else could Patten, who had 0 touchdowns going into last week, decide to become Jim Thorpe. Just put them in front of the Colts supp. D and, next thing you know, even the Buccaneers could be confused with the St. Louis Rams.

Speaking of Tampa Bay, what the hell are we watching with this team? When I thought they couldn't get any blander, guess what, they are rejoicing in our nation's capital, they won a game in which no one deserved to win. They beat Carolina 17-14 in overtime. This game begs the question, what are Marty Schottenheimer and George Seifert thinking? They were having great careers, until they both decided to come back and join in this sucktest. They both might get the break of a lifetime at the end of this season: they will both be fired and get out of this muck.

And I can't go any further without talking about the Ravens. Do you think Trent Dilfer is looking really good right now or what? Elvis Grbac can't move this team down the field and the defense has looked, dare I say, human the last two weeks. The Browns were waiting six years for this moment. They were waiting for a respectable chance to beat the team that bolted for Baltimore after the 1995 season. They took advantage of their chance. Rookie Jamelackson ran for close to 80 yards and Tim Couch made two perfect touchdown passes after Raven turnovers. Some people thought that Butch Davis brought too much of his collegiate coaching aspects to the pros. They were right, he brought something from the college ranks: winning.

And I would be missing the point if I didn't talk about the 6-0 Rams. Trung Canidate start for Marshall Faulk garnered him 195 yards and two touchdowns. This team is clearly the best team in the league and plays their nemesis, the New Orleans Saints this weekend. With or without Faulk, the Rams look to be in good shape with Canidate in backfield with a healthy Kurt Warner at the helm of the best offense in the league.

Also, the game against the Jets proved who is the worst tackler in the NFL, lets QB Vinny Testaverde. Why don't you just give Aeneas Williams a piggyback ride into the end zone the next time he gets that close?

Anyways, now it is time for me to tackle a six-pack of picks this week. Last week I was 2-2, getting sacked when the Giants couldn't hold onto a late lead against the Eagles, leaving me at 4-5-1 for the year.

Indianapolis goes to Kansas City on Thursday night. Somehow one of these teams had to be favored in the game. The Colts are three-point favorites. I am still trying to figure out how this happened. The Colts defense on the road, after giving up 38 to the Pats, how are they favored? Take the Chiefs.

Let's see, Seattle looked like crap offensively with Matt Hasselback at the helm. They then proceed to win two straight with Trent Dilfer at the controls. So the natural thing for Mike Holmgren to do is bench Dilfer and put Hasselback into the starting role, against a Miami team coming off a bye. The Dolphins are only favored by two and a half points. The Seahawks will be lucky to score two this week, take the 'Phins.

The San Diego Chargers host the Buffalo Bills this weekend. Has Doug Flutie been licking his chops for this game? The Bills beat the Jaguars last week, but there is a difference between San Diego and Jacksonville; the Chargers are good, the Jags are not. Flutie will show up Rob Johnson this week and get his revenge. Favored by 7 1/2 - take the Chargers.

In my other attempts to get back over .500 for the season, look for the Titans to bounce back to .500 themselves for the season and put an end to Pittsburgh's four game winning streak on Monday Night. Favored by three, give me Tennessee.

In an unexpected matchup of teams with the same record, it is the 3-3 Patriots and the 3-3 Broncos. The Broncos go back home and need this game badly. They own the Pats and that will continue. Give me the Broncos favored by 7 1/2.

Finally, you might need to read this twice to realize what team I am going to pick. The Giants just suffered a frustrating loss on Monday Night to Philadelphia. The Redskins are coming off a win. The Giants are favored by 7 1/2. This is too many points. I am going against everything that I just said and I am taking the Skins as the underdog.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist

SPORTS: our writers are cool...NO REALLY!

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
Yo! Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! UMASS Starting Under $20!
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Happy Wednesday from the Tuesday Night Staff! Love, Rob, Jim, Esther, and Kojak

NEW RELEASES FROM SCI FIDELITY RECORDS

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490 $6500 Earn Good

EMPLOYMENT

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995. 922 Campus Center.

Survey Personnel Needed for PVTA Ridershop Study - The Pioneer Valley Planning Commission (PVPC) will be conducting a ridership survey of all PVTA routes in Amherst from November 1 through November 8, 2001. Surveyors will be paid $9.50 to $10.50/hour to distribute/collect survey forms, answer questions, and collect ridership information. All shifts are available. Applications will be accepted until October 26, 2001. For applications call 413-781-6045 or apply in person at PVPC, 26 Central St., West Springfield, MA 01089. PVPC is an EOE/AA employer.

EMPLOYMENT

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

tion work from home $1200-$5000 per month. 800-953-7104

www.FluidVisions.com

COACHES WANTED Amherst Leisure Services is looking for enthusiastic college students with a background in basketball to coach in the Amherst Youth Basketball league. These are volunteer positions, with an average commitment of 2-5 hours a week. Every coach will go thru a coaching certification program. There will be an orientation meeting for anyone interested in learning more about the coaching in the league on Monday, October 29, 2001 at 7:00 p.m. at the Bangs Community Center. The Bangs Center is located behind Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at thomasm@townamherst.ma.us

EMPLOYMENT

Research Interviewers. No selling or cold calls. Set your own schedule Evenings and weekends Competitive pay- 20+ hours per week. Hadley location. PVTA acessible. For more infor call FMI Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381

AttenMoney in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

ENTERTAINMENT

Montreal Weekend Specials From $89 Includes round trip motorcoach from Boston/Springfield or Hartford. 3days 2nights Hotel Downtown Montreal. 1 Breakfast 1 Dinner free admission to Club Dome
Nov. 2-4 $89
Nov. 9-11 $99
Nov. 16-18 $99
Nov. 23-25 $99
Nov. 30-Dec. 2 $99
Dec. 30-Jan 1 $109-$119
Contact Global Tours 533 Main Street, Melrose, MA 02176 781-665-4100

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are still booking for fall semester. Call 537-8527

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR ! NFORMATION!!!

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Dijata Bumpus. In Amherst Call 413-731-1450.

MISCELLANEOUS

Free Firewood, some cut, some on ground. Perfect for woodstove. Bring chain saw and truck 665-8736

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females to share room. Town Houses in Amherst. Lease starting Jan 1. 413-549-8162

ROOM WANTED

2 Females Looking for room to rent on bus route. Starting from January. Call 546-7196

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

#1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

Need to Advertise???

You have our number!!!

545-3500
545-3500
545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Hampshire Services Cable Network

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 24, 2001

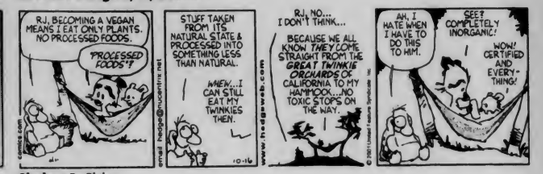
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Legendary Lighthouses (N)		Rock, Rhythm and Doo Wop (In Stereo)		Wolf Lake "Four Feet Under"		Beyond the Moon (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Amazing Race (In Stereo)		Wolf Lake "Four Feet Under"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Amazing Race (In Stereo)		Wolf Lake "Four Feet Under"		News	Late Show
WGVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife Kids	Accordng-Jim	Drew Carey	Bob Patterson	20/20		Friends	Raymond
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends		Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News		Hollywood	Extra	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Ways and Means"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)		Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity (N) (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	9	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Ways and Means"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)		News	Raymond
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: NLCS Game 7 -- Diamondbacks or Cardinals vs. Braves						News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "Ways and Means"		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	1	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Legendary Lighthouses (N)		Rock, Rhythm and Doo Wop (In Stereo)				News	Nightline
WGGB	28	News	ABC News	Political Debate		My Wife Kids	Accordng-Jim	Drew Carey	Bob Patterson	20/20		5th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Frasier	Enterprise "Terra Nova" (N)		Special Unit 2 "The Invisible"		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	News	Nightline
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		s*h "Sodder" (1998, Science Fiction) Kurt Russell				Law & Order	Navy Blues
A&E	17	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Imelda Marcos		American Justice		City Confidential		Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	20	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
COM	19	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	s*h "Half Baked" (1998, Comedy) Dave Chappelle		Storm		South Park	Primetime	Deadline Discovery (N)
DISC	23	Wild Discovery: Indonesia		Wild Discovery: Caribou						Flood of the Millennium		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Sportscenter		Reggie Jackson		NHL Hockey: Dallas Stars at Pittsburgh Penguins. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	15	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Bette Midler"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"No Ordinary Baby" (2001, Drama) Bridget Fonda				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	13	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Music Videos (In Stereo)		Michael Jackson Videos		Michael Jackson's Ghost (N)		Criminal (N)	Dismissed	Dismissed (N)	Music Videos
NICK	14	Oddparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Spongeb		Spongeb		Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers
SCIFI	16	Star Trek: "Tomorrow Intruder"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Farscape (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "The Grid"		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Family Ties	Family Ties
TLC	26	Without Warn.	Without Warn.	Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Motorcycles -- Born to Be Wild		Junkyard Wars "Power Pull"		When Pilots Elect (N)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TNT	18	NYPD Blue "Sleep Over"		Pretender "Jarrdon" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Empire"		s*h "Baghdad" (1999, Drama) Julia Ormond, Jeremy Irons		Christopher Lambert		Motorcycles -- Born to Be Wild
USA	25	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Smoked" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Cop Out"		Nash Bridges "Cop Out"		s*h "Portland 2" (N) (In Stereo)		Martin	"Remains-Day"
HBO	31	s*h "Oscar" (1991, Comedy) Sylvester Stallone. "PG"				Reverb (N) (In Stereo)		Reverb (N) (In Stereo)		Curb-Entham	Wind-Married	Band of Brothers (In Stereo)	Martin
MAX	32	(5:45) s "Rain Man" (1988, Drama) Dustin Hoffman. "R"				 "American Psycho" (2000, Satire) Christian Bale. "R"				s "The Perfect Storm" (2000, Drama) George Clooney. "PG-13"		Dr. A Word to the Wise
SHOW	33	s*h "Molly" (1999, Drama) Elisabeth Shue. "PG-13"				"Possessed" (2000, Horror) Timothy Dalton. (TV) (In Stereo)				Soul Food (TV) (In Stereo)		Resurrection Blvd. (TV)

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Mr. Gnu By Travis Dandro

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Skybox By Blake

Quote of the Day

> "Clevinger had a mind, and Lieutenant Scheisskoph had noticed that people with minds tended to get pretty smart at times."
>
> - Catch-22

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 72 LOW: 56	HIGH: 70 LOW: 37	HIGH: 55 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Someone is likely to be nagging and even highly critical of you today, but you can counter with some very real insights. Speak your mind!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Things that seem most promising today may actually prove to be quite a disappointment. Focus, instead, on the unlikely.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You and a friend or loved one can surely work out your differences today if only one of you will make the first move. It may be up to you!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You may be approached by someone who is confident you can help – but do you really want to? A little resentment may be unavoidable today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Your considerate, understanding nature may put you in a position of higher risk today. Be ready to answer an assault with strong defenses.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Do you really know what you're talking about, or are you simply hoping that no one will take the time to explore further? Get the facts!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Never underestimate the power of your own imagination - particularly today, when even a single thought can lead to major development.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may be seeking to get out of a negative situation, but you may actually be increasing your chances of danger if you are not careful.

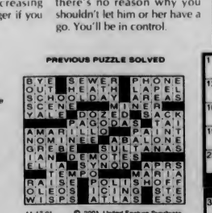
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may do more than encounter a situation that is highly volatile – you may actually cause it! If so, you are the one to defuse it, too.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Even the most stubborn door is soonest opened through gentleness, not force. Today, the same holds true for someone you're trying to get to know.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Potential is high today, and you are in a position to exercise a little more authority than usual. Take care that you don't become too aggressive.

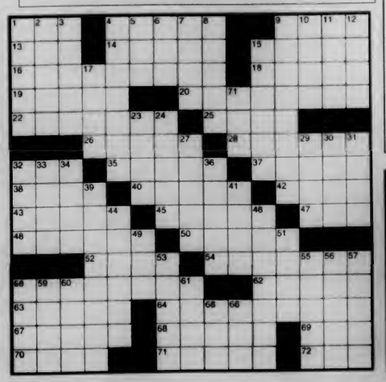
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Someone may be trying to steal your thunder today – and there's no reason why you shouldn't let him or her have a go. You'll be in control.

Sheep By Arthur Poor



Got regret?

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900



ACROSS
1 Elec. unit
4 Of the Arctic
9 Baby bed
13 "Annabel Lee" poet
14 Dunne or Castle
15 Nut these
16 Natural spa
18 Tads
19 Annoyed
20 Gunwale devices
22 Misleads
25 Back muscles, in the gym
26 Bears' counterparts
28 Texehouse hostess
32 Sun protector
35 Braid
37 Tender
38 Heavy burden
40 Starry prefix
42 — avis
43 Heredity factors
45 Leaders
47 Consumer protection org.
48 Perspiring
50 Fume
52 Night crawler
54 Secrecy
56 Financial setback
62 Pitcher Martinez
63 Cagér Olajuwon
64 It will give you a rash
67 Lacking
68 It makes all the stops
69 Map abbr.
70 Recipe amts.
71 Novelist Zola
72 Actor Beatty

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-17-01 © 2001, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Rose pest
2 Roger who played 007
3 Flower part
4 Spoke
5 Bobby of hockey
6 Flower garland
7 Part of A.D.
8 Majestic
9 Picker
10 Campus military org.
11 Writer Dinesen
12 Porgy's love
15 Learned
17 Ticket part
21 Scrap of cloth
23 Wilcox or Raines
24 Cut prices drastically
27 Places
29 Wild guess
30 Chef's need
31 Fine steed
32 Pigs
33 From square one
34 Ditty
36 Hobo
39 Ocean vegetation
41 Bloodhound's clue
44 Thundering
46 Alpine gear
49 Time drive
51 Steady
53 Vermont syrup
55 Decorate
56 Bin
57 Paired, as oxen
58 Talk wildly
59 — out: makes do with
60 Prexy's assistant
61 Weaver's need
65 "Here, Henri"
66 "Gal" of song

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Pork Lo Mein

Ravioli Alfredo (vegetarian)

Beans & Rice (vegan)

DINNER

Mandarin Chickin

Harvest Burger (vegan) (W Basics only)

Mandarin Tofu (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Rob Schulze
Senior Editor: Scott Eldridge II
Senior Editor: Ken Campbell
Production Manager: Esther Donzig
Production Staff: Pete Preston, Mike Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass runs out of gas

Emotion fuels visiting Big Green to regional victory

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Leads are like lovers. You're in Heaven while you have one, but losing one feels like Hell.

The Massachusetts field hockey team held onto a one-goal lead for most of the game against Dartmouth, but ended up on the short end of a 2-1 overtime loss in its final home contest of the season last night at Richard F. Garber Field. Senior Lindsay Abbott got the Minutewomen (8-8, 5-0 Atlantic 10) on the board at the 11:12 mark of the first half, but the Big Green took control by scoring the equalizer with 8:14 remaining in regulation and the game-winner 7:18 into the extra set.

"We had control of the game, but we just let Dartmouth get the upper hand emotionally," said UMass head coach Patty Shea, who had guided her team to five straight wins heading into last night. "It was them you saw diving on the turf for the ball, not us. They seemed like they wanted it more."

Dartmouth (10-4, 2-2 Ivy League) certainly showed aggression early, albeit at a level that almost paid off for the home team instead. Big Green keeper Kirsen Anderson came streaking out of goal on UMass' very first offensive attack and basically slide-tackled Maroon and White senior Kaitlyn Byron. UMass was awarded its first penalty corner a mere 1:30 into the game, though a swarm of defenders swallowed up Anke Bruemmer's ensuing shot.

"Our game plan coming in was to attack the ball and not let them get anything off," Anderson said. "I'm an aggressive goalie anyway, but tonight I wasn't going to let them get anything easy."

Even Anderson's aggression couldn't keep the Maroon and White out of Dartmouth's net entirely, though. Junior Sarah Bohonowicz set up the home team's lone score by rifling a centering pass through a chaotic melee in front of the Big Green goal, which Abbott was able to nimbly redirect past the sprawling Anderson.

The goal was Abbott's second of the season, while Bohonowicz picked up her first assist of the year.

"Sarah and I have this kind of connection, we always have," said Abbott, whose hometown of Northampton lies within 12 miles of Bohonowicz's South Deerfield roots. "I knew what she was going to do and I just timed it perfectly. I stuck my stick out and the ball went right in."

The Minutewomen cruised with the 1-0 lead right up until the closing seconds of the first half, when a defensive miscue gave Dartmouth a free shot at hocking the game. UMass defender Jill Fantasia tried to clear the ball and inadvertently struck her own foot, giving the Big Green a penalty corner with 11 seconds on the clock.

Dartmouth's Kate Alexander botched the stop on the ensuing set piece, but Shea was still left bemoaning her team's lack of focus.

"You can't allow yourself to zone out at critical points of the game," Shea said. "You can't allow a team to get a penalty corner in the final minute of a half. Sooner or later it's going to cost you."

UMass wouldn't pay the price until Lauren Welsh drove home Dartmouth's first goal over 36 minutes into the second half. The Big Green junior got great positioning deep in the UMass circle as teammate Rebekka Stucker drove with the ball, and Welsh needed only a tap to redirect Stucker's ensuing shot past Maroon and White keeper Ashley Eglund.

"There really aren't a lot of things you can do to stop a breakaway goal like that," Fantasia said. "We just needed to stop the play higher on the field, instead of letting them get that far into our circle. It was more of a mental mistake than anything else."

The overtime period saw Dartmouth come at the home team with renewed intensity, as Stucker took advantage of the free space created by the 7-on-7 format to slash repeatedly to the UMass goal. Stucker said afterward that her plan for the entire game was to put pressure on Eglund, to exploit the goalie's youth and eventually spell the home team's demise.

"Whenever you have a young keeper, you want to get as many shots on her as you can," said Stucker, who said she was unaware that Eglund had pitched four straight shutouts heading into last night's action.

The Big Green sophomore appeared foiled in her plan when Minutewoman Heather Kenney swiped the ball from her at the 8:05 mark of OT. But the official near the play awarded Dartmouth a penalty corner on the play, which the Big Green promptly converted to the game winner via a Carolyn Steele blast.

"I thought that [Kenney] made a great tackle on the play, but we shouldn't be in a position where a call like that even matters," Shea said. "It's just a shame because Heather has been our best player, our most consistent player all season. She just keeps getting better and better."

The Minutewomen will now hit the road for Virginia, where they will close out their conference action against Richmond at noon on Saturday. The regular season will conclude when UMass takes on Virginia Commonwealth on Sunday, which is also slated for a noon start.

GERALD ENG/COLLEGIAN

Senior Sarah Bohonowicz tallied her seventh career assist in yesterday's loss to Dartmouth.

Minutewomen jumping for joy with two straight wins

Llovet's return inspires victory

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

After destroying LaSalle over the weekend with an explosive attack, the Massachusetts volleyball team was looking to enact its wrath against another opponent. Unfortunately for Providence, its name was next on the

UMass	3
Providence	0

Minutewomen's schedule.

The Maroon and White made quick work of the visiting Friars, 3-0, as it continued the dominance it showed on Saturday against the Explorers. UMass (11-9 overall, 4-6 A-10) finished the evening with a .375 hitting percentage while holding Providence to an anemic .190 percentage, and the home team helped its cause by committing only 10 errors on the evening. Moreover, the Minutewomen enjoyed the return of senior outside hitter Lymarie Llovet, back after missing the last three matches with a severe ankle sprain.

"Our hitting was fine tonight," Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "We passed poorly, but were able to get kills."

The Minutewomen have had struggles with their attack in the opening games of recent matches, but these problems seemed to vanish over the last two matches. After allowing Providence to jump out to an early 8-2 lead, the Maroon and White wiped away the deficit quickly, as Clare Baxter and Nitia Small combined on a block to make the Friar lead a mere one point at 9-8.

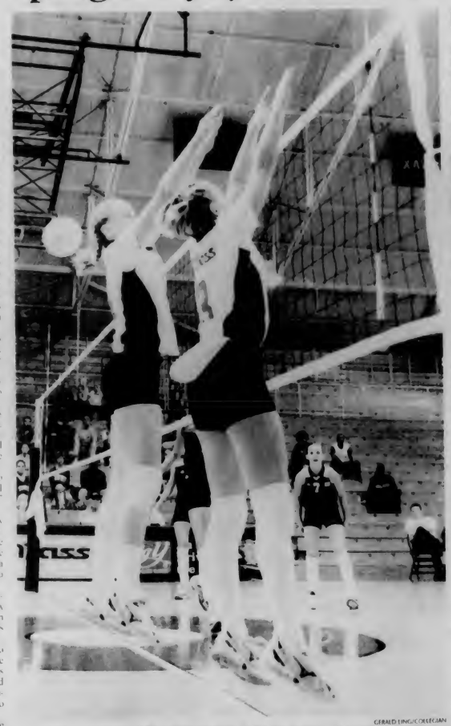
Later in the game, with the visitors leading 15-14, UMass rallied off five straight points, highlighted by kills from Baxter and senior Janeen DeMarte, staking it a four-point advantage at 19-15. Providence could never rally off more than two straight points for the rest of the game, and a Maroon and White victory in game one was punctuated by a Baxter kill as UMass took the opener, 30-23.

Game two was a seesaw battle between the two squads, as UMass jumped out 6-2 as Lauren Vander Veen terminated three kills to the Curry Hicks Cage floor early. Later in the match, with the score tied at 16, the Friar attack caught fire, as it received four kills and a service ace to take charge, 21-16. However, UMass fought back, receiving a Small kill to cut the deficit to 22-20, and then with the score tied at 26, two aces from Ami Chan and a Vander Veen kill gave the home team a 30-27 victory and a 2-0 lead going into the break.

One of the strengths of this year's squad is coming out of the locker room strongly, and at no time was this trait more evident than Tuesday night. Not only were the visitors "fried" in the third game, but they were also baked, fricasseed, fulminned, and flambeed as UMass stampeded to a 14-5 advantage before the Friars knew what hit them. UMass' attack was clicking on all cylinders early in game three, as nine different Minutewomen accumulated at least one kill in the frame. Providence tried to cut into the overwhelming deficit, but could never get closer than seven points, and Baxter finished off the overmatched visitors with her ninth kill to give UMass a 30-21 victory, and a 3-0 win.

"I don't think we played as well as we did against LaSalle," Kenny said. "But it was never in doubt that we were going to lose it.

"They didn't do anything to stay in the match; we allowed them to with unforced errors," Kenny added. Vander Veen finished with 14 kills to lead the team, and Small (10 kills, 8 digs) and Baxter (9 kills, .527 hitting percentage) also played extremely solid games for the Minutewomen.



"My goal tonight was just to go out and hit as hard as I could, and I think I was pretty successful," Vander Veen said.

The Maroon and White also took advantage of its depth off the bench as Kenny inserted reserves Renee Sewell and Sam Hartwell into the starting lineup, and backups Audra Bodenstab and Amanda Thomas also saw extended action.

"I think [giving a variety of players] worked well, and if we can mix it up, that's great," Vander Veen said. "One of the key things on this team is our versatility."

As the Minutewomen travel to the Buckeye State to face two of the top teams in the Atlantic 10 this upcoming weekend (Dayton and Xavier), they will look to their dominant performance from last night to bring some momentum to the table.

"This was definitely a confidence match to go into Dayton and Xavier," Kenny said.

GERALD ENG/COLLEGIAN

Lauren Vander Veen and Jitka Stehnova reach to the sky to thwart an attack attempt. UMass trounced Providence last night, 3-0.

Minutewomen recover after letdown vs. Temple

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts volleyball team split two games this weekend, but showed more confidence than it has so far this season. It also received better contributions from the key components of the team.

Temple	3
UMass	0
UMass	3
La Salle	0

On Friday night, the Minutewomen came out hustling, diving for balls and showing a lot of effort, but all was for naught, as they lost to Temple, 3-0. In the first game, the Owls beat the Maroon and White by a score of 30-16. Temple dominated with a .478 hitting percentage, converting on 13 kills out of 23 attempts.

Temple's servers also spelled the Minutewomen, landing three aces with only two errors. UMass, on the other hand, had only eight kills on 27 attempts, for a dismal .037 hitting percentage. From the line, the Minutewomen were less than impressive, with one ace and one error. Even more alarming were the nine hitting errors made by Massachusetts in the first string.

In the second game, the story was much the same. UMass improved in hitting, garnering 13 kills for 34 attempts. Serving declined, though, as the Minutewomen had no aces and four errors. However, Temple kept up the impressive play, and won the middle game 30-17. The key to the win for Temple was stifling any rallies the Maroon and White could put together. UMass was only able to put together two continued rallies. Temple kept on with its strong offense, amassing 16 kills in 39 attempts for a .333 kill percentage.

The Minutewomen couldn't improve much in the third set, as the Owls finished them off 30-21. The Maroon and White did attempt a comeback in the later part of the game though, chipping away at the Temple lead, until the Owls finally brought the game, and the match, to an end.

"We couldn't do anything offensively tonight," said UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny, who was at a bit of a loss to find the bright spots Friday. "Clare [Baxter] and Celia [Wiste] did a good job on offense tonight, but they slipped on defense."

Kenny's words could have applied to the whole team, as the energy was certainly present, but the Minutewomen couldn't execute the things needed to win.

Saturday night's game was a different story. In looking at the LaSalle match, Kenny said, "It would be nice to taste what it's like to win again. We need to perform, [and] we're not taking anything for granted."

The Minutewomen's intensity matched that of Friday night, but this time, they also performed at a higher level.

In the first game of the Saturday tilt with the Explorers, UMass dominated throughout, with very few miscues, which would set the tone for the rest of the evening. Led by sophomore Nitia Small and senior Janeen DeMarte, who each posted five kills in the game,

Turn to VOLLEYBALL, page 8

Check out our spooky haunted house in arts.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team faces Providence Friday. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 12

Volume CVIII Issue 36 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, October 25, 2001

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

John Hill spoke about his autobiography "Splitting the Sky."

Anti-Columbus Day NA activist lectures

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

Activist John Hill, also known as Dacajeweiah, kicked off the African Latino Asian Native American (ALANA) Lecture Series with an Anti-Columbus Day presentation last night at the University of Massachusetts' Cape Cod Lounge.

Dacajeweiah, focusing on the issues of indigenous sovereignty, spoke mainly of his life as outlined in his autobiography, Splitting the Sky. Present during the Attica prison rebellion as well as the Geneinkeh, Okah and Gustafsen Lake rebellions, Dacajeweiah has been called a freedom fighter with a list of political organizing triumphs in "this struggle for human decency – the struggle for human rights."

Dacajeweiah was chosen to speak for the Anti-Columbus Day presentation, which was aimed at celebrating activism and resistance, to emphasize the misconceptions of Christopher Columbus' discovery of America and colonization in general.

Columbus is described by Dacajeweiah as "a known murderer, a

Turn to COLUMBUS, page 3

Professor criticizes bombings

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Surveys have shown that over 90 percent of Americans support bombing strikes against Afghanistan, and see a military response as the only viable option in the wake of the World Trade Center attacks. Yet, as the rows of peace protestors that gather every Sunday in Amherst and Northampton prove, there remain many who oppose such actions. They fear that the violence is misguided, and will serve to punish civilians rather than terrorists.

The concerns of anti-war advocates were voiced at Smith College yesterday by Abdullahi Ahmed An-Na'im, an Emory University law professor. An-Na'im delivered a lecture, titled, "Islamic Reformation Between September 11 and October 7: Irrational Optimism Against All Odds," in which he criticized both the actions of terrorists and the US government.

"As a Muslim, I acknowledge responsibility for Islamic terrorism," he said. "It's only by acknowledging my responsibility for mine, that I can demand that you accept responsibility for yours."

Before mentioning the attacks or the US response, however, An-Na'im began his lecture by giving a historical background of Islamic extremism.

"Despite its prominence, Islamic militancy of the nature we encountered is a modern phenomenon, post-1950s," he said. "It's the exception rather than the rule throughout Muslim history.

"An item I have to explain," he continued, "is 'Sharia' – often translated as Islamic law. Sharia is more than a law, though, in that it is a blueprint for a total way of life. It is less than a law, though, in that it is not a positive law – to enforce Sharia as the law of a state is a contradiction of terms.

"Sharia is a very rich, exciting aspect of Muslim life," he said. "But it is being hijacked by so-called fundamentalists."

One aspect of Islam that is widely misunderstood is the concept of Sharia-supported war, or "jihad."

"The notion of jihad has been hijacked in a lot of ways," An-Na'im said. "Let me be clear about what it means. War is forbidden by the Sharia except in two cases: self-defense, and the propagation of the Islamic faith.

"Does September 11 constitute a jihad?" he asked. "In my book, it does not." An-Na'im pointed out that jihad forbids attacks on non-combatants.

It was at this point in the lecture that An-Na'im responded to America's military actions against Afghanistan.

"I have nothing but unqualified condemnation for the crimes of September 11," he said, "and nothing I am saying about the US and its retaliation diminishes or takes away from that condemnation...but what has happened since October 7 [the date when the US began bombing Taliban strongholds] has diminished modernist Islamic voices. It is an illegitimate use of force that undermines modernist projects of Muslim scholars and intellectuals."

An-Na'im described what he saw as a "consistent lawlessness" on the part of the US. He accused America of legitimizing terrorism and the use of force in international relations, and cited as examples US involvement in the Congo,

Turn to BOMBINGS, page 3

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

I want to be like Tony Hawke!
Three Amature skateboarders practice their moves on the steps of LGRC.

Sign bandit hits museum

The Amherst History Museum will be forced to tap into renovation funds to replace the brand-new business sign stolen earlier this month if it is not recovered within the week, according to the museum's director.

The $1,000 business sign was funded by community contributions through the preservation and improvement of the historic house campaign and had been completed only two months prior to its disappearance.

"We're a small organization, this affects us, affects our pocket book," said Museum Director Melinda Lelacheur. After a week and a half since the incident, the museum must consider a new sign. However, the money for a new sign would be derived from a fund intended to preserve the historic house which currently shows signs of water damage and is half-painted.

Museum volunteers who run the interpretive programs noticed the sign missing on Oct. 13. They reported the incident to the local police who have not been able to come up with any leads and said they will be on the look out for the sign, said Lelacheur.

Without any solid evidence from the police, Lelacheur has her own theories on what may have happened to the sign. She speculates that with the many initiations for various organizations within the college community, the stealing of the sign could have been a dare. Lelacheur said, "I'm hoping it was a late night prank. I hope it didn't end up in a dumpster anywhere."

However, Lelacheur is cautious not to blame the college community because that has not been proved. The intention behind the sign-stealing is unclear and that the sign "doesn't have any value, [it's] not a cool sign, there's nothing quirky or interesting on it."

The sign was designed by Lelacheur and Porcupine Signs of Northampton and reads "Amherst History Museum at the Strong House, 67 Amity Street, National Register of Historic Places." It was a

Turn to SIGN, page 3

Shadows of doubt surround UMass statistics

Are we safe?

UMASS Escort Service

By Jennifer Eastwood and Melissa Hommel
Collegian Staff

Campus Safety has been a growing concern for college students, their parents, their friends, school faculty and administrators. Walking home late at night or leaving one's dorm door unlocked while visiting a neighbor may seem like such simple, everyday acts. However, how safe are they?

The University of Massachusetts Public Safety department reported that about 17,000 calls for police service, 2,300 incidents reports, and between 300 and 400 arrests are made on campus each year.

Let us further a discussion on some of the causes for the most common or dangerous crimes and examine how UMass compares to other college campuses across the United States (US). Ultimately, the question remains as to whether or not these statistical numbers leave students feeling safe or unsafe on their own campuses.

UMass Campus Safety

The Jeanne Clery Act Report, an in-depth study done of all US colleges/universities, publicizes crime rate statistics for each campus every year. According to the 2000 Clery report, UMass experienced 30 cases of forcible sex offences, 131 accounts of burglary, and 449 cases of larceny last calendar year.

For reference, the report defined "forcible sex offences" as rape, sexual assault with an object, and/or forced fondling or sodomy. Burglary was defined as an "unlawful entry into a building or other structure with the intent to commit a felony or a theft," while larceny was said to be an "unlawful taking, carrying leading, or riding away of property from the possession, or constructive possession, of another person."

Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor, the head of the UMass Public Safety department, sounded a warning when looking at raw numbers such as those given in the Clery report.

"Statistics can be deceiving things," she explained, "As people become more aware of the services available to them on campus, people are more willing to report crimes."

In particular, she noted that one should be especially critical in reviewing statistics of forcible sexual offenses.

"There may be more [cases than reported] because of the sensitivity of that crime," said O'Connor.

She added that, as more people become comfortable at calling forcible sex crimes to attention due to more education opportunities informing students about such crimes, the statistics might actually rise over the years. And not because more crimes are being committed, but instead because the same amount of crimes are being more accurately reported. Loopholes such as these, she pointed out, make comparing statistics difficult.

"90.9 percent of the time," O'Connor emphasized, "we deal with acquaintance rapes," noting her belief that this should be highlighted above all else when informing both male and female students about sexual offenses.

She cited what she considers the "great programs" of the Everywoman's Center that provide students with more information on sexual offenses and offer support and counseling services.

"We provide interpreters for women who have experienced rape, battering, incest or other forms of sexual assault when you utilize the counseling and advocacy services," stated an Everywoman's Center brochure published for the Multilingual Volunteer Interpreters Project, exemplifying one way in which the agency attempts to reach out to the UMass community.

O'Connor also pointed out how a recent joint grant given to the Public Safety department and the Everywoman's Center will enable the two agencies to work together in order to provide eight hours of class time dealing with cases of sexual assault for UMass police officers. This workshop would add to the already mandatory 40 hours of course time on forced sexual crimes that these officer are required to take.

Aside from police officer training, the UMass police department provides safety suggestions for students to follow in order to help prevent criminal situations. Its website stated that students should use the, "corridors of light" while walking around the campus at night, not walk alone, and know where the, "many yellow emergency HELP phones" are located in order to maximize their safety.

There are 79 "emergency HELP" phone locations across campus. Almost every dorm building on campus has one of these phone locations, making the five dorm areas the most heavily concentrated areas with call boxes.

Unlike the dorms, not every classroom/lecture hall building has an emergency phone. In fact, in and around the center of campus (by the W.E.Du Bois Library and campus pond), the only

Turn to SAFETY, page 2

■ safety

continued from page 1

"emergency HELP" phones are located on the south side of the Student Union Building and by Memorial Hall, leaving some areas without nearby call boxes at all.

For example, those coming from any of the Morrill science buildings would have to walk to the northeast side of the Durfee Conservatory for the closest "emergency HELP" phone.

Even with these areas, the campus still appears safe to many students, said freshman Animal Science major Jessica An, for her complaints do not center around the amount of call boxes, but rather the campus lighting.

"I would definitely recommend more lights [be placed around campus]," she said. "The campus is pretty safe, I feel, but sometimes I kind of get a little nervous walking from say the library to Orchard at night."

For those who may feel uncomfortable walking at night, especially alone, the Escort Service, a mini bus that drives around campus on both a fixed time schedule and by special request calls, runs from 5:00 p.m. to 3:00 a.m. each night.

However, students such as An claim, "I usually don't call for the escort service because it takes too long."

There are others who agree with her line of thinking.

"I always feel pretty safe," said sophomore Pre-Medical major Lisa Marchand, "and I don't ever really use the escort service. I take the bus when I don't want to walk, but it's not really right [departure] if it doesn't matter if it's day or night."

In addition to campus safety outside of the dorms, there is concern with inside the actual living areas, such as with the cases of burglary and/or larceny.

"[Burglary] is a matter of 'I left my room and left my door unlocked and my laptop was missing when I got back, or 'I left my book bag on the table when I went to get a book at the library and someone took it,'" said O'Connor. "The only was those numbers [of burglary and larceny offenses] will ever decline is if students would start locking their doors. [Then] that number would drop to below 100."

She said she realizes that the mindset of living in a dorm area leads students to believe they can leave their doors unlock. However, she noted, here in lies the danger.

"Very rarely is it a stranger going through the halls," said O'Connor, explaining that it is usually students who steal from students.

> "Instead of making you feel safe, it makes you feel like you live in prison."

This is not truly unknown, for example, Freshmen School of Management major Mark Devincentis realizes this type of danger exists and acts accordingly.

"I more worried about burglary than anything else," he said. "I mean, I always lock my door if I know I'll be out for an extended period of time."

Others do not agree that it is such pressing issue.

"I tend to lock our door at night," said sophomore Electrical Engineering major Joseph Fife, "but that's more a matter of not wanting to be bothered by anybody [than a safety concern]."

New technology provides high hopes for helping the UMass police force to deal with burglary/larceny crimes in the future, said O'Connor, citing the department's recent acquiring of many digital cameras to take more detailed crime scene pictures, in contrast to the less setting Polaroid snapshots they had been using.

Campus Safety around the Country

Safety is a major concern at all schools. With crime within the country on the rise in the past twenty years, a new emphasis has been put on reporting crimes their prevention and upon personal security.

Ohio State University, deals with security issues in a different was than UMass, partially due to the fact that the school is so large. Ron Michlaec police chief of Ohio State University Police Department explained that while there were low numbers of criminal incidents like rape and assaults while approximately 95-97 percent theft.

According to the school's 2000 Cleary Act Report Statistics the school had a total of 41 forcible sexual offenses on their public property and 898 incidents of burglary on their campus. Because the school is so large, approximately 40,000 and a population of about 80,000 on campus per day, the police have their work cut out for them in terms of keeping the community safe. Michlaec explained that dedication to campus safety among the officers is one way that crime stays down.

"Even at night we have a full contingent of our people," he said. "We work 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year."

In addition, the police department also gets a lot of help from other departments on campus in terms of working towards public safety.

"We are basically a pure police function," he said explaining that the department did assist with other things. "If we can't help someone directly we know who to tell them who to call, in that way we have become a resource."

In terms of the prevention of crime the school tries to educate both incoming freshman and faculty and staff on how to protect themselves against crimes. While Michlaec admits that many express concern about criminal offenses such as rape, one crime that often goes unnoticed on campus is theft.

"We have a lot of difficulty getting people's attention when it deals with property crime," Michlaec said. "These are not just kids they are 40-year-old adults that are stealing bikes and then selling them back to unsuspecting kids across the street."

This differs significantly from UMass, which cites that most of its major crime comes from the student population itself and not from outside sources.

The scene 700 miles east in Columbus is worlds apart from Amherst. The school itself is thrown into the center of a thriving city population where the crime statistics present a new set of problems. Closer to home in the state's capital at Boston University, a school with doors that open out onto the busy city streets, dormitory security remains a major issue. The school has approximately 30,000 students and reported eight forcible sexual offenses and 21 incidents of burglary in the dormitories during the year 2000. These statistics are as stated in the Cleary Act report.

Because non-residents of the school can easily access the dormitories from the street, the school hired a professional security company to monitor the lobbies of each dormitory on campus 24-hours a day. The security personnel both check identification cards and hold driver's licenses from their glass booths. While the additional security makes many students feel considerably safer in a large city environment, many feel that the system is a bit overboard and limits student rights.

"Basically, [the security system] intrudes upon your personal life," Ryan Arnold, a former Boston University student said. "Your dormitory is your home, and all the security takes away a lot of the rights you would have if you paid the same amount of money to live in an off-campus apartment."

He went on to explain that BU enforced mandatory curfews for those living in the dormitories and that the school also limited student's ability to have guests sleep in their rooms on the weekends.

"Having guests overnight is a very difficult process. You have to fill out an overnight guest form and pass it in Thursday before 5 p.m. if your guest is coming anytime over the weekend, then you have to pick up the form in some office while its open," he explained. "You can only have five people stay over per semester and your roommate has to agree to sign a form to allow for the guest to stay in the room."

If the guest is not the same gender as the two residents of the room then they are required to sleep in a host room that belongs to someone of the same gender.

"Instead of making you feel safe, it makes you feel like you live in prison," he said.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

UMass police department useds new digital cameras to get more detailed crime scene pictures.

Special security divisions seem to be a popular option for larger more urban schools such as Temple, a private institution in the heart of Philadelphia, Pa., which provides trained uniformed police officers in the lobbies of all dormitories from, "dusk to dawn during the school year," their website states. The school also provides 24-hour escort service for anyone in need on campus.

Temple has an enrollment of nearly 30,000 students with a surprisingly low number of reported crimes. On public property the campus reported in their 2000 Cleary Act Report statistics that there was a total of 12 incidents of burglary and no incidents of forcible sexual assaults.

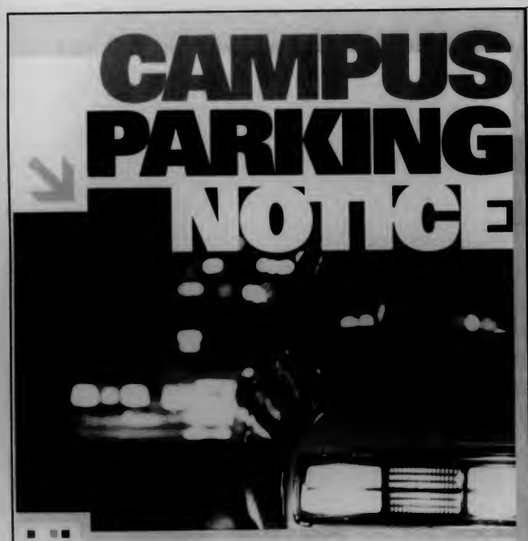
UMass-Amherst currently relies on Student Security for dormitory safety. Student Security is operated through the police department. Student receptionists are trained and then placed in dormitories on campus, their main job is to check student identification cards and record the non-student or non-building resident traffic in and out of the building.

While different schools have different ways of going about it, the main agenda remains the same: safety.

"We try to remind people that safety is a personal agenda," Michlaec said. "Police officers can't be around all the time."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then in 1996 as Aggie Life became the Collegian in 1970. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Davé Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE

Due to the end of daylight savings time, effective Monday, October 29, 2001 any vehicle with a valid Umass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00 pm on weekdays instead of 5:00 pm.

Parking is still prohibited In tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and reserved vehicle spaces.

Also excluded are lots which require 24-hour permits:

21 29 47 50 54 67 North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments.

This parking policy will remain in effect through March 29, 2002.
Parking Meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 am to 5:00 pm

Voted BEST SPORTS BAR 10 Consecutive Years! BY READERS IN THE VALLEY ADVOCATE POLL!

We're #1

Direct TV Sunday NFL Ticket

HAPPY HOUR 1/2 PRICE APPETIZERS... Nachos & Chicken Wings
Served Mon-Thurs 3-5pm in the bar area only.

Fridays only The PIZZA PLAYOFFS FREE PIZZA 3-5pm

FREE POPCORN

MONDAY NIGHTS
The Ultimate Live Football Experience and Interactive Strategy Game!
QB1 NFL
"Predict The Play" Football
Play along with nationally-televised pro football games and selected college games.
1/2 price appetizers, nachos & wings 9 til midnight

CELEBRATING 10 years
Rafters 1991-2001
SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
University Drive • Amherst

26 BEERS ON TAP!

Sign up now for our V.I.P. e-mail parties coming soon!

Food served until midnight every night

4 Pool Tables
October Special Miller Lite Pitcher $5.50
Keno ('til closing!)
New Draft MAGIC HAT #9

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Choo choo!

Head of the Charles spectators found a nice view from a railroad bridge.

■ Columbus

continued from page 1

known killer who brought the first wave of genocide," and cited that two million Indians died during the first three years of European-American contact and that the lore of gold and silver taken from American soil funded the African slave trade. "This is who America celebrates every year," Dacajeweiah expounded.

At a child, Dacajeweiah and his seven siblings were taken from his single mother during a period that "the United States systematically abducted Indian children" and placed them in foster homes and boarding schools. He recalled the advice passed on to him from his mother at 7-years-old before leaving home, "She said, 'Don't let them destroy you until you are a casualty, a statistic of this genocide'."

Dacajeweiah was placed in a boarding school, consisting mainly of Native Americans and African-Americans, where he was the victim of severe beatings and witnessed priests rape the children. At 17, he was living on the streets and "stupidly decided" to rob a store. He was sentenced to eight years in prison and transferred several times before he landed in Attica State Prison 16 days before the infamous Sept. 9, 1971 rebellion.

The 1,200 inmates at Attica in 1971 managed to hold the prison for five days, at which time they took 50 hostages and invited the media to witness the negotiations with prison and government officials. He said, "The instinct was to rise up and be a warrior."

During those first throes on Sept. 9, Dacajeweiah said he was the first man who said, "Let's take this joint."

He was also indicted for allegedly killing a guard. Dacajeweiah was one of 61 people charged for crimes at the Attica State Prison and the only one indicted. At that time, he claimed that he was the number one political prisoner in the nation. In 1979, he was released.

Dacajeweiah told his own story as well as American and Canadian history because "we have to revisit [the past] because many policies of genocide have not stopped." He added, "Anybody who thinks it has [stopped], is deluded."

"The ideas that we represent are the biggest threat ... because the war is never over, because 30 years later I'm still fighting," stated Dacajeweiah. One audience member disagreed with Dacajeweiah as he told the story of robbing the store over 30 years ago.

The Native American man said that he had gone through similar experiences as Dacajeweiah but had never stolen from anybody and further added that he thought the speaker was "full of shit."

Dacajeweiah replied, "You are doing the work of a provocateur, mister," and as the man left Cape Cod Lounge, Dacajeweiah yelled after him, "By the way, what happened to your land?"

The man replied, "It was stolen by the white man."

The lecture was co-sponsored by the Office of ALANA Affairs, the Black Student Union, Native American Student Association, the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center and the Every Woman's Center.

■ bombings

continued from page 1

Nicaragua, and Iran.

He called the bombing strikes examples of the use of inappropriate force, and condemned the US for what he saw as an attempt to act outside of the bounds of due process.

"By international law, there are only two acceptable uses of force," he said. "One is self-defense, and the other is preservation of international peace." An-Na'im feels that the American response cannot be said to fall into either category.

"What is the difference of the decree of the US [to wage war outside legal boundaries], and the decree of the Ayatollah Khomeini to kill Salman Rushdie?" he asked. "Khomeini was condemned for issuing a fatwa outside of the bounds of law. Bush is equally guilty of this in sanctioning assassinations."

An-Na'im ended his speech by saying that he would have preferred the US to enter into negotiations with Muslim countries, and try Bin Laden in a court of law, than to respond with violence.

At the conclusion of his speech, he opened the floor to comments and questions. Many in the audience supported his claims, while other were outraged.

"I notice a lot of people chuckling in the audience about American hypocrisy," said Rich Hoeckh, a UMass alumnus. "But nothing has been brought up about the hypocrisy of Middle-Eastern countries."

"There's more our history than, 'let's make some bucks at the expense of others'", he continued. "Is there anything," he asked An-Na'im, "that you can find in US history that you think is redeemable?"

"If I had no faith in the ability of your country to do what is right, I would not be here tonight," said An-Na'im. "But the US is the sole superpower of the world. There is a difference between the hypocrisy of a superpower and the hypocrisy of Sudan, which is at the bottom of the heap in terms of its ability to influence other people's situations. You should not be judged by the same standards as smaller countries."

One attendee compared the Taliban's harboring of Bin Laden to a man who shelters a serial killer in his home. Shouldn't a police force, he asked An-Na'im, break down the man's door?

"I would use negotiations," An-Na'im said. "You've had many similar situations in the US, where you haven't broken down doors and killed people who might be innocent."

Many attendees remained in the auditorium to discuss the lecture, and were divided in their responses to it. Two Smith international students, who asked not to be identified, said that they agreed with An-Na'im's comments.

"He said things that we are thinking about, but don't say," said one of the students, a citizen of Italy.

"There is no need for such a violent reaction," the other student, a citizen of Spain, said in agreement.

Darlene Willey Sliwa, a Belchertown resident, had a different view.

"The most disturbing comment I heard [An-Na'im say] was about due process." said Willey Sliwa. "I believe in due process, but I have no reservation in my mind that this is not a case that warrants it. I am most concerned about the millions of people who have fought for over 200 years for us to be here. I try to convince my college-age daughters that we must fight to protect what others have lost their lives for."

Programming Board, OHAG topics at SGA

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Members of the Student Government Association's Senate convened and addressed issues surrounding the Programming Board, financial allocations and better communication between the Campus Activities Office (CAO).

Ed Kammerer, Secretary of the Registry presented the Programming Board's Constitution that would allow the group to be officially functional.

"The Programming Board in the past didn't do a whole lot of programming," Kammerer said. "Our role is to plan campus activities that foster school spirit and unity. We want to bring back things that used to take place on this campus."

The Senate passed the motion, which will allow the Programming Board to beginning appointing individuals from Registered Student Organizations as well as other areas on campus to the board.

Another topic discussed at last night's meeting was a motion to allocate $3,000 to the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) stirred up debate between Senators. Questions surrounding the motion and its purposes were addressed.

Steve Hoeshele, chair of the Finance Committee, presented the motion stating that the money granted would be used to pay up-front for Orchard Hill's campus-wide "Holiday Ball" that would take place in December.

"If they don't receive this money then they will not be able to have funding for the spring," Hoeshele said.

The expectation is that the Ball would bring in revenue that would provide funding for further campus-wide activities throughout the year Hoeshele further explained. However, others found that allocating such a large amount might cause problems.

"We've been talking about this motion for a period of time and I've heard a variety of reasons as to what this money will be used for," Michael Taugher, chair of Ways and Means said. "I don't see the accountability of where this money would be going."

Gabriel Tavares, Secretary of Finance, assured the Senate that the funding would be accountable. He continued, asking the Senate why they would not want to fund an event that draws students together.

"Why shouldn't we fund them [OHAG] when we've cut their funding in the past years?" Tavares asked. "Why should we not reward them for the fact that OHAG brings together 6,000 students a year to events?"

After further questioning, the Senate passed the motion after a roll-call vote. The motion passed with 30 Senators in favor, 11 against with one abstention.

Another motion on the agenda involved more student interaction with the new chancellor search committee. A motion was proposed in which seven undergraduate students, appointed by President John Sheehan and Speaker Aaron Saunders, would be placed on a committee that would outline student priorities for the search committee.

"I can't stress how important it is for us to voice our opinions on this subject," Senator Dan Saunders said in his presentation of the motion.

The motion sparked debate, but after little discussion, the Senate passed it.

The Senate also passed three other motions, one involving a task force that will engage RSO members who will communicate with the Campus Activities Office on a regular basis in order to alleviate miscommunication between the two groups.

It then approved Kate MacDonald to the vacant Central at Large Senate seat as well as ratified this year's Central Area Government and House Council, and Northeast Area Government and House Council elections. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst now has five working and functioning Area Governments and House Councils for the first time in nine months.

■ sign

continued from page 1

4' x 2.5' wooden sign, with a mustard and brick design to match the museum's exterior. Currently, a paper sign fills its space followed by an announcement of the original sign's theft.

"If folks see it, give us a call. If they have it, they can put it back. No one will see them," Lelacheur said.

The Amherst History Museum is located at 67 Amity Street. Lelacheur and staff can be reached at 256-0678.

—Alicia Upano

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, October 25, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The spread of anthrax
We all must take precautions

"You cannot stop us.
We have this anthrax.
You die now.
Are you afraid?
Death to America.
Death to Israel.
Allah is great."

The above statement was the content of a letter, containing anthrax, which was mailed to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, just one of many similar cases reported since the infectious disease rose out of relative obscurity into a national threat in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

Yesterday, the United States postmaster general announced that there are no guarantees regarding the safety of our mail, a warning that encompasses the White House as well. Although addresses like 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue and Senate offices are focused targets, the concern for all of us surrounding the disease does not simply taper off there.

Postal workers have been placed directly in the line of fire, soldiering on with their duties, but now with added protections. Beginning on the east coast, where the bulk of the anthrax activity has occurred, those precautions will include special masks and gloves for every individual in contact with the mail as dictated by the job.

Safety measures for the rest of us, however, aren't so clear. We can't don a mask and gloves and consider ourselves safe, especially when what we're up against is so formless, hidden, and foreign to what we are accustomed to.

The basic tools, then, seem to be the most effective.

Don't open mail from an unknown source. Authorities continue to remind us that anything could be suspect, and to treat every piece of mail as such. Though the chances are slim that the disease will carry itself to private residences and the like, it hasn't been ruled out as a complete improbability.

Report suspicious circumstances to the proper authorities. Unmarked packages and the like are all fair game and will be treated by authorities as legitimate concerns until the situation has been resolved.

Repeat. At this point, for us, there's little else to do.

So again, the question lingers: Are we afraid?

We can't afford to be. Move on. As we stand now, larger issues call for our attention.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Information from Boston.com was used in this article.

Hold on to civil liberties now

ROB SCHULZE

File this under scary. Here's the lead from a story in Monday's Globe by Walter Pincus headlined "Interrogators not at liberty to do more with suspects:"

"FBI and Justice Department investigators are becoming increasingly frustrated by the silence of jailed suspected associates of Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda network, and some are beginning to say that some civil liberties may have to be cast aside if they are to extract information about the Sept. 11 attacks and terrorist plans."

Whoa.

The story goes on to say that since regular tactics haven't worked, the interrogators would like to go to what are referred to as "pressure tactics." They'd like to use drugs to try and make these men talk. Failing that, they'd like to extradite them to a country where civil liberties aren't held in such high regard, like "allied countries where security services sometimes employ threats to family members or resort to torture." An anonymous man in the FBI said he doesn't approve of torture, but thinks that using drugs would be justified, even if it did "taint" the prosecution. A professor from Georgetown predicted that "the use of force to extract information could happen" in the current climate.

You might not have seen this story; it ran at the very bottom of page nine, under story on textbooks and a feature photo of people in baseball hats holding up an American flag.

Still, it struck me as fairly important, because basically it says that if these people won't tell the government what they want to know then at least some people within the government are willing to break the law to get it from them. Which is cool.

"Civil liberties have to be rocks which cannot be altered or moved for any reason or they become slopes so slippery that sooner or later they cease to exist at all."

I don't know about you, but I definitely want to live in a country where the people that serve and protect me have the right to drug me, smack me around, or ship me out to another country where they will drug me or slap me around if my perky right to remain silent becomes inconvenient to them. I think that would be just great.

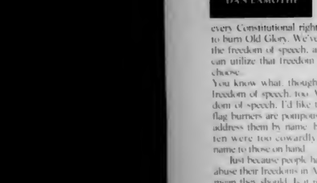
I could point out that these things are currently illegal for a reason. I could point out that the magnitude of the crime does not have any impact on a person's rights in this country and as a human being. I could point out that none of those people who were arrested a month ago and have remained in jail since have been convicted of any crimes, and are therefore innocent until the opposite has been proven.

However, I think these things go without saying. Reasonable Americans already know these things, right? They don't need a punk kid like ME to tell you these basic facts that I'm sure you all hold dear and true as patriotic citizens of this free land.

I'm kidding, of course. Patriotic citizens of this free land would like nothing more than to have these men torn to pieces by lions in Madison Square Garden, provided that 1) they got to watch and 2) the lions wore American flag capes.

The point, however, is that civil liberties have to be rocks which cannot be altered or moved for any reason or they become slopes so slippery that sooner or later they cease to exist at all. If suspected terrorists have the same right that all people do, then you and I are safe. If they do not, and they are allowed to be handled in ways that violate rights, then you and I are terribly vulnerable. If not today, then tomorrow.

Eventually we're going to win the war in Afghanistan. It's kind of inevitable; if all else fails, I'm sure our military could literally kill every living thing within the borders of the nation and we can have our 'victory' that way. It probably won't even take that long; we'll go into this other country and kill who we want, then we'll say that the world is safe from these dangerous madmen who haven't been able to take down a single one of our planes, leave some boxes of food, and get the hell out.



When the war ends, however, and we leave behind our vengeance and their dead and come back to reality, we'll find that things we used to have are gone. Things like not being worried about being pumped with chemicals when you really would rather not incriminate yourself to the FBI. Things like not wondering if George Bush has read your email and listened to your phone calls today. Things like news that told you something. And it won't be coming back.

'Pressure' has its price, and it's just too high to pay.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

PEDRO GOMES

Appreciate what You have got

DAN LAMOTHE

As the flag smoldered in Inter Hand "God Bless America" played. What the hell is wrong with that picture?

Obviously, the protestors at Amherst College last week had every Constitutional right in the world to burn Old Glory. We've been granted the freedom of speech, and Americans can utilize that freedom however they choose.

You know what, though? I've got the freedom of speech, too. With that freedom of speech, I'd like to see that the flag burners are pompous jackasses. I'd address them by name, but most of the ten were too cowardly to give their name to those on hand.

Just because people have the right to abuse their freedoms in America doesn't mean they should. It really that difficult to respect something? It is a normal month, in a normal year, burning the flag is a stupid, lousy thing to do. Now? Is crucifixion really not legal anymore?

All right, so maybe I'm exaggerating. What the ten students who protested at Amherst College did is wrong on so many levels, though. Stupid doesn't cut it. It's way too weak of a word.

In a time when thousands of Americans are finding hope and courage in dealing with a tragedy by rallying together, no one has the right to try and divide the wears. Dissenting opinions are allowed in this country, yes. Criticism of our country and its leaders is a part of the way we do things here.

Burning the flag for fun and giggles crosses the line, though. It's not a gray issue. It's just WRONG. If people do not feel the need to be patriotic, fine. Others are clinging to newfound patriotism as a way of coping with the shock and horror that seem with the Trade Center and Pentagon attacks, though. It's too bad it took this for them to find pride in their nation, but it's there now. It should be respected. Attacking their newly stirred feelings with clouds "America is Satan" messages is hypocritical — hypocritical because those messages would not even be tolerated in a lesser country.

I guess that's what bothers me the most here. People just don't realize how good we've got it in the United States. We can say what we think! We can do what we want! We can practice religion how we choose! Even in 2001, these are all novel ideas in other parts of the world. We're lucky, damned lucky, to be a part of it. Watching American people condemn their own country as evil disgusts me. The decisions our country has made have not always been right, true. But no other country is pure either.

There is not one American citizen that has no reservations and fear about what the consequences of our strikes on Afghanistan could be. A fair share of the population, however, feels that they are necessary. A fair share of our countrymen feel that for our own safety, there is no longer an alternative.

These citizens have bonded together. Through things like Thursday's rally, they've gathered in support behind their country. They've donated blood. They've donated money. They've watched as friends and relatives get activated for military service.

These Americans are not in favor of slaughtering innocent ethnics. They're not in favor of plundering Afghan homes, or destroying Afghan schools and churches. They care about their country, and care about the thousands of fellow citizens that were slain on September 11. Revenge isn't the issue – trying to prevent this from happening again is. Some would argue that the logic is flawed, and it very well may be. We do things as a country, though, and majority opinion in the United States right now is that we can't sit back on our laurels anymore. Sorry, peaceniks.

"Whenever idiots feel the need to burn a flag, it's a direct insult to all those who gave of themselves for their country. It's trampling on their memories."

Desecrating the flag is a protected legal right, yes. It's the ultimate disrespect, though, a disrespect that should not be thrown around lightly. I do not believe that they truly understand what they did. Hundreds of thousands of good men and women have died in the name of what that flag stands for. That flag, contrary to what the ideological morons would have you believe, does not represent oppression and genocide. It especially does not represent America's sins since 1492, as the once-identified idiot, Dan Ruffin, said. America wasn't even around until 1776, genius.

Instead, it stands for everything that is American. It stands for the principles our country was founded on, our basic freedoms. These freedoms make us unique. They are a large part of the reason that the group behind the terrorism struck our country. Our freedoms are essential.

Our flag also represents the millions of Americans who have died fighting for these freedoms. Whenever idiots feel the need to burn a flag, it's a direct insult to all those who gave of themselves for their country. It's trampling on their memories.

Our country isn't perfect. It never will be. Poor Afghans that are fed one-sided propaganda by the Taliban government have a reason to burn our flag. They hate us because they are ignorant. Rich, spoiled, tree-hugging brats that aren't in touch with reality? There is no acceptable excuse there. Move to another country, ingrates. Our country ain't perfect, but you won't find a better place to live.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

Putting 9-11 in perspective

CHRIS ERICKSON

I am prompted to write after reading George Thomas's rants published in The Collegian on September 17 and October 3. His attacks on what he terms "post-intellectuals" are so tired and unoriginal they hardly deserve attention, but given that I am apparently "this one fellow" with whom he has taken issue, I feel that a response is appropriate. The unexpected vehemence with which he launches his attack doesn't put me on the defensive so much as it makes me suspicious of his motives. Perhaps I might feel defensive if I actually thought his attacks hit anywhere near their intended mark. Given that he does such a poor job of presenting my position, I wonder just what it is that he is up to. He is certainly not interested in actually responding to any of the points I made in a conversation with him. Nor is he interested in actually understanding what it is that I said.

On one hand, both editorials come off as a vain attempt to prove to himself that his certainty about the world in which he lives has not really been shaken at all. On the other hand, perhaps his animosity towards critical thought, feminism, philosophy, gender studies, and so on stems from the fact that he has no effective defence of his precious white-male "liberal democracy" to the challenges they pose. His hurling of the epithets "cultural relativist," "post-intellectual" and "nihilist" are the academic equivalents of "you're ugly and your momma dresses you funny."

I am not a relativist. I am not a nihilist. Come to think of it, I have never met anyone who lives consistently by either principle. To take relativism seriously would disallow the kind of moral revulsion I feel for the horrific tragedies of September 11. Nihilism would not permit me to feel as saddened and outraged as I do after watching the towers fall. Mr. Thomas does not appear to have even a shallow understanding of either. This is most clear when he expresses his anger at those "cultural relativists" who espouse the "moral superiority" of other cultures. This is simply impossible. The two can't go together. I did not and do not make any claims to the moral superiority of other cultures, but I did suggest that the events of September 11 should be seen as a text. What then is a text? "A piece of paper with writing on it?" Perhaps, but to reduce the concept to just that is wrong. It is something I might expect my three-year old son to do. I expect more from someone who claims to be an academic.

My larger point was and is that all too quickly the horrifying events of September 11 have been reduced to just an act of war, just an attack on America, as if the events spoke for themselves. In the midst of the talk of "the new Pearl Harbor," the rest of the world dropped out of the picture. As noted by President Bush, the question was "Who did this?" And nobody was asking "Why did this happen?" To treat the events as a text is to acknowledge that no event, however shocking and horrific, speaks for itself. It is to permit the question "Is this an attack on America or an attack on Americanism?"

It allows enough room to remember that the terrorists hit the World Trade Center. To speak of the events of September 11 as a text is far from "chillingly amoral." Indeed it is perhaps an ethical requirement. Why should the deaths of so many thousands mean nothing more than just a good reason to bomb Kabul? Don't we owe it to ourselves as Americans and as those who choose to live in America to at least try to understand what happened? Shouldn't we at least make an effort to find out why the rest of the world dislikes us so much? If we don't understand what led to this attack, how can we hope to avoid more in the future?

Some, Mr. Thomas included, might take this to mean that we should roll over and capitulate to the apparent demands of Al-Qaeda. I am not saying this at all. Nor am I suggesting that the United States should withdraw from the Middle East. I am not even suggesting that force should not be used, although I fail to see the rationale behind the ongoing air strikes in Afghanistan. What I am suggesting is that we should all take a moment to assess the situation.

What are we charging into? Does the propensity to respond with a knee-jerk bombing campaign do anything more than reinforce the perception of the United States as a global bully? I firmly believe that bin Laden and his ilk should be tirelessly resisted, but then what do I mean by "his ilk?" I mean those who wish at all costs to impose a specific set of life rules upon everybody. Those who wish to drown out all other voices so that they might be the only speaker. The obvious retort to this is "aren't you also imposing a set of life rules upon everybody?"

My response is both yes and no. Yes in the sense that I believe there are parameters within which life should be led and that apply to everybody. No in that these parameters are not themselves a specific set of life rules, but rather allow for and even demand many such sets. The finitude of my experience and life span restricts me to living by the rules of only one or two of these sets. In fact it is not possible to live without some specific set or another.

This same finitude also bars me from the vantage point from which I can say with certainty that my set is the best set. Any such claim can only be hubris. I am not making a universal claim that this is the "good life" and all others are deficient, but that there are many "good lives" that deserve to be respected. There are also some bad ones that must be resisted. Even these voices should be listened to, if only until their intentions become clear.

As I understand it, debate is a central feature of what America is. I don't think it is accidental that free speech is first of the constitutionally guaranteed civil rights. This is why I find Mr Thomas's overly self-certain "love it or leave it" attitude very disturbing, even dangerous. Ironically, he speaks openly of the unacceptability of such a stance, but does nothing to avoid it. In his full-frontal advocacy for "liberal democracy" Mr. Thomas consistently confusen the watchdog and the radical. I agree with his point that "those who hate America, who speak of Amerika, as if liberalism is the moral equivalent of fascism, as if we are no better than Nazi Germany" should not, if they are consistent, claim the benefits America can offer. However I do think that there is a civic responsibility to speak publicly of one's fears of "Amerika."

Mr. Thomas could do to be reminded that there is a vast difference between holding the actions of a state up to the light of its own professed standards and a wholesale rejection of those standards. It may be that those who speak of "Amerika" as if it already exists and cannot be changed have made up their minds. They are no longer interested in dialogue. However, those who speak out of fear of "Amerika" serve a vital role in keeping America from becoming "Amerika." This same line of argument leads me to agree with White House spokesman Ari Fleischer's admonition that in times like these Americans should "watch what they say." Indeed they should. They should especially mindful of saying things like "take my civil rights in exchange for security." Now is the time to rally around the flag, but we all need to be careful that we do not forget what it stands for. I would argue that it stands for more than just one thing. In spite of all its problems, and there are many, I love this country. I do not understand why Mr. Thomas should feel it so urgent "to scream 'Why don't you leave?'" Nor do I understand why he should "wish [I] didn't exist." Then again, given my earlier observations, perhaps I do understand it.

All of his logical inconsistency aside, there is one area in which Mr. Thomas is remarkably consistent. His overworked sarcasm is quite consistently a mask for the fact that the advice he gives on how to succeed in college is indeed heartfelt. Perhaps he has not yet taken all of his own lessons to heart, but here are a few he has:

"Don't worry so much about meaning and coherency - never be lucid when you can be obscure."

"Don't worry that you don't know what you are talking about, nobody does."

"Plunge headlong. And don't worry about contradicting yourself – you're a serious thinker, consistency isn't for you. If someone gives you a hard time, look at them like they are a nail. Never explain yourself; you're beyond discourse with philistines who don't get it."

Overall, I must commend George Thomas for his editorials. It must have taken great courage for him place his intellectual shallowness on such public display.

Chris Erickson is a UMass graduate student.

THE ABSOLUTELY SPOOKTACULAR ARTS & LIVING PAGE

Horror(ific) movies

By Tim Letteney and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Smarts

We don't want to be snobs, but when we see people praise Urban Legend as the greatest horror film of all time, we are horrified. That there are people who honestly believe that Valentine was a truly shocktacular film? No. We are not snobs; we just have better taste in horror films than the "general public." Who is this "general public" you may ask? Well there is one simple definition...all that is wrong with society, but more concretely, all that is wrong with our horror movies. We go to horror films to see caricatured members of the "general public" die. Sure it is fake blood made out of corn syrup, but a man can dream can't he?

The "general public" might really believe that Scream 3 was "One heck of a ride," but we know better. In fact, we didn't even see Scream 3. We don't have time for such drivel. We're to busy reading Fangoria magazine. It's an insiders' magazine about the horror industry.

We're also watching good horror films. Sorority Babes in Slimeball Bowl-a-Rama for instance, or Nail-Gun Massacre. You might be entertained watching The Faculty, but we've got class, taste, and knowledge. If we were theater fans, we'd only watch esoteric off-Broadway plays written by disaffected drama club members; you'd be sitting at in New York City watching Phantom of the Opera.

Of course, if you rented the remake of Phantom of the Opera starring Robert Englund of Nightmare on Elm Street fame, we will take your resume and thoroughly consider you for possible membership in our elite society. The initiation into our secret society involves watching Redneck Zombies, Splatter Farm, two hours of CNN, and Return of the Living Dead 3 consecutively, while chugging whiskey and corn syrup naked in our basement. Don't fret, we won't tell a soul.

But we digress.

The fact is that the horror community is a special place with special needs, specifically the need not

Turn to SMARTS page 8

By Nick Pasquale
Collegian Staff

Let's look at the "scary" movies that have come out in the last three months and see if they have anything in common. Jeepers Creepers, The Glass House, and Joyride. Hmmm, except with the two that star America's hot new actress, Leelee Sobieski (yeah right), they all have gotten terrible reviews and terrible box-office results. Let's look at the movies coming out this month, leading up to Halloween; Bones and Thirteen Ghosts. Do we sense some reoccurring pattern here? How about the fact that they have no chance of actually being good.

I'll be honest with you, I love Snoop Dogg, Doggystyle is a classic, but Bones has no shot at being successful, except if your like me, and don't care at what price you see Snoop. Thirteen Ghosts stars Tony Shalhoub, one of my favorite actors, but he has this tendency to sign on to really bad movies, or really good movies that no one sees. Horror films, for the most part have gone totally down hill, to the point where they're not even scary, just funny.

Yes there are exceptions, for instance The Sixth Sense, What Lies Beneath, and The Others. Films that have all received fantastic reviews and people have poured into the theaters to see them. But then you have the Scream trilogy, I Know What You Did Last Summer, Valentine, The Faculty, Final Destination, and both of the Urban Legend movies. They are predictable, gory and uninteresting. When you go to these movies you aren't watching the movie, you're waiting to hear something funny from the cynical audience.

First of all, story. The stories in most of the horror movies made today are either terrible or non-existent. They want to jam back the screen with gore, and scary guys in masks but they don't even think about a reasonable story that would contain a linear story or even good dialogue. There is so much more to a film besides turn and run. Another constant and annoying theme in horror movies is the fact that magically all the pieces of the puzzle show up at once with a half an hour left in the film, so the audience knows what's going on. Apparently the main characters in the film have known about this information all the time, but chose now to reveal it to the bored audience. For some reason, these "Scooby-Doo" endings make their way into so many horror films and it just doesn't make sense.

Also, what's with all the cleavage? In there some rule that says "When a college co-ed dies she must be wearing an outfigh that is tight and white or nothing at all. Rain is also recommended for a successful scary movie." Nothing ruins the flow of the movie worse than a random half-naked, drunk blonde who thinks that the strange knocking outside or window is her boyfriend. It also very interesting to notice that in the movie posters for the horrendous I Know What You Did Last Summer and the sequel (which was even worse) I Still Know What you Did Last Summer (even the title doesn't makes sense, shouldn't it be I Know What You Did Three Summers Ago?) Jennifer Love Hewitt's bust size increased dramatically. Yeah sex sells, but this just doesn't make a whole lot of sense.

The villains aren't that diverse either. They either have some dark and foreboding mask or they are some type of demon. They never have any motivation and when they do it's so contrived and ridiculous that the audience just rolls their eyes and accepts it praying that the movie is almost over. The first thing on my mind if some guy was chasing me down in a car would be: why? But the characters just brush it off like it's no big deal. And the monsters look the same. Humanoid at first glance, but then you look at their face and it is ravaged by scars or gills or a really bad weave. In the new film Jeepers Creepers we learn that the killer is really some type of evil creature that every 22 years eats for 22 days. Why? There is never an explanation and no closure. And the characters just accept this. Well we can't do anything if it happens every 22 years so we might as well just run."

The film going public is much more intelligent than some of these movies give us credit for. So next time you want to see a horror movie don't go see some waste of film that stars either Mathew Lillard or Leelee Sobieski, rent a good scary movie. Ever heard of Psycho, not the unimaginative remake by Gus Van Sant, but the original by the master of horror Hitchcock. Or just tape and watch an episode of Dawson's Creek, that's scary enough.

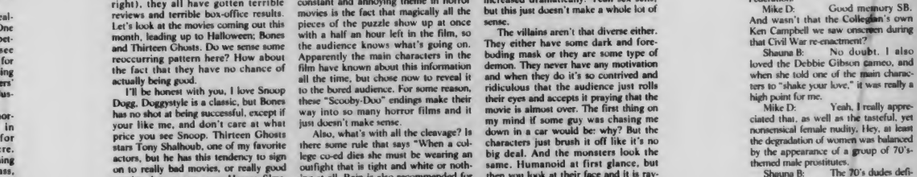
Booze-fueled horror viewing

By Kurt Polasky
Collegian Staff

AMHERST, MASS- The film Sorority Babes in Slimeball Bow-a-rama was screened for the purposes of review on Saturday evening in the Brandywine Estates in Amherst, Massachusetts. Over a dozen self-proclaimed "horror movie buffs" gathered anxiously around the television. With several thirty packs of beer nearby, it was bound to be a long evening.

As the film began, the viewers decided it would be a good idea to engage in a drinking game called the "power hour" while they viewed the movie. As the night wore on, it became clear that, good idea, this was not.

Watching horror movies with horror movie fans can be a horrific experience. One must put up with endless references to past horror movies, and listen to inane logic about how certain horror movies are better than others.



Within the first few minutes of the movie one of the viewers made a reference to Halloween by saying "way to rip-off the Halloween set." A few minutes later another scene reminded the same viewer of Slumber Party Massacre 3 (not 1 or 2 but 3). The references continued for the majority of the film.

After about 10 minutes it was easy to see that cinematic genius Sorority Babes in Slimeball Bowl-a-rama was not. Therefore, as most movie horror fans do when they realize a horror film is not up to the high standards of The Dentist or Nightmare on Elm Street, they begin to mock it. The skeptical audience was heard snickering comments such as "fine movie," and "yea, real good plot."

When the inevitable attractive young woman appeared on the screen, they were met with loud whooping and cheering by the predominately male audience. "Hot pregnant chicka," "I dream of this," and "massive amounts of tits," were overheard.

Since Sorority Babes in Slimeball Bowl-a-rama was obviously a horrible horror movie, when it became obvious that the film was not going to entertain, beer was turned to as the new form of entertainment. As the audience lost interest in the film, phrases such an "take another goddam shot," "I've never been this drunk before," and "I can't feel my fees," were uttered.

With the poor combination of a poor horror movie and massive quantities of beer, the audience grew violent. After a female attendee was accused of being a "whore," she responded by saying, "I'm not a whore." The accuser clarified the situation by saying "yes, you are."

Horror Marks

By Shauna Billings and Mike Delano Collegian Marks

SOULKEEPER
Directed by Some Bum
Playing in Your Nightmares

Mike D: SB, I'm what you might call a horror film expert, a connoisseur if you will.

Shauna B: (Rolls eyes)

Mike D: Anyways, I decided to "slum it" and let you pick a woefully unacceptable "new" horror flick from the new releases rack at Blockbuster for us to watch. Soulkeeper was chosen specifically so I could turn my nose up at it using obscure references from the "good ole days" of horror films.

Shauna B: And because it had a cheesy hologram on the cover.

Mike D: Very true, but that sort of lost some appeal when we realized that the hologram monster on the cover was actually the mutant form of a character named "Perfect Penis."

Shauna B: True dat. But let's not forget that "Perfect" was played by the priceless Tiny Lister, who was the wrestler "Zeus" in the World Wrestling Federation.

Mike D: Good memory SB. And wasn't that the Collegian's own Ken Campbell we saw onscreen during that Civil War re-enactment?

Shauna B: No doubt. I also loved the Debbie Gibson cameo, and when she told one of the main characters to "shake your love," it was really a high point for me.

Mike D: Yeah, I really appreciated that, as well as the tasteful, yet nonsensical female nudity. Hey, at least the degradation of women was balanced by the appearance of a group of 70's-themed male prostitutes.

Shauna B: The 70's dudes definitely knew how to work the corner, but I'm not sure exactly how they fit into the plot. In fact, I have no idea what the hell the film was about.

Mike D: Don't you remember? It's all about "getting the rock."

Shauna B: Oh yeah, and I was as surprised as you were when that turned out not to be a drug reference. Regardless, my favorite character was definitely Pascal, although I did state that I thought the drunk guy at the bar was "a link" of some sorts.

Mike D: And how wrong you were. The link was actually the potty-mouthed psychic that later offered the main characters a manicure! And how about that cheesy soundtrack?

Shauna B: Does Pascal have a track on it?

Mike D: Let it go.

Shauna B: (sigh of longing)

Mike D: I definitely could appreciate your call for more gore in this film that was sorely lacking it, however.

Shauna B: Yeah, there really were way too many bloopers and not enough gore. The makers of the film really missed a chance during one scene to splatter some blood on a window, instead choosing to leave it unsplattered.

Mike D: They definitely dropped the ball on that one, and inserting various allusions to religious mythology and existentialist philosophy didn't really add anything.

Shauna B: Thank God for the liberal use of the fog machine. Mag-nus! Mag-nus!

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian - Every Thursday!

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – From October 18 to November 11, Central Gallery will be presenting an exhibit entitled Icon and Golem by Judith Shaffer. There is a Gallery Talk on November 6 at 3 p.m.

UMASS – The Student Union Art Gallery presents the show Rise Up and Take Us With You, a celebration of heritage presenter by valley artists. The Gallery is open Monday – Thursday from 10 to 5 and Friday 10 to 5. The exhibit will run from October 22 to October 26 with a reception on Tuesday, October 23 from 4 to 6 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – "The Journey, Not the Arrival: Anne Morrow Lindbergh, 1906-2001" is an exhibition of the author, aviator and Smith graduate being displayed in Morgan Gallery. It is available for viewing through Oct 31.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Linear Dimensions" is a series of artwork by painter, sculptor and artist Helen Batte. It will be on display through Oct. 31 on weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in Ahmanson House Gallery.

AMHERST – "Paintings" by Michiyo Yoshida will be displayed in the Jones Library in the Burnett Gallery. The one person show will run from Oct 1-30.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – New World Theater presents Project 2050's Creative Cadences Identity, Immigration, Incarceration, Exploitation, & Negotiation. It is the culmination of a series of summer workshops in which local youth, school arts, and professional artists. They created a new type of theater that battles themes identified by youth. The performance will be on November 10, 2001 and are $10 for the general public, and $5 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 545-2511 or (800) 999-UMASS.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Theater Department and Enchanted Circle Theater Company are co-producing the play Landscapes by Magdalena Gomez and is directed by John Hellweg. It can be seen from October 25-27 at 8 p.m. and on October 26 at 10 a.m. Tickets are $7 for the public and $4 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 585-ARTS.

MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE – The Mount Holyoke College Department of Theater Arts will be opening their 2001-02 season with Tennessee William's The Night of the Iguana. Directed by theater professor Joyce Devlin, the performance take place in Rooke Theater from October 25-28. Prices are $5 for the general public and $3 for students and seniors.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – The AAANA Affairs Office and UPC will be bringing Puerto Rican singer/songwriter Ros Brown and guitarist Jose Gonzalez for an evening of music. The performance will take place on Thursday, November 1 at 7:30 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. The event is $5 for the general public and free for UMass students.

UMASS – Tonight, October 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Concert hall, the Kronos Quartet will be performing. For more than twenty five years, the musical group has shared a unique musical vision with the rest of the world incorporating jazz and other global influences throughout the world. Tickets for the show range from $15-30 for general admission. $10 for people seventeen and under and range from $5-10 for Five College Students.

AMHERST – Gilbert and Sullivan's musical/comedy "The Grand Duke" will be performed by the Valley Light Opera of Amherst. The performances will take place on Fridays November 2 & 9 at 8 p.m. and Thursdays November 3 & 10 at 8 p.m. with a matinee on Sunday, November 4 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $14 for adults and $10 for students and seniors. To order tickets and more information call (413) 256-4065 or go to their website, www.lsse.org.

NORTHAMPTON – The center for the Arts Northampton is sponsoring a Sing Out at John M Greene Hall. For $5 per person or $15 for a family, you are treated to a wider variety of music, with 10% of the proceeds to benefit the American Red Cross. Tickets are available at Beyond Words Bookshop and State Street Fruit Store. They can be found locally A.J. Hastings Inc.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

AMHERST – Author James Earl Hardy will be reading from his new book The Day I Fazy-E Died, a book which deals with the response a gay black man has with the news of rapper Eazy-E's infection of the AIDS virus. He event will take place at Food For Thought Books at 7 p.m. tomorrow on October 26.

SOUTH HADLEY – William E. Marks will discuss ideas and selections from his new book The Holy Order of Water: Healing Earth's Waters and Ourselves. His book deals with the lack of understanding and respect for the nature of water. It will be held on Monday, October 29 at 7 p.m., at The Odyssey Bookshop.

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Student Union presents the film "The Myth of the Liberal Media: The Propaganda Model of News." Edward Herman and Noam Chomsky investigate the "propaganda" that is thought to be in today's mainstream media. The showings will be on October 30 and 31 at 7 p.m. The October 30 viewing will be in Campus Center Room 165 and the Oct. 31 screening will be in room 917.

COURTESY OF JON HOPKINS

Mapping the Soul

Landscapes, directed by John Hellweg and starring Tamisha Corry and L'Quicha Parks, has a performance this Friday at Smith College.

EVERY MON.! 1/2 price Wings-n-Things 9pm-close

EVERY TUES.! Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes

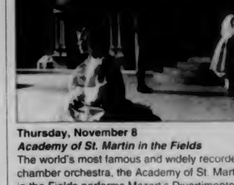
BEER! 12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts

THE HARP IRISH PUB 8:30 - 10:30

Full Menu! From Burgers to Lobster!! Never a Cover!!!

163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA 548-6900

THURS. 10/25 EarlyShow: The Lonesome Bros. SpecialLate Show: 10:30 - close I-Ganic Sound System (roots, reggae & dub)



SAT. 10/27 9:30 pm equalites

"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES 2001 - 2002

Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together

Tickets only $5, $7, $10, $15 for five college students

Thursday, November 1
Theatre de la Jeune Lune in"Tartuffe"
In approaching Moliere's masterpiece 'Tartuffe,' Jeune Lune boldly seeks to re-discover the sensation this play caused when it first appeared in the time of Louis XIV
Sponsored by Bose Corporation
"Stirs theatrical juices like no other company" -- American Theatre
Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Thursday, November 8
Academy of St. Martin in the Fields
The world's most famous and widely recorded chamber orchestra, the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields performs Mozart's Divertimento K. 138, Dvorak's Two Waltzes, Op. 54, Bruckner's Adagio and Intermezzo, and Tchaikovsky's famous Serenade for Strings. The program also includes the "Innocent Ear" – their version of "name that tune" where the entire audience is invited to participate.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Wednesday, November 14
Ballet Hispanico
Ballet Hispanico is smashingly theatrical – from the stunning expressive style of its dancers, to its use of sets, lighting, costumes and sound. The company's extraordinary repertory includes dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz and ethnic styles.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

Thursday, December 6
The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company & The Dirty Dozen Brass Band in "When the Spirit Moves"
An exhilarating evening of live New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance come together in a program titled When the Spirit Moves - a series of vignettes celebrating the lineage and essence from which these two uniquely American forms emerged.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River, WEIB 106.3FM and WGBY TV 57

For tickets call:
545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
or go on-line to
www.fineartscenter.com

Join us for a salsa party with Ballet Hispanico on Tuesday, November 13 at the Red Barn on the Hampshire College Campus from 7-11pm. Luis Melendez of WFCR's Tertulia will be our DJ for the evening. salsa lessons from 7 & party following with Latin foods provided by La Veracruzana. Admission is only $10. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

LIQUORS 44

WHERE YOU'LL FIND FRIGHTFULLY GOOD DEALS FOR HALLOWEEN!

Everyday Pricing

Beers

Domestic 1/2 Kegs: Bud, Bud Light $46*; Coors Light $44*; Michelob Reg & Light $46*; Icehouse $41*; Natural Light & Ice $41; Miller Lite $47*; Genuine Draft $47; Rolling Rock $47

Micro Brew 1/2 Kegs: Berkshire Brewing Co $86; Sierra Nevada Pale $112; Sam Adams Lager Seasonal 112; Harpoon Lager Seasonal $96; Killians Irish Red $73*; Dundee Honey Brown $80; Magic Hat #9 $105

Imported 1/2 Kegs: Heineken & Amstel $96

ALL KEGS PLUS DEPOSIT. * Must Be Reserved in Advance

Bud & Bud Light case of 30 12oz cans $17.49 +tax 24 PACK

Milwaukee's Best case of 30 12oz cans $9.99 +tax 24 PACK

Magic Hat 6 pk bottles $5.99 +tax 1 PACK

Corona Extra & Corona Light 24pk bottles $18.49 +tax CASE

Harpoon 12pk bottles $10.49 +tax 12 PACK

Killian's Irish Red 12pk bottles $9.49 +tax 12 PACK

Smirnoff Ice 6pk bottles $5.69 +tax 1 PACK

Wines

20% OFF California Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon 750ml. Featuring Glass Mountain & BV+Coastals

Almaden Wines Chablis, Burgundy, White Grenache, Golden Rhine, Blush, Alfresco Red $6.99

Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, 1.5 Lt $6.99

Cavit Pinot Grigio 750 Ml $9.99

Walnut Crest Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, 1.5 Lt $7.99

Kendall-Jackson Vintner's Chardonnay 750 Ml $9.99

Liquors

Smirnoff Vodka 1.75L $18.49

Fleischmann's 1.75L Preferred Whiskey $11.99

Dewar's White Label Scotch 1.75L $28.99

Gilbey's Gin 1.75 Lt $14.99

Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 1.75L $19.99

Cuervo Authentic Margaritas 1.75L $11.99

Bailey's Irish Cream 750 ML $15.99

Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75 Lt $17.99

at the STOP & SHOP PLAZA

HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS

DON'T Drink & Drive

Could you survive in "Survivor Amherst?"

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

The bloom is officially off the rose. America's obsession with "Survivor" has ended. The much touted Thursday night battle between "Friends" and "Survivor" was won decidedly by "Friends" last Thursday as the NBC comedy drew a 15.9 rating to "Survivor's" 11.9, meaning "Friends" outdistanced the reality program by over 4 million viewers.

Ever since the first season, "Survivor's" ratings have slowly slipped, and last Thursday's was the lowest in the show's history. Although the ratings for the program are still solid, and were good enough to tie for ninth place in the network ratings, they do show that people's interest in the reality series is dwindling.

Some might say that shows like "Survivor" are bound to lose interest overtime, because of their gimmicky nature. What was once a fresh idea becomes the status quo when it is done to death, both by "Survivor" itself and by the numerous take offs that the other networks are bound to attempt when they see a potential ratings success. One only has to look at a show like "Who Wants To Be Millionaire" to see that what happens when the networks take a good idea and beat it to death, with little innovation.

So how can "Survivor" keep itself entertaining to its audience to prevent the inevitable turnoff factor? Two words: Survivor Amherst. Seems like a sure fire ratings success to me. Imagine all of the possibilities:

Tribal counsel held at McMurphy's

All of the cast members forced to spend a night in one of those ancient smelly dorms in Northeast

There are endless immunity challenges that could result as well. Forget drinking blood, how bout trying to finish "The Zeppelinim" drenched in Red Alertttm sauce from Wings, or better yet eight platefuls of "Country Fried Steak" from the Dining Commons. For some ethnic flavor, how about trying to finish off an extra large portion of extra hot chicken curry from "The New India House" (Jack's!). Since this is Amherst, immunity will also be granted if one can shotgun a can of "Old Milwaukee's Best," or better yet, do a keg stand of 20 seconds or longer with it

Contestants will also be forced to participate in humiliating gestures such as going into that porn shop on Route 9, and buying the 2 for 1 special movie. The winning team will receive a variety of lotions

To really freshen things up, people will no longer be voted off in the traditional Survivor fashion, but rather the contestants will be divided into two flip cup teams, in which each will vote off their worst player. The sole survivor of the flip cup game wins $1,000,000 or a gift certificate to the Hampshire Mall

Alright CBS, you heard it here first. If you want to get those "Survivor" ratings back up, there's your magic formula. "Survivor Amherst."

Tubenotes Show Spotlight:

Dismissed- (MTV Weeknights- 11pm)

"Scandalous." "Shameless." "Gratuitous." Those are just a few of the adjectives that the new MTV show "Dismissed" uses to describe itself. Only in the time slot that was the former home of "Undressed" could such a show exist.

The "reality" show features people in their late teens and early twenties out on dates. But ordinary dates these are not. The show takes the form of either one guy out with two females vying for his attention, or one female out with two guys vying for his. At the end of the date, one is "dismissed" while the other two begin a life long union of love, or at least go and have sex once before they never see each other again.

The most entertaining aspect of the show is the trash talk that goes on between the two contestants competing not to be dismissed. Case in point: on a recent episode one woman greeted her tall opponent as "Andre the Giant," the other responded by simply calling her a "ho."

Oh, and the show has some stringent rules that must be adhered to at all times. For one, each one of the contestants gets a "time out" with the person they are attempting to woo into bed. This gives them 15 minutes alone with their date, and first base action usually results.

Obviously, since this is MTV, almost all of the people featured are "beautiful people." Buff guys and busty girls make up the majority of the show's "cast." Of course, all of these "beautiful people" need jobs so they have sufficient funds for all of life necessities: cool clothes, hair gel, club cover charges, mixed drinks, and gas for the luxury car their parents gave them. Some of their professions have included "sales assistant" (cashier actually), "amateur filmmaker" (home videos don't count pal), and "volunteer" (definitely volunteer work for her.) On a recent episode we were introduced to Kelly, a 19-year old "student" who doesn't actually attend any sort of school currently, and who's hobbies include "going to the beach."

If there is one obvious trend to "Dismissed," it is that the females tend to almost always pick the "quirky" guy, and the males' pick is not as predictable. Perhaps this is because the females that are cast are always so close in personality (but available in blonde or brunette), while there is usually a difference in the males (boring guy vs. quirky guy).

"Dismissed" is entertaining in a campy sort of a way. It advertises itself as "your new guilty pleasure." It certainly is new, and I feel guilty for wasting my life away watching in it, but pleasurable, no. Sort of funny, yes. Grade: C

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

A culture where coffee is more than caffeine

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

"CAFÉ: The Journey of Cuban Artists", an exhibit currently on display in the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery, examines cultural identity in Cuban art through a unique lens: the societal significance of "cafe," or coffee.

Leandro Soto, a professor of theater at Mount Holyoke College, and the curator of the exhibition, gave a gallery talk on Tuesday night about the themes explored in the displayed works. He explained that coffee, in Cuban culture, is more than a mere beverage.

"Coffee is a connection that all Cubans have," said Soto. "With it, we can keep our identity wherever we are."

He pointed out that most of the artists featured in the exhibition are Cuban exiles who continue to explore Cuban culture in their works. A recurring theme in the works was the presence of coffee beans, mugs, and makers.

One piece, Laura Luna's "Nights Drinking Cafe," features a yearly calendar, with each month displayed by a cup of coffee and a rising sun. Another, Paulo Simeón's "Homenjeal Colador Ahogado," is an abstract impression of an old-fashioned coffeemaker.

While the paintings explore many similar themes, coffee is not represented in each piece.

"Maybe some of the pieces are not connected to coffee," Soto said. "But they are connected to Cuban culture and identity."

He explained that he decided to use coffee as a unifying theme after searching for a "comparison point" for the exhibition.

"I asked artists if they drink coffee, and most of them said yes," he said. "They use coffee as a ritual to keep identity."

"It's very important in our culture," he continued. "If you visit me, the first thing I will ask you is, 'Do you want coffee?' There is a ritual of sitting and drinking."

At the conclusion of Soto's lecture, many attendees asked questions and made comments.

"I'm reminded of an analogous situation at the end of Apartheid, when South African writers wondered what they would do next," said John Lemly, a professor of English and African Studies at Mount Holyoke. "Surely this epoch won't last forever...this must be towards the end of the era of Fidel. There must be hints in [these artists] work about the political consequences of whatever the changes are. Perhaps their exiles will be coming to an end."

Soto responded by saying that, even if the artists had been forced to leave their native Cuba, they were never truly separated from the la]nd.

"It is a very difficult thing to cut a connection to this island," he said. He quoted a Cuban artist who said, "I am not in exile, I am in a journey."

Included alongside each work in the exhibit is a statement by the artist. Many of the artists have chosen to write about the personal importance of coffee in their lives and their art.

"As a young boy, and then as an adult, I was never able to understand people's addiction to 'El Café', stated Pedro Portal, whose photography exhibit includes a photo of a Virgin Mary statue superimposed over an image of coffee beans. "I do not drink café myself. So all I can think about is the pleasure café lovers experience as they sip the black nectar at any given time of the day. And so, I have come to the conclusion that photography is my cafe."

"Coffee in my house was always the dividing line between Capitalism and Communism," stated Simeón. "When it was available, everyone in my family supported the Cuban revolution. When it wasn't, everyone was against it. That's why the old-fashioned cloth coffee filter is in my artwork; for me, it was the filter that generated information, so that at an early age I could come to my own conclusions about what was happening in my country."

"CAFÉ: The Journeys of Cuban Artists", will be on display at the Augusta Savage Gallery until Nov. 14.

COURTESY OF SCOTT BLODGET

Soto spoke of the unique connection Cubans have with coffee.

String Cheese Incident invades UMass

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Staff

On Friday this campus will become overrun with many Friends of Cheese. This little moniker does not relate to your household varieties of cheese, but rather to people who listen to the band String Cheese Incident. You will probably see a few of these people on campus this weekend because many have traveled far and wide to see their favorite band, at our very own campus. For those that do not know The String Cheese Incident, here is a little briefing.

Having released their fifth album Outside Inside this past spring, String Cheese has been seeing exponential growth recently in their now massive fan base. Since joining together as a band in 1993 in the small ski town of Crested Butte, Colorado the String Cheese Incident have accomplished many impressive feats in a very short amount of time. Through continuous touring throughout Colorado, especially milestone performances at the renowned Telluride Bluegrass Festival, String Cheese Incident has slowly made their way across the country, picking up new fans every time they perform. Having conquered the rest of the West with some memorable performances throughout California, Oregon and Washington State, String Cheese eventually began to move east, finding the same success. Last fall, they hit a major plateau as they sold out the majority of their East Coast fall tour with stops in Albany, Boston, here in Northampton, and in Portland, Maine for their traditional Halloween Bash.

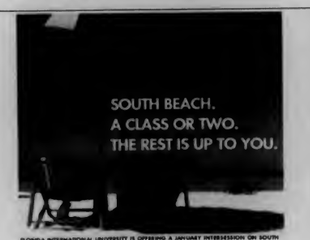
Although their studio albums are very good, the true identity of String Cheese comes out during their live performances, discussed individually as incidents. Using a very non-traditional line-up, mainly an acoustic guitar lead rather than the usual electric guitar alongside a mandolin, has allowed String Cheese to employ a very clean and natural sound without much distortion or reverb. With supreme musicianship and amazing awareness of what the other band members are doing, their songs and jams are extremely tight and seem to almost effortlessly morph into each other. The band is comprised of talented musicians who each have mastered their instruments. On acoustic guitar is the fast fingered Bill Nershi. Playing a masterful electric mandolin and violin is Michael Kang. Keith Moseley plays a very tight bass guitar, while Mike Travis rounds out the rhythm section on drums and percussion. Certainly not to be forgotten is Kyle Hollingsworth on piano and organ. All musicians with the exception of Travis take turns singing lead and backup vocals.

Since Phish began their hiatus from touring, a few notable bands have been vying for the top of the jamband scene. The String Cheese Band has been the only band to really step up and take the lead, especially here in the East. As they sold out the Calvin Theater in Northampton last time they were in the area, they decided it was time to step up to the big house. The travel time is even shorter this time, as they will be playing in our very own backyard at the significantly larger Mullins Center. If you have been trying to catch these guys for a while, or if you have never heard of them, I guarantee you will not be disappointed by the show they put on. Have fun and bring your Hulahoops!!

Tickets are $27.50. Available online through SCI Ticketing at www.sciticketing.com or Ticketmaster at www.ticketmaster.com. Also available at Mullins Center Box Office day of and before show. Doors will open at 6pm, show to begin at 7pm.

JBB Inspires Noho

By Deirdra Frum
Collegian Correspondent



JOHN BROWN'S BODY and THE ALMIGHTY SENATORS
Iron Horse
October 20

"I wanna be among them! lord." On October 20th at the Iron Horse in Northampton I fell victim to the seductive rhythms of John Brown's Body. Even before JBB graced the stage I was already enchanted by the funk of the Almighty Senators. I had never heard of them before but I would definitely love to hear from them again. Their cool, collected energy penetrated through the doors of the dimly lit venue out into the streets. I had never been to the Iron Horse before but found it by following the vibe of the Almighty Senators (a name that suites them well).

John Brown's Body only had one hour to cast their spell, but that didn't make it any less potent. I melted into their music and couldn't stop myself from dancing along with the rest of the crowd. When I looked on stage I realized that they loved every bit of it just as much as the audience, if not more. The carefree atmosphere dissolved all inhibitions. The music, the dancing, the body heat that was generated, these were the ingredients necessary for an uplifting night. There were a wide variety of people, an eclectic crowd if you will. Contrary to popular belief not everyone there was sporting dreadlocks. In fact most were not. I walked up the stairs to get a view of the entire show. The stage as opposed to the crowd and the lights that shown down on the band, spilling onto the front row of the audience, the smallness of the venue made it seem so intimate, like, they were friends jamming at a party. The people looked like a swarm of colored shirts and hats moving restlessly to the music. For those who follow the band and are familiar, the set consisted of 14 jams; "Instrument," "Many N," "Traveling Man," "Two Bulls," "This end/Dub," "Win Them," "Thirty Three," "Eyes," "Land," "Adonai," "Time to move," "Feel," "Original," and "Tree." Every song was played like the first: fresh and full of the spirit of Jah.

For those who are not familiar with the band it is named after the white radical, abolitionist John Brown who lead a raid against Harpers Ferry, West Virginia. He was captured and hanged for murder and treason and inciting a slave riot. Afterwards, a civil war anthem became "John Brown's Body is moldering in his grave." All the members of the band have been musicians for a long time, but JBB has only been around since 94'. The band consists of nine members who play an array of instruments ranging from the keyboard to the bingy drum. It was started by Kevin Kinsella in Ithaca NY when he split with his previous band Tribulations and started writing new material which soon became the signature sound of John Brown's Body. More information about the band can be found at their website Johnbrownsbody.com, including tour dates and shows for November.

The group has recorded three CDs including their debut All Time that made Rolling Stone's alternative top ten chart in 1997. Their second album Among Them and the third This Day are available as well. I am no expert on Reggae music, but JBB definitely had me feeling iri.

ETI Educational Testing Institute

Maschusetts Teacher Test Preparation

5 Week programs with guaranteed results in Communication and Literacy

Delivering what you need to prepare for success:
- Literacy and communication skills
- Test content and test taking strategies
- Supportive setting and individual attention
- Proven test preparation book and curriculum
- Custom programs and private tutoring

Record of outstanding results:
- Pass rates improve from 12% to 71%!
- Average scores improve over 12% per section!

Join ETI and guarantee your success!

800-399-5448 or consult: www.massteachertest.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor

Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE

Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.

Special Orders Welcome

BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE KEGS CIGARS CLOVES CIGARETTES TOBACCO

Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted

[illegible] Route 9 Hadley, MA [illegible] Open 8 am

...IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT...

PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2002

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30 @ 7 P.M. IN BARTLETT 61

(This is the last scheduled test until summer 2002 orientation)

This test may be taken only once.

Students should pre-register for ENGLWP before pre-registration ends.

Students do not need to register for the test.

Atlantis

41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025

DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9

AMHERSTS HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.

TUESDAY: KARAOKE 80s MUSIC HOSTED BY STEVE GIDDS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS

FRIDAY: RED BULL PROMOTER: PIMP AND HOE PARTY W/ DJS BON BONS & HUSH

WEDNESDAY: MAGNIFIED RECORDINGS PRESENTS: DEEP HOUSE W/CHRIS THORPE, BEN TAYLOR, & JTB

SATURDAY: HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ

THURSDAY: STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES

SUNDAY: DRUM & BASS

SORRY, NO LONGER DOING SUNDAY BRUNCH. ALL COUPONS HONORED AT DINNER.

Guests can't save Heads

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

JOHN MELLENCAMP
Cuttin' Heads
Sony

When an artist is as prolific as John Mellencamp, it's not possible for every album to be a winner. His new CD Cuttin' Heads is his sixteenth studio recording of original music, and the rock 'n' roll icon starts to show his age on his latest effort. The songs, for the most part, all sound the same: that typical Mellencamp down-home rock quality, only now without the pure pop energy of his earlier successes like his outstanding 1997 self-titled CD and 1996's energetic and refreshing Mr. Happy Go Lucky.

Even though Mellencamp may be from the old school of rock 'n' roll, where there are actual people playing instruments instead of a synthesizer manipulating all of them, there is a hollow and lonely air to the CD. Many of the tunes have the same syncopated rock percussion, and the few that do not instead opt for an unbefitting reggae rhythm. The unoriginal and repetitious instrumentation of the songs that accompany Mellencamp's crooning make the songs tedious and dissimilar from each other, and the lyrical talent that Mellencamp usually exhibits is replaced by lackluster, lazy lines.

The theme of the album, mostly about patriotism and world peace, couldn't have been better timed since the devastation of September 11th. Yet the redundant sound of the songs, and the often-uninspired lyrics give Cuttin' Heads an overall sense that it was hastily thrown together simply because of that tragedy. It's one thing for the CD artwork to have an American flag across it, and the inner jacket picture with "F-ck Facism" scrawled on a guitar, but song after song about racism, war and the like makes the listener feel as though the album only exists because there is nothing better or more timely to sing about.

The title track is a promising opening to the CD, backed by a gospel choir and Public Enemy member Chuck D, who at one point breaks into a raw rap interlude. Mellencamp and company sing an intriguing story, about a white man defending his black wife's honor somewhere "down south." It's full of life and sentiment, even though the chorus at one point erupts into an unnecessary rant about the derogatory "N-word" slang given to African-Americans. Despite this, "Cuttin' Heads" delivers an important message with an agreeable tempo, and could be the start of a very promising CD.

Perhaps on purpose, the rapid decline of the CD's potential possibility is put on hiatus for one more song as the first single from Cuttin' Heads, "Peaceful World" is placed next. It is a far cry from Mellencamp's best work, but is the CD's catchiest tune, which doesn't say much. It's also the most socially appropriate track that could be aired on the radio, and heard by susceptible children. He brings back a scaled-down version of the chorus from the previous song (singing the same monotonous "Hey yeah!" chant as they did before) and spotlights up-and-coming talent India Arie. Her pleasantly placid voice balances Mellencamp's ragged one, but neither of them stretch themselves out to be anything more than vocals on a radio-friendly tune.

Country singer Trisha Yearwood does a duet with Mellencamp on the bluegrass sounding "Deep Blue Heart." Even though this song is only the third one in, there is already a lethargic pacing to the album, which is now doubled with the extremely slow-tempo song. Unlike the previous two tracks, which dealt with hatred and peace, respectively, this one only describes the scenic end of a day in a country setting. Why it was laid out as the third song, then, is bewildering, and would have made more sense to place at the end of the CD.

The following song, "Crazy Island," besides being ridiculously titled, is an attempt to directly reproduce the Americana feel from some of Mellencamp's most well known songs, especially "Little Pink Houses." It's cute for about two or three minutes, and then the monotone Mellencamp keeps repeating the same melody and it becomes that annoying song that you can't get out of your head when you're trying to write a term paper or go to sleep. Sure it's catchy, which pop rock should be, but this is the kind of catchy you can't shake; it just rattling around your head like a mouse in maze, making the test subject more crazy (ironic, eh?) as it goes on.

On some of the songs that follow, like "The Same Way I Do," and "Women Seem," the listener is just waiting for Mellencamp to toss his cowboy hat into the sunset, pick up his electric guitar and rock the roof off the recording studio. He may be aiming for an acoustic flavor for this album, but these songs don't work in the absence of harder instrumentation, like his biggest hit "Jack and Diane" so perfectly did. Such instances as these leave the listener wanting more edge, craving the rock style that Mellencamp is full well known to be able to do. They are rather left disappointed that he may have moved past his rock heyday and prefers this current blasé sound.

Mellencamp, perhaps, is aware of the bomb that this album could turn out to be, because as it winds into its final stretch, it seems like he's throwing in the towel, playing songs that come to his mind right on the spot, and keeping the total number of songs to an unusual low number of only ten. "Worn Out Nervous Condition" and "Shy" seem improvised because of the practically nonexistent refrain and the lyrics that rapidly tailspin into foolishness, like "Woman/ Well I'm ashamed to say/ Woman/ That I'm afraid this way/ Woman/ Yeah/ Woman." He might be shy, but this verse makes him sound like he is slow of mind too.

Cuttin' Heads is an insult to Mellencamp's exceptional career and severely underrates the talent that he has proven so many times before. Knowing the frequency with which Mellencamp cranks out material, though, (including the forthcoming Broadway musical collaboration with horror author Stephen King) it is hopeful that he will one day soon be able to forget about Cuttin' Heads and make an album that is far more worthwhile.

COURTESY OF PAIS JOSSEN

John Mellencamp's latest album is a low point in his prolific career.

■ smarts

continued from page 8

to be disturbed by those of you who don't truly understand the importance of horror films in today's society. See our compatriots' column to the left. They'd honestly tell you that Soulkeeper is an acceptable horror film. Word up: it isn't. We possess the only acceptable list of scary movies and it doesn't include Disturbing Behavior or Final Destination. That you'd enjoy going to those films only indicates your own pathetic ignorance of what is good horror.

For instance, have you ever enjoyed a spooky evening watching Romero's brilliant Dawn of the Dead? What about a nice date movie like Texas Chainsaw Massacre? Ever thought about just how much fun a Sunday morning under the covers with Evil Dead 2 could be? Of course you haven't. You're too busy, standing in line, waiting for tickets to Jayride.

Horror films satiate a subconscious need to be primal; they empower women and allow them to break the unwritten gender laws, and they show us that our parents are just as much to blame for societal problems as science and technology. What usually comes to the box office are horror flicks are mindless drivel, and the moment we speak up to show the world the truth we are labeled "freaks" that have too much time on our hands. Well, our answer is that horror movies are a special art and, god dammit, art takes time!

But of course you don't understand that, do you? You're too busy at your "parties" and your "social outings" to be sitting in a dark, dank basement somewhere, watching the best that Lucio Fulci has to offer. You're too busy stereotyping us as losers who are "nerds" and "geeks" and "tools" and "complete freaks who shouldn't be allowed around children." We hear your complaints; we have noted your sarcasm. You disgust us.

At least at the end of the day, we know what's good and what isn't. While you're talking about just how creepy Jeepers Creepers was, we'll be sitting in the back of the theater in black trenchcoats, arms crossed and eyes rolled, knowing the truth.

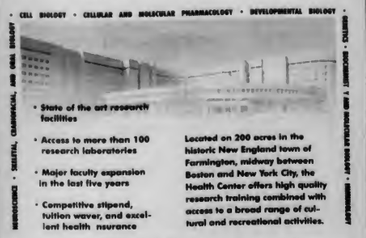
UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships
$2,000!!

Applicants must be full-time sophmore and junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Relations Office by Friday, November 9. Four scholarships will be awarded and each recipient will receive $2,000. A complete application must include a resume, academic transcript, essay and a letter of reference

For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317or jag@admin.umass.edu

UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

A WONDERFUL LOVE STORY



MARK TWAIN'S
The Diaries of Adam & Eve
Starring DAVID BIRNEY & MADYLON BRANS
November 2 - 18
Sponsored by LENOX

The world's first love story seen through the eyes of America's greatest humorist. Twain's Garden of Eden bursts with wit, laughter and the lyric poignancy of the first love and the first loss. Special limited engagement.

"Mark Twain isn't just for Hal Holbrook anymore. David Birney brings Mark Twain's words to life...in a romantic adventure for the ages."
—TIMES UNION, ALBANY NY

CITY STAGE
Call for tickets: (413) 788-7033 ticketmaster.com (413) 733-2500
Purchase online: www.citystage.symphonyhall.com www.ticketmaster.com
FREE Parking
ONE COLUMBUS CENTER ~ SPRINGFIELD ~ (413) 788-7033
~ Free Parking in Columbus Center Garage ~

UCONN HEALTH CENTER
Graduate Study in Biomedical Science
Ph.D. in Biomedical Science
Medical Scientist Training Program (M.D./Ph.D.)
Dentist Scientist Training Program (D.M.D./Ph.D.)
Dentist Scientist Award (Dental Clinical Specialty/Ph.D.)

• State of the art research facilities
• Access to more than 100 research laboratories
• Major faculty expansion in the last five years
• Competitive stipend, tuition waiver, and excellent health insurance

Located on 200 acres in the historic New England town of Farmington, midway between Boston and New York City, the Health Center offers high quality research training combined with access to a broad range of cultural and recreational activities.

Application deadline: January 1, 2002

GRADUATE ADMISSIONS
UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT HEALTH CENTER
263 FARMINGTON AVENUE
FARMINGTON, CT 06030-3906
TEL: (860) 679-4306
http://grad.uchc.edu
THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT HEALTH CENTER IS AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER.

Iglesias ahead of Latin pack

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

ENRIQUE IGLESIAS
Escape
Interscope

Ricky Martin and Jennifer Lopez may have started the Latin boom a few years back, but few artists have been able to uphold the stellar reputation of Latin music. Let's face it: Martin's "Livin' La Vida Loca" was nothing more than a bland cheese fest. Subsequent releases from the Latin crooner justify this notion. And we're left wondering where exactly Lopez comes up with those poorly produced songs of hers. (Maybe she pulls them right out of her ghetto booty?)

One of the true talents, however, has to be Enrique Iglesias. No longer living in the shadow of his legendary father, Julio Iglesias, Enrique has come into his own as an internationally known superstar. The success of the superb single "Bailamos" in 1999, off Will Smith's film Wild Wild West, set this Latino's US recognition in motion.

The first single, "Hero," is Iglesias' first ballad. All of the songs from Enrique, his last 65 worldwide platinum album, were uptempo: "Bailamos," "Be With You," "Rhythm Divine" and his "Could I Have This Kiss Forever" duet with Whitney Houston. But hearing all of these great songs, it was obvious Iglesias had the vocal ability to release a soaring ballad. And he surprises us by doing just that with the first release off Escape, as "Hero" is a tender song that has also become a sort of theme for the bold exploits of brave men following the Sept. 11 tragedy. Music as an "escape" to another place was, in fact, the inspiration for the record's title.

COURTESY OF JON ROTELLA

Enrique Iglesias rises above the pack of Latin pop stars.

Teaming once again with dance beat masters Paul Barry and Mark Taylor, Escape basks in gentle breezes of tropical rhythms and graceful Latin guitar touches. Iglesias controls his voice like few other male artists: alluring, rich and controlled vocals, along with appealing scratched up edges, blend to create a masterful sense of musical balance.

Barry and Taylor, create guitar and drum-heavy numbers on "One Night Stand," "Be Be the One" and "Love to See You Cry." Each number is sung with deep down soul delivered with the intricacy and musical balance that sets this album as one of the best Latin albums of the year. Starting off with ultra-ring guitar licks, "She Be the One" bangs and jives as Iglesias warns of a dangerous woman taking a man on a bumpy ride but knows he won't be able to stop himself.

What is most interesting on Escape is the adventurous leap the production has taken, which creates a subtle, but different, sound for Iglesias. The way his voice shapes itself to the beats (both naturally and, surprisingly well, digitally), harsh sounding guitars beats, and the stop-and-go rhythms, make this album a cross between a samba and a sway. These creative stretches outdistance Martin's lame Latin compositions, making his hip-swivels seem like child's play (hope you're taking notes Martin!).

The most experimental track and also the best track is "Don't Turn off the Lights." With its slow start to a gradual crescendo of percussions behind the strong vocals of this Latin stallion, this song is destined to be a gargantuan club hit. Returning producer Lester Mendez also helped give him a new edge with this new album. Mendez co-wrote/co-produced the bass thumping "World Crashes Down," a rock-and-roll turn for the ever-inventive Iglesias.

The title track employs the vocoder stretching the voice of Iglesias as he professes his love and undying devotion to a woman torn. He croons "you can run, you can hide/ But you can't escape my love" as his voice rises and falls like crests on waves.

The beats on the naughty "Making Love for Fun" drop like candy as drum beats kick into high gear, lacquered in Iglesias' pensive vocals passionately singing, "Oh, baby just relax, and let me do my thing."

Iglesias hasn't forgotten his roots, as he is reluctant to record an album entirely in English. Three songs are also recorded in Spanish: "Escape," "Don't Turn off the Lights" and "Hero." Such is apparently his instinct for the pleasurably romantic, hit-ready tracks.

Iglesias, who co-wrote and co-produced nearly every song on Escape, may have felt the pressure of producing another follow-up similar to Enrique but instead crafted an album centrols on ingenuity that pounces above the efforts of his Latin cohorts. It is clear a great amount of time went into mixing each song, the aural precision and detail flows through on each and every song. Escape, either, as a welcome addition to the overhyped, under-performing Latin landscape of the past year.

■ Prisco

continued from page 14

No. 1 player. In his sophomore year, he was named to the 2000 Atlantic 10 All-Championship team. That same season, he also led the team in winning percentage (.733) and finished 11-0 in doubles play. Last year he led the Minutemen to the finals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament with a 7-5 singles record and 13 doubles wins with partner Brent Davis.

Prisco has improved the UMass tennis program in other ways aside from his brilliant play on the court. A couple years back he encouraged friend Scott Wilkins, whom he had worked with at the Wellesley Country Club, to apply for UMass' Assistant Coach position. When Wilkins accepted the position it helped Prisco in many ways, as he and Wilkins share a similar history both mentored by tennis pro Steve Goldman.

"Our relationship is good and it helps his tennis game that he knew me for a couple years in a different atmosphere," Wilkins said. "We played in a lot of the same circles playing Division 1 tennis and we have a lot of the same interests."

Prisco also brings to the court a fiery, competitive edge rare in the rulebook of reserved tennis etiquette. He wears his emotions on his sleeve, which has a positive effect on his teammates that look to him for leadership and inspiration.

"When I think of Steve, the first thing that comes to mind is a competitor," said senior Todd Champeau, who will join Prisco at this weekend's regionals. "That's what makes him so great that he finds a way to win and he really lets his emotions out there. Playing next to him gets me and the rest of the team fired up. It really rubs off."

When he's not busy gearing up his teammates during the tennis season, Prisco centers his energy on his Sociology major with a focus in Criminology. Though he plans to teach tennis immediately after graduation, he aspires to eventually work as a state trooper. He also enjoys playing intramural sports, in particular, flag football and softball. And according to his teammates, his witty sense of humor is like no other on the squad.

"He cracks a lot of jokes," said Champeau. "A lot of people don't see him as friendly on the court but I've roomed with him for four years on road trips. I'm going to miss our arguments. We love taking little jabs at each other. I'll tell him he has no second serve and he'll tell me that I have no overhead. We know how to press each other's buttons."

As a player and a person Prisco has already left a lasting imprint on the Minuteman program and will be sorely missed when he graduates in May.

"Steve brings to UMass someone who knows how to play No. 1 and can play it well," Wilkins said. "His record speaks for itself and he really holds his own. We've been lucky to have a player of his caliber; good No. 1's are hard to come by. It's going to be hard to fill his shoes."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Thomas Pock is still his team's leading goal-scorer.

■ hockey

continued from page 14

unit. He has already notched two goals and four points this season.

If the Friars' depth and talent is high, then their goaltending situation is off the charts. Nolan Schaefer is arguably the best goalie in the conference, but so far in 2001, he hasn't shown it.

In three games Schaefer has allowed 11 goals and recorded a paltry .878 save percentage. UMass' offensive guns may have picked a nice time to show up on Schaefer's doorstep, but then again, they may have not.

Like Colorado College, Providence struggled to start the season, going 1-2 with its lone win coming against national doormat Sacred Heart.

If the Minutemen don't come to play, they will end up with another embarrassing loss. With so many potential laden players and so few proven scorers it is hard to say what the key is for a UMass win. But that fact is that without good special teams play, the Maroon and White won't have a chance. There's also that goaltending thing.

If anybody has been consistent in this young season, it's Mike Johnson. The senior Minnesotan put the sleeper hold on Niagara's offense just before stifling the high powered Tiger attack in Colorado Springs.

For UMass to get a win, Johnson will likely have to out duel Schaefer – en garde!

The Minutemen and the Friars drop the gauntlet Friday night at Schneider Arena.

jostens
PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING
A Jostens representative will be on campus
Oct 25th & 26th
10am - 2pm On the Campus center Concourse
Save up to $200.00
$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED *MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

What's a good way to explore my grad school options??
Are my grades good enough for grad school?
Can I go to grad school part-time?
Can I defer admission for a year?
Have Questions? Come to the
ANNUAL FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL DAY
Wednesday, October 31, 2001
10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom, UMass Amherst
Over 130 graduate, medical, dental, law and other professional schools will be represented along with schools of social work, theology, international relations, education, library science and a range of other post-baccalaureate options from across the continental US and Hawaii.
Excellence Is Within Your Reach
Call 413-577-0417 for more information
See www-ccn.acad.umass.edu and click on "Events Calendar" for a list of attending schools/departments
UMASS

TIBORA GARCZYC /BUMA COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts women's crew team, racing the Charles River.

crew

continued from page14

Banfield, Mila Gorzkowski, Katia Prokopenko, Katie O'Brien, and Maggie Bartholomew.

Head Coach Jun Deitz was a little disappointed with the place his Eight received, but is hoping the Minutewomen will do better in their race on the Schuylkill River this weekend.

Germany Native Sarah Pollmann and Denmark Native Leah JaKobsen competed in a Double and did fairly well by placing 15th out of 31 boats in an adjusted time of 20:11.180.

A Double had some "difficulty due to a Canadian boat that wouldn't move out of their way," Dietz said.

The UMass coaches all had their turn to compete on the Charles. Dietz competed in the Grand Master Singles and placed 3rd with a time of 19:20.509. Assistant Coach Greg Kruczynski raced in the Masters 4 and placed 24th with a time of 19:52.630.

Graduate Assistant Gen Meredith won the lightweight singles with a time of 19:52.970. Meredith was an alternate for the 2000 Canadian Olympic Double and received 4th place at the World Championships this past summer.

Despite the loss of a number of rowers this year, Dietz is confident in his team.

"We've got a committed group of women this year," he said.

The team will travel to Philadelphia this weekend and hope to prove itself against Boston College, who placed 19th at the Head of the Charles.

TIBORA GARCZYC /BUMA COLLEGIAN

Assistant rowing coach, Wende Wilbur, in the U.S. National boat.

water polo

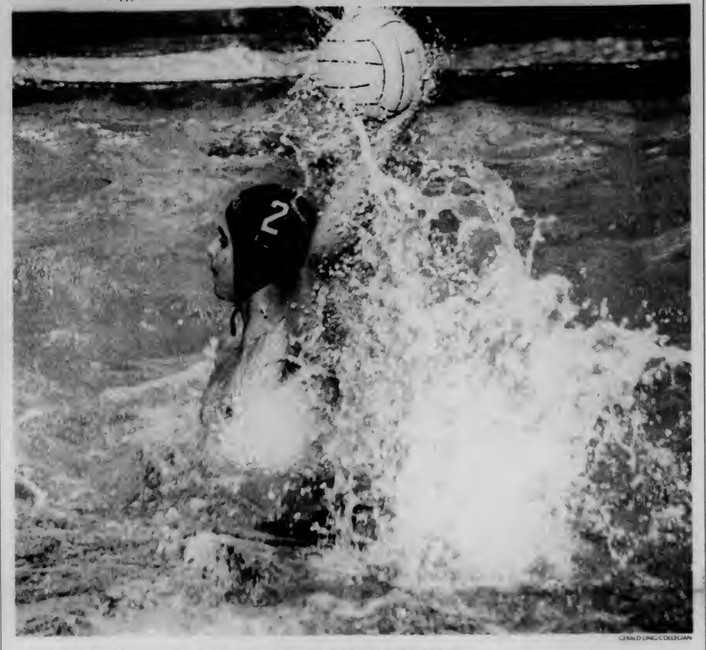
continued from page 14

utes, after one fluke goal for the Crimson off of a UMass deflection. Massachusetts showed some especially tremendous defense during this time, and held Harvard scoreless throughout a two- minute flurry put on by the Crimson. With 2:25 remaining, however, the visitors broke the suspense with a goal from junior Mike Masterson, to take the lead 5-4.

The early minutes were full of exciting offensive plays, though many of Harvard's scoring chances came as a result of defensive mistakes by the Maroon and White.

"We were a little sloppy at first, with a couple of outside shots," Yarworth said. "You can blame that on the field defense, or you can blame it on the goalie, but it was basically sloppiness."

The UMass offensive front was impressive early on, with three unanswered goals, including two from Foley, and one from senior Adam Moore. But Harvard was able to strike back with one minute left, on a tally from Masterson. The scoring continued through the final minute of the first quarter, with one more tally from each side, including another from Foley to bring the score to 4-2 at the end of the period.



The Maroon and White struck back quickly, however, with a goal from senior Antonio Maldonado, off a fine pass from senior Carlos Ramos. Senior goalkeeper J.R. VanderWall, who finished the night with 12 saves on 18 shots, kept the score knotted at five with some great stops late in the half.

The game plan for UMass was much the same.

"We don't want to score a lot of goals to win the game," Yarworth said. "We want to stop the other team from scoring to win."

Up next for the Maroon and White is the Eastern College Athletic Conference championship in Cambridge. The team is looking forward to the tournament, which Yarworth called, "a great tournament, because it's a nopressure tournament. Win or lose, it doesn't really affect what's going on in the Northern Division."

UMass will face Bucknell first, and if they are victorious, will then meet the winner of the Princeton/Brown matchup on Sunday. If the Minutemen are defeated, they will square off with the loser of the Princeton/Brown game.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior Carlos Ramos found classmate Antonio Maldonado yesterday for a key goal in UMass' 9-6 win.

Volleyball faces two key A-10 foes

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

All streaks must come to an end eventually.

The Massachusetts volleyball team (11-9 overall, 4-6 Atlantic 10) is looking to play the role of streak-breaker as it faces yet another crucial conference weekend as it packs up for the Buckeye State for a pair of matches. Friday night the Minutewomen will air it out against Dayton, who boasts an eight-game win streak, before they prepare to do battle with Xavier, victors of nine straight, on Saturday.

"It's hard to put two very good matches back to back," UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "We always seem to play Dayton on a home football weekend, so the football team comes. The [Cintas] Center is one of the nicest places we play in conference. We don't look at it as a hard trip, we really look at it as a challenge."

The Maroon and White dropped a pair of matches to the two conference teams from Ohio the weekend of Sept. 28, losing in straight sets to the Musketeers and in four games to the Flyers.

Against Dayton (15-4, 8-1 A-10), the Minutewomen put up a strong performance, but excellent overall play by the Flyers was the thorn in their side. A .259 hitting percentage, led by Katie Ferriell's .368 (17 kills) was too much firepower for the Maroon and White to handle.

"I thought we contained Susan Westbrock well, but Katie Ferriell and their outside hitters had a good match [in the Sept. 29 contest]," Kenny said. "We need to make sure we contain them a little bit more offensively, because that's their strength."

Ferriell and Westbrock are certainly the offensive leaders in the middle for the Flyers. They are first and second on the team in kills per game, with 3.30 and 3.03, respectively, and both possess a killing percentage over .300.

"Offensive proficiency and being able to defend at least a couple of their attackers [are the keys to beating Dayton]," Kenny said. "They have the best middle attack in the conference, by far. Against Dayton, we need to take them out of their offense immediately with our serve."

Key for the Minutewomen will be junior Jitka Stehnova and senior co-captain Lymarie Llovet if UMass wishes to be successful on the serve. Stehnova leads the team with 37 aces and Llovet boasts 15 service aces as compared to 10 service errors. Stehnova will also be a centerpiece of the team's offensive prowess.

"Our offense starts with passing," Kenny said. "We've been inconsistent with our service receive, which is something we've worked on quite a bit in practices. Whether it be Jitka [Stehnova] or Amanda [Thomas], they need to make sure they give hitters balls that they can attack and terminate. Passing is a major key for us so we can have offensive continuity."

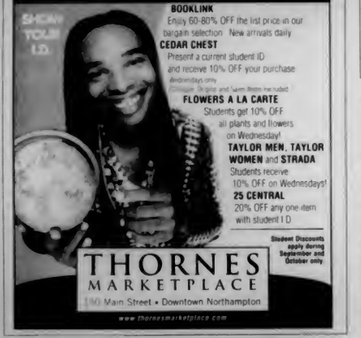
As for the Musketeers (17-2, 7-2 A-10), in their visit to Amherst, they used a four-prong attack that was far too much for the Minutewoman defense to handle. Four attackers posted more than 12 kills and all but one had two errors or fewer, leading Xavier to a lofty .296 hitting percentage in the match.

Leading the way for the Musketeers is Atlantic 10 star Sara Bachus. She is leading the conference in both hitting percentage (an astronomical .419) and kills per game (4.76).

"We have to contain Sara Bachus," Kenny said. "She leads the conference in kills per game with a dynamic attack. If we can contain her, it should disrupt what they want to do offensively."

Xavier is coming off a win against Morehead State to improve their string to nine matches. Over the span of the streak, which extends the entire month of October, the Musketeers have dropped just four games, and no more than one in any match.

The Minutewomen have a win streak of their own, but it is far less high profile than that of their opponents. Still, with a team that has struggled to find consistency throughout the 2001 season, a two-game win streak is a place to start.



"I think it's huge for us [winning our last two games], especially since we played better in areas that we were struggling in," Kenny said. "We had some people who had to step in for Lymarie [Llovet] and now she's starting to come back, but we had people who stepped in and helped us there. I like the fact that we played teams and beat them and got better as we were doing it."

One of those players who has stepped up her play in Llovet's absence (due to a knee injury) is junior Clare Baxter. Baxter has posted a .358 kill percentage this season, by far the best on the team. Most of her action has come in the last several contests, though, and she has provided Kenny with an additional weapon up front.

Still, Kenny sees the opportunity of a trip to Ohio as not only a challenge, but as a welcome relief.

"With all the midterms kids are having, it might be nice to get on the road and have them rest more."

Back-To-Thornes for Back-To-School

BOOKLINK
Enjoy 60-80% OFF the list price in our bargain selection. New arrivals daily.
CEDAR CHEST
Present a current student ID and receive 10% OFF your purchase.
dine4nodays only
Dinner for Two and Sushi Rolls included
FLOWERS A LA CARTE
Students get 10% OFF all plants and flowers on Wednesday!
TAYLOR MEN, TAYLOR WOMEN and STRADA
Students receive 10% OFF on Wednesdays!
25 CENTRAL
20% OFF any one item with student I.D.
Student Discounts apply during September and October only.
THORNES MARKETPLACE
140 Main Street • Downtown Northampton www.thornesmarketplace.com

Grand Opening.
Now you can choose from a variety of affordable vehicles to answer any of your rental needs right here.
Amherst
213 College St.
(413) 259-1188
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car
Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.®
Come in now and take advantage of our Grand Opening Offer.
Free Upgrade On Your Next Visit
Reserve any size car in advance. At the time of rental if a car from the next higher class is available, you'll be upgraded at no extra charge. Valid at the Amherst location through 9/01, but not in conjunction with other promotional offers.
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car
Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3334 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-6, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3334 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

'Backs v. Yanks: Both sides defended here

...for Arizona

It's that time of year again. And that team is in the Fall Classic once again.

I thought this would be the year that I could finally be satisfied with the fact that the New York Yankees were not competing for the World Series. I was wrong.

But as much as I dislike seeing the Yanks in the World Series – a dislike fueled more because I'm sick of seeing them there than an actual hate – I really have to admit that they know how to win in the postseason, pure and simple. In terms of sheer greatness, the Bronx Bombers are probably on top of the list of professional sports.

Still, I like the Diamondbacks to win the Series this year. Perhaps I'm just kidding myself by thinking any team can beat the Yanks, but the D-backs certainly look like they have the ability to do such.

MATT BRADY

Let's face it, we all knew that the duo of Curt Schilling and Randy Johnson is possibly the strongest 1-2 punch in a starting rotation in the last decade. Both pitchers have the ability to win any game by a 1-0 score and against the World Champions, they will probably have to do just that.

My cohort, Dr. Rose, assures me that Schilling is due for a bad outing. This may be true, but Schilling is also a pitcher of streaks, and is riding the hottest streak of his career. Schilling's rekindled taste for postseason magic is the only reason Arizona is where they stand now.

I have watched as much of this postseason as I ever have before and Schilling is turning in the most impressive pitching display I have ever seen. It is, perhaps, the best postseason pitching streak since 1905, when Christy Mathewson shut out the Philadelphia Athletics three times in a five-day period to win the World Series, outdueling the great Chief Bender in each contest.

As for Johnson, he shook all the rumblings about his ineffectiveness in the postseason and kept the Braves baffled for the majority of games one and five of the NLCS. In realizing this is probably his last shot at a World Series ring, Johnson's resilience should be great enough to carry his team to at least one win.

Which brings us to the player who is probably most key if the D-backs are going to win the Fall Classic – Brian Anderson. Bob Brenly shocked the sports world by announcing that the 29-year-old lefty will start game three rather than Miguel Batista.

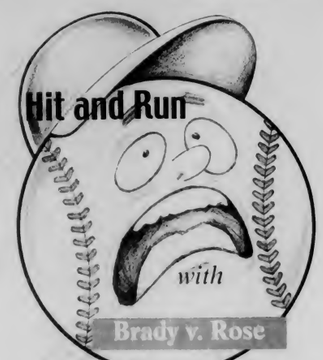
That game is the first game of the series held at Yankee Stadium – and Anderson could also find himself pitching game seven. True, if the series goes seven deep, Arizona will have both Johnson and Schilling ready if anything goes wrong, but Batista is likely to get the start. Combine a few wins from the big two with a strong outing or two out of Anderson, and the Diamondbacks could easily be sipping champagne in two weeks. Every World Series has an unlikely hero and Anderson could easily be it.

The Diamondbacks' main weakness is their bullpen, and that may be the Yankees' greatest strength. Byung-Hyun Kim may be the most dominating reliever against right-handed batters in the Major Leagues, but after that the pen is filled with aging inconsistencies.

But pitching alone can not down the Yankees – the Oakland A's can tell you all about that. The Yanks hurlers do not give their opponents many opportunities, so to be successful against them, the Diamondbacks will have to be patient and use their run-creating ability to the fullest.

In other words, for those of you who love to see long-ball baseball, you will likely have to wait around for preseason. Tony Womack and Craig Counsell will have to get on base and wreak havoc for Yankee pitchers by playing small ball.

Most of all, Luis Gonzalez and Matt Williams will have to turn up their offensive games if they have a prayer of toppling the Bombers. Gonzalez had doubters on his back all year as he pursued the home run record early in the season. The fact that he faded off late in the year only made them more confident in their doubting. Gonzo must be at his best in the series in order to drive in those runners who reach base.



Williams has looked older than ever in the postseason this year. He did chip in five hits in the NLCS, but aside from his double in the ninth inning of Game Five against the Cards, he has not had any clutch hits so far. He is far from the dominating presence he was in the early '90s with the Giants, but Williams still has pop in his bat – he just needs to find it. His success is vital for the Diamondbacks to win.

Most of all, Arizona has to beat the Yankees at their own game. They need to exhibit patience at the plate, frustrating and tiring the hurlers into possibly making a mistake. The bats need to be there, maximizing every opportunity – and those will be few and far between – that the Yankees staff will give them.

What it comes down to is that Johnson and Schilling can go deep enough in their contests to get to Kim in the closer's role and the D-backs bats should be able to create enough runs to get past the World Champs.

Prediction: Diamondbacks in seven.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

...for New York

The World Series will start Saturday in Phoenix. The Yankees will try to win championship number 27 against the Arizona Diamondbacks. The Yankees have won the ALCS four straight years, which is the same number of years as the D-Back's existence. However, whether you are as old as the Boston Red Sox or as young as the D-Backs, at the end of this series, Arizona will join a list that never stops growing: teams who hate the Yankees for squashing their championship hopes.

On paper, this seems to be the toughest challenge for the Yankees in any of the five Fall Classics they have made in the last six years. However, that is what they said about every team the Yankees have played in the postseason since 1998. And guess what happened: they dispatched of every opponent.

The Diamondbacks do have something that those other teams did not have: two starters at the top of their game. Combine Randy Johnson and Curt Schilling have a combined 5-1 record and have given up a combined seven earned runs in 51 innings pitched with a combined 58 strikeouts.

That is great, but what happens when these two get knocked out of the game? According to my colleague, Matt Brady, he thinks that some super reliever is going to pop out of the sky and save the day for the Diamondbacks pathetic bullpen. He's waiting for Mary Poppins to clean up the mess, like this is some sort of Disney movie. If this were the Anaheim Angels in the Fall Classic, I would believe it, but this is the Diamondbacks we are talking about, this is not going to be the case.

However, the Diamondbacks can dream, if the Angels were in the World Series, they would not have to play the Yankees. The Yankees are right for the time of year. Take their pitching staff. Mariano Rivera is 23 for 24 in save opportunities in the postseason and his Earned Run Average is 0.87. The starting rotation is sickening to think about. Roger Clemens starts game one of the ALDS. He doesn't start game one of the ALCS, as the Yankees sideshow replacement is only Andy Pettitte, who won the MVP of the ALCS. Since he pitched Monday and Joe Torre might want to give him an extra day of rest, the Yankees have to find someone else to go with for Game 1 of the World Series. That's a tough choice cause the Yankees only have, I don't know, Mike Mussina. That alone is enough to make baseball fans sick to their stomach. Clemens, Pettitte, and Mussina in the same rotation and we haven't even gotten to Orlando Hernandez yet.

DR. DAVID ROSE

The Yankees are a team of destiny this year. They were down 2-0 to my beloved Oakland A's before they became the "Chokeland A's" and bombed three straight times and then just smashed the record setting Seattle Mariners into submission in a tidy five games.

What was even more impressive about the Seattle series was the fact that the Yanks thoroughly dispatch the M's with some of their big players being no-shows in the series: Derek Jeter batted .118, Scott Brosius batted .188, Jorge Posada batted just .214, Bernie Williams batted just .235 and Tino Martinez did not drive in a run in the series until a mop up three run homer in game five to make it a nine run game.

These players are due for a huge series, especially Jeter, who last season went from hitting just .218 against the A's in the first round, to batting .409 and winning the World Series MVP against the Mets. This guy is money in the postseason, as is Williams, who has a low batting average despite his 10 postseason RBI. They will break through against this pitching staff.

The Yankees also have the knack for having new and unlikely heros every year of this postseason run. In 1996, it was Jim Leyritz, in 1998, it was Brosius, in 1999 it was Chad Curtis with two home runs in a game three win over the Braves that led to a four game sweep and last year, Jose Vizcaino won game one of the World Series with four hits and who drove in the championship winning run, that all-time great hitter Luis Sojo. Alfonso Soriano's ninth inning homer in game four versus Seattle just added his name to this long list.

The Yankees are not intimidated by anything. They were down 2-0 to Atlanta in the 1996 World Series with the next three in Atlanta. The Yankees won the series taking the last four games. They were down 2-0 to the A's this postseason with the next two games in Oakland. Unfortunatly for me, we all know what happened next. They certainly won't be intimidated by the likes of Johnson and Schilling.

The Diamondbacks have had an outstanding season. In his first year with the Diamondbacks, Bob Brenly has led his troops to the Fall Classic. However, Cinderella went away at midnight and the clock will strike twelve on the D-Backs to.

I look for Jeter to be the MVP again as his play will elevate well above the play he had in the ALCS. This team lives for these moments. And how fitting, after everything NYC has been through, it would be fitting that on a cool crisp Thursday night in the Bronx, the Yankees give there fans reason to celebrate.

Prediction: Yankees in five.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist.

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
ICHIBAN
OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner 1 w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Free sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
5 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
6 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
SPECIAL OFFER: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Call your MUMMY

3000 FREE Night & Weekend Airtime Minutes For Life
PLUS
300 Home Airtime Minutes on SingleRate East for only $35 Monthly Access Unlimited nationwide long distance when calling from home airtime rate area.
DIGITAL PHONES for as low as $1*
With annual contract on selected plans
AMHERST (413) 587-3248
HOLYOKE (413) 533-2500
@Wireless
www.shopatwireless.com
36 locations to meet all of your wireless needs. Call 1.800.613.2355 ext.226 for franchise opportunities verizon wireless Authorized Retailer

ZANNA has it...

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1985 BMW 318i 4Dr, auto, AC, $2950. 549-1155

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$350 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

Research interviewers. No selling or cold calls. Set your own schedule Evenings and weekends Competitive pay- 20+ hours per week. Hadley location. PVTA acessible. For more infor call FMI Recruiting Office 1-888-423-5381

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

EMPLOYMENT

COACHES WANTED Amherst Leisure Services is looking for enthusiastic college students with a background in basketball to coach in the Amherst Youth Basketball league. These are volunteer positions, with an average commitment of 2-5 hours a week. Every coach will go thru a coaching certification program. There will be an orientation meeting for anyone interested in learning more about the coaching in the league on Monday, October 29, 2001 at 7:00 p.m. at the Bangs Community Center. The Bangs Center is located behind Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at thomasm@townamherst.ma.us

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

EMPLOYMENT

www.FluidVisions.com

ENTERTAINMENT

Montreal Weekend Specials From $89 Includes round trip motorcoach from Boston/Springfield or Hartford. 3days 2nights Hotel Downtown Montreal. 1 Breakfast 1 Dinner free admission to Club Dome
Nov. 2-4 $89
Nov. 9-11 $99
Nov. 16-18 $99
Nov. 23-25 $99
Nov. 30-Dec. 2 $99
Dec. 30-Jan 1 $109-$119
Contact Global Tours: 533 Main Street, Melrose, MA 02176 781-665-4100

DJ For Hire: DJ Fooz & SYB Productions are still booking for fall semester. Call 537-8527

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

Free Firewood, some cut, some on ground. Perfect for woodstove. Bring chain saw and truck 665-8736

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

Looking for 1-2 femaies to share room. Town Houses in Amherst. Lease starting Jan 1. 413-549-8162

ROOM WANTED

2 Females Looking for room to rent on bus route. Starting from January. Call 546-7196

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center. 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

#1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

What are you waiting for

Advertise today

Collegian Classifieds

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

0 - HSCN Bulletin Board
2 - CBS 3 Hartford
3 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - PBS 57 Springfield
7 - WGBH Boston Channel
8 - UHF 58 Hartford
9 - HSCN Non Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS 24 Hartford
13 - Boston Consolidated
14 - International Channel
15 - CNBC (Business Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - MSNBC
18 - ESPN2
19 - CVC 29 (Business Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Sports w Scrol
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - MTV
31 - VH1
32 - Nick at Nite
33 - TV Land
34 - Comedy Central
35 - BET
36 - Univision
37 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING C - Campus OCTOBER 25, 2001

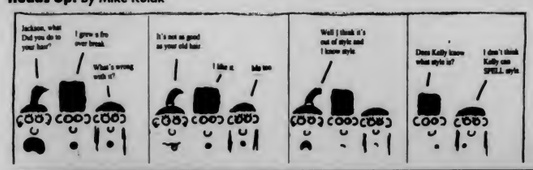
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow UK (N)		Frontline "Trial of a Terrorist"		Mystery! "Second Sight"		This Old Hse.	Hometime
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Agency "In Our Own Backyard"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Agency "In Our Own Backyard"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Chronicle	American Tribute	With the Boston Symphony		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Popstars 2	Elimidate Del.	Charmed "Sibs Matters" (N)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood Sq.	Extra	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Start All Over Again" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Popstars 2	Elimidate Del.	Charmed "Sibs Matters" (N)		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Start All Over Again" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Major League Baseball Playoffs: ALCS Game 7 – Indians or Mariners vs. Athletics or Yankees.						News	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Start All Over Again" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Drs. on Call	Frontline "Trial of a Terrorist"		Mystery! "Second Sight"		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday (N)		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	★★ "Fallen" (1997, Suspense) Denzel Washington, John Goodman					★★½ "Child's Play" (1988) Catherine Hicks
A&E	69	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	Biocd	Biography: Adam West		Biography: Julie Newmar		Ultimate Reality (N)		Law & Order "Competence"
CNN	63	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	70	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stern's Money	★★½ "The Naked Gun" (1988, Comedy) Leslie Nielsen.				Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	68	Wild Discovery	Deadly Bugs	Wild Discovery: Great Bears		Truth or Scare (N)				America's Haunted Houses		Justice Files
ESPN	64	Sportscenter		NFL 2Night (N)		NFL Football: Indianapolis Colts at Kansas City Chiefs. (Live)							Sportscenter
LIFE	67	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Outrage" (1998, Drama) Rob Lowe, Jennifer Grey.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	71	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Music Videos (In Stereo)		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		Unplugged	Cribs	Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Dismissed (N)	Music Videos
NICK	65	Oddparents	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	66	Star Trek "The Cage"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Farscape "My Three Crichtons"		Outer Limits "Revival"		Crypt Tales	Tales-Crypt	Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	62	Without Warn.	Without Warn.	Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Secrets of Forensic Science		Asteroid Impact		Impact Earth		Secrets of Forensic Science
TNT	59	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Pretender "Under the Reds"		Law & Order "Punk" (In Stereo)		★★½ "The Running Man" (1987) Arnold Schwarzenegger.				★★½ "The Running Man" (1987)
USA	60	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Webb of Lies" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Line of Sight"		JAG "Ghost Ship" (In Stereo)		JAG "Vanished" (In Stereo)		Martin	Martin
HBO	51	★★½ "Small Time Crooks" (2000, Comedy) Woody Allen. "PG"				Inside the NFL (N)		"Shot in the Heart" (2001) Giovanni Ribisi.			Last Castle	Tsicab Confessions 5
MAX	52	(5:30) "The Great White Hype"		★★★ "The Tao of Steve" (2000)		Donal Logue. "R"		★½ "Bedazzled" (2000) Brendan Fraser.		Creature Features "Teenage Caveman" (N)			"Scandal"
SHOW	53	(5:00) "Hi Line"		★½ "The Next Best Thing" (2000)		Rupert Everett. "PG-13"		★ "Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2" (2000) "R"		Going to California (TV) (N)		Leap Years (TV)

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Mr. Gnu By Travis Dandro



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Skybox By Blake

Quote of the Day

"I've got a lot of European in me. All those little countries before they got split up. I'm U.S.S.R.-ian."

- Cara Horowitz

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 69 LOW: 36	HIGH: 53 LOW: 31	HIGH: 51 LOW: 27

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Don't let a bad situation progress too far today, or you'll find that it is quite difficult to address when you can take it no longer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Subtlety is the way to someone's heart today, and the more gentle and sensitive you are the more likely you are to win the prize.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21-Jan. 19) – Take care that you don't abandon the rule book completely today simply because you wish to indulge a whim. Remain in control at all times.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that you don't become too possessive today. Giving someone else his or her freedom will ensure that you enjoy your own as well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You may be quite restless today. It may be time to get in touch with someone from your past who can show you a way of this current rut.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You're going to have to make one or two important concessions today, and you mustn't make the mistake of thinking you're giving in as a result.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You're in the mood to settle down a little more comfortably into a productive routine you've only recently adopted. A friend can help you out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A display of affection at just the right time can work wonders today – but be prepared to continue, for someone is sure to get used to it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Spend some time hiding with others – without dictating the course of the conversation! Let someone else pick up the topic today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – There is little danger today that your current progress will slow down at all. You can enjoy a new level of involvement during the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Stop complaining about you're horoscope. I know who you are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your personality is likely to clash with that of a friend today – possibly because one of you has changed. Talk about it!

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

SausageCacciatore

Sloppy Joe

Vegan Sloppy Joe

DINNER

TASTE OF ITALY

Gazpacho Andaluz

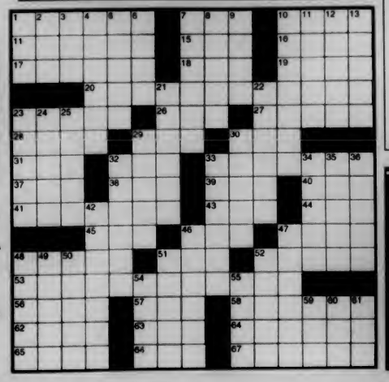
Scallops Sicillian

Veal Oscar

Chicken Sophia

Vegan Stuffed Shells

Amherst Brewing Company
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring Fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday Karaoke w/ Cloud Nine Productions $2 cover
Saturday Patio Kings Hip Hop Jazz Funk $3 cover
Sunday Funk and Monk Jazz no cover
36 N. Pleasant Street * Amherst 413-253-4400 WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Lodger
7 Thug's weapon
10 Messes up
14 At a discount
15 Period of time
16 Nuisance
17 Nerve cell
18 Zilch
19 Not away from
20 Football commentator
23 Hide
26 Before, to poets
27 Frontier bend
28 Paris airport
29 Alan — Lerner
30 Tyke
31 Turkish title
32 Buddy
33 Laughed nastily
37 Mongrel
38 Bar drink
39 Snow boot
40 Eggs
41 Skies
43 Kind of cube
44 Guys
45 Salamander
46 Pen's contents
47 Not bananas
48 Met offering
51 Literary collection
52 Cousins' moms
53 Emotionally overwhelming
56 Sicily volcano
57 Female sandpiper
58 Vitamin B component
62 It could be proper
63 USCG officer
64 Caress
65 Huff

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-6-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Ely of "Tarzan"
2 Single
3 Big Ten sch.
4 Boggy
5 Ward secretly
6 Nevada city
7 Upper class
8 Develop
9 Nursery powder
10 Sitcom unit
11 Talks wildly
12 Ceremonies
13 Night noise
21 Domains
22 Each
23 Private tutor
24 Debate
25 Santa —, CA
29 Short trip
30 Talent
32 Manufactured in advance
33 Pertaining to the backbone
34 Type of candle
35 Occasion
36 Swedes' neighbors
42 Like lush lawns
46 Eat
47 Dextrose and fructose
48 Black cats, maybe
49 Climber's aid
50 Boredom
51 Real estate —
52 Elderly of firms
54 Black-and-white snack
55 Pt. of MIT
59 Portable bed
60 Marmie's guy
61 Composer Rorem

Index

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Tibora Girycz-Blum
Copy Editor	Jessica May
Production Supervisor	Enrique Alcid
Production Staff	Sean Becker, Sarah Vanderlin

INSIDE: Yankees or Diamondbacks? You decide, pg. 9.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, October 25, 2001 | 14

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Breakaway tally lifts Minutemen

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

In an exciting battle with 16th-ranked Harvard, the No. 13 Massachusetts men's water polo team triumphed 9-6, in front of an impassioned partisan crowd last night at Amherst College's Pratt Pool.

UMass	9
Harvard	6

In their second and final home game of the season, UMass kept Harvard at bay for almost the entire game, despite some early letdowns. Led by senior Mike Foley (four goals), the Minutemen used an improved offensive attack to defeat the Crimson, and won on a breakaway goal from junior Chad Arnold late in the fourth quarter.

In the final session, Harvard struck first with 4:53 remaining, on a tally from junior Alex Fisher. The Minutemen didn't have to wait long, as one minute later they received a goal from Adam Moore on a penalty shot. Arnold's goal, however, was all Massachusetts would need, as it held the Crimson to six goals for the game.

After a Harvard timeout with one minute left, UMass punctuated the message with a final tally from Foley. His fourth of the match came with only 23 seconds remaining. While the game plan for UMass in the final minute was to "press back hard [and] maintain possession to stall the time out," according to Head Coach Russ Yarworth, Foley's goal came as a bit of a shock from a team looking to run the clock down.

"At that point [though], you can't take the ball out of a shooter's hand," Yarworth said.

Heading into the second half, the Minutemen came out firing on all cylinders, due to a halftime meeting in which the seniors made their feelings known about the state of the game.

"During halftime, the seniors said 'look, this is our last home game. We don't get many of them, and we're not gonna lose,'" Yarworth said.

Physical play in the first half set the tone for the second, which was slower overall. Massachusetts was the first to score, when junior Ricardo Puig netted his 16th of the season on a pass from fellow junior Justin Houck. The next three minutes of the quarter belonged to the defense, as neither team put together any quality chances until Arnold's goal with 2:28 remaining.

"Harvard laid the defense on us," Yarworth said. "They play that style, they're a very aggressive, pressing team, they don't play much zone, a lot more grasping and holding. I knew with the type of defense [Harvard] plays, the goals were going to come from the two-meter position."

The UMass defense was less-than stellar in the early parts of the match, but in the second period, the defense improved overall, and there was no scoring for almost four min-

Turn to WATER POLO page 10

Crew returns from Charles

By Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's crew team opened its fall season last weekend by entering the 37th annual Head of the Charles in Boston.

Rows of boats, hundles of oars, and more spandex than the Eighties are all significant distinctions of crew regattas. But what makes the Head of the Charles special is the assortment of challengers. Teams from Germany, Texas, California and as high-ranking as the U.S. National Team, all raced on the 3-mile course which starts at the Boston University Boathouse and ends at Magazine Beach.

The Varsity Eight boat placed 35th out of 53 boats, with a time of 17:46.049. The first place boat, with a time of 16:01.690, was the U.S. National Rowing team with UMass alumna and assistant rowing coach, Wende Wilbur in the bow seat. Princeton's Women's Eight was only nine seconds behind the national team.

The UMass women's Varsity Eight boat consisted of 3rd year coxswain, Megan Mastropolo, along with Hayley McGrath, Anna Talucci, Erin Cooke, Colleen

Turn to CREW page 10

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

The Boston scenery, last weekend, at the Head of the Charles.

TIBORA GIRCZYC-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

Senior Steve Prisco, captain of the Massachusetts men's tennis team, actually comes from a hockey family.

Net gains

Senior Prisco leaves ball mark at UMass

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

At the age of eight, Steve Prisco's mother asked him to do a little favor for her, which did not consist of taking out the garbage or cleaning his room. She asked her son, a talented hockey and baseball player, to take one tennis lesson a week during the off-season from his other sports.

It appears now that Prisco, the senior captain of the Massachusetts men's tennis team, made a wise decision in heeding his mother's advice.

He finished the fall season Tuesday against UConn with his fourth straight singles victory to improve to 7-2 overall and is one of only two Minutemen that will represent UMass this weekend in the NCAA East Regional in Princeton, N.J.

Just call him the family outcast.

His father, William, first raised the three Prisco children within the world of hockey. In turn, Steve's older brother Michael played semi-pro hockey and his sister Laura excelled in women's hockey at the University of New Hampshire.

Steve followed in the family tradition, picking up his skates at the age of five and then enrolling in St. Sebastian's, a private prep school for hockey, in seventh grade.

"But that whole time (at St. Sebastian's) he was rising through the ranks of tennis," his mother, Jean Prisco said. "He started to devote more time to tennis and from ages 11 to 18 he was invited to national tournaments and had a national ranking every year.

"In his sophomore year (of high school), he had to make a choice. And he hung up his skates."

Focusing his attention mainly on tennis, Prisco compiled an unbelievable winning record in the Independent School League, going unbeaten all four years, 107-0-7. As a result of his amazing streak, he was named an ISL All-Star for four years, a league MVP, a member of the Boston All-Scholastic team, and awarded the title of No. 1 tennis player in Massachusetts by All Scholastic Magazine at the Fleet Center.

So when it came time for the Dedham native to look at colleges, many programs took an interest in him, including Providence College, where he chose to attend and called his home for one semester. Yet, after PC cut its men's baseball program, Prisco feared that his tennis career would be short-lived, so he phoned coach Judy Dixon with whom he had interviewed prior, and transferred to UMass.

"It was strange coming to UMass at first because I went to a small high school and PC is a pretty small college," Prisco said. "The campus was so big and school-wise I was a little lost."

But he found his niche in the Maroon and White tennis program creating quite a legacy as the team's

Turn to PRISCO, page 9

Mass Attack's second season

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Okay, so the Massachusetts hockey team is 1-2. Big deal.

The Minutemen are on the heels of a two game dismantling at the hands of No. 5 Colorado College. So what.

The penalty killing unit allowed four goals in nine chances in last Saturdays game, and the power play has been a couple steps above anemic since its two goal explosion against Niagara. Old news.

Want something fresh? The Minutemen are on the road again in the Hockey East opener tomorrow night at Providence, and this time it counts.

"We are playing for points now," coach Don Cahoon said. "Points are critical and they are very hard to come by."

Non conference games are great. Great for experience, great for refining skills and great for nothing when it comes to standings. Cahoon knows that the road to the NCAA tournament and national respectability is through Hockey East.

The former of those goals is likely unattainable this season, but Cahoon and his squad can see the light at the end of the tunnel and the tunnel begins tomorrow in Rhode Island.

Although the Minutemen welcome the start of the conference campaign, the road is certainly not less bumpy, as UMass leaves one powerhouse's building en route for another.

Providence was seeded first in the annual preseason conference coaches poll, and rightfully so. Leading scorer and All-American Devin Rask returns to a lineup teeming with offensive talent.

"We are going to have to pay attention to guys like Rask," Cahoon said. "He and [Peter] Fregoe and [Drew] Omicioli, that one line is very dangerous."

Opponents must have third degree burns from Fregoe's flaming start with seven points in only three games. He isn't alone in his ice melting antics, as Rask and Omicioli have been a little better than lukewarm with a combined nine points.

As dominant as that burning trio is, PC's explosiveness is far from skin deep. Jon DiSalvatore anchors a very capable second

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Sami Jalkanen has been historically successful against Providence.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 36 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, October 26, 2001

Should From Hell have stayed there? Make your decision after you take a peek at Arts.

ARTS p. 5

The UMass men's and women's cross-country teams will compete this weekend in the Atlantic 10 Championship. Read about it in Sports.

SPORTS p. 8

MARTHA OCHOA/COLLEGIAN

Guess the amount of candy and win! Just one of the activities at Southwest yesterday.

Tricks and treats in Southwest building

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Forty-three eight- and nine-year olds from the West Springfield Boys and Girls Club overtook the halls of Pierpont in Southwest trick-or-treating with Resident Assistants and Community Leaders at 120 of the dorm's residences.

The kids were invited by Pierpont residents to come and enjoy an afternoon of trick-or-treating, face painting, mini-pumpkin decorating and mask making, as well as raffles and a pinata overflowing with candy. Residence Director Dawn Bond kept the events going while her costumed staff walked kids through the decorated halls to meet residents who waited at their doors to hand out candy.

Many of the kids were decked out in costumes, while others, who had come directly from school, were happy to make a face in exchange for a piece of candy.

The event was organized in three weeks, but evolved from an idea during RA training sessions to involve residents in an activity to benefit children from the community. Resident Assistant Brittany Wilkenson worked this past summer at the Boys and Girls Club and was eager to involve the kids, whose directors were equally excited to accept the invitation.

"I'm impressed. I didn't expect as much as we got! The kids love it," said chaperone Clarice Berard, to which colleagues Melissa Renaud and Gail Pender agreed.

"For RA's to see student involvement is great. What I've seen is just my residents are so excited," said RA Mel Parker when asked what her residents thought of the project.

"There is a stigma around Southwest that it's not safe for kid events, but this shows otherwise," added RA Steve Burtmann, who in addition to dressing up with his fellow RAs, donated an oversized stuffed Scooby Doo to be raffled off to the kids at the end of the event.

Money for the event was collected by RAs from residents, who were then given bags of candy to hand out to the kids.

"We're really excited to help out these kids, many of whom may not get to trick-or-treat in their neighborhoods at home," said resident Amy Weinstock.

Residents Tessa Randall and Lori Hahn echoed this sentiment by saying, "This is the cutest thing I've ever seen! I think it's really great for college students to have this opportunity to help out underprivileged kids who may not get to trick or treat otherwise."

After gathering in the first floor lounge, kids were invited to break the piñata, and enjoy the other booths. As the line formed for the piñata boys pushed ahead, so that only one girl had a chance to take a swing before the donkey was broken. Burtmann, who had volunteered to hold the rope acting as a pulley for the piñata, had to quickly jump back in order to avoid being trampled by the thirty or so children who leapt at the fallen candy. At the sight of the children on hands and knees collecting candy, the room of students and chaperones broke into laughter.

To conclude the afternoon, the Pierpont staff began the give away events. First, three gumball machines were raffled off, the first being taken home by Dimitri, the second by Josh, and the third by Victoria.

One student, Fahime, won 1,360 candy corns by guessing that the jar of candy corn held 1,300 corns, missing the actual number by an insignificant sixty.

Finally, the giant Scooby Doo was won by the extremely proud R.J. who, holding his winnings above his head, almost toppled over at the sheer size of the thing.

Online degrees rated tops in U.S.

By Erik Haan
Collegian Staff

Two online graduate degree programs offered by the University of Massachusetts are among the nation's best, said U.S. News and World Report.

In its Oct. 15 issue U.S. News said it considered 131 online graduate degree programs in business, education, engineering, public health and library science. It listed UMass as among the best in the nation for its online professional master of business administration (MBA) and master of public health (MPH) programs.

"We are delighted to have two UMass-Amherst graduate programs selected as 'Best of the Online Grad Programs' by U.S. News and World Report," said Kevin Aiken, director of Continuing Education, in a released statement. "The ranking is a clear indication of the high-quality programs offered through the Division of Continuing Education."

U.S. News said on its website that it set high standards when selecting the nation's best online business degree programs. It chose only those schools approved by regional accrediting boards. The Isenberg School of Management, which offers the online MBA program, passed this standard and was also recognized as being accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), the professional association for business schools.

"We have a very competitive program, probably one of the few that is nationally accredited," said Heather Miller, associate director of Graduate Programs in the School of Management. "Meeting all of the criteria to be nationally accredited...I was actually not particularly surprised [that the program was recognized]."

Selection of the country's premier online public health degree programs also focused on regionally accredited schools. The UMass School of Public Health and Health Sciences, offering the online MPH program, met this requirement and was also listed as being professionally accredited by the Council on Education for Public Health (CEPH).

"Our goal is to make sure that the quality of our program is very high," said Gary Moore, associate professor and academic distance-learning coordinator in the School of Public Health and Health Sciences. "[Our] instructors are very good and, as a consequence, it will grow."

The UMass online MBA and MPH programs, begun in both schools in 2000, were designed to give those wishing to attend graduate school an opportunity to do so while not requiring a physical presence in a classroom. It gives those who do not have time to attend a specific class schedule some freedom.

"They are very, very happy that they are able to get their degree and advance their learning in a way that can't be done any other way because they're working full-time and they have jobs and children and responsibilities," said Moore. "This way, they can actually do the work."

The freedom is not intended to diminish the quality of education, however. Both programs use coursework that is virtually identical to that of the traditional classroom setting.

The online MBA program requires students to complete 18 courses for a total of 55 credit hours within two years, the same requirements of a traditional MBA. All core courses and most, soon to be all, electives are offered online and instructed by the same professors who teach in the classroom. It leaves little to

Turn to ONLINE, page 3

Book store hosts Outbound author

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

According to Food For Thought publicity coordinator Joan Barberich, Bill Storandt and his boat are one-of-a-kind.

Storandt graduated from the Julliard School with a degree in music during the late 1960s. From there, he was married and pursued a career in performing as a percussionist, abandoning them both to live in a geodesic dome in Vermont in the early 1970s. While living in Vermont, he came out of the closet, and then built and sailed a boat from New Haven, Conn. to Scotland in June of 1988 with his life partner, Brian. The memoir, Outbound, that came out of his journey was written twelve years ago. Storandt told The Collegian. But it has taken until recently, he said, for the University of Wisconsin Press to accept it for publication. He is now a writing teacher at Yale University and is working on his next novel.

Storandt's tale was outlined for an audience of about 80 who packed into Food For Thought's small premises to hear him read excerpts from Outbound on Oct. 24. Among those gathered was the Vermont farmer who allowed Storandt to build the geodesic dome on his property, and Storandt's life partner, Brian, who figures so heavily in his story.

The boat in which he took his remarkable voyage is called Clarity. The mid-sized cruiser is the boat[ ] as an asset rather than a problem," he commented to the Collegian that "they have about 8 dollars for promotion for each book,"

Turn to FOOD FOR THOUGHT, page 2

MHC prof fears views toward Islam skewed

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

Debbora Battaglia, a professor of Anthropology at Mount Holyoke College, worries that the Sept. 11 attacks have left Americans with a distorted view of Muslims. She, along with the Mount Holyoke Film Studies Program, has organized a "Muslim Worlds Through Film" series, in the hopes that the public can be educated about the realities of Islam.

The films chosen explore Muslim life in the United States and the Middle East. The series was created, Battaglia said, "to destabilize image of the Muslims as terrorist types."

"We want to explore the humanity of Muslim subjects," she said. "These films are trying to bring light to attitudes that are deeply entrenched."

The series began as a direct reaction to the Sept. 11 attacks, and the reactions of many Americans to them.

"My readings of American responses toward anyone who appears different is that people are falling back into stereotyping 'The Other', In a way that could have grave societal consequences," explains Battaglia. "I say that as an anthropologist."

She hopes that the film series will help to shatter the stereotypes of Muslims by presenting an accurate portrayal of their lives.

Moshen Makhmalbaf's film The Cyclist will be shown in Mount Holyoke's Dwight Hall at 7:30 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 28. The film revolves around an Afghan refugee who struggles to afford his wife's medical bills. At the suggestion of a promoter, he enters a bicycle marathon.

"The series is not a romantic portrayal of Muslim worlds," says Battaglia. "Rather, it eludes images of man's inhumanity to man, which is part of the human story.

"The goal is to show the range of attitudes toward others," she continues, "from hatred to nobility, so that we can have a better understanding of where hate is coming from."

Thomas Waternberg, the chair of the Mount Holyoke Film Studies Program, explained in a press release why the department has chosen to sponsor the series.

"We believe it will allow students and other community members to develop a richer and more nuanced awareness of Muslims than the broadcast media have generally fostered," he stated. "We hope it will assist in developing genuine understanding of different cultures that can lead to more sensitivity and less hostility. It's just a small effort In these difficult and

Turn to PREVIEW, page 2

Union victory in Mexico

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

Pressure applied by U.S. colleges and universities has alleviated stifling conditions at an export factory in Atlixa, Mexico that produces collegiate sweatshirts for American clothing manufacturers Nike and Reebok.

On Sept. 21, 450 seamstresses and machine operators at Mexmode, a Korean-owned apparel maker, won the right to remove corrupt labor leaders and form the Independent Union of Mexmode Workers (SITEMEX). Their victory followed a pressure campaign begun in February by colleges and universities affiliated with the Worker's Rights Consortium (WRC), a factory watchdog.

"We're extremely happy that the workers at Nike's supplier plant have been able to form an independent union of their own choosing," said Scott Nova, executive director of the WRC. "This is an unprecedented success that began with the workers' courageous protest, followed by appropriate responses from students and labor rights activists, WRC-affiliated universities, Nike, Reebok, and plant management."

In January, four Mexmode workers complained to the WRC after factory management harassed and fired employees who participated in a three-day work stoppage on Jan. 9-11. In response, the WRC sent six investigators to inspect the factory, where they observed nine violations of Mexican labor laws.

According to the WRC's report, Mexmode managers and supervisors unlawfully employed children, refused maternity leave and benefits to pregnant workers, and paid workers less than minimum wage. In addition, Mexmode fired workers for engaging in union activity unrelated to the company's old union, the Revolutionary Confederation of Workers and Peasants (CROC), which the company established before hiring any employees.

"The protection union discouraged worker complaints to bolster support for the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI)," Nova said. "Although the 2000 election of President Vicente Fox ended the PRI's seventy year domination of Mexican politics, they still control Atlixa's government."

After their visit, the WRC urged its affiliate schools, including the University of California-Berkeley, Indiana University, and the University of Massachusetts, to ask Nike to pressure Mexmode managers to guarantee fair conditions for workers. According to Nova, officials from 85 universities sent letters to and telephoned Nike executives, asking them to adopt conduct of conduct established by

Turn to MEXMODE page 2

MARTHA OCHOA/COLLEGIAN

BAAA!

A sheep shows off her fall wardrobe.

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

You make a better painting than a window

A downtown Amherst coffee shop has been spiffed up for Halloween.

SEE THIS SPACE?

YOUR ARTICLE COULD GO HERE.

COME ON DOWN AND TALK TO CATHERINE OR KEN.

www.dailycollegian.com

■ mexmode

continued from page 1

the WRC.

"As universities lobbied Nike to adopt codes of conduct, they altered the debate by generating negative publicity for the company," Nova said. "This never would have happened five years ago, before the codes were introduced."

By mid-February, both Nike and Mexmode launched investigations into labor abuses at the factory. Over the following months, Mexmode began improving the conditions faced by its workers, Nova said.

"The burning question on many American campuses for the past several years has been whether pressure from colleges and universities can really make a difference in overseas factories," Nova said. "We now know the answer is yes."

Over the past six months, Mexmode rehired the employees fired for promoting independent unionization and participating in the January work stoppage, ceased hiring workers below the age of 15 and stopped chasing the factory gates during lunchtime. When the company signed a contract with SITEMEX in September, management agreed to pay seamstresses the minimum wage required under Mexican law, improve the quality of food at the cafeteria and cease the verbal and physical harassment of workers.

According to Nova, SITEMEX limited their demands due to Mexico's flagging economy and the factory's reduced production following the negative publicity generated by the pressure campaign. When SITEMEX's contract expires in April, the factory's peak financial season, the WRC will support the union's request for a wage increase.

"Although the workers settled for modest concessions, I cannot overestimate the importance of their independent unionization," Nova said. "Hopefully their first agreement will lead to more and more gains."

On the Net: Worker Rights Consortium: http://www.workersrights.org/

■ preview

continued from page 1

troubled times, but it's something that we believe is necessary and that we can do as film scholars."

Battaglia feels that film is an ideal medium for cultural education programs.

"Film images, being moving images, are accessible windows into other lives," she said. "Moving images move people directly. And I believe that Americans tend to be sophisticated film viewers."

The series will continue on Sunday, Nov. 4 also in Dwight 101 at 7:30 p.m. with the film Life and Nothing More directed by Abbas Kiarostami.

The film deals with the aftermath of an earthquake in Northern Iran in 1990 and concentrates on the struggle of a father and son who travel to the Iranian city of Quchan. They meet many earthquake survivors along the way and work to reconstruct their lives.

■ Food for Thought

continued from page 1

since they are such a small press. Since Outbound's publication, Storandt has been doing promotion on his own.

"When I decided to go ahead with a long-held dream [to sail the Atlantic], I decided I was going to do my level best to do justice to the story," He said that, for him, this included promotion.

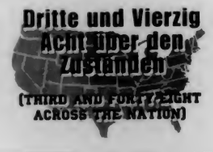
"I decided that if I wanted this thing to fly, I'd have to pour as much energy into it as possible," Storandt said.

He said he found out about Food for Thought from friends who live in the Amherst area and who told him that the community would have a receptive audience for the book.

His efforts have paid off in the form of a new novel to be published next summer by Random House. He also said that the reception for Outbound had been "terrific."

Last night's reading was no exception. The audience sat in attentive silence during some excerpts, and laughed aloud during others. An enthusiastic Q&A session followed the reading.

Barberich said she was delighted with the turnout. She took pictures of the audience for a scrapbook of readings kept by Food For Thought.



"This'll make a great page," she said. She also thanked the audience "just for setting foot in this place, even if you don't buy anything."

According to Barberich, attendance at the readings draws people to the independent store, providing it with the customer support it needs.

Mans inquired about Clarity. One audience member wanted to know if Stinchon had built another boat like her.

"No," Storandt said, smiling. "She remains unique."

Next week: "Third and 48," Season II; Episode II. Check it out.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, deriving 100% of revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the Index in 1890, the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Hampshire Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a student-run publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tiburcio Garcia-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Suliawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

ZANNA has it...
Sweater Dusters

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes & Accessories for Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY

T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for:
fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls
special events

MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

Campus Perspectives

By Martha Olivo

Anthrax: Does it make you nervous?

Matt Tierney
Freshman
School of Management
"Yeah, It's pretty scary."

Dan Bloom
Sophomore
Undeclared
"No, it doesn't. I haven't been affected personally. But it does concern me."

Jessica Jorgensen
Freshman
Civil Engineering
"Not particularly. It seems like it's just a scare."

Melissa Gnoza
Freshman
Undeclared
"Not especially. I think it's a lot of hype."

Linda Edmond
Freshman
Undeclared
"I'm not nervous. Maybe when it gets closer to Massachusetts."

Kia Roberts
Freshman
Sociology
"I'm not really nervous about it. There are worse things that have gone on, I think."

■ online

continued from page 1

be desired, said Miller.

"What the degree will say is 'MBA Professional Program,'" she said. "Most people in our program feel enormously proud of the fact that they've been working full-time and earning an MBA degree."

The online MPH program requires 36 credits within two years. It's a program Moore said has received high marks from his students because it does not lack substance.

"I would say virtually every single [person] that's taken one of my courses online has come away with the attitude that this is really a great course," he said. "[T]hey don't think they've lost much."

One major difference between the online and offline versions of the classes, however, is the manner in which students communicate with the professors and other students. The online courses attempt to bridge this gap with simulations, chat rooms, and threaded discussions, where students are able to access other students' answers to problems and professors can respond to those answers.

Moore said the discussions have actually created a more intimate relationship than in a typical classroom.

"I can tell you that it's even more personal online than it is in the classroom," he said. "There's a higher level of interaction and a higher level of personal exchange on the computer online than there is in the classroom."

Miller said the successful interactions led more of the School of Management's faculty, some of whom were originally wary of teaching online courses, to change their minds.

"It was the more adventurous and creative faculty that ended up willing to participate in teaching courses online," she said. "Now, I would say all of our graduate faculty that teach in our MBA programs are offering their courses online."

According to Moore, the software necessary to administer the coursework and communication between professors and students is made available by eCollege. He said that after speaking with Aiken approximately three years ago about putting his courses online, Aiken started investigating and eventually accepted a bid from eCollege. Moore said he identified a grant program offered by eCollege. The School of Nursing and the School of Management were brought in at that point to help secure the $200,000 grant that launched the online initiative.

It's a program that, according to Aiken, is continuing to grow. Aside from the programs of the School of Management and the School of Public Health and Health Sciences, the School of Nursing currently offers online Master of Science (MS) of Nursing graduate degrees and Registered Nurse-Bachelor of Science (BS) degrees. The School of Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration (HRTA) also offers an online B.S. in HRTA.

Aiken also said that as more courses are converted from a classroom-only to an online format, students seem to be opting for the online version. He added that thus far, 75 courses have been converted and about 10% of Continuing Education students are taking their classes online. He believes that percentage will increase as more people see the benefit of online education.

"Education delivered online is not for everyone," he said. "However, online courses can provide access to curriculum that was previously not available to people working full time, parents at home raising their families, and individuals that face geographical barriers."

Miller believes that the online curriculum is more than just a matter of convenience. It's the future.

"It's where business is going," she said. "It's where education is going."

On the Net: U.S. News and World Report: http://www.usnews.com

Stop by the Collegian and wish Eric a happy birthday.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!

POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans
• Trucks • SUV's
• Cargo Vans
• 15 Passenger Vans
• Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older
• Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
• MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE!
Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates Visit:
www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

College Street Motors
- Complete Foreign & Domestic Car & Truck Repair
- Oil Changes
- General Maintainence
- 24 hour AAA Towing
- Brake Jobs
260 College St.
Amherst MA 01002
Phone : 253-3200

SKYDIVE !
AT
JUMPTOWN / MSPC
TANDEM JUMPS $185
Show us your college ID, and make your first TANDEM JUMP for only $185. Want to learn to SKYDIVE? Static Line first jump course is only $160, and the Accelerated Freefall course is $285. Call 1-800-890-JUMP to schedule a skydive or request a brochure. You can also register online or find out more at our website: www.jumptown.com

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.

Northeastern UNIVERSITY
Boston, Massachusetts
GRADUATE PROGRAMS

Prepare to Succeed.

Located in the heart of Boston, Massachusetts, Northeastern University has long been known for combining academic rigor with practical skills. Our programs offer the opportunity for experience in your field through practicums, internships, or cooperative education. Whether your goal is professional advancement, scholarly activity, or societal contribution, let Northeastern University prepare you to experience a lifetime of achievement.

Come meet representatives from Arts & Sciences, Engineering, Bouve College of Health Sciences, or Business Programs.

Contact us at:

• Arts & Sciences:	(617) 373-3982	www.casdn.neu.edu/graduate	gsas@casdn.neu.edu
• Business Programs:	(617) 373-3244	www.cba.neu.edu/grpa	gspa@neu.edu
• Engineering:	(617) 373-2711	www.coe.neu.edu/grad_school	grad-eng@coe.neu.edu
• Health Sciences:	(617) 373-2708	www.neu.edu/bouve	w.purnell@neu.edu
• All other Graduate programs:		www.neu.edu/gradadmission
• General Inquiries:		Gregg Myer	g.myer@neu.edu

GRADUATE FAIR: OCTOBER 31

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

America belongs to us all

Respecting different beliefs

A natural response to the attacks of Sept. 11 has been the outburst of patriotism that has swept our country. Patriotism has united the people of the United States, and has given us a positive form of expression in the midst of our grief.

Unfortunately, patriotism has not been our only response. Much has been written about the vehemence displayed toward Muslims in recent weeks. Yet little has been said about the increasing intolerance being shown of all religious differences.

An e-mail currently being widely distributed attacks those who objected to an Oklahoma school's "God Bless America" banners.

"The dust from the attacks had barely settled in New York and Washington D.C. when the 'politically correct' crowd began complaining about the possibility that our patriotism was offending others," the e-mail states. "If God offends you, then I suggest you consider another part of the world as your new home, because God is part of our culture and we are proud to have God."

It has been debated for years whether "God Bless America" as a slogan, is religious or secular in nature. Some feel that the statement is meant only in a patriotic sense, and has nothing to do with religion, while others feel that it is offensive to non-believers.

But, regardless of how one feels about the statement, the idea that America is an inherently religious nation, with no place for atheists, is not only false, but dangerous.

In the Treaty of Tripoli, John Adams, the second President of the United States, wrote, "The government of the United States of America is in no sense founded on the Christian religion." Conservative poster boy Thomas Jefferson wrote, "Christianity neither is, nor ever was, a part of the common law."

Many have found solace from religion in the days following Sept. 11, but we, as a nation, need to remember that church and state are still separate. The actions of the Taliban should serve as a reminder as to how dangerous an intersection of government and religion can be.

The fact that the attacks were enacted by religious fundamentalists has been lost on some. Jerry Falwell blamed the attacks on leftists.

"I really believe that the pagans, and the abortionists, and the feminists, and the gays and the lesbians who are actively trying to make that an alternative lifestyle, the ACLU, People For the American Way, all of them who have tried to secularize America – I point the finger in their face and say 'you helped this happen,'" Falwell said. He later apologized.

There is, and likely always will be, a nationwide debate about the appropriate role of religion in public life. Whatever one's feelings about the concept of church/state separation, the fact remains that America remains home to people of countless religions – and some with no religion at all – and all of their beliefs should be respected.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of* The Collegian *editorial board.

Expanding the light

SHAUN KREIN

A fundamental question facing our society today is about religious dogma. So many aspects of this question appear to have surfaced since the Sept. 11th attacks that it appears to be a worthwhile question to consider. First, I would like to pledge my support to the column written Tuesday about Freemasonry, and yet also voice my worry in the way the article was written. Freemasonry by its very nature is not dogmatic, loud, or pushy, but rather like all secret societies is a hidden thread that runs through the very heart of the world. Anyone who is a Freemason knows that they can never coerce another person into joining the society. In fact, it is a requirement that anyone aspiring to join does so on his own free will.

Some interesting facts about secret societies: As mentioned on Tuesday, the American Constitution, the foundation of our country, was written by a majority of Freemasons, including George Washington, Ben Franklin, Thomas Jefferson and more. However, people like Leonardo DaVinci, Michelangelo, Thomas Edison, Sir Issac Newton, Galileo, Pythagoras, and many more substantial figures in history have all been tied to secret societies. Their common goal? The propagation of truth, knowledge, understanding, freedom, and ultimately many other things that could fall under the heading "light." Those of you who are Harry Potter fans, Nicholas Flamel WAS actually an alchemist, and he was at one time head of a secret society that practiced alchemy.

But what exactly is their purpose, and why do they all have to be secret? Their secret lies in this idea that we call "light." Imagine if you will two rooms, one with bright light and one utterly dark, with no doors, windows, or entrances anywhere. If someone were to drill the tiniest of holes in the wall separating the two, what would happen? Though that hole, light would always flow into the dark room. This parable suggests something that has been known for thousands of years: ultimately truth, knowledge, love, and understanding will overcome hate, fear, bigotry, ignorance, etc. BUT, the principles of light never need to force themselves to achieve this. Darkness is simply the lack of light, and as light flows into darkness, it becomes light. Within each person there is a balance of these principles, but one can be "ruled" by either darkness or light.

Secret societies such as Freemasonry exist to allow (in their case men) the exploration of that elusive idea called "spirituality," or one's own relationship with themselves and with God. Allah. Source. Sat Nam. Om, The Infinite, The Big Electron, Spirit, whatever. I'm just going to call it "The Unnamed." Dogmatic religions and cults have the opposite effect; they advertise as the only way to become one with the Unnamed, and in fact give it a name, and unite people under that name. Then when someone comes along with a different name, they choose whether to accept it or challenge it. What follows the challenge is the creation of...hmm...bigotry, hate, fear, control, war, terrorism, etc. Now, tell me, does this sound like "light" to you?

In America we have produced our own "Unnamed." It is one that has not been recognized by everyone yet, but it central to every aspect of our life. It's called Money. The priests, or controllers of this aspect of the Unnamed, are ones with great connections to it or amounts of it. They have greater abilities to do anything they choose, controlling resources, society, lives, countries, and ultimately the world. Those who don't have it want access to it, just like within a religion. And the ones who have great amounts of it (such as America) have used war, control, hate, bigotry, etc. in the past to keep it safe. Remember, we are the richest and most powerful country in the world, focused around a new type of "deity." I ask you: how different is that to the Taliban's Afghan Theocracy, focused around Allah?

> "The battlefield between light and dark exists within each and every one of us. The purpose of secret societies such as Freemasonry is to help men and women recognize and live within the "light."

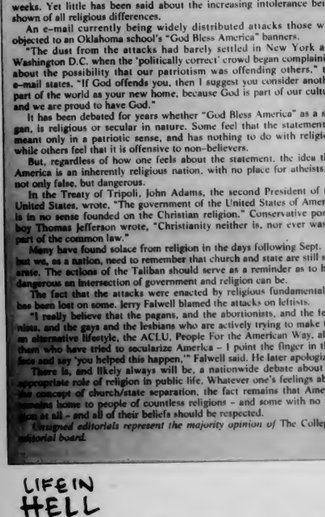
Our Unnamed has been one of the most successful, spreading throughout many parts of the world as their central deity. Thousands of people who may have once worshipped God, Allah, Spirit, and other aspects have fallen into the "capitalism cult." And yet, many great things have come from it, just as with all the religions. Muslim mosques are magnificent, Christian cathedrals are beautiful, and our World Trade Center was also incredible. Its attack was a very direct attack on our own deity. Capitalism through America has spread to many parts of the Muslim world, and that is the main reason it is now being targeted with such ferocity.



The real question is how can we all unite under a common heading? Is there one way of having all aspects of this "Unnamed" thing work for everyone? The answer is...yes! However, it will never be a central dogma that will unite everyone, because even within those, the people are different. If within each religion (including capitalism) every person decided instead of propagating things that are "dark," to expand on things that are "light," it will work. The movie Pay it Forward showed one way of doing this in our society. No matter what, people know deep down within their hearts what is "light." Secret societies have only been a guideline to help people discover this for themselves. Today you don't even need a society like the Freemasons to tell you how to proceed.

Carl Jung postulated on an idea of a "collective unconscious." This basically theorizes that all human beings are connected, and things that you do affect the whole (He was also in a secret society). This is not new... it has existed throughout history as far back as Egyptian times, and perhaps before. Each person must take responsibility for the aspects of themselves that are light and dark, and choose to win the battle against the dark side. Think of yourself as Luke Skywalker... it's the same thing. Oh, and did anyone know, there is now an accepted religion known as "Jedi" within Britain and Australia?

Remember, the war we are fighting is an unconventional war and this is an extremely important aspect of it. Don't get caught in the trap of believing all Americans are "light" and all of Al-Qaeda are "dark." Some of the darkest people are the ignorant fools who commit hate crimes in this country! The battlefield between light and dark exists within each and every one of us. The purpose of secret societies such as Freemasonry is to help men and women recognize and live within the "light."

The important thing is to understand that you have free will, and you alone possess the ability to choose which side you are on. What is your choice? A world of Light (peace, love, knowledge, happiness, understanding, tolerance) or a world of Darkness (hate, fear, bigotry, control, manipulation)? No matter what we do, there will always be a balance of both of them. But it should be said: the balance is shifting, and Light is most definitely winning.

Shaun Krein is a UMass student

©1986 BY MATT GROENING

Great days for "up"

KATIE LANDERS

But now I sit on my couch, all day long. I wake up around eight, come downstairs and check my email (being the freak that I am). I watch Regis and Kelly, followed by video on MTV. The Price is Right, and then Pay-Per-View movies. I get up to go to the kitchen to eat snacks and drink water. Sometimes I have the fleece blanket on and sometimes I have the fleece blanket off. My mom's happy because now I can empty the dish washer, but then I need a nap. I don't get visitors anymore really – I guess my novelty has worn off.

Really, I don't feel bad for myself. You are probably reading this and thinking I'm a jerk, but I've struggled with all of it. I make jokes about it. To put it bluntly, far worse things happen to people. I got sick; big deal. I'm using this column because it'll just make it easier when I get back to explain to people where I've been for three weeks. Short and sweet. It's funny because I was talking to my friend Sarah the other day and she just found out that I had been gone. When I told her I was sick, she said I have the worst luck, and the oddest things happen to me. I laughed at this because I think my life is funny and that's why I share it with you. I couldn't think of many bad things that have happened to me since I've been at college. When I asked her to tell me something, she reminded me of the time that I lost my car and reported it stolen, when really it was in the yellow lot all along. I wrote a great editorial about it, but no one ever saw it, because it came out the day we had that massive snow storm on my 20th birthday that I didn't want to celebrate last semester and classes were cancelled.

Over these past few weeks I've been a little sad, a little depressed. I miss my house and all the girls. I miss my job at The People's Market. I miss The Collegian and writing, all my friends and Shattuck(!).

I miss school and classes. I'll be back soon I know (hopefully this week).

My 8-year-old brother, an inspiration as always, has been reading to me during my time spent in bed. We've read Curious George and Arthur Goes to School, but he left a book around that's cheered me up. And with everyone being in the midst of mid-terms as the leaves are all falling, I thought I would share a few lines of it with you.

The book is called, A Great Day for Up by Dr. Seuss:

"Up! Up! The sun is getting up.
The sun gets up. So UP with you!

Up! Up! Up! Great day for up!
Wake every person, pig and pup.
Till EVERYONE on Earth is Up!"

Because when you look at the world, it's a great day. There is so much to look forward to. But for now, I'm going back to the couch to take a nap. Stay in good health.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

Americans responsible in the drug debate?

ADAM DIXON

Psychology teaches that any animal will seek means of altering its natural state of mind. However we think we've evolved, millions of us, everyday, find means of altering our state of mind with different substances. We call these substances drugs. Some of them are illegal. Most, if not all, are harmful. Some kill quickly. Some kill us a little bit, everyday. Some are illegal, but some of the most harmful and addictive sit on the shelves of convenience stores all over America. The only way to beat them is education in the form of self-motivated research. When I say self-motivated research, I mean people of matured intelligence independently investigating the substances that inhabit their culture.

There is no excuse for ignorance. Those that wish to experiment with drugs or use them on a regular basis must know the effects of the substances they put into their body.

Our country is divided between those that see mind-altering drugs as unlawful and thereby reprehensible if taken, and those that use drugs either out of experimentation, recreation, or addiction.

The government receives billions of dollars each year from the sale of tobacco, alcohol, and over-the-counter prescription and non-prescription drugs. Thousands of people continue to die each year from smoking and drinking-related deaths. Heart disease, emphysema, liver cancer, lung transplants, drinking and driving related deaths: These are a reality because of the presence of tobacco and alcohol abuse in our society. The lawmakers in our society know they cannot illegalize drinking or smoking in our country. People can easily find ways around the system to get the substances they want, especially when the demand is high. All over our country, people are buying illegal drugs enough to support an entire black market. This market has existed in our society for years. The American people created the demand for these drugs. As long as our country demands these drugs, other countries will supply.

Whatever you take to change your state of mind will inevitably stop working.

As good as it was, it won't last forever, and you'll have to take more to feel the same way. Drugs are addictive. The line between experimental, recreational, and habitual use of them is about as fine as a strand of your history professor's hair. The more you do drugs, the more you're going to want to do them, and the more you're going to have to take each time. Do it enough times and you'll create a dependence. Dependence can be subtle; it doesn't have to be as powerful as the withdrawal a heroin junkie feels when he's gone without dope for week. Many of us every day go through life with addictions that we create in our own minds. How many of us wake up in the morning thinking we need a cup of coffee to wake up, or a shower? How many people do you know that say, "The only way I'm going to dance at that party is if I'm drunk."

In college, getting drunk at a party to have a good time is pretty much normal behavior. Even if you're underage, if you're discreet, you do it with the door closed, and if you're not too rowdy, no one will say a thing. It's socially accepted.

What if we lived in a society where it was socially acceptable to take a hit of MDMA before we went to a party on a Saturday night and only the "alchees" were the ones who got drunk before a party? Since the dawn of western culture, people have smoked tobacco and drank fermented hops. What if those same people ate hallucinogenic mushrooms and drank peyote cactus extract? Would mushrooms and LSD be considered such morally reprehensible drugs to use today? Would they be illegal?

While there is no question in my mind that some drugs are more harmful than others, I have a problem with people blindly believing the stereotype: "Drugs are bad and people who use drugs are immoral, dishonest criminals." I wonder if people who believe this have ever stopped to think that their perceptions of what is right have been fixed in their psyche, by their parents and their peers, their education and the laws of their government. Over time, certain substances, like alcohol and tobacco, have become more socially accepted, and not because of their apparent harm to the user, but because Americans have always smoked and drank, since we arrived here in Jamestown four hundred years ago.

> "There is no excuse for ignorance. Those that wish to experiment with drugs or use them on a regular basis must know the effects of the substances they put into their body."

Regulatory institutions like the Food and Drug Administration exist to protect Americans from unhealthy substances. We need these institutions. As a whole, Americans are ignorant to what they put into their bodies on a daily basis. How often do most of us know what's in the food we eat at breakfast, lunch and dinner, and how it affects us day-to-day?

If you think what you eat doesn't affect your mood, try eating only meat, or only vegetables for a week. We eat what we eat and don't worry about it because the FDA says it's okay. Most believe if it's on a supermarket shelf it must have passed some inspection. This same lack of critical thinking goes on when most people take drugs, especially youths who take drugs.

Your first time drinking, did you really know when to stop? It's scary and it's true. Most people when they use drugs and alcohol do it blindly, without any idea of what they take will do to their external perceptions and internal body chemistry.

What do we do to stop the problems drugs cause in America like overdoses and drug-related crime? Enact more strict penalties for drug offenders? No. That wouldn't do anything but overcrowd our already flooded prisons, and put the users, not the dealers in jail.

What about legalization?

While I believe legalization would cut down on the number of drug-related crimes in the U.S., I honestly believe before we go about the massive undertaking of legalization, Americans must first come to the realization that our very human nature gears us towards addiction. By allowing that much freedom, Americans undertake a certain amount of responsibility for educating themselves and future generations about the negative connotations every drug intrinsically contains. Unfortunately, I believe it's a responsibility most Americans aren't ready for.

Adam Dixon is a UMass student.

Some alternate visions... From Hell

Sleek, involved vision of Victorian era Moore, Campbell's landmark statement

In From Hell, Heather Graham plays Mary Kelly, a bangtail.

COURTESY OF 20TH CENTURY FOX

By Tim Letteney
Collegian Staff

FROM HELL
Directed by Albert & Allen Hughes
Starring Johnny Depp and Heather Graham
Showing at Cinemark 12 in Hadley

The Hughes brothers From Hell is based on Alan Moore's graphic novel of the same name. From Hell is a dismal tale that focuses more on its Victorian surroundings than on the main characters. The movie concentrates on where the lack the Ripper murders take place, not who is actually killed. Moore has said that his main inspiration for penning From Hell was a statement made by Margaret Thatcher. Thatcher stated "we as a society should get back to Victorian values." Moore wanted to explore what those Victorian values actually were. From Hell comes across is less of a who-dunnit and more of a social commentary on Victorian England.

From the very beginning of the film the Hughes brothers give the viewer a voyeuristic view of Victorian England through a heavily bordered comic-like mis-en-scene. The film succeeds in creating an eerie atmosphere for the Ripper murders to take place, yet it fails in making the audience care about am of the main characters. Yet, in my head this does not make the film a failure. From Hell (the graphic novel) set out to dissect Victorian society, not to get a major billing star like Johnny Depp to dig the screenplay. The Hughes bothers have succeeded in transcribing Moore's "progressive" society onto the screen nicely. Sadly, audiences will probably not enjoy the atmosphere being the main character of the film, and they will almost certainly shout such classics as: "where the hell is the character development!", "what, they are in love now?!", "this film sucks!" and who could forget "is this almost over?" Personally, I enjoyed the film immensely. The direction was phenomenal, storyline was as cliched as a comic book-based movie should be, and most of the actors pulled off their characters fine.

No, Heather Graham did not pull off her character; the only thing she can pull off she kept on. Graham has a hard time acting like herself on Letterman, why the hell would they put her in a period piece with an Irish accent and dyed red hair? Johnny Depp was relatively believable as Frederick Abberline, a Sherlock Holmes-ish inspector who can only remain in his station in life by solving crime and smoking opium. I know that Holmes was not the sole basis for Depp's character; there are many differences between the two. Yet, these two characters represent a similar ideology and it is hard not to take notice, especially if you have read Doyle's The Sign of Four or if you have taken any classes with Professor Kirby Farrell.

My friends complained that the film was too long; I blame Hollywood movie execs for conditioning audiences everywhere that a film should take as long as it does for a five-dollar prostitute to find a ride home from a party.

From Hell is worth a viewing. As a film, it is an accomplishment. It is not without its flaws, but it was the most enjoyable thing I have seen in the theatre since Memento.

I have no clue how the From Hell comic fans will take to this film. I myself am a From Hell comic virgin. Christopher Scott Kenny, however is not, read his column to the right.

Going into the theater to see From Hell, I didn't know quite what to expect. I was in the mood for a good Halloween movie but, having read the comic book version of From Hell, I was skeptical of how the movie could possibly translate even a fraction of that book's grandeur. All in all, it was an interesting diversion but nowhere near the absolute juggernaut of a graphic novel by writer Alan Moore and artist Eddie Campbell. Moore, having meticulously researched Jack the Ripper and all the theories that orbit his heinous deeds, weaves an interesting theory that involves Freemasonry, magic, and the Royal family. Originally a mini-series, it has been published in one 500-plus volume by Eddie Campbell Comics.

In 1888, London was terrorized by a slew of awful murders in the East End of London. No one ever discovered who Jack the Ripper was, but many people have their own ideas. Such speculation often led to fictional accounts, which often took liberties with the facts, molding it for entertainment value; a recent novel, for instance, explores how Sherlock Holmes descended into madness and became Jack the Ripper. Alan Moore and Eddie Campbell do the same, and what they manage to put together is one of the most complex and sophisticated comic books in decades. Jack the Ripper, the creative team suggests, was a product of the upper elite, whose motivations overlaps and intertwine with the interests of the Freemasons and Queen Victoria. However ludicrous this conspiracy might sound, the story lays out everything in a methodical, believable manner.

Though the comic involves fantastical things like portents, premonitions and ghosts, these elements are filled in between the cracks of solid facts. The twist to Marie Kelly's final fate—the victim whom the Ripper tore into unrecognizable pieces—is an example of this. The author even spends an entire appendix going over all the evidence that supports his theory, minus the dramatic license included in the main story. The movie, which paints Johnny Depp's Inspector Abberline as a psychic, opium-addicted widower, is fast and loose with the facts. The same character from the graphic novel is depicted as a typical middle-class inspector from Scotland Yard. But while Moore keeps all the known facts straight, he isn't afraid to fill in the questionable areas with some brilliant fictional twists in the plot.

Many connections to seemingly unrelated events are made throughout the epic, giving clues as to what the author means to get across in the story. One scene, in particular, is that of a German couple making love; once the appendix in the back of the book is consulted, you discover that this is the scene where Adolf Hitler is conceived. What this has to do with the story is anyone's guess. Does it suggest that Jack the Ripper was the forerunner for the 20th century's wholesale butchery and murder, of which Hitler would take such a huge part? Could it be linked to the Ripper's visions of the skyscrapers, laptops, and television sets? One never really knows for sure, but it is this ambiguity that keeps the book fresh and interesting. Adolf Hitler's parents aren't the only historical cameos in the book. The poet W.B. Yeats and Joseph Merrick, or the Elephant Man, have their own strange run-ins with the Ripper. Oscar Wilde makes a brief appearance as well. Moore tries his best to make the entire graphic novel a snapshot of the Victorian age, displaying all of its contradictions and stereotypes.

The structure of the narrative is also unique, yet the filmmakers decided not to use it. The reader knows the killer in From Hell from the very beginning while the movie restructures the story as a whodunit. As a matter of fact, Inspector Abberline, the main protagonist in the movie, does not arrive on the scene until the fifth of twelve chapters. With the mystery of the killer discarded at the forefront Moore sucks the reader into the story through pure curiosity, this time not of killer's identity but of his motivation. With so many re-tellings of these London murders pre-occupied with the true identity of the assailant, it is nice to see such a refreshing approach to the material.

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

The characters are well-defined and sensitively handled. The exploitation of women is explored quite extensively as one group of prostitutes –all targeted by the Ripper –struggle to feed themselves, a particularly heart wrenching and sizable aspect of the story. Alan Moore writes about these women who console each other about their troubles over beer with true authenticity and humanity. Moore makes the reader sympathize with these "unfortunate women" by showing the things they must do to survive and the conditions they must live in. And while he writes this humanity with amazing sincerity, he does not hesitate to throw himself and the reader into the twisted mind of the killer. For much of the books— when it is not focused on the women or Abberline— the story is seen through the eyes of the killer. Moore navigates and develops his descent into madness, peeling back the layers psychosis. As the Ripper talks about magic and its connection to London's architecture, his position as a Freemason, and his bloods crusade we see a demented man begin to fall apart. It is this process that Moore tries to hook the audience with.

Eddie Campbell's beautiful and accurate depictions of London in the 1880s make the movie look somewhat ridiculous. In stark contrast to the picture-perfect Heather Graham, the prostitutes that solicit in the East End are dirty, poor, and meager-looking. Campbell's pencils, left without color, are indispensable; his contributions to the book are just as important as Moore's, giving the visual authenticity the story needed. His scratchy inks give a certain sketchbook quality that compliments the tone of the book very well.

The book is dense, with two appendixes for consultation. Throw any idea out of your head that it is a comic book; the term does not do it justice. Its richness and texture is only comparable to a novel and it has to be approached like one. The density of the book might intimidate some but it is well worth the effort in navigating through. Alan Moore and Eddie Campbell have created a landmark in the graphic novel; it is a shame that a mediocre movie might overshadow such an awesome artistic achievement.

Christopher Scott Kenny is a Collegian Correspondent

Elton John returns to form

By Michael Carpenther
Collegian Correspondent

ELTON JOHN
Songs from the West Coast
Universal

Elton John is one of the top selling artists of all time, and has been an international icon for thirty years. His studio albums latch, however, have not met the lofty heights that fans of his earlier work expect. Bad songwriting and muzak-style production backdrops have plagued Elton's work for most of my lifetime. To me, his best work in the nineties was written for cartoon lions. Still, I have a soft spot for the earnest pop songs that he wrote in the seventies. This was the era of "Your Song," "Rocketman," "Goodbye Yellow Brick Road," and countless others. Bernie Taupin lyrics melded perfectly with Elton's gospel-tinged piano, and the success of their singles coincided with great albums. Honky Chateau and Madman Across The Water held their own as great albums, unlike the recent trend of Elton having one Adult Contemporary hit and the rest being filler. Songs From The West Coast recalls Elton and Bernie's seventies successes. The album is complete, the lyrics are bold and unforgiving at times, and the songs just sound good. Elton John could have gone through the motions with this album and still sold millions. He instead puts together some of the best pop music of the year.

The album starts with the stripped down piano of "The Emperor's New Clothes." It is a gospel-tinged gem. Elton is best when unencumbered by useless atmospherics, and his voice soars over the song. Bernie really gave him lots of lyrics to spit out on this one, so the simple arrangement is welcome. "Dark Diamond" is a cool little bluesy number with bouncy bass rhythms and Stevie Wonder's sweet harmonica tones. Stevie also plays a little clavinet, and the interchange between Stevie and Elton fits very well here. With "American Triangle," Elton tackles the death of Matthew Shepard. This teenager was beaten to death by other teenagers because he had the guts to come out of the closet. The song is uneven and the lyrics are awkward, and to me that made it hit extra hard. Elton brought power to this song, a song he obviously felt very strongly about.

Elton also has some fun moments on this disc. "Birds" is an up-tempo gospel number with some slide guitar thrown in. It sounds almost like he is in a blues bar, working for tips. The same can be said of "The Wasteland." This track has Billy Preston playing organ over Elton in southern blues style. Both tracks show Elton reaching backward for inspiration, beckoning Robert Johnson at the crossroads to help him through. Elton also has many songs on this album that didn't grab me. "Look Ma, No Hands" got boring pretty quickly. "Original Sin" is also a weak track, with a plodding guitar intro that the song never recovered from. "Love Her Like Me" became extremely bland after a few bars, and Bernie Taupin's lyrics weren't helping in this song.

The weaknesses were small compared to how much the album actually worked. "I Want Love" is a good single. It sounds like it could have been on the The White Album because of the way the chords come off the piano, and the way the guitar solo comes in at the end. Elton played this song on this weekend's N.Y. concert, and the song seemed to garner even greater power (I thought that Elton John's performance was a shining moment in an otherwise awkward and uneven night). The most daring song on the album is probably "The Ballad of the Boy in Red Shoes." An eighties AIDS victim remembers his time as a dancer and when he was a handsome man. He sits with quiet indignation through Reagan's presidency, knowing he is going to die and that his government did not do much to keep him alive. This is another example of Elton's risks paying off.

Elton John has always been able to put out pop songs that the masses can listen to in a shopping mall. This album takes him back to when he was an influential musician, back when he was producing new ideas and challenging material. It is nice to see an artist step up and show the world how to create. I don't care who you are or what you listen to, a well-written song should get your attention. Elton John is back as an artist who matters.

Check Monday's Collegian for a belated review of Dispatch's recent concert in Northampton.

COURTESY GREG GORMAN

Elton John's Songs from the West Coast thrusts the singer back into the artistic spotlight

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Dodge Caravan C/V. V6. AC. 5 seater. new brakes, struts, 134,000miles. $2700 B/O. Call Jack 256-4963

1991 Mercury Capri, red convertible. automatic. $2500 please call after 6pm. 413-549-6331

1995 Chev Cavalier station wagon 180,000miles. Sticker to 7/02. A beater $250 586-5961

1985 BMW 318I 4Dr. auto, AC. $2950. 549-1155

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

COACHES WANTED Amherst Leisure Services is looking for enthusiastic college students with a background in basketball to coach in the Amherst Youth Basketball league. These are volunteer positions, with an average commitment of 2-5 hours a week. Every coach will go thru a coaching certification program. There will be an orientation meeting for anyone interested in learning more about the coaching in the league on Monday. October 29, 2001 at 7:00 p.m. at the Bangs Community Center. The Bangs Center is located behind Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst. For more information, please contact. Mike Thomas. Sports Director at thomasm@townamherst.ma.us

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Swim Instructors Amherst LSSE looking for WSI for either Mon/Wed, Tu/Thur evenings 4:30-7. Applications at Human Resources, 4 Boltwood Walk Amherst Information Tim DeRose 256-4065 ext 106

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

ROOMMATE WANTED 1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

Looking for 1-2 females to share room. Town Houses in Amherst. Lease starting Jan 1. 413-549-8162

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

TRAVEL

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.spring-breakdirect.com

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

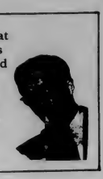
Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

Looking for something to do this Spring Break?? How about going away?? Check out the ads in the Collegian Classifieds and find the perfect trip!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

- 2 HSCN Bulletin Board
- 3 CBS 3 Hartford
- 4 NBC 30 Springfield
- 5 PBS 57 Springfield
- 6 HSCN Movie Channel
- 7 CBS 30 Hartford
- 8 HSCN New Movie Channel
- 9 NBC 61 New Britain
- 10 Fox 61 Hartford
- 11 FOX 21 Hartford
- 12 NBC 40 Springfield
- 13 Instructional Channel
- 14 UMATV (Academic Channel)
- 15 WB 59 New Haven
- 16 ESPN
- 17 ESPN2
- 18 UVE TV (Student Channel)
- 20 Weather Channel
- 21 Cinemax West
- 22 E! Asian
- 23 CNN
- 24 CNN Headline News
- 25 Lifetime
- 26 USA
- 27 TBS
- 28 TNT
- 29 A&E
- 30 Nesn
- 31 Sci-Fi
- 32 Discovery
- 33 Nesn2
- 34 Cartoon Network
- 35 Nick at Nite
- 36 TV Land
- 37 Comedy Central
- 38 BET
- 39 Univision
- 40 Bloomberg Financial Network
- 41 College TV Network
- 42 MTV
- 43 MTV2
- 44 VH1
- 45 The Learning Channel



FRIDAY EVENING		C - Campus										OCTOBER 26, 2001
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		CPTV Auction						CPTV Auction Continues
WFSB 3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N)	King	That's a Life "Bad Chemistry"	48 Hours (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N)	King	That's a Life "Bad Chemistry"	48 Hours (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Mole II: The Next Betrayal		Radio Music Awards (In Stereo Live)				News	Nightline
WLVI 6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Robo (N)	Raising Ded	News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH 7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra	Providence "Civil Unrest" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Robo (N)	Raising Ded	Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Providence "Civil Unrest" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		Seinfeld	Raymond
WTIC 8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Dark Angel "Radar Love" (N)		Pasadena "Henry's Secret"		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP 9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Civil Unrest" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims		News	Tonight Show
WGBY 10	8	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wrash, Week		TWI 90, Week	Life 360 "Food" (In Stereo)		Time Goes By	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB 40	25	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Mole II: The Next Betrayal		Radio Music Awards (In Stereo Live)		Ent. Tonight	Fraser	News	Nightline
WSBK 38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Fraser	"Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence. (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Fraser	5th Wheel	Dragonetics
WTBS 72		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	"Medicine" (1999, Fantasy) Mary Wilson, Danny Lloyd.				"I'll Am Wor" (1985, Comedy) Michael J. Fox, James Hampton.		Law & Order
A&E 43		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography Close-Up		"About Last Night..." (1986, Comedy-Drama) Rob Lowe,				Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN 47	23	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM 48	39	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Point & Teller: Photophilia		Lizards	Com.-Presents	Premium	Saturday Night Live	Sat. Night Live
DISC 52		Wild Discovery "Ocean Pirit"		Discovery Assis Wildlife		Reel Ranger Challenge		Marine -- Earning the Title		Elite Commandos		Justice Files "Unlikely Villains"
ESPN 51		Sportscenter		Baseball Tonight (N)		Season: Cal Ripken Jr.		Season: Cal Ripken Jr.		College Football: Fresno State at Hawaii. (Live)
LIFE 53		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Golden Girls		"Mrs. Winnebourne" (1996, Comedy) Shirley MacLaine, B		2nd Annual Women Rock! Girls & Guitars Concert (N)				Who Wanted Husbands" (1998)
MTV 63		Jackson	Music Videos	Life of Aaliyah	Diary	Music Videos (In Stereo)						Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK 55		Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Spongeb	Told by Ginger	Invader Zim	Hey Arnold!	Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI 59		Star Trek "The Man Trap"		Chronicle (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Going Postal"		"Blindfolded From the Cradle" (1970, Horror) Gregory Sierra				Invisible Man "Going Postal"
TLC 97	28	Without Warn.	Without Warn.	Medical Detect	Medical Detect	Police, Crimin	Maybe It's Me	Secret World of Cruise Ships		Cities on the Sea		Police, Camera, Action!
TNT 46		NYPD Blue "Good-Bye Charlie"		Pretender "Kaya" (In Stereo)		"Rush Hour" (1998, Action) Jackie Chan, Chris Tucker.				"Rush Hour" (1998, Action) Jackie Chan, Chris Tucker.
USA 62		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "High Ground" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "The Heist"		"Capt's Kee" (1997, Suspense) Robert De Niro, Rick Rossi. (In Stereo)				"Addams"
HBO 33		(5:15) "Vibes" (1988) PG		Inside the NFL		"Meet the Parents" (2000, Comedy) Robert De Niro, Ben Stiller.				"Meet the Parents" (2000, Comedy) Robert De Niro, Ben Stiller. (In Stereo)
MAX 35		(5:30) "Strange Days" (1995) Ralph Fiennes. (In St				"Third Person" (2000, Drama) Liam Neeson, Olivia Wilde.				"Third Person" (2000, Drama) Liam Neeson, Olivia Wilde.
SHOW 36		"Big Dome" (1996, Comedy) Pauly Shore. "PCU" (1				"Return to Me" (2000, Romance) David Duchovny. "PCU"				Stargate SG-1	Going to California (ITV)		Chris Isaak

Buttercup Festival By Elliot J. Garbauskas

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

There was this guy in the supermarket who worked in the meat department. We used to call him "Killer" because he ate pieces of the raw meat that he cut up into steaks and such. That, and his white coat always had loads of blood splashed on it. This guy slashed beef like it was his mortal enemy. He was good, though. If you needed five spoon roasts for a get-together and you needed them yesterday, "Killer" was all over it. We always wondered, though, what would happen if he got angry. There are some things you really don't want to know.

Skybox By Blake

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

Mr. Gnu By Travis Dandro

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Quote of the Day

"Seven years of college down the drain. May as well join the fin' Peace Corps."

-Bluto
Animal House

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 39	HIGH: 46 LOW: 34	HIGH: 46 LOW: 32

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Try beatboxing today. Because of the bizarre alignment of the stars, your vocal percussion will be on point. Seriously, every time DJ Suds' birthday (27th) comes around, quite a few esophagi feel the power.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – It may be time to turn over a new leaf: appearance, style and overall motives may have to change slightly to suit some new circumstances, like your new job at the gentleman's club.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – It may take more time and more effort today to accomplish your goals than you expected. You must be willing to accept help and advice, and free protection from your Resident Assistant (taped to her door).

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Resist the temptation to take someone to task today for those trespasses you know have been purely unintentional. Remember: to forgive is divine, but to forget the answers means you were intoxicated.

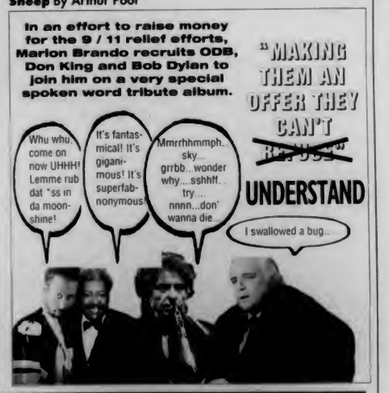
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – See if you can't put your worries behind you and enjoy all the fuss that your current planning involves. You're missing out on lots of laughs and sexual tensions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Though you may be wondering why others are putting you in the role of the "bad guy," it must be said that you play it well today. Lighten up! Put that frieking Twinkie down.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Don't refuse a friend the help he or she needs – but you mustn't make the mistake of dropping what you're doing prematurely. Grab some Lubriderm and get back at it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You can sidestep any formal requirements and bureaucratic hold-ups today and have what you want in no time if you play your cards right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may be missing the point where a friend's needs and expectations are concerned. It's time, today, for a little something extra from you; perhaps – like throwing him a meatball during the Wiffle ball game.



LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You may be unusually prone to the kind of minor mishap today that can lead to bigger mistakes for which you'll eventually pay the price. Please, don't touch that.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You'll enjoy a homecoming of sorts today, if only in your soul. This is a good time to search deeper inside yourself for hidden truths, but don't reach too far – that organ isn't supposed to move like that.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You've been letting things build up far too much just beneath the surface lately – without even knowing it! Let some things go today. Seriously, that hurts. Keep practicing.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

In an effort to raise money for the 9 / 11 relief efforts, Marion Brando recruits ODB, Don King and Bob Dylan to join him on a very special spoken word tribute album.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Roast Turkey

Quich Lorraine

Greek Style Tofu (vegan)

Onion Quiche (vegeterian) (W Basics)

DINNER

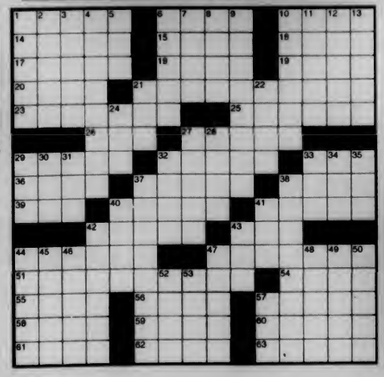
Shrimp & Scallop Creole

BBQ Chicken Quarters

Brazilian Black Beans (vegan)

Vegeterian Chilli

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E HAMPTON 413 584-8766
E LONGMEADOW 413 789 5942



ACROSS
1 Gawky
6 Building wings
10 Maniac
14 Love greatly
15 Astronaut Armstrong
16 Taj Mahal's location
17 Weighed down
18 Agatha Christie's title
19 Forey
20 "Oh — I Sing"
21 Cook's pulverizer
23 Calmed
25 Acutely
26 Away
27 Brandish
29 Gentle hill
33 Domineering
33 Tibetan ox
36 Ages and ages
37 Kind of badge
38 Windmill part
39 Egyptian boy-king
40 Minstrels
41 Informative
42 Grimy
43 Spicy
44 Talents
47 Be worthy of Silver's rider
54 Reddish-brown horse
55 Vegas numbers
56 Festive
57 Culpability
58 Nasty sort
59 Runner Zatopek
60 Follow
61 Virginia —
62 Society newcomers
63 Chemical compound

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-8-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Fountain treats
2 Spud state
3 Cowboy meet
4 Forest canopies
5 Domestic bird
6 Over
7 Vault
8 Droopy
9 Most glossy
10 Worked the land
11 Once more
12 Dermis's tool
13 Unhappily
21 Caress
22 Depend (on)
24 Tint
27 Long-winded
28 Wife of Osiris
29 Adjust a clock
30 Slugger Gehrig
31 Toronto's prov.
32 Entertainer Parks
33 Go off-course
34 Ques
35 Comeback
35 Clue
37 Ruthred
38 Ex-soldiers
40 Perry Mason portrayer
41 Soc. Sec. IDs
42 Heavy-duty engine
43 That girl
44 Knack for a loop
45 Inn
46 Conductor Kostelanetz
47 Contracts
48 Disturb
49 Hold dear
50 Go inside
52 Title
53 Smooth-tongued
57 Doctor's payment

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician	Martha Oliva
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Adi D. Huseinovic
Production Staff	Meraj Hydary, Alicia Upano

CORRECTION (from Thursday): The UMass hockey team plays Sunday @ Providence. NOT Today.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Heading South for schoolyard scuffle

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The schoolyard bully steps off the bus, looks around and spots the new kid standing off in one corner of the playground.

Striding over with chest puffed out and head held high, the bully demands the new kid's lunch money. The newbie tries to make a statement, standing up defiantly in spite of a wave of apprehension and fear. The bully cocks back a fist, and things get ugly in a hurry.

Welcome to Atlantic 10 field hockey.

"Our goal is to beat Richmond and knock them out of the A-10 tournament," said Massachusetts head coach Patty Shea, whose Minutewomen (8-8, 5-0 A-10) will wrap up their conference action against the Spiders on Saturday. "They're the new kids, and we don't want them getting in right away. We want them to have to earn it."

This is Richmond's first season in the A-10, and head coach Angie Bradley's crew may have set itself up for failure from the start. The Spiders made it quite clear that they considered the A-10 to be a two-horse race, and that the Maroon and White was the only other thoroughbred they deemed dangerous in the sprint to the conference crown.

That attitude came back to bite Richmond in the you-know-what when the Spiders dropped three straight A-10 games over the last week and a half. The last of those defeats, a 2-1 overtime heartbreaker at West Chester, left UR with a dismal 1-3 conference mark (8-8 overall).

"Last year when Richmond entered the A-10, all they kept saying was that they wanted to beat UMass," UMass co-captain Jill Fantasia said. "But then look what happened. I'll bet it was kind of a wake-up call for them."

"Richmond is a great school and a great program, but I'm not sure if they respected our conference enough coming in," Shea said.

If the Spiders were indeed sleepwalking through their early A-10 slate, they should be wide-awake indeed for Saturday's matchup. Richmond needs a minor miracle to reach the conference tournament — wins in its last two games coupled with at least one loss by La Salle — but will have the ultimate stage on which to play out its do-or-die matchup with the Minutewomen on Saturday.

"The pressure on us is going to be three-fold against Richmond," Shea said. "It's on their home field, it's their homecoming weekend and they finally get a shot at UMass. They've been looking forward to this for a long time."

The Maroon and White will close out its regular-season slate with a Sunday game against non-conference foe Virginia Commonwealth. The Rams have endured one of the roughest seasons imaginable, losing their last 16 games in a row to fall to 1-17 on the year.

Head coach Dawn Hill's troops have experienced the full gamut of the defeat spectrum, dropping seven contests by a single goal while losing to North Carolina and Maryland by a combined score of 20-0. The team's last two losses have been particularly heart-wrenching, as the Rams succumbed to Radford 2-1 on penalty strokes before blowing a 2-0 first-half lead en route to a 4-3 loss to No. 17 James Madison.

Despite the misfortunes of its Sunday opponent, the Maroon and White can ill afford to take this weekend's games lightly. Shea's squad has been gaining precious momentum as it heads toward the postseason Promised Land.

"We've set a series of goals for ourselves, and we're starting to reach them," Shea said. "Getting into the A-10 tournament was first, and we did it. Getting the number one seed was next, and we did that. But the next one is a biggie; we want to win the regular-season conference title outright. Maybe we're a little greedy, but we don't want to share it with anyone."

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN
Kristin Hopwood has been playing well lately, despite a broken wrist.

Erin Lilly, and the UMass women's soccer team, are looking to slide away from this weekend with two wins.

Travel plans are distracting

Minutewomen fly down coast for A-10 matches

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

There are so many attributes that make a good coach. Quality game planning and scouting, the ability to motivate, and good eye for talent. But keeping the team focused despite distractions is probably the hardest and most important part of the job description, especially toward the end of the season.

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will be fighting to focus through many distractions this upcoming weekend especially.

As one of the top head coaches in the nation, Jim Rudy has seen just about everything, but flying to the nation's capital at a time when the city is under biological attack (that has killed two postal workers) is something he has never had to deal with.

This will be the first flight taken by the team since the tragedies that shook America on Sept. 11. The team was scheduled to fly to Georgia that following weekend, but the trip was cancelled for obvious reasons, which was fine with the team.

Everyone was really nervous about [flying that weekend]," freshman defender Carly Turman said.

But this is a team that, as a whole, prefers to keep both feet on the ground as it is, and that is adding to the overall distraction of the situation.

"Our team, in general, had a problem with [flying] even before everything that happened," said Turman, a frequent flyer herself. "Now, we have a lot of nervous people."

Rudy will be leading his team onto the pitch against Richmond Friday in Richmond, Va. and then into Washington, D.C. for Sunday's match-up against George Washington.

Both teams have been less than impressive at home. Richmond is 4-3 on its home field, while GW is only 3-3 in the District of Columbia, but the home team has a distinct advantage when an opponent is traveling as far as the Minutewomen are for these two conference games.

Despite a credible 5-2 A-10 record, Richmond (6-7-1 overall) is considered a minor disappointment. The Spiders were selected as the preseason favorite to win the division in the coaches' poll, but were shutout by La Salle last weekend in their second conference loss. Currently in a tie for third, a win over UMass will give Richmond some extra confidence as the postseason looms closer.

The Maroon and White will have to play on a new surface this weekend in Richmond, something the team prepared for earlier in the week.

"We went to the bubble in Deerfield because we will be playing on that same surface (AstroGrass) in Richmond," said Turman, who believes the turf will be beneficial for her club. "We have a fast team, so we do well on any turf or any surface that plays fast," the California native said.

George Washington is not the powerhouse that the Spiders are, but will head into the weekend with momentum after an emotional t ll win over Fordham Sunday. An impressive showing by GW sophomore goalkeeper Christine O'Malley has given the Colonials added confidence in its defense.

The next two weekends will determine the outcome of Coach Rudy's regular season. By taking the field against top conference opponents with air travel, anthrax and a different playing surface in the minds of all his players, along with the normal issues that come up on road trips, this weekend will go a long way in determining how good the veteran motivator is at limiting the distractions his teams are sure to face.

Still streaking; UMass aims for eighth straight

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team is on a roll. The team has moved through October without a loss, its last defeat coming on Sept. 29 against Rhode Island.

The Minutemen will look for its eighth straight win today versus Richmond at Totman Field at 3 p.m., in a game that could help predict UMass' near future.

Coming off a shutout win against Temple and moving into the top spot in the Atlantic 10 Conference, the Minutemen joined Rhode Island and Richmond at No. 1. Today's game could forecast the postseason that is quickly approaching.

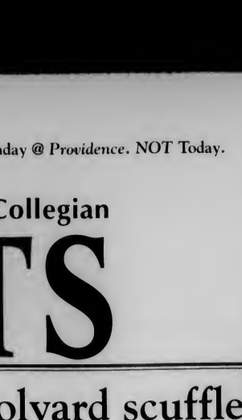
"We've got to focus on the games ahead," Head Coach Sam Koch said.

Piah Myers, a sophomore forward, has been getting the job done for the Maroon and White, netting four goals in last Sunday's game. Myers is only the seventh UMass player to put up that many goals in one game.

"It was a great performance, he was on," Koch said. "The players around him gave great support. It was a team effort."

Myers was rewarded this week with the A-10 Player of the Week award. The forward is currently the team's second leading scorer behind Jeff Derent and also ranks sixth in the conference for points this season.

UMass is coming into the home stretch of the season with only four regular season games left, the next two at home. It's been smooth sailing for the team so far, but much is ahead, starting today with Richmond.



The Spiders are coming off a 2-1 win over LaSalle last Saturday and are currently 6-1 in the conference, their only loss coming from a 1-0 failure against Fordham. The defeat snapped a five-game winning streak and gave the Rams their first conference win.

The Minutemen sit with a 6-1 record in the A-10 as well. In order to have a chance at seeing postseason action, UMass will have to clinch a spot in the top four.

"Facing the best three in the last four games, anything can happen," Koch said.

UMass has worked hard throughout the season and is close to the same place it was at this time last season. A seven-game winning streak with, six of them being A-10 victories put the Minutemen one game behind last year's posted record of 7-1-1.

"We're playing well," said Koch. "The ball's bounced our way a few times."

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN
Sophomore Devlin Barnes, attempts a throw in.

Westbrook keys Villanova attack

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

"Hit 'Nova! Hit Westbrook! Hit!"

So reads the sign that hung on every single player's stall in the UMass locker room this week, as a reminder of what needs to be done to stop the best all-around player in the nation and one of the top teams in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutemen will need to do a lot more than just hit if they are to erase the lurid 39-year winless streak they have experienced at Villanova.

"It hurts to look at our record against these guys," coach Mark Whipple said. "We haven't won there since the sixties."

To expunge that hideous gaffe in the UMass football record books, the Minuteman defense will have the unenviable task of not stopping, but containing Walter Payton Award candidate Bryan Westbrook.

Westbrook, who was contemplating leaving early for the National Football League after his junior season last year, has caught balls past defenses this entire season. But even though Westbrook's emanating talent can be intimidating, spying the All-American runner is conquered territory for the Maroon and White.

Westbrook came into UMass' homecoming game last year, riding a streak of dominating performances. The Minuteman defense, led by departed senior Kole Ayi and All-American Jeremy Robinson buried Westbrook, holding him to 80 yards of total offense – not bad considering he is averaging 180 yards a game from scrimmage in the 2001 campaign.

This year Villanova welcomes the Minutemen for homecoming and Westbrook will certainly be looking for some payback.

Westbrook is the Division I-AA version of Marshall Faulk, and few people have doubts that he will be playing on Sunday next year. He is the total package: a back that can punish linebackers with inside power, scoot past defensive backs outside the hashes and catch passes in the flat. Asking how do you stop Westbrook is like querying how to stop the unstoppable.

Granted he is a great running back, but even the greats have had days, like the one he had against the Minutemen last season. The first step to stopping Westbrook is believing you can stop him, and with the dominance with which he was halted last year, UMass certainly has reasons to believe.

Westbrook is a picture perfect running back in every sense of the word. His 5-foot-9 frame gives him a low center of gravity, while his 205 pounds of muscle give him carte blanche to bruise opposing defenders.

The key to stopping Westbrook's elusive running game is hitting him early. If the All-American is allowed to hit the hole and get his legs moving then odds on he's gone. But if linebackers can penetrate the gaps and block up the holes than Westbrook can be dropped for a loss. His diminutive body won't let him shed a 6-foot-3 250 pound linebacker, especially in the stationary position.

The only way to truly contain Westbrook is to stop him from catching the ball. In last year's game All-American Kole Ayi spied him on numerous occasions. But Ayi was one of the rare players who could outmuscle Westbrook and go step for step with him at the same time.

If Whipple can find a LB to step up and smother Westbrook for sixty minutes, then UMass chances for victory will increase exponentially, especially if freshman QB Matt Guice looks like he did against James Madison. For anybody who didn't see that game, he looked like the best signal caller in the A-10.

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN
Jeremy Robinson (left) and the rest of the UMass defense will be busy guarding future NFL-er, Bryan Westbrook.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Michael Pieck was UMass' top finisher in every race last year.

Cross country trots into A-10s

By Eric Goodman
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams face an uphill battle this weekend, in both the literal and figurative sense, as they travel Saturday to LaSalle's Belmont Plateau in Philadelphia for the Verizon Atlantic 10 Championships.

Both teams are looking to knock off St. Joseph's, who claimed both the men's and women's titles last year.

The Hawks edged the second place Minutewomen by only 19 points last year while the men's competition was even closer, as La Salle came up short of St. Joe's by a mere 17 points.

La Salle appears to be the favorite this year, as it is ranked No. 1 in the coaches' polls for both divisions.

Also running this Saturday will be Dayton, Duquesne, Fordham, George Washington, Rhode Island, Richmond, St. Bonaventure and Xavier.

All should prove formidable opponents for the Maroon and White entrants, who have yet to run well this season.

"We have not been dominating this season," said UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere, whose team is ranked No. 6 in the A-10. "Many of our key runners have been inactive due to sickness and injury; however, I do feel that we are finally starting to gel and perhaps we might be able to finish behind LaSalle and URI, both of which I believe will dominate the A-10's this year."

Men's Head Coach Ken O'Brien appeared to be a bit more optimistic.

"We have yet to run our best race this year," said O'Brien, whose squad stands in the A-10's No. 3 spot. "Our top senior runners Ryan Corbett, Mike Pieck, Kevin Curtain and Sal Nastasi all have run well this year as individuals, but we haven't been able to get consistent performances from them as an entire unit yet.

"LaSalle and St. Joe's appear to have the advantage because they are running on their home course, but many of our runners have run this course too and hopefully we might finally meet our full potential this weekend."

This Saturday's competition will begin at 10 a.m. for the women's teams and 10:45 a.m. for the men. The course length is 5,000 meters for the women and 8,000 meters for the men.

This weekend's competitions will be the first two of 22 A-10 Championships to be held for this academic year.

We saw Dispatch. Check out our review tomorrow.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team beat Providence yesterday, 4-3. Read all about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 37 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, October 29, 2001

Smith premieres 'Invent Center'

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and alumni from the Five-College area, as well as businesses, now have an informational resource at Smith College designed to encourage the participation of women in the technological economy.

On Saturday, Oct. 20, during Smith's Parents Weekend, acting President John Connolly and Women in Technology International (WITI) CEO Carolyn Leighton opened the WITI Invent Center at an opening attended by about 50 students, alumni, administrators, and business representatives.

"All futures start with a vision, and I foresaw a future filled with women who will use technology," said Leighton, who founded WITI ten years ago. "This center will help all students use that technology, regardless of their major."

Located at the newly renovated facilities at Tilly Hall, the center features a conference room, research libraries, and eight computers connecting women to the digital world.

Nancy Hellman, the center's consulting director and former assistant dean of engineering at the University of Massachusetts, said the center will emphasize the connections between all the members of WITI by promoting internships, mentoring, and leadership certification.

"In this economic environment, there isn't a single major, field of scholarship, or business sector that can afford to sidestep the opportunities presented by technology," Hellman said. "We intend the WITI Invent Center to be a far-reaching resource, one that will add value to the education we offer not just while a student is here in the valley but when she or he is in the job market, launching a business or running a company."

According to Hellman, students can conduct research about women who consider technology central to their careers, professions, and businesses through the WITI Research Center. Hellman said the WITI Test Center will provide companies an opportunity to calibrate product design for women through focus groups and roundtable discussions with engineering students.

Veronica Boaz, Vice President of the WITI Leadership Xcellence program, said students can use the center to participate in the "WITI Virtual Women's Conference," scheduled for the week of Dec. 3.

Boaz said WITI organized the conference to promote successful work strategies for women and men in the high-tech economy by featuring cyberchats, discussion booths and the exchange of virtual business cards. In addition, a group of 40 speakers, including keynote speaker and founder of Ms. Magazine Gloria Steinem, will host entrepreneurial "webinars," Boaz said.

According to Hellman, Smith provided the space and renovations necessary to build the center, WITI and Capital One fund the center's programming and maintenance costs, and Dell Computer donated the center's computer equipment.

Dr. Ruth Simmons, president of Brown University and former Smith President, told the audience via video that Smith and WITI hope to promote women in engineering by offering internship and mentoring opportunities and encouraging women's business ventures. Following the ribbon-cutting ceremony, students from the college's Introduction to Engineering class displayed the products of their semester-long project course.

"We want to help everyone understand that technology can influence the careers and change the lives of women," Simmons said. "It's a natural progression for Smith to collaborate with WITI to help advance women and encourage students to pioneer and lead in technology-based endeavors."

According to Leighton, WITI hopes to install replicate Smith's Invent Center at colleges and universities across the country, establishing a network dedicated to women's advancement through technology. Smith College, the nation's largest women's college, established the first engineering program at an all-women school.

"Women are dramatically underrepresented in technology and in new business ventures," Leighton said. "Together, WITI and Smith can bring considerable resources to bear on the obstacles, such as isolation and lack of mentoring, that so often derail women's interest or advancement in technology endeavors."

On the Net: Women In Technology International: http://www.witi.com

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN
Feeding time
The ducks at the Campus Pond get a lucky break from their daily staple every once in a while.

Lesbian identities explored in Stonewall talk

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Lisa Walker, a professor of English and Women's Studies at the University of Southern Maine and the author of a recent book, Look Like What You Are: Sexual Style, Race and Lesbian Identity delivered a lecture on lesbian femme culture in the Campus Center on Oct. 25.

The presentation is the fifth in the Stonewall Center's LGBT Studies Lecture Series.

Walker explained that the lesbian community is often divided into two identity groups: "butch," or masculine, and "femme," or feminine. Walker said that having a femme identity can create problems for lesbians both within and outside of their community.

Walker explained these concepts using stories from her own life as well as the research from her book. She recalled an exterminator who frequently visited her Louisiana home during her graduate school years. Walker said she knew that the exterminator was a lesbian right away through "gaydar...all the subconscious ways [gays and lesbians] recognize each other."

However, Walker said, the exterminator didn't acknowledge Walker's lesbian identity until she met her then-girlfriend, who was butch. "My girlfriend was immediately recognized as a lesbian because she was the butch one," Walker said. "As for me, my décor, my attitudes, and my recognition [of the exterminator's] lesbian identity weren't enough. The presence of a butch was the only way [she] could confirm my gay identity."

This experience, Walker said, led her to thinking more critically about femme identity.

"A butch ex-girlfriend told me that there was a special bond between women who were visible and clear as lesbians," Walker said. "She also said that I didn't have to bear the full weight and brunt of homophobia [like she did]." She said that butch lesbians often felt that they "couldn't be expected to feel safe talking to someone who didn't look like [a lesbian]."

The stereotypes "permeated my experience of being queer," Walker said. "There was a failure of recognition [for me as a femme] within the lesbian community. It's true that I don't know what it's like to always be under surveillance [from homophobes]. But for whom is it easier that I look the way I do?"

She said that it had made her straight family, colleagues and friends more comfortable, but that "[my butch ex-girlfriends] didn't know what it was like to be shut out of their own community."

"When [other lesbians] assume that I'm less because of how I look, I feel devalued," she said.

She said she decided that "rather than deprive myself of the pleasures I get from being high femme," she would try to educate her community and its allies about femme identity. From this, she said, came the inspiration for her book.

The book, according to Walker, makes a connection between the idea of racial "passing," in which those of a race which is discriminated against may try to hide their background and be taken for another, and the history of lesbian femmes "passing" for straight, voluntarily or not. Walker said that with this history comes a "sensation of being invisible." She said that she felt that, "race is a touchstone for how we play out definitions of visibility and invisibility in other categories."

To illustrate this, Walker drew on 1950's pulp fiction in both her book and her lecture. She said that while the genre made femme lesbians visible, "visibility is always double-edged." She added that the genre "did virtually nothing about

Turn to GLBT page 3

TOM REYNOLDS/LOCKHEED MARTIN
A Lockheed Martin X-35A Joint Strike Fighter concept demonstrator receives fuel from a U.S. Air Force KC-135 Stratotanker during a test mission.

Lockheed Martin awarded new Defense contract worth billions

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Lockheed Martin Corp. has been awarded the contract for the Joint Strike Fighter program, the Pentagon said.

The possibly $200 billion contract was announced by Jim Roche, secretary of the Air Force, on Oct. 26.

"On the basis of strengths, weaknesses and degrees of risk of the program, it is our conclusion, joined in by our colleagues from the United Kingdom, that the Lockheed Martin team is the winner of the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) program on a best-value basis," Roche said.

The Lockheed Martin X-35 beat out its closest competitor, the Boeing X-32. The Navy, the Marines, the Air Force, the British navy and air force will use the new plane, designated the F-35, which is set to replace older aircraft and augment other fighters.

There are currently plans to develop four variants of the aircraft.

The Air Force model will be a conventional aircraft. The Navy version will have a more powerful engine to accommodate aircraft carriers. The Marine variant will be able to take off from very short runways, land vertically and hover.

The units being developed for the United Kingdom will be similar to the Marine Corps model.

The cost of the planes depended on the variant, Roche said.

"If the planes happened to be available today, we were buying them today, and we were to buy the CTOL [conventional take off and landing], the Air Force version, which, of course, was the most interest to me, then the number would be – a fly-away cost – in other words, if we go buy the airplane, would be roughly $40 million a copy," Roche explained.

The other variants would cost less than $50 million per unit, Roche added.

"For the U.S. Navy, the JSF will be used in a 'first day' of war, as a survivable strike fighter aircraft to complement F/A-18E/F. The U.S. Air Force will employ it as a multi-role aircraft, primary-air-to-ground, which will replace the F-16 and A-10 and to complement the F-22," the Pentagon said in a released statement. "The Marine Corps will use the Short Takeoff and Vertical Landing (STOVL) variant of the aircraft to replace the AV-8B and F/A-18A/C/D. The United Kingdom's Royal Navy and Royal Air Force multi-role aircraft will replace the Sea Harrier and GR7."

The contract is specifically for the development of the JSF, and not for production.

"The phase that we're entering in is called System Development and Demonstration phase. It is not a decision to enter production at this point in time, it is a decision to enter the next phase," said Pete Aldridge, under secretary of Defense for Acquisitions, Technologies and Logistics. "The contract that's been awarded to Lockheed Martin I think is about $19 billion for this, and there's another contract to Pratt and Whitney, which will be the engine producer at this phase in the program, of about four billion."

The JSF program has been under development since late 1993. Once completed, the JSF will be an important, and long lasting, part of the U.S. arsenal, the Aldridge explained.

"The Joint Strike Fighter is a family of highly common, lethal, survivable, supportable, and affordable next-generation multi-role strike fighter aircraft," Aldridge told reporters at a special briefing. "The Joint Strike Fighter will be the world's premier strike platform beginning in 2008, and lasting through 2040."

Lord Willy Bach, under secretary of Defense and minister for Defense for the United Kingdom, sees the JSF as a further cementing of U.S. relations with Great Britain.

"Today, ladies and gentlemen, United Kingdom and United States forces stand shoulder to shoulder at the forefront of the worldwide coalition battle against terrorism. I am, therefore, delighted to be here to demonstrate our partnership," Lord Bach said. "The United Kingdom government, as a full partner in the collaborative Joint Strike Fighter program, is very happy to endorse the decision to move the JSF program forward."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil: The JSF Program: http://www.jast.mil; The U.K. Ministry of Defense: http://www.mod.uk; The Lockheed Martin Corp.: http://www.lockheed-martin.com

Amilcar Cabral honored

By Rahwa Asmerom
Collegian Correspondent

Revolutionary leader Amilcar Cabral was honored in tributary presentation sponsored by the Cape Verdian Students Association at the New Africa House's Shirley Duffois Library on Oct. 25.

Given by University of Massachusetts graduate Edgar A Barros, the two-hour presentation brought to light many interesting facts about this Cape Verdian national figure and the lasting impact his efforts have had on the politics of post-colonial Africa.

To a background of traditional Cape Verdean music and an Amilcar Cabral mural on the wall, Barros lectured on the life of Cabral, beginning with an overall brief history and basic facts about his native land.

Born in the western African country of Guinea to Cape Verdean parents in September 1924, Cabral was educated by his colonizers in Portugal but chose to return to Africa, and with the help of a few of his friends, founded the a nationalist party whose main goal was to free both Guinea and Cape Verde from Portuguese colonization. Although the initial ideology of the party was focused on ousting the Portuguese without the use of force, after more than fifty anti-colonialist protesters were massacred in 1959, Cabral decided to engage in armed struggle.

He officially kicked off the armed struggle in 1963 after asking for aid from numerous countries and organiza-

Turn to CAPE VERDIAN, page 3

International Briefs

By Jennifer Eastwood and Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

United Kingdom – An 18-year old Welch fusilier soldier, after being recently wounded when crowds threw petrol bombs at his stationed army checkpoint during a nearby Protestant protest at the Holy Cross primary school in Belfast, Northern Ireland, had emergency surgery on his lower body Saturday, Oct. 27 at the local Royal Victoria hospital.

As of yesterday, it was reported that the boy still remains in critical condition, and that this attack is being treated as attempted murder case by the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC), the local police force.

RUC Lt. Col. Mark Blagbrough told the UK Press Association reporters that the attack was "a coordinated, highly planned and deliberate attempt to kill a soldier."

Assistant Chief Constable Alan McQuillan of the RUC took the argument one step further, saying that the loyalist Ulster Defense Association (UDA), a Northern Ireland group of civilians organized in military fashion, was to blame for the attack.

"British soldiers attempting to protect both sections of the community were being attacked by so-called loyalists, some even wearing poppies," said McQuillan.

Protests have engulfed the Roman Catholic primary school, located in "Protestant part" of Belfast's Ardoyne area, for approximately one month now.

Some of the local Protestants have reported attacks by Catholics and threats made by UDA members who use school children as an excuse for entering the Protestant area.

In contrast, some Catholics have responded by demanding the right to walk their children to school using shortest route, which takes them through the Protestant area.

To take a longer route and side skirt the Protestant streets, they said, would be to surrender to the UDA loyalists.

"It's absolutely disgusting," McQuillan said of the situation. "People up there [the Ardoyne area] have a death wish on their community."

Israel – The withdrawal of Israeli troops from West Bank cities such as Bethlehem and Beit Jala, which had been scheduled for this past Saturday, Oct. 27, has been postponed until further notice due to the fact, said Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, that Palestinian authorities did not follow Friday's cease-fire agreement between Israel, Palestine, and the US.

Last week, Israeli troops took control of six different areas near Palestinian-controlled cities as a backlash to the assassination of Israeli Cabinet Minister Rehaven Ze'evi on Oct. 17 even though Palestinian officials had denounced the murder and arrested 33 members from the outlawed military group, Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, who were believed to be responsible for the crime.

During Friday's meeting near Tel Aviv, a plan was reached for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from two of the cities, while a discussion on the fate of other four was scheduled for later this week.

According to CNN, fighting once again erupted around the West Bank area (particularly in Israeli-controlled Bethlehem and Palestinian-controlled Nablus) on Saturday night merely a few hours before the first phase of the evacuation of Israeli troops was scheduled to begin.

As of Sunday, casualty tolls of the fighting reported one Palestinian has died from a head shot wound in the city of Tulkarem.

"If Palestinians keep the calm and their commitments, Israel will re-examine its decision," an Israeli security source informed Reuters after announcing the freezing of troop withdrawals.

In counterpoint, Chief Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erakat reported his disappointment in Israel's decision not to vacate the two areas.

"Once again we [Palestine] have had an agreement, and the Israeli side is violating it," Erakat said.

He added that Palestinians had in fact attempted to keep a cease-fire in the area, but it was out of their control. "The real problem, I think," he explained, "is that the Israeli prime minister does not want us ever to go back to negotiations."

The Bush administration recently reported that the US still remains in favor of Israel's relinquishment of the areas and for Palestine to put all its efforts into minimizing violent outbreaks such as Saturday's and finding those responsible for the assassination of Ze'evi.

Indonesia – The state-run Antara news agency reported 170 Afghans were found drifting off of Sumbawa in a boat were illegal immigrants hoping to reach Australia.

These illegal Middle Eastern and Afghan immigrants were and continue to be part of the growing influx of those who try to flee to Australia from Indonesia each year.

According to Antara, "The immigrants were transported by the motorized sail boat Sinar Bontang which had left South Sulawesi for Australia," reported the West Nusa Tenggara Province's Regional Secretary Abdullah Abubakar.

Abdullah did not say when exactly the boat of immigrants was found but told Antara they were found in the stalled boat in the sea off of Sagyang Pulo, located north of Bima.

Authorities are currently taking these immigrants to Sangyang village, and they plan to move them to Bima as soon as they can.

A refugee boat sank off the coast of Indonesia, killing more than 350 Iraqi immigrants last week.

Police Chief General Bimantoro said two police officers that were accomplices to this illegal activity were arrested on Friday for protecting them.

Bangladesh Awami League's Abdul Hamid.

Nigeria – Military raids in villages in central Nigeria, including Gbeji, Vaase, and Anyim, have resulted in the death of about 300 people, half of which were concentrated in the village of Gbeji.

Surviving villagers who had fled the scene during the killings have now begun to return to their homes, including Village Elder Daniel Gbeji who was reported to have hid behind of sheet of vines during the attacks.

Gbeji, whose great-grandfather was responsible for first establishing the village sharing his name, informed the Associated Press, "I really thought I was the last person living [the morning after the attack]," for at first he could find no other living human around the village.

He continued to explain how the bodies found in his village were practically unrecognizable due to their burns and bullet wounds, stressing how horrific the scene was for him.

Similarly, another resident of Gbeji, Terkola Uwana, recalled his disturbing experience.

"[During the raid], we just ran, ducking and dodging," he said, "I saw my cousin fall down, but I continued."

Uwana further noted that he returned to the village to bury his dead cousin last Tuesday.

Reports said, according to state officials, the raids resulted from the Tiv tribal fighters' abduction and murder of 19 soldiers earlier in October in the village of Vaase.

It was at the soldiers' funeral that Nigerian President Olusegun Obasanjo publicly expressed his promise to find those responsible for the deaths and have them punished.

Bangladesh – Officials opposed to what they believed to be a rigged election on Oct. 1 boycotted the first session of Bangladesh's new parliament yesterday by leaving the 300-seating meeting after a unanimous vote electing the Bangladesh National Party's (BNP) Iamiruddin Sircar to power over the Awami League's Abdul Hamid.

Those lawmakers then attended an anti-government rally in which approximately 30,000 demonstrators met at the abandoned soccer stadium, Dhaka's Paltan Maidan, to show their discontent with the election's procedures.

For reference, out of the 300 possible seats open in the to the parliament, the BNP now occupies 214 seats, the Awami League has 62 seats, and the remaining 24 seats were taken by smaller parties.

"We don't accept this government, which has come to power by stealing the peoples' votes," former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and leader of the Awami League told the crowd before her, adding that the league will continue to hold nationwide street protests from Nov. 5-11 until their mandate to overturn the election results is met.

In response, Prime Minister Khaleda Zia, leader of the BNP, criticized the protest, saying, "We had hoped that all those who got the people's mandate would come here and exercise the responsibility bestowed on them."

Iran – Police confiscated over 1,000 satellite dishes on Thursday and Friday supposedly in order to prohibit access of several US-based channels run by Iranian-opposed groups and thus purge Iran of Western influences, according to Iranian state-owned newspapers.

The recent reports pointed out that in fact police were expected to appropriate about 150,000 illegal dishes and thus fell short of their goal.

This type of confiscation is not new to Iran, reported local newspapers, for a ban had already been placed on satellite dishes since 1995.

Due to its non-strict reinforcement, the ban was unsuccessful, and the use of satellite dishes continued to flourish, locating them on city rooftops and balconies.

"I don't think this measure is a proper way of confronting the dishes," Sohrab Bohluli Qashqaie explained to the Associated Press, "I think its consequences will be more negative than positive."

Examples of her belief were seen in how some residents attempt disguise them to resemble air conditioners or water coolers or bring the dishes inside their homes.

While state security officials would not explain what prompted this mass confiscation in the first place, a Farsi-language Iran newspaper reported it was the result of recent street violence, in which soccer fans threw stones at city shops and banks after an Iranian soccer match seen on television through the use of satellites.

Argentina – Economy Minister Domingo Cavallo explained how plans to recover the Argentina economy by swapping local and foreign debt were left incomplete during a meeting in Buenos Aires due to the lack of support from multilaterals and G7 industrialized nations.

"These aspects require the support of multilateral organizations and the G7. We have progressed a lot," said Cavallo, "but we have to make some consultations and be sure that what the President announces can be immediately implemented."

Cavallo went to New York last week to see if the swap of both local and foreign debt would be done simultaneously but did not announce any concrete details saying, "the reason for my trip to New York was related to this."

The plan, expected to be completed by last week, needs cuts in interest rates so that Argentinean government can lower the debt problem.

"The key to the program's success is cutting interest rates and this means cutting the cost of the debt of provinces and the central government," Cavallo said to La Nacion newspaper.

Cavallo reported wanting to specifically lower interest rates on the $10 million debt and exchange that for smaller portions of tax revenue.

He also is currently working with the International Monetary Fund and said, " I expect they will approve it [the program]."

The economy, which is faced with a $132 billion debt, is now dealing with its fourth year of recession.

"I fight on to the end," said Cavallo, "I am dedicated to solving the problem of the debt."

Russia – The nuclear submarine Kursk, which sank in August of 2000 in the Barents Sea and suffered the loss of its 118 sailors on board, was raised on Oct. 8 from its watery depths during a $65 million salvage operation of an international team of divers and now sits docked at the northern port of Roslyakovo.

Recently, journalists were for the first time allowed into the garbled, burnt remains of the submarine's inner compartments to make a seven-minute documentary film on the catastrophe, which was televised throughout the country.

During the film, which captured the vivid and devastating scenes of the wreckage, Russia's Prosecutor-General Vladimir Ustinov stressed how the explosion had wiped out everything, noting how equipment had been disgorged about the Kursk's innermost compartments.

"What happened inside these compartments was hell," Ustinov relayed, "The strong alloys from which these compartments are built were simply ripped apart," he said, adding facts such as only 19 bodies have been found so far inside of submarine, 17 of which were actually removed, seven of which were identified.

He also noted how at least 23 members of the crew survived the initial blasts and remained alive in the sunken compartments for hours, using the examples of finding bodies whose cause of death is suffocation as proof.

At the request of relatives, noted Russian Navy commander Admiral Vladimir Kuroyedov to the Interfax news agency, the bodies, although ultimately transported to their hometowns, had a farewell ceremony with full military honors.

Briefs were compiled from CNN and ABC News.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 Monday-Friday between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginczye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Siderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danziig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Western New England College
SCHOOL OF LAW
The Great Outdoors
—our national treasure. Protect it with a law degree.
The practice of law is changing with new opportunities emerging in environmental law, ocean and coastal law, and biotechnology. Be a part of it with an outstanding legal education from Western New England College School of Law.
OPEN HOUSE
Saturday, Nov. 3, 2001
1:00 to 4:15 p.m.
Our collaborative learning environment prepares you to practice what we teach. From brief writing to mock trials, national competitions to externships, our day and evening programs offer hands-on training to succeed in the courtroom—or the boardroom—in a variety of fields.
Practice what we teach.
www.law.wnec.edu

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Bacon'n Cheese Skins 8.99 4.39
Fried Shrimp Tempura 7.45 3.49
Sweet Potato Fries 6.99 3.39
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
OCMP Welcome Home
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now. Space is Limited!
Class Begins
Fri. Nov. 16th 6:00pm
Valentine Hall
Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

The Ground Round
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL of Hadley
BOOMER MUGS only
$2.79
Budweiser BUD LIGHT MICHELOB Ultra
Nightly Specials
Sun., Mon., Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings
-$3.00
9 TV's, Smoking Section, Monday Night Football

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE
An early warning radar and aircraft control site near Heart, Afghanistan. Defense officials say that the Taliban place military equipment near non-military targets, like this mosque near the base.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN
Twinkle Little Star
The Milky Way explored and explained at the Amherst Common through long glasses with the aid of a chart and an astronomy lan.

Pentagon warns media that bomb damage can be faked

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Pentagon is warning the media and the public not to be fooled by Taliban claims of civilian casualities.

A senior Defense official briefed reporters on how to recognize what the Pentagon terms "denial and deception," the fabrication of damage designed to influence the enemy.

"The idea of denying information to an adversary or deceiving an adversary, of course, is nothing new. It has a long, long history in the history of military warfare," the senior Defense official said. "It has a long history in the history of politics, and a very important, growing history, I would say, in the current age, where I think denial and deception techniques, and manipulation, is becoming very important in the world media arena, and something we all want to be aware of."

The official, who did not identify himself, explained that eliciting sympathy for the enemy was a common tactic when fighting in the Middle East.

"During Desert Storm we saw some classic examples of enemy denial and deception and, if you like the term, disinformation. The United States, for example, was accused by the Iraqis of desecrating Muslim holy 'sites,'" the official said. "They frequently tried to show that the U.S. bombing campaign was ineffective, that it was deliberately destroying civilian sites; that there were children who were being killed and mained and affected by the embargo."

To do this, the official said, photos and videos are released to sympathetic media outlets, and are in turn picked up by the mainstream press.

"Perhaps one of the classic examples, for those of you who may not be aware, but there's the famous parade of children that's held in Baghdad quite frequently where they bring out, on top of cars, coffins of children that they claim have been killed as a result of the embargo, or the presence of depleted uranium, et cetera, et cetera," the official said. "We've seen on several occasions the same picture of the same child reappearing in some of these parades. It's a classic technique of playing to public sympathy for purposes that suit the government."

Damage to buildings can also be fabricated, the Pentagon said.

"Often the environment is manipulated to simulate or fake an incident. And there are numerous historical cases of this. A classic one occurred in Iraq at a Mosque where the Iraqis brought the media in to show them some damage to a wall around a mosque that had been knocked down, according to them, by a U.S. cruise missile," the Defense official said. "On close examination, it was pretty obvious from the bulldozer tracks and the fact that the wall fell in a straight line that they had deliberately knocked the wall down. It didn't demonstrate the classic circular pattern of a warhead explosion."

The Taliban is doing the same thing, the Pentagon said, but it is also trying to protect its military equipment by placing it near targets that it knows the U.S. planes won't normally attack.

"We've got an example here of a photograph of an early warning and radar and aircraft-control facility near the Herat airfield. You see the airfield up in the upper-left-hand corner, and this is a residential area down in the lower-right-hand corner, and a mosque near the center of the picture and the military vehicles stationed around that area," the Defense official said. "Now, initially, in looking at this, this is a military base. Our military bases have churches, et cetera, on base, and one could argue, 'Well, so what?' But if you look at the next photo, it's a post- strike photo after we've struck this facility.

"I want to draw your attention to the arrow in the center near the mosque; it's probably a little difficult for you to see – right in here. But there was a helicopter there. You can see the helicopter blades that got destroyed in the strike," the Defense official went on. "And it was deliberately positioned directly next to the mosque, we think – you know, with the purpose of either tempting us to cause some collateral damage or preserve the helicopter from strike. Well, in that case, neither worked. The helicopter was destroyed, and the mosque was not damaged."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

SEE THIS SPACE?
YOUR ARTICLE COULD GO HERE.
COME DOWN TO THE COLLEGIAN WORLD HEADQUARTERS, LOCATED IN THE SPACIOUS CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT, AND TALK TO CATHERINE OR KEN.

■ GLBT

continued from page 1

stereotypes of the femme."

According to Walker, the ideas she has emphasized in her book are new in the area of queer studies.

"I hope that [awareness of] the minimal discussion of race [so far in queer studies] will be the start of a new discussion of lesbian subjects," Walker said. "It's time for people to start reading books that consider race."

Mitch Boucher, coordinator of the lecture series, said that talks like Walker's are offered to allow students to focus their studies and gain access to queer studies at UMass, which does not offer any degree or certificate programs in the field. He said that he hopes the program will lead to the institution of a GLBT studies program at UMass.

"It isn't very widespread," Boucher said. "But it would be nice to have one, especially in the Five-College area."

■ Cape Verdian

continued from page 1

tions. Most of the funding for this fight came from Soviet Bloc and non-NATO countries that were willing to provide the rebels with arms and supplies, Barros said. With these he set up camp in the French part of Guinea where he built facilities to recruit, train and school fighters for the cause, Barros explained.

He was awarded honorary doctorates from both Lincoln University and the University of Moscow and awarded a medal by the World Peace Council for all his achievements. Many structures named in his honor dot the globe after his death, including Cape Verde's international airport.

Barros also showed a short documentary film on the rise of nationalism that was directed by Basil Davidson, a journalist and friend to Cabral. The film included original footage from actual hand-to-hand combat that was going on in the early seventies and interviews held with Cabral himself.

The Portuguese were defeated and expelled in 1973 but Cabral never saw the fruits of his labor because he was assassinated, in front of his wife, on Jan. 20 of that year. Barros described how there were, and still are, many unanswered questions about who his assassins were.

Cabral's influence has influenced multitudes of people and inspired other oppressed groups to fight for their freedom, Barros explained. At the end of his lecture, Barros commented, "He [Cabral] is the reason I can now say I am Cape Verdean and not Black Portuguese."

After the presentation, the forum was open for discussion in which people were able to pose questions and discuss the lasting impact of the revolution and the effects it now has on current events in that part of the world.

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON HOLYOKE
584 4112 • 535 1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

www.dailycollegian.com

Great Student Airfares
available with your ISIC or IYTC
We will Meet or Beat Any Student Airfare
Check Out These Deals
London $195.00
Paris $259.00
Brussels $265.00
Milan $265.00
America's Leader in Student Travel
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413 256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL www.councilitravel.com

The Cannabis Reform Coalition lasciviously Presents
ROCKY HORROR
PICTURE SHOW
With a Live Cast
The Tesseracte Players of Boston
Halloween
8 PM and 10 PM
Campus Center Auditorium UMass
Cost: $5 CRC Members Free!
Membership available at the door
Rules of Conduct
DO bring dry props
DO yell obscenities
DO wear kinky costumes
DO sacrifice virgins
DO NOT smoke
DO NOT bring glass bottles
DO NOT bring water guns or weapons
DO NOT dream it, be it!

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

McCain, great leader

But a poor tactician

John McCain was one hell of a presidential candidate. A maverick outsider in his own party who forced George W. Bush to be a better presidential candidate, his popular crusade to reform campaign-financing struck a chord with voters who have stayed loyal to the man ever since. His rugged individualism and storied war record – he was a six-year prisoner of war in North Vietnam – continued to make the Arizona Republican a born-political leader.

Which is why yesterday's comments about an expansion of the war in Afghanistan are so concerning. McCain demanded that America should unleash, "all of the might of the United States military power."

Saying that he believed that air power wouldn't be enough to beat back both the Taliban and Osama bin Laden's Al-Qaeda network, he called for significant American ground forces in Afghanistan.

If anybody should know better, it is McCain.

A veteran of the disastrous Vietnam campaign, McCain surely must know that American forces in unknown terrain may win significant battles against an adversary without ever winning the war. Sending American soldiers to die by the score will neither win us the war nor solve our collective problem.

Operation Enduring Freedom is as much a political war as an actual physical assault on Afghanistan. To simply say that the United States is bombing an enemy is both shortsighted and far-fetched. Our government has tried to rally nations neighboring Afghanistan against the fundamentalist Taliban with some level of success. It has declared that no terrorism will be acceptable, again with some level of success (see: the IRA's recent declaration to begin laying down weapons in Northern Ireland). It has pressured Gulf States into acknowledging that Afghanistan's existence as a dangerously right-wing state that sponsored terrorism was unacceptable.

Our war against Terrorism hasn't simply been a series of bombings within the borders of Afghanistan; it has been a coordinated effort to destroy the Taliban's version of Afghanistan, both from the inside and the outside of the Asian country.

Following John McCain's lead, the United States, already with perceived horrid track record of ground-troop behavior in foreign lands in the last fifty years, risks losing what support it has gained in bombing missions against Afghanistan. With the notable exception of the Gulf War, U.S. troops fair poorly in hazardous terrain. American ground participation gives our enemies within Afghan borders somebody to look at: it's far easier to fight a safe war from the sky than actually attack on the ground, especially against an enemy without a fear of death. And finally McCain seems indiscriminate in risking American lives to accomplish what may, or may not, be an attainable goal of total victory against Afghanistan.

McCain's respect and leadership are powerful tools in times of a shaky international stability. Using them to further dangerous proposals that will likely cause more harm than good is John McCain's patriotism at its worst. He is a great Senator, a great politician, and above all, a great man, but McCain's desire to send our soldiers overseas to fight an unknown opponent is a mistake we'd think he would have already learned.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

Ed/Op submissions can be sent to collegian editorial@yahoo.com. While all submissions cannot be printed, we do appreciate and encourage your continued thoughts and opinions.

Lights, Camera, Doom

Don't turn the media into the enemy

BRIAN LOHURES

I guess by even discussing the media as a journalism major, I already have some biases. Sure, I have a tendency to defend the media to the bitter end about most things. Is it because I feel like I have an obligation to? Probably. Mostly, though, I think my stance is based more heavily on the fact that I am going to become part of this group, "the media."

I guess I feel the need to defend the media because by joining its ranks on any level I will become part of a group of people that gets massively maligned on a daily basis because they are doing their job. Simply because you do not want to hear anymore about a certain topic does not mean the rest of the world doesn't want to. Because you are afraid (like the rest of us) about what is going on and the media is reporting on stories that do not comfort you, do not blame them. You do not have to watch the TV, no one is making you pick up this paper, even more specifically, nobody is making you read the stories inside it.

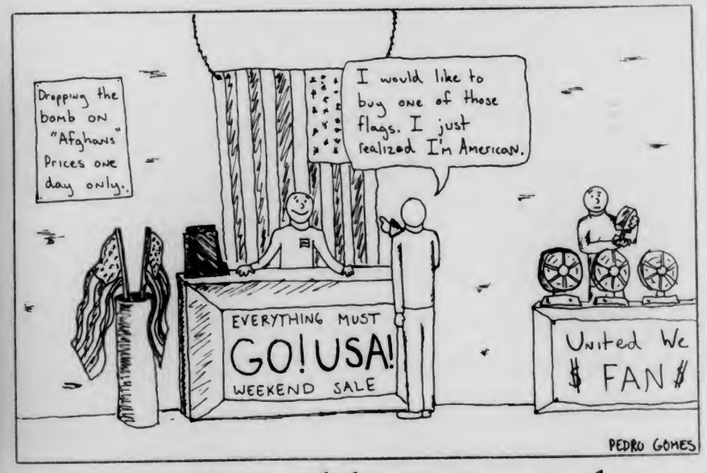
People often say, "I'm sick of hearing about this," or " Those damn reporters (insert your own ending)." Why? Well, I think psychologists call it transference. You blame the media for causing your fear. Sorry bunky, that's what the news is these days. You don't want to hear it? Don't read the paper, watch the news, listen to the radio or go on the Internet.

Ignorance is bliss and too many people find it too very easy to blame "the media" for making them afraid.

Let's say that the news decided to lay off these stories. They start ignoring anthrax deaths and infections around the country. Does this mean they aren't happening? No. Does this mean that when they do start reporting them people will run through the streets demanding every man, woman, child and family dog be given Cipro, probably. I will readily admit and admonish the media for jumping on certain cases. OJ, Gary Condit, Richard Jewell, are all examples of a media circus where the facts were fuzzy at best and the news spewed nothing but conjecture, speculation and out and out falsehoods. This is not the case now.

The case is that they are bringing us facts, necessary facts to keep us as a public informed. What would happen if we relied on the government solely for information? We would get none, and what we would get would be very sketchy at best. You may not ever believe this, but the fact is that the media is working at some level with your best interest in mind. I do not want to be kept in the dark about what is going on inside this country and outside it, and I really can't believe that the majority of people do want to be shut off from all information.

"The news media is not perfect. It is, however, our only and most direct link to the goings on in the world on a day to day basis."



Now obviously I don't think that everything is perfect and peachy with the news coverage of the events of the last month and a half. Talking heads on television continue to aggravate me. "Experts" in every field from biological weapons to Middle Eastern relations are constantly on the screen. If the Middle Eastern folks were so "expert" why the hell isn't that situation taken care of yet? Also the ex-generals and officers that they parade out to explain what the forces are doing inside Afghanistan are often times guessing just as much as you and I about what is going on. "Well I assume they are striking strategic defense targets in Kabul." Well thank you General Patton. I assumed they were shooting at orphanages and markets.

The point I am trying to make is that when the news does just that, deliver the news, the facts, the straight dope, they do a damn good job. When they try to delve into topics and themes that they have to do a lot of speculating about, the public notices and begins to get aggravated. The reporting from Afghanistan so far has been outstanding. The reporting on the Anthrax outbreaks has been very well done. It has been poignant, precise, and has not been sensationalized. If there is one body that should be looked at with a certain degree of speculation it has to be the White House. Their response to the Anthrax outbreaks has been uncoordinated, at times contradictory and confusing. A week ago the government told us that the grade of Anthrax being used is low and unrefined. On Friday they released a statement telling the people that this was the highest grade of Anthrax known to exist on planet Earth and that it has been bred by a government. That government? They narrowed it down to Russia and Iraq.

Believe me when I say that I am not being unpatriotic, or swiping at our government. I am as concerned about this as everyone else in the world and I readily admit that I am a bit afraid by what has been going on, and with good reason I believe.

The news media is not perfect. It is, however, our only and most direct link to the goings on in the world on a day-to-day basis. As I said before "Ignorance is Bliss." If you do not want to know anything, that's your business. I know that I do, and many others I know also want to know what is going on. But if we deliver bad news, don't blame us please. We're just doing our jobs.

Brian Lohures is a Collegian columnist

As cold as my soul

KEN CAMPBELL

You can smell it in the air. You can walk around campus and see it happening. From the gunmetal gray skies to the bitter winds that are blowing, all the evidence points to one thing: winter is coming.

It's about damn time.

I can't wait till the snow starts to fly, which, if you believe the Old Farmer's Almanac, will happen in late November. I can't wait till the world is wrapped in a big cold white blanket, the wind tries to rip the skin off your face and the sun hides for 18 hours a day. I love the winter, because it is the one time of year that the rest of New England is as cold as my soul.

The winter is dark and depressing, and that suits me just fine.

Winter, which is still officially 53 days away, has so many ancillary benefits. For one thing, with staircases and many sidewalks covered with snow, the only acceptable mode of transportation is walking, cutting down on the number of bikers, skateboarders and Rollerbladers that one has to dodge on a daily basis.

With everything encased in ice, the skateboarders are seriously taking their life in their hands, cutting down on the pathetic displays one sees outside the Fine Arts Center and the Student Union. Seriously, has anyone seen one actually pull off one of those 180 degree olly olly oxen free with proof of purchase flip things those kids are always trying to do? I'm rooting for the day that one catches a patch of black ice and gets what they deserve.

With temperatures dropping like the stock market and wind chill factors in negative numbers, all the damn dirty hippies [see 4/19/01 column] can't walk around barefoot, thus curtailing the spread of their hippie germs. Also, with everyone's sinuses congested from the millions of colds running around, no one will be able to smell their dirty hippie stench. See, everyone wins with winter.

Speaking of hippies, we should exile them north, like the Reds did in Siberia. All of them dirty hippies should be rounded up in certain areas. We can build settlements, or "camps" if you will, in hostile areas that no normal person would want to live in. In a sense, we will "concentrate" the damn dirty hippies in these "camps."

I'm just kidding folks. Obviously, I'm not seriously advocating the registration of damn dirty hippies, nor am I saying that the government should take an active role in removing this dangerous and subversive element from our population. Concentration camps full of hippies are not a good idea. Think of the stench.

And I'm not a fan of winter because of winter sports. The only good sport is hockey anyway, and we can play that all year round. Skiing and snowboarding hold no appeal for me. Strapping a plank or planks to my boots and flinging myself down a mountain entices me as much as a two day round table discussion featuring Andy Rooney on the subject of feminine hygiene products in the 17th century.

Besides, all the best winter sports activities aren't really considered sports.

I like watching cars slalom across the yellow line as they dodge patches of ice. I like watching the neighborhood kids knock themselves unconscious with rock centered snowballs. My idea of a great winter spectator event? Head on down to the exit of the orthopedic wing at Cooley-Dickinson and watch the cane and crutch battalion forge their way across icy sidewalks, slushy parking lots, and random barrages of hail.

And why isn't D.C. tray sledding considered a sport? It's at least as cool as the luge and much more dangerous than bobsledding. It should be called bob-luge. It's great fun, and especially interesting to watch the results at the bottom of the hill- the broken, battered bodies, moaning their way toward the shiny blue remnants of their once gallant sleds.

Bob-luge should definitely be an Olympic sport. Which reminds me, the Olympics are this winter. Why do they even have Winter Olympics? Go back in time, and show some Greek guy a tape of curling and tell him that it's an Olympic sport and you'll be on the first boat to Sparta, my friend.

The winter is long, dark, and depressing, kind of like a Kafka novel, only you don't quite feel so confused at the end of a blizzard. Although you still have dreams of waking up as a cockroach. Oh, right. I like I'm the only one.

Yep, I can't wait for winter. The long, dark nights, the piercing cold, the bone chilling winds, all of it to me means a paradise. A winter wonderland, if you will. Snowmen standing watch throughout the neighborhood, some of them armed with the latest in home security hardware. Anyone who thinks that Frosty's just a cute little winter sculpture would be dead wrong, emphasis on dead. My snowman's loaded out with twin Stingers and a Hellfire rocket pod. Anything to keep those damn kids off my lawn. I'll shovel my own driveway, you pint-sized racketeers.

Alright, its time for my medication.

Ken Campbell is a Collegian Columnist.

On the line

hits bottom

Well, Hell froze over. K-Pax, which features Kevin Spacey in a "is he or isn't he an alien?" conundrum film, made $17.5 million at the box-office, propelling it to the top of the cinematic heap this week. Also starring the critically under-appreciated Jeff Bridges, K-Pax was directed by Brit Iain Softley, who had previously directed Wings of the Dove which has also been known as the "last good movie Iain Softley directed."

Spacey, who starred in Usual Suspects, American Beauty, L.A. Confidential and not much else, plays an individual who claims to be from another planet. Bridges stars as a psychologist attempting to establish the reliability of Spacey's story. It cost $48 million to make, thus further evidencing that Vivendi Universal has plenty of money to throw around.

Taking second place, and the honors for most recent horror film released which probably won't make a dent on the American popular conscious, Thirteen Ghosts took in $15.7 million. Starring Matthew Lillard and Tony Shalhoub (Anthonio Scarpacci from TV's Wings), it is loosely based on a 1960 film of the same name. Which means Hollywood has twice spent money to produce a film about a mechanical house filled with ghosts. Twice.

At the movies

with Sam Wilkinson

Other new releases did, shall it be said, worse than expected this week. Snoop Dogg's starring vehicle Bones finished in ninth place with $3 million, while N'Sync's On the Line horrified audiences to the tune of an eleventh place finish and $2.3. Just last week, this column predicted terrible showings for both films, something Hollywood apparently ignored. Well read it again: movies starring pop-stars are doomed to failure, regardless of their diva star (Mariah Carrey's Glitter), pseudo-hardcore-hip-hop star (Dogg's Bones), or clinging to their last few seconds of fame stars (N'Sync's Line).

Rounding out the top five? Last week's garbage films. From Hell ($6.075 million), Riding in Cars with Boys ($6 million), and Training Day ($3.1 million) finished three, four and five. With the exception of Training Day, which has been extremely profitable despite starring the inept Ethan Hawke, Riding and From Hell will likely end up breaking even if they are lucky. And if the top-five depressed, the bottom half of the top-ten encouraged suicide.

Bandits, a movie that cost $80 million to make, came in sixth with $5 million. Next time, why not just fly the money to northern Alaska, where it can be burned for precious heat in times of desperation?

Serendipity plunged another stake in John Cusack's sagging career, bringing in $3.9 million. Funny how Billy Bob Thornton, who starred in Bandits, and Cusack both starred in a straight-to-video film called Pushing Tin, and have subsequently not had a major film between them.

The Last Castle with Robert Redford came in eighth with a weeful $3.7 million. Also starring James Gandolfini and Delroy Lindo, Castle reminds viewers that aging actors desperate for continued success (read: bills to pay) will make just about anything.

-Bones ripped off Candyman en extremis. The audience felt ripped off after seeing it. Coincidence?

-Corky Romano continued to make money! Is there no justice?

Art house fare was light this week, with only Kevin Kline's modern angst-film Life as a House making a run at respectability, with $294,000 from 29 theaters. Also opening were Martin Scorcese's My Voyage to Italy, and Jake Gyllenhaal's Donnie Darko debuting, neither so well.

Next week, Hollywood visits Its local church, praying to God almighty that audiences listen up when John Travolta comes calling in Domestic Disturbance. Jet Li debuts The One that had been previously released as The Matrix. In other words, a flagging Hollywood has only prayer left: that Pixar can again be creative, funny and appealing with Monsters Inc.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian staff member.

The Kronos Quartet: a schizophrenic performance

COURTESY CAROLINE GREYSHOCK

The members of the Kronos Quartet, left to right: Jennifer Culp, Hank Dutt, John Sherba, and David Harrington.

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

There can be no accurate review of last Thursday's Kronos Quartet show without a brief look at the classical music tradition that produced the foursome. Hence, the following four paragraphs.

Isolated in American culture by a disinterested general public and, at times, a caustic fan base, classical music is seen more often as the soundtrack off the wealthy, the pretentious and the distant, rather than a popular form of expression. Surrounded by an atmosphere of superiority and arrogance that is off-putting to a general audience with more time for short pop songs and easy to digest jazz than long-form composition, art music has suffered from an ongoing image crisis.

So while the surrounding atmosphere has lost its relative influence in recent years – the fusion of everything from hip-hop and country to rock-n-roll and jazz has pre-empted most interest it what form Mozart's greatest hits, it seemed unlikely that the music would diversity enough to earn it new fans.

Thus re-enters Kronos Quartet. A San Francisco foursome, Kronos has done everything within its power to turn the notion of Evidence? Author and historian of American culture Lawrence W. Levine has surmised that the creation of the Boston Pops had more to do with segregating those who were capable of understanding classical music and those who couldn't. He suggested in a 1986 lecture at Harvard that the Pops was created as alternative source of entertainment for commoners seeking art music; the real aficionados could still go the Boston Symphony Orchestra, unencumbered by fans that couldn't possibly treat the music with the reverence it deserved.

Some of that culture still lives on, although at this point in American culture, the Pops is far better known than the Symphony. Regardless of the image surrounding the music, there is still the music itself. Centuries old in most cases, Beethoven and Bach and Tchaikovsky begin to sound the same after years of performance. The true purist would argue otherwise, but the true purists were the ones isolating the music in the first place. There was a stagnation of sorts in classical music, and as long as everybody continued to perform Mozart's greatest hits, it seemed unlikely that the music would diversity enough to earn it new fans.

Thus re-enters Kronos Quartet. A San Francisco foursome, Kronos has done everything within its power to turn the notion of what art music is on its collective head. Toting a sound engineer to its performances, performing in clothing other than the traditional black dress of musicians and backlit by an actual light show, Kronos' continued attempts to fuse traditional stringed play with modern notions of performance have been nothing short of revolutionary. However, even the new in a world of the old must be critiqued and to write that Kronos performed perfectly would be inappropriate.

It was clear to anybody at the performance space that when Kronos took the stage, it wouldn't be papa's classical music. David Harrington, the voice throughout the show and primary violin of the group, wore a leather coat and black jeans. Hank Dutt's reddened viola matched his red leather pants. It seems strange to even give passing mention to performers clothing, but Kronos wants viewers to know that they are different, even before the musical performance begins. Thus it goes along that the show's lighting became important. Lit in such a way as to put the performers on a relative pedestal surrounded by an aura of reds and greens and blues and, at the performance's most intense moments, simple blacks and whites, everything about Kronos was different from the outset.

Turn to KRONOS, page 6

Spacey give K-Pax a moving and memorable experience

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

Jeff Bridges and KevinSpacey bond in K-Pax.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

K-PAX
Starring Kevin Spacey & Jeff Bridges
Directed by Iain Softley
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

It was exactly 20 years ago that a film about a cute little alien trying to get home made box office history. E.T. the Extraterrestrial was a poignant and exciting movie that won over critics and audiences, and gave space invaders a very human quality. The new film K-PAX is also about a visitor from outer space who is stuck on Earth. Academy Award-winner Kevin Spacey plays Prot (pronounced with a long "o" sound), a new patient at a The Psychiatric Institute of Manhattan.

He claims that he is from a planet called K-PAX, located 1,800 light years away, "somewhere in the Lyra constellation." Much like fellow interstellar traveler E.T., Prot is planning to return home, specifically at 5:51 a.m. on July 27. His doctor, Mark Powell (Jeff Bridges) sets out to uncover who the person underneath actually is, and what that departure date and time could signify. As time goes on, though, Powell begins to question whether or not Prot could be telling the truth. The search for Prot's origin is a captivating journey, thanks to a powerful and intriguing script, skillful cinematography and music, plus sturdy acting. K-PAX is an insightful look into the human condition that provokes the audience to wonder whether or not we are alone in the universe.

Based upon the novel by Gene Brewer, who is a clinical psychologist himself, Charles Leavitt's (The Mighty) script honors the book, staying almost completely true to It, deleting two extraneous characters and eliminating an unnecessary subplot. Prot and Dr. Powell are thoroughly developed, but what makes K-PAX so enthralling is that everything we are led to believe is snatched away from us at the end, leaving it open to interpretation.

What Dr. Powell learns about Prot's history makes us think the subject is an Earthling and merely delusional. On the other hand, Prot's ability to see ultraviolet light (something humans are incapable of doing) and his resistance to the heavy drug Thorazine causes us to ponder whether Prot is indeed from another world (or if he's just inhabiting a person's body). Leavitt presents us with the task to draw our own conclusions, never force-feeding us with a clear-cut answer.

The other patients in the ward are given the typical colorful personalities of mental patients, as Prot goes about "curing" them (which is one of a few scenes drawing religious references to Jesus Christ). Leavitt also takes acceptable poetic license, adding some touching moments and lines that give you goose bumps. Shortly before the climax, Prot tells Dr. Powell, "When I'm gone from K-PAX no one notices, there'd be no reason to. Yet I sense that when I leave Earth, I will be missed." Not only is this the truth, but Spacey's matter-of-fact delivery of this line and others like it make the hairs on the back of your neck stand up, while pulling your heart strings too. Spacey's down-to-earth performance (pun intended) is vaguely reminiscent of the gusto he brought to his first Oscar win for The Usual Suspects.

Here, too, he is a character with several dynamic layers, demonstrating his remarkable talent that movies like last year's Pay It Forward seemed to only gloss over briefly. In one highly moving scene, Prot is put under hypnosis, where a whole other side of him is put on display. Spacey shows his superb aptitude to quickly switch gears and demonstrate a completely different range of emotion than Prot is known to have, and then double-back to his prior self in a short amount of time. It's hard to take your eyes of him, even in the more subtle moments, simply because, as Dr. Powell confesses, "he is the most convincing delusional" seen on film since One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest.

Bringing equal aplomb to his role is Jeff Bridges, who is already familiar with this genre from when he played an alien in Starman. As Powell's home life starts to disintegrate due to his tendency to overwork, the tables are turned as Prot helps him, forming a relationship that is nothing less than friendship. In one pivotal scene, Prot celebrates the Fourth of July at Powell's home, while in another they have a drink together followed by Prot saying, "I will miss you, Dr. Powell." Spacey and Bridges succeed at developing a compelling, unspoken bond between their characters that is full of life.

John Mathieson's (Hannibal, Gladiator) cinematography stands out, especially in moments like the profile shot of Spacey's face when you see his dancing eyes behind the sunglasses he wears for the duration of the film. Other moments, such as Dr. Powell's mysterious trip to a small town in

New Mexico, is filled with vivid scenery and intense images of an important past incident that happened there. The musical orchestrations by Ed Shearmur (Miss Congeniality) maintain the otherworldly, sci-fi stereotype, while at the same having a modern, driving edge to it, too, that gives the movie part of its intriguing feel. Director Iain Softley, who also helmed the critically praised The Wings of the Dove and the cult-classic Hackers, has assembled an ensemble of actors and crew persona that make K-PAX a vivid and absorbing tale.

K-PAX is that rare kind of movie that you don't see coming, it just drops out of the sky like its main character. Nonetheless, you are delighted when it arrives. It is a movie that makes you laugh from gags like Prot referring to the film Alien, informing Dr. Powell, "I won't jump out of your chest." It also emotionally stirs you with its gentle tenderness, and perhaps most especially, causes you to think. K-PAX is a science fiction film with a human heart.

Iguana obscured by unfocused direction

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

The Night of the Iguana serves up some Tennessee Williams specialties – aging sex symbols, undeniably attractive men, intriguing women and their relationships. Add to this some metaphysics, and the feverish atmosphere of his familiar hot climes, and the drama proceeds inevitably from there. Produced by the theatre department of Mount Holyoke College, it was performed this past weekend at the school's intimate Rooke Theatre.

Iguana takes place in a basically ambiguous location, somewhere along the west coast of Mexico. The setting is the Costa Verde, a hilltop hotel in its off season, surrounded by a lush rainforest background. It is populated only by its recently widowed owner, Maxine, and the two Mexican youths she has taken in as employees and a sort of family. She is soon joined by her friend and occasional lover the Reverend Shannon.

Shannon is the tour guide for a busload of choirgirls, and their "butch" director on a trip around the sights of Mexico. Both sick, and in some serious trouble with his higher-ups for sleeping with one of the girls, Shannon orders the bus stop at the Costa Verde. This is familiar territory for him; somewhere he can go to get some rest, or alternately, a peaceful place to have his recurring nervous breakdowns.

Soon after Shannon's arrival, a woman named Hannah and her grandfather appear on the scene. They make their living as they travel around the world, by selling Hannah's artwork and collecting money for her grandfather's poetry recitations. They seem to make barely enough to stay alive and pay for their room and board with their talents. Maxine won't tolerate this, as an extremely pragmatic woman who is perpetually concerned with her financial security. But, she bends to Shannon's will when he asks that they be allowed to stay.

The Reverend is an aging womanizer, whose age doesn't seem likely to stop him, or to stop women from being attracted to him. A Lolita-like choirgirl, at the tender age of 16, has fallen hard for him. Maxine had fallen for him years ago, and Hannah is soon to follow suit. Maxine, a woman interested in earthly things, loves him for his sex appeal, and for a possible future husband. But Hannah is a saintly and virginal woman. Shannon has too much respect for her to even make his unfailing move. Over the course of the day, Hannah and Shannon become close. They are both a kind of hustler, they discover. She, selling her artwork to survive and he, selling his man-of-the-cloth image to those interested in religious tours. Maxine, who is supposed to be a strong and fierce woman, is determined to keep Shannon around. It is only the enchanting Hannah who can throw a wrench into the hostess' machinations.

Iguana was published in 1961, a good number of years separating this and Williams' most famous plays and major successes, including The Glass Menagerie (1945), A Streetcar Named Desire (1947), and Cat on a Hot Tin Roof (1955). It is a mature work, and director Joyce Devlin would have done well to let the maturity and reflective quality of the piece stand alone. Instead, this production continually insults its audience's intelligence.

The directorial choices Devlin made were completely without subtlety. For most of the important scenes, stand-ins for Maxine, Hannah and Shannon did a sort of pantomime/dance between the back of the set and in front of the jungle backdrop. For instance, the "real" Shannon and Hannah would have a conversation, in which they were alternately being drawn to each other, physically and emotionally. Meanwhile, the pantomime/dancer versions of each character, would be in the obscured and elevated set piece, pulling a piece of rope back and forth between them, showing with exaggerated movements that the foreground conversation was drawing them together. The dancers continued in this way, sometimes mimicking the actors' movements, sometimes representing their thoughts or feelings, throughout the whole of the play.

Devlin's direction, while being utterly condescending to the audience, also undercut the actors' ability to do their work. For some reason, Devlin had some of the actors break the fourth wall in their respective entrances, making a movement that let us know who they were and what they were about (the Lolita choirgirl did a little seductive dance) instead of letting us glean it from Williams' clear and powerful script.

Shawn Dempewolff-Barrett as Shannon had some shining moments. Though both his anger and nervous breakdown came precipitously and without the necessary foreshadowing, his honesty with Hannah was touching. His best moments came when he, almost in a trance, described his relationship with God. His God is a Romantic one, full of both kindness and fury, pervading every part of nature and man, and especially present in the seedy underbelly of the cities that he tours, and perfectly embodied in the thunder storm. But he never really seems tortured by what he calls his "spook," which might be his past, his mental instability, his alcoholism, or a combination of all three.

Hannah Knapp as Hannah was appropriately saintly, with just a hint of mischief and seduction about her. Knapp held many of the scenes together with her cool confidence. However, her decision to keep Hannah as such a cold woman made it difficult to see Shannon's attraction to her in any other light except that she was the opposite of Maxine.

Maxine is a typical Williams' aging sex symbol. Like Maggie of Cat, she is desperate to hold on to her sexual prowess, with which she has won her man before. Maxine is a powerful woman, which Malone got across to us by using her formidable vocal strength and not her acting ability. Perhaps it takes a more mature actress for an inherent understanding of the position of the aging woman.

The set design was just about as obvious as the directing choices. Maxine isn't in dire financial straights, and her hotel is out of season, and not run down. Set designer Malea L. Jochim, though making a visually beautiful set, should have made it less dilapidated. The costumes too were mostly first-rate, but often too obvious. Charlotte (the Lolita) was garbed in a bikini top and almost invisible denim cut-offs. If she were really in a religious choir, she clearly would not be wearing this. Her acting should have accounted for Shannon's attraction to her, and not her skimpy clothes.

Devlin's neat tie-up at the end, allowing the literally personified iguana to shed its costume and dance, after it is set free, was unnecessary, verging on absurd. Williams' plays are already packed symbolism. All in all, the acting was competent. It's unfortunate that Devlin didn't think so. Had she let the play and the actors go unhindered by the condescending tone, Iguana would have been much more successful.

■ Kronos

continued from page 5

And then the music started.

Subliminal isn't necessarily the word, but it is certainly close.

The first four performed pieces, from a diversity of composers and featuring a diversity of styles, let Kronos flex every musical muscle it has. Aleksandra Vrebalov's "Pannonia Boundless" was brilliant. It featured cellist Jennifer Culp's manic performance – it would be a running theme through the performance that she would drive Kronos – and a frantic approach by the rest of the group. The restrained subtlety of violinist John Sherba (at times the most non-member of the group) and violist Dutt, brought out the strong play of both Harrington and Culp. Silvestre Revueltas' "Sensemaya" again featured Culp. The newest member of Kronos, it is almost as if she's being given the keys to the car again and again so that she can prove she can drive. Again she performed with a twitching grace. Hildegard von Bingen's "O Virtus Sapientiæ," the most traditionally European performance of the evening, was simultaneously lonely and lush. Built on Harrington's forlorn sound, and featuring progressively dimming lights than only increased the relative lonesome sound of the music, Kronos played with the audience visually, in a way encouraging it to understand the song better with the metaphorical through the loss of light.

Then, Clint Mansell's "Requiem for a Dream." With fed in technistrick, Kronos played the main suite from Darren Aronofsky's 2000 film about the depths of drug abuse. Projected onto the Concert Hall's high concrete walls with low bright lights, Kronos' bows danced on the instruments, spiraling deeper and deeper into the piece's obvious depths. Knowledge about the movie helps – a family descends into a drug-induced madness – but it was obvious in listening, and in the image of the performance itself, that Kronos was exploring the emotional plumbs of its subject matter. The performance was a ten minute tour-de-force, which is why the show's subsequent drop-off was so shocking.

After four pieces of sheer brilliance, Kronos came undone. After driving the audience to a certain point, Kronos simply got out of the car and sprinted in another direction. They showed themselves down with Charles Mingus' "Myself When I Am Real." The arrangement was slow and meandering, and it was clearly a poorly placed attempt at slowing the show down. If Kronos is serious about blending popular performance with classical music, it has to understand that the best shows shift gears slowly, rather than dropping from fifth to first without the slightest hint that the change is coming.

Unfortunately, when Kronos comes undone, it really comes undone. Following "Myself" was "Potassium." Arranged for the group by Michael Gordon, it was nothing but a repetitive cacophony that never came together musically. Sure, it was new to the traditions of art music, but new doesn't always mean better, especially in this case. There was a brief intermission following "Potassium," thank god, and then "Oasis" (by Franghiz Ali-Zadeh) and "Pari Intervallow" (by Arvo Part). Both were interesting pieces, a return to some of the more traditional sounds of art music that "Potassium" had so thumbed its nose at. However, the performances were still amiss. "Oasis" never properly gelled and "Pari Intervallow" was so short that it never really had the time to resonate with the crowd.

Just as quickly as Kronos had come undone, it came back together. Finishing with Steve Reich's "Triple Quartet," a fantastic piece that piped in a second quartet's playing on top of the group's stylings, Kronos seemingly picked up right where it had left off after "Requiem." Kronos encored with Raoul Berman's "Tonight is the Night." Again, the performance was excellent.

There is a certain schizophrenia to the Kronos Quartet. The group's desire to shake the basis of classical music is obvious. Its musicianship is superior and its willingness to try new things in the face of a conservative culture should be lauded. Further, when it all comes together, the foursome is without equal in the classical world.

But that experimentation can ultimately be its downfall. "Potassium" was a worthy effort, but Kronos has to know when to say no. Newness in classical music is necessary, but it isn't always good.

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, it's still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

Hey! Remember the 80s? We do too…

COURTESY ANGLETIME.COM

Corey Feldman, clearly the better of the Coreys, in his innocent younger days.

By David Conwell
Collegian Correspondent

"I spend my money on women and wine, but I couldn't tell you where I spent last night...'Cause I don't need nothin' but a good time, how could I resist." Brett Michaels - Poison.

People have coined certain phrases or words that can best describe specific American decades. In the Thirties, it was the "depression" or "hard times." In the Sixties it was "peace" and "love." However, it's the words and phrases of the Eighties that have always just grabbed me – "Glam," "Rock," "Wild." In my own words... FUN.

Granted, it's not as if it were nothing but good times in the Eighties. The decade had its disasters. I suppose you could say, "Every Rose Has Its Thorn." However, as the years have passed by further and further away from the Eighties, many consider themselves hicks to have been a part of it, whether they were just children, teens or young adults. So who's where does credit lie for these ridiculously great memories? Pop Culture. God only knows where we would be without it. We'd probably stuck in some time warp, dressing and acting like, well, half of Central Not like that's bad or anything, because Hippies were an important part of American culture. But now they've become kind of like Metallica's last couple of albums – they used to be cool, they had a purpose, but now you just wish that they'd go away.

Segueing to music, the Eighties began a movement that defines everything we listen to now, and that revolution had it all. Machines and synthesizers were first used regularly; bands got louder and harder, and rap and R&B really took off. And then there was this new concept of "music videos."

It's not like there weren't ever videos before this, but not a lot of television time was devoted to the burgeoning art form. With the debut of MTV in 1981, the music world was changed forever. The channel created a whole new way for artists to get their music heard. A classic, early video was "Mickey," airing in 1981, using just a white backdrop and a bunch of cheerleaders (you can't really go wrong with that).

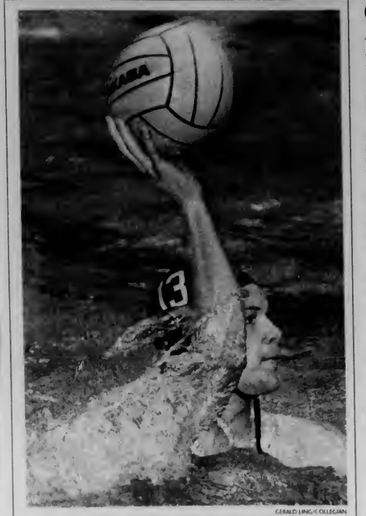
As time progressed, videos greatly improved. Bands and artists from Prince to David Bowie started using this visual aid to their advantage. The Beastie Boys' "You Gotta Fight" exemplifies Eighties music rebellion perfectly. Some artists, like Michael Jackson, even made short movies for their songs. "Thriller" was one of the all-time best videos, hands down.

In the Eighties, instead of just hearing about how wild a band was, you could actually see them without having to shell out money for a concert. These wild bands made trying to watch MTV as a kid all the more exciting. How many of you remember your parents saying, "NO MTV!!!" which forced you to keep the remote in your sweaty little palm while waiting for the new Guns N' Roses video, just in case you needed to change the channel before mom or dad walked in the room.

Rap really took off with NWA's Straight Outta Compton as did metal with Metallica's Kill'em All. And who didn't like Guns N' Roses' Appetite for Destruction? That album had some great songs like "Paradise City," "Rocket Queen," and "Sweet Child O' Mine" to name a few. "Something to Believe In" by Poison and "Livin' On a Prayer" by Bon Jovi were huge hits. Plus, bands like Motley Crue, Van Halen, and AC/DC had been tearing it up for years (and still do. Crue was awesome summer of 2000).

Some of you may chuckle at those names now, being the tough guys you that you are, but keep in mind, these skinny, tight jeaned, longhaired punks were viewed as idols, especially by the ladies. Plus, they drove cool cars, hung out at the most exciting places, and flat out got paid to make music and wreak havoc...what career choice could be more fun?

The Nineties really changed people's views on music and fashion styles, making these stars look quite silly. Who wanted Slaughter and Warrant when you now had Nirvana and Soundgarden? Those grunge stars seemed much more realistic. So, this image of the Eighties rock star has faded to a ludicrous persona today. It can be said bands of the Eighties didn't send any "important messages" to their listeners, (except, maybe U2 or Bruce Springsteen and that may be true. But hell, it could put you in a damn good mood with its raw emotion and basic message, that of FUN and GOOD TIMES.



But that is just the music. What made so many stars of the Eighties so seemingly laughable now was their fashion styles. Most agree we wouldn't want a return to it, but it spoke for the time, a time when everything was done in excess. These "hair bands," as they known now, were loud, glamorous, bold, and rebellious. Although I still can't figure out why girls liked make-up on guys, or why guys liked those crazy, poofed-out hair styles on the girls, one thing is for sure – growing up, who didn't want a pair of pre-ripped jeans, pink slouch socks and/or leg-warmers or one silver glove? (Maybe not the glove...) Styles of the Nineties and early 21 century for the most part have improved, but even they've had their goofy moments. You're naïve if you believe that one pant leg pulled up or incredibly huge jeans won't be made fun of in the future.

Movies and television played a huge role in defining Eighties culture. The monologue at the beginning of The Breakfast Club basically determined life in high school. Today, Hollywood can still put out a great movie, but nam seem so focused on special effects and whether or not they can get Freddy Prinze Jr. or Leonardo DiCaprio to star in their movies. And don't forget who gave Leo his first break, "Growing Pains," a classic example of a good Eighties sitcom – a realm that included "Family Ties," "The Cosby Show" and "Silver Spoons" to name a few. What is there now? I don't consider "Sister Sister" or even "Dawson's Creek" to be quality programming.

Actors like Johnny Depp (Nightmare on Elm Street), John Cusack (A Sure Thing and Better Off Dead), Elizabeth Shue (Karate Kid) and Michael J. Fox (Back to the Future) all got their careers started back then. And what child of the Eighties could forget Corey Feldman (Stand By Me and The Goonies) and Corey Haim (License to Drive and Lost Boys). Even the cartoons were cool: "G.I. Joe," "The Smurfs," "He-Man," and "The Snorks" (you're good if you remember them) are so much better than what there is now... "Pokemon"???

So, if you were between the ages of four and 25 through any part of the Eighties, than you've experienced what it was like to be Eighties. It was a decade that changed the world forever, for better or for worse. Some who lived it may want to put it behind them, feeling that time is now over. For many though, remembering the Eighties will be an outlet to a time and place where they can have fun, forget about the stress of everyday life, and can, even for a moment, live on the "Wild Side."

As Vince Neil of Motley Crue once said in Primal Scream, "If you want to live life on your own terms, you gotta be willing to crash and burn!" That's what the Eighties are all about.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Champions.

Senior Greg Trayer and the UMass men's water polo team yesterday captured the ECAC Championship. Read about it tomorrow.

■ football

continued from page 10

over thirty points a game coming in and with the Swiss army knife in the backfield, Brian Westbrook, coach Andy Talley's offense needs no assistance making opponents eat paydirt.

UMass' stat of nine total penalties for 64 yards does little to tell the story.

Of the nine penalties, five were drive killers while the Minutemen had the ball, two were on third down and two kept Nova touchdown drives alive.

On numerous occasions it looked like the Maroon and White defense had hindered a driving Nova squad, but instead the stop was negated by a mental miscue.

"It makes my job a lot easier," Nova QB Brett Gordon. "We just kept saying in the huddle that we need to make them pay for it."

Halfway through the second quarter, UMass stunted a VU drive on the two-yard line, but an offsides penalty turned a field goal into six.

Those mental gaffes didn't only aid in Nova's ball movement, but they also hampered a less than explosive Minuteman offense.

Not once did the Maroon and White score on a drive in which they committed a penalty. That's without even mentioning the sloppiness that lead to its lowest point production in three games.

Besides the surfeit of ill-advised penalties, UMass also made losing easy through four fumbles, an interception, a bad snap on a punt and three blown fourth down opportunities.

Freshman quarterback Matt Guice followed a superstar performance against the Dukes, with a green game against Villanova. He again had trouble holding onto the ball with three fumbles, as the Cats defense I'd off on a porous offensive line.

Coach Mark Whipple also decided that in order to win he had to take a trio of risks on fourth down. Those fourthand's gambles were successful only in shortening the field for the lethal VU offense.

"I don't know why [Whipple] took so many chances on fourth down," Nova coach Andy Talley said. "Maybe he thought that we were a little better than they were."

Mental mistakes have been a common theme in six of seven games this year. But in a game this significant to the confidence of a young team, one would think that intelligence wouldn't have been left off the travel roster.

■ soccer

continued from page 10

after the game.

"They had some size on us and we were still able to do the job defensively," he said. "The guys played well and they did what they had to do.

"I am very happy with the result of today."

Sunday was Senior Day at Totman Field and the UMass squad gave its veterans something to remember in their last game of their career in Amherst.

Thanks to physical play – which led to 38 fouls in the game – the Minutemen and the Colonials played a scoreless first half.

In the 57th minute after receiving a pass from freshman Martin Burwell, Myers blasted a shot to the left of the GW goalkeeper – making the score 1-0.

Nearly 15 minutes later, Deren extended the UMass lead to 2-0 and in the process extended his goal tally on the season to twelve. He is currently the conference leader in goals scored.

Off of a punt from senior goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn, Deren put in an easy goal after the GW keeper misread O'Quinn's kick.

"We talked scoring off the punts at halftime, knowing the wind was at our backs," Koch said.

GW scored in the 83rd minute but it was too little, too late as UMass tied the school-record for consecutive wins that was set in 1932 with nine.

"Now that we have accomplished our first goal we have to cleanup some of the other things that we are not doing well," Koch said.

Organizing committee presidents says the Games will continue as planned

By Rebecca Ryser
The Daily Universe (Brigham Young U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah – Mitt Romney, president and CEO of the Salt Lake Organizing Committee, said the Olympic Games will proceed as planned.

On KSL Radio 1160 AM call-in radio show "Let's Talk Olympics" Wednesday night, anchor Bill Riley raised caller concerns about the International Olympic Committee's cancellation of the Games due to America's war on terrorism.

Romney addressed these concerns when he said Gerhard Heiberg, Norwegian IOC member, called him Wednesday morning to refute any statements of the Olympics being canceled.

"I am 100 percent confident the Games will occur in Salt Lake City," Romney said Heiberg told him.

Two international Olympic athletic organizations have sent Romney letters addressing the importance of carrying out the Olympics, Romney said.

"Young people have given their lives, in some cases, to get to this moment," Romney said. "They want to have Olympic Games."

A caller, Emily, also asked about public safety during the Games.

Although terrorists have not indicated any international events as targets, every Olympic plan is based on the assumption that we are targets, Romney said.

He told listeners only 225,000 people will be coming to Utah for the Games, more than 90 percent from the United States.

"Everything is ready for us to have very successful Olympic experiences," he said.

The purpose of this monthly radio show is to give people a chance to call in and respond to the Games, said Kirsten Bailey Goulet, media relations representative for SLOC.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

Physicality was the major strategy from the start for the Minutemen, and the fearless style stressed during the entire week of practice paid major dividends.

"When you go into a smaller rink, you have to have the game plan just to play the body, play physical and not be afraid out there," Callahan said.

"Last week, Coach stressed a lot of banging, short high-intensity practices, and we're just gonna go at it the same way," senior forward Brad Nizwantowski said.

"It's going to be hard but it's going to be fun, and if it's fun you don't mind doing it, you like coming to the rink every day," added Nizwantowski, who has a knack for scoring huge goals on the road for the Minutemen.

In addition to notching the game-winning goal yesterday, his overtime tally late last year in Durham against UNH propelled UMass to a huge victory.

Defensive prowess and the freshman play aside, what proved to be biggest for the Minutemen was something rather uncharacteristic of such a young team: resiliency. After the Friars' Drew Omicioli scored a shorthanded goal right out of the second intermission to knot the teams up at three and shift the momentum back to the home team's side, one would think that the inexperience of the Minutemen would show at the worst possible time. Not so. The Maroon and White maintained its scheme of banging and hustling to eventually regain the advantage on its way to a big Hockey East win.

"All of the guys really picked it up, really started talking; they took control like they have to for this team to get going," Callahan said.

"Our practices have been unbelievable all week, real intense," Nizwantowski said.

"The biggest thing is all of us believe in each other, and when one guy starts to believe in another guy, it's like gasoline on a fire," he added.

Andy Vogt is a Collegian columnist.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Toni Soderholm didn't score yesterday, but he made his phycial presence known.

Dritte und Vierzig
Thursday.

Research committees invade Salt Lake city; aim to improve performance

By Erin Johnson
The Daily Universe (Brigham Young U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah – As some of the finest athletes in the world converge on Salt Lake this winter, medical and athletic researchers will be at their heels, equipped with cameras, research data and tests.

The International Olympic Committee Medical Commission and Pfizer, a pharmaceutical industry leader, have teamed up to conduct Olympic research with the help of professionals from across the globe.

The research team will focus on nine basic studies during the games that will help athletes and trainers determine how to improve performance, prevent injury and strengthen overall health and nutrition. Director of Olympic Affairs at Pfizer Dr Randall Kaye said.

"I believe the research we're involved in is critically important in moving forward," Kaye said. "Athletes really try as hard as they possibly can; maybe they need to try a little bit smarter."

Dr. Darren Stefanyshyn is one of the researchers focusing on a clap-skate mechanism recently used by speed skaters. The device allows skaters to apply pressure to the toe of the skate for acceleration, without losing pressure on the base for balance.

"It increases the amount of power you can produce, the energy, and ultimately the work you can perform," he said. "We're looking at ways of maximizing, of optimizing performance."

Stefanyshyn was also a member of the Sydney, Australia, research team and will conduct research at the 2002 games by filming competitors. The findings of such studies are of particular interest to U.S. long-track speed skater Casey FitzRandolph, who said he constantly is looking for ways to perform better.

"The most successful athletes don't look at what's already been done; they look at how to be better in the future," FitzRandolph said. "The level of sports just keeps going up and up and up, and you realize that it's not going to stop anytime soon."

Along with the professional researchers, four students from the Salt Lake area were selected Monday night to be research assistants. The students were selected for their outstanding work in school science experiments.

■ Villanova

continued from page 10

2-yard-line, sophomore defensive end Valdamar "J" Brower charged Wildcat quarterback Brent Gordon from the right side and knocked his pass attempt into the air. Just one second later, Brower came down with the ball in the back of the end-zone to bring UMass back to within striking distance of the Wildcats, down 27-15 with over a quarter left to play.

"It was a twist by the defensive line. I got my hands up and it just fell into my arms," said Brower, who sparked his defense to stop Villanova on its ensuing possession, and give the Minutemen the ball on their own 20 with 5:34 left in the third stanza.

But Brower's first career touchdown was the final underscore of the afternoon for the Maroon and White.

Two minutes later, the Wildcats' Jamison Young, A-10 Defensive Player of the Week, sacked Matt Guice on his own 28-yard-line and forced the redshirt freshman to fumble the ball back to 15-yard-line. Villanova's Kwesi Solomon retrieved it and rushed to pavdirt to give the Wildcats a 33-15 lead, negating Brower's heroics.

"We just never got anything back from there," said Whipple, who fell to 2-2 all time versus the Cats. "It was just kind of like 'let's just get out of here' because it wasn't going to happen at that point. Villanova took advantage of our mistakes, like a veteran team should."

Villanova then broke the game wide open when Jason McMillon picked off Guice, who practiced little last week and played with seven stitches in his right thumb on UMass' 31-yard line and brought it back to the Minuteman 7-yard-line. On the next play, Westbrook broke up the middle for the touchdown, and the 40-7 Wildcat advantage. Westbrook added the final tally of the game with 11:43 left in the final quarter, with a 3-yard scoring scamper.

Gordon, who went 16-for-27 for 180 yards and three scores, found Brian White on a 10-yard touchdown toss to end the game's opening drive, but UMass answered the early call, engineering a 10-play, 56-yard scoring drive, capped by a 3-yard Kevin Quinlan tallying rush.

That was, however, the Minutemen's only offensive marking of the game.

The Wildcats scored three more touchdowns to end the first half with a 27-6 lead. With 35 seconds left in the first stanza, Gordon snuck in the endzone from one yard out. He then found Westbrook two minutes into the second quarter, over the top, streaking down the left sideline for a 22-yard score. Gordon found Phil DiGiacomo from 2-yards out in the front right corner of the endzone to finish off the first half scoring.

Twice in the second quarter, Whipple called for his offense to go for it on fourth down. But it was for naught on each try, and both stops led to Villanova touchdowns.

"[Whipple's] style is to take chances," Villanova Head Coach Andy Talley said. "Coming into the game he must have felt on paper that we were better. I have a feeling he just said 'you know, we're going to have to take extreme measures today to get this team.'

"Because if he hits a couple of those, and keeps forcing us to score after he scores, then it's a game and anything can happen."

NORTHWESTERN NATURALLY

Discover your future as a Health Care Practitioner at Northwestern Health Sciences University. We offer the widest array of natural health care programs in the United States.

Programs available include:
Chiropractic
Acupuncture
Oriental Medicine
Massage Therapy
Integrative Health & Wellness
Human Biology

Since 1941, Northwestern has earned an international reputation as a pioneer in natural heath care education, patient care and scientific research. The individual attention and access to educational resources our students receive helps them excel in preparing to practice as outstanding health care practitioners. With our unique pioneering clinical education programs and our personal assistance in job placement, Northwestern provides an incredible educational experience.

For more information or to schedule a campus visit, call the Office of Admissions at 1-800-888-4777, ext. 409 or go on-line at www.nwhealth.edu.

Northwestern Health Sciences University
Minneapolis, Minnesota

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

Aesthetics Skin & Body Care for Men & Women
34 Main St., Suite 1, Amherst, MA 253-9879
Healthy Skin begins with a deep pore cleansing facial.
Also hair waxing
-brazilian bikini wax
-whole legs
-brow shaping
-arms
Therapeutic Massage

COUSINS MARKET
11 E Pleasant Street (Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International
DCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co. • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

•••IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT•••
PRE-REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2002
The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:
TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30 @ 7 P.M. IN BARTLETT 61
(This is the last scheduled test until summer 2002 (tentative))
This test may be taken only once.
Students should pre-register for ENGLWP before pre-registration ends.
Students do not need to register for the test.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info.

549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Dodge Caravan C.V. V6. AC. 5 seater, new brakes, struts. 134,000miles. $2700 B.O. Call Jack 256-4963

1991 Mercury Capri, red convertible, automatic. $2500 please call after 6pm. 413-549-6331

1995 Chev Cavalier station wagon 180,000miles. Sticker to 7/02. A beater $250. 586-5961

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

"Handyman" (maintenance, cos-

AUTO FOR SALE

todial) $8.00 hr. 549-1578

Japanese and/or Korean speaking candidate wanted for P/T software/sales position. Contact: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA, 01002; fax: 413-549-1038; e-mail: info@remi.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

COACHES WANTED Amherst Leisure Services is looking for enthusiastic college students with a background in basketball to coach in the Amherst Youth Basketball league. These are volunteer positions, with an average commitment of 2-5 hours a week.

EMPLOYMENT

Every coach will go thru a coaching certification program. There will be an orientation meeting for anyone interested in learning more about the coaching in the league on Monday, October 29, 2001 at 7:00 p.m. at the Bangs Community Center. The Bangs Center is located behind Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst. For more information, please contact, Mike Thomas, Sports Director at thomasm@townamherst.ma.us

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR RENT

4 Bedroom, 3 1/2 bath 73 Amity Place 1/2 mile away from Umass 413-592-0540 best after 7:00

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89.

EMPLOYMENT

Warrantee 413-584-8857

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

One person to share a room in Brandywine. $231 a month heat and hot water included. Starts January 1. Call Meghan @ 549-5359

Looking for 1-2 females to share room. Town Houses in Amherst. Lease starting Jan 1. 413-549-8162

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE

EMPLOYMENT

DRINKING

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

HOUSE FOR RENT

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1 888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun-coastvacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida.

ROOM FOR RENT

Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

SPRING BREAK #1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company. Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

Spring Break with STS. America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849

TRAVEL

or www.ststravel.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 · HSCN Bulletin Board
3 · CBS-3 Boston
4 · ABC-40 Springfield
5 · FOX-25 Springfield
7 · HSCN Movie Channel
8 · UPN-20 Hartford
9 · HSCN Pure Movie Channel
10 · NBC-30 New Britain
11 · Fox-61 Hartford
12 · PBS-24 Hartford
13 · NBC-22 Springfield
14 · International Channel
15 · UMASS Classical Channel
16 · WB-56 New Haven
17 · ESPN
18 · ESPN2
19 · UVC TV (Student Operated)
20 · Weather Channel
21 · Good to Cook
22 · C-Span
23 · C-Span2
24 · CNN Headline News
25 · Lifetime
26 · USA
27 · Free
28 · TNT
29 · MTV
30 · Nick
31 · Nickelodeon
32 · Nogin
33 · Cartoon Network
34 · Nick at Nite
35 · TV Land
36 · Country Central
37 · BET
38 · Discovery
39 · Bloomberg Financial Network
40 · College TV Network
41 · BRAVO
42 · MTV2
43 · VH1
44 · The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 29, 2001

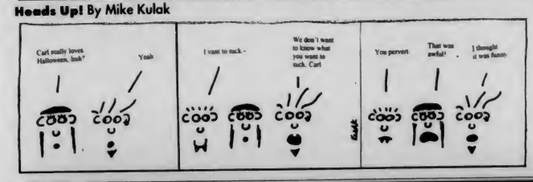
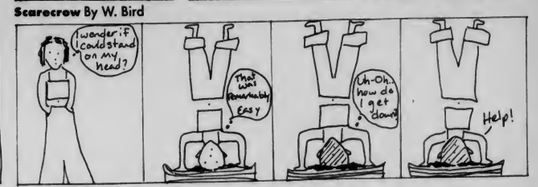
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre		American Roots Music (N)		Austin City Limits (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Sacrifices" (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "Sacrifices" (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Tennessee Titans at Pittsburgh Steelers. (In Stereo Live)
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	7th Heaven "Crazy" (In Stereo)		Angel "Billy" (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "After Time" (N)		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Med Abt. You
WTXX	9	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	7th Heaven "Crazy" (In Stereo)		Angel "Billy" (N) (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "After Time" (N)		Crossing Jordan "Believers"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Boston Public (N)		Third Watch "After Time" (N)		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Weakest Link (In Stereo)		Third Watch "After Time" (N)		Crossing Jordan "Believers"		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow (N)		Masterpiece Theatre		American Roots Music (N)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Tennessee Titans at Pittsburgh Steelers (In Stereo Live)
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Hughleys	One on One	Parkers (N)	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Frasier	5th Wheel	Shipmates
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	"Acceptable Risk" (2001, Drama) James Bullard, Chad Bruce.				Minuts by Minute (N)		Law & Order "Blood Libel"
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Monster"		Biography: Jerry Seinfeld		100 Centre Street (N)		CNN Special Report		Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	53	Moneyline (N)		Wild Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		Com.-Presents	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	½ "Rashmore" (1998, Comedy) Jason Schwartzman.				Air Cops		Justice Files	"Serial Killers"
DISC	48	Wild Discovery: Upside Down		Wild Discovery: Orig. Vampire		Preying Mantis: Nigel's Wild		Fireballs From Space		Figure Skating: Skate America Int'l – Men's and Dance		Cheerleading
ESPN	61	Sportscenter		Sidelines		Monday Night Countdown (N)						Golden Girls	Golden Girls
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: Mia Farrow		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Determination of Death" (2001, Drama) Marc Singer.				Dismissed (N)	Making-Video
MTV	81	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Road Rules	Family Ties	Family Ties
NICK	63	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Crossing Over
SCIFI	66	Star Trek		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Farscape "Bewes of Dog"		Outer Limits "Gettysburg"		Star Trek "The Enemy Within"		About Face: The Wonders	Crossing Over
TLC	79	Unnatural History		In the Mind of Conman		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Maternity Ward "Start Small"		About Face: The Wonders		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	59	NYPD Blue "Roll Out the Barrel"		Pretender "Unhappy Landings"		Law & Order "Venom"		Law & Order "Ego" (In Stereo)		Law & Order "White Lie"		Law & Order "Venom"
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Survivors" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Hard Call"		"Virtual If You Know What I Did Last Friday the 13th" (2000)				"I Still Know What You Did"
HBO	50	★★ "He Said, She Said" (1991, Comedy) Kevin Bacon.				½ "Big Momma's House" (2000, PG-13)		★★ "Entrapment" (1999, Suspense) Sean Connery.				"Meet Parents"
MAX	60	(5:45) ★★★ "Gladiator" (2000, Action) Russell Crowe.				Creature Features: "Teenage Caveman"				★★★ "The Perfect Storm" (2000, Drama) George Clooney.
SHOW	56	★★½ "Ghostbusters II" (1989, Comedy) Bill Murray.				★★½ "Pitch Black" (2000, Science Fiction) Radha Mitchell.				"Possessed" (2000, Horror) Timothy Dalton.

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

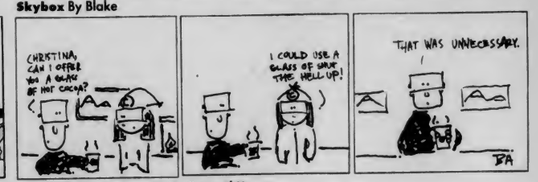


Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

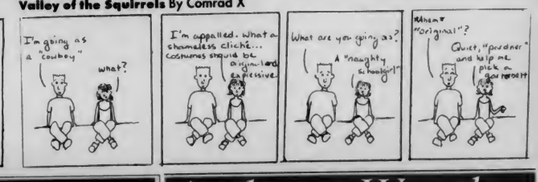
FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Heads Up! By Mike Kulak



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Scarecrow By W. Bird

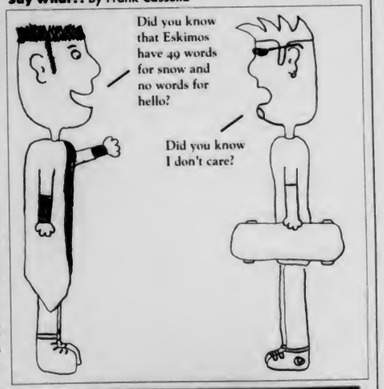
Skybox By Blake

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Eighty percent of success is showing up."

–Woody Allen

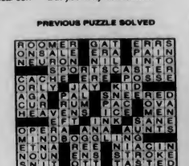


Amherst Weather

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 57 LOW: 37	HIGH: 55 LOW: 24	HIGH: 56 LOW: 38

Horoscopes

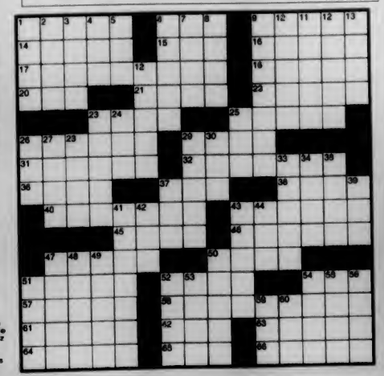
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may encounter a problem today in the form of a person who doesn't seem to understand that you have work to do. Take care you don't overreact.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You must be sure that you don't let your temper get the better of you today. There are some people who may not understand your moods. But the Ladies Man does. He's got the right responses to all your romantic queries.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're likely to find that a long-term project is actually well ahead of schedule today. Still, this is no reason to let up in any way.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You're likely to surprise many people with your approach today, but you must do what strikes you as suitable, appropriate and effective.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't be stingy today – with your affection, your concern or any of your own emotional resources. Someone you know really needs you.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – If you're too impulsive today you're likely to step on someone's toes. Take care that you behave appropriately and observe the hierarchy.
B (April 20-May 20) – The circumstances you are facing at work today may not be ideal, but you are the most likely candidate to make the best of the worst.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) –You may be accused of being shallow today, but the fact is that you are simply concentrating on things that are more obvious. But it's pretty obvious that you're shallow.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're in no mood to acknowledge reality today, but nevertheless there are some practical concerns you must grapple with before nightfall. Who's your daddy?
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Don't be fickle today! You know that you are easier to please than you are letting people believe; make it easier on them – now! Don't make fun of him for being that quick.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can enjoy the developments of the day without taking part – but it will be much more fun for you to get right into the fray at times.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You can put your own interests first today and still attend to those who are counting on you. Don't be selfish or one-sided however. Don't challenge 10 year olds to a football game, especially if you're sober because there is no chance you're going to win. But you may hurt some.



Say What?! By Frank Cassella

THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!
[1/2 price munchies
9pm-close
TUESDAY!!
[Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition

ACROSS
1 Chef's attire
6 Mo. for Libras
9 Cluster
14 Peter Nero's instrument
15 Caviar
16 Luau welcome
17 Places for valuables
19 Bay
20 Look closely
21 Knife handle
22 Rye or white
23 Pat dry
25 Play (a radio) loudly
26 Repeats
29 Fit to —
31 Mountain in Turkey
32 Astronomer's study
36 Learn by — memorize
37 Barbecue tidbit
38 Quark's home
40 Cycled
43 Hun leader
45 Prong
46 Acted like a CEO
47 Caterwauls
50 A lot
51 Warming drink
52 Iniets
54 Haul
57 Washington's follower
58 Exactly
61 1902 erupter
62 Ultimate (degree)
63 OPEC vessel
64 Schemes
65 "Of course!"
66 Garden tool



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-7-01

DOWN
1 Arched recess
2 Feel sorry for
3 Not easy to find
4 Lennon's wife
5 Aries refusal
6 Planet's course
7 Not friendly
8 Schoolbook
9 Trinkets
10 The U of UHF
11 Reminders
12 Swindle
13 Unyielding
18 Halloween figure
23 World-weary
24 Meadow
25 Painter Shahn
26 Attention
27 Harvest
28 Despise
29 Certain stage remark
30 Shower alternative
33 Fall guy
34 Elevator guy
35 Decorated linware
37 Barmy's pal
39 Piled up
41 Map books
42 Fleur-de-
43 Disconcert
44 Huge weight
47 Alpine refrain
48 Florida city
49 Females
50 Ancient tales
51 Daisy Mae's creator
52 Like some fish
53 Gambling stake
54 Dancer Montez
55 Pre-owned
56 Actor Richard
59 Dawn goddess
60 Snap

© 2001, United Feature Syndicate

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2026 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Nuggets

Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

Orange Garlic Tofu Chili (vegan)

DINNER

Spring Lamb In Curry

Chicken Margarita

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

Roast Vegetable Panini (vegan)

Daily Staff

Night Editor: Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician: Gerald Ling
Copy Editor: Eric Soderstrom
Production Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Sean Becker, Shannon Farrington

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

The last time the UMass men's soccer team won nine games in a row was in 1932

Nine in a row

Men's soccer extends win streak, clinches spot in A-10 tourney

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

One of the toughest human emotions to deal with is the feeling of being under appreciated. It is disappointing to know that you are working hard and no one is around to see it.

UMass	2
G.W.	1

UMass	3
Richmond	1

For most of the season one could say that the Massachusetts men's (13-3 8-1 A10) soccer team has felt under appreciated for most of the season. In the first half of the season, maybe a hundred people – consisted mostly of family – would show up to Ruth J. Totman Field to watch the Minutemen play.

But this weekend the story was quite different, as a combined 530 people watched UMass extend its winning streak to nine games with wins over the Richmond Spiders and the George Washington Colonials.

With a 3-1 win over the Spiders on Friday and a 2-1 victory over G.W. the Minutemen clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 conference tournament for the third year in a row. They remain tied with Rhode Island for first in the A-10.

"For us to accomplish any of our other goals we needed to get through this one," Head Coach Sam Koch said. "Our first goal allows us to achieve all the others."

In a much-anticipated match, the Maroon and White took to the pitch on Friday in a tie for first place in the division with its opponent, the Richmond Spiders.

The match was highlighted by the play of sophomore midfielder Dan Colwell. He scored two goals and gave his teammates a much-needed spark when he scored the first goal of the game in the 16th minute.

Throughout the first half, Richmond had control of the game. It was until Colwell found a pass from junior Jeff Deren on the left wing and netted a left footer past Richmond goalkeeper Shawn Alexander – making the score 1-0. The Spencer native has three goals for the year.

"To beat the Richmond keeper we had to hit hard and low," Koch said. "Dan did a great job of doing that today."

In the 62nd minute, UMass gave itself a comfort zone as its No. 1 scorer came through once again. Off of shot from junior Yuri Morales in the middle of the box, Deren tapped in the rebound – making the score 2-0.

The Spiders cut the lead to 2-1 in the 70th minute, when forward Stephen Douglas headed in a D.J. Tognarelli pass in corner kick situation.

Colwell ended all thoughts of a Richmond comeback when he scored his second and last goal of the game in the 81st minute.

"He scored two great goals today at great times," Koch remarked.

UMass played an all-around great game against a very tough opponent and its coach was all smiles

Turn to SOCCER, page 7

Minutemen taken aback by Villanova

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

VILLANOVA, Penn. – The Massachusetts football team learned Saturday afternoon how difficult it is to defy history, especially when things are not going well to begin with.

Villanova	47
UMass	13

Faced with the reality that the away team in its series with Villanova has won only three of the previous 18 meetings, and none since 1978, the struggling Minutemen didn't even come close to challenging times past, falling to the Wildcats 47-13 on the Astroturf of Villanova Stadium.

"Well, it was another one of those trips for UMass to come down to Villanova," said Head Coach Mark Whipple, amidst a bout of sarcasm. "So we didn't want to disjoint history by any stretch of the imagination."

The defeat promises UMass (1-6, 1-4 Atlantic 10) its first losing season since the Minutemen's 2-9 1997 campaign, the term before Mark Whipple was hired as head coach. With the win, the Wildcats (5-2, 4-1 A-10) remain near the top of the conference standings, behind only Hofstra (6-1, 7-1 overall) and Rhode Island (5-1, 7-1).

Senior Brian Westbrook, who managed only 52 rushing yards and 51 receiving yards in his team's 58-17 loss to UMass last year in Amherst, led Villanova with three touchdowns and 199 all-purpose yards, bringing him to within just 15 yards of the Division I-AA record (6,377 yards) in that category, held by current Chicago Bear and former New Hampshire star, Jerry Azumah.

Westbrook outgained the entire UMass rushing attack (35 rushes, 35 yards) carrying the ball 23 times for 103 yards. He also caught six receptions for 40 yards, and added 56 more in return yardage.

With 5:13 left in the third quarter and Villanova backed up on its own

Turn to VILLANOVA, page 7

Mistakes and miscues mar U-massacre

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

VILLANOVA, Penn. – The Massachusetts football team redeemed itself from a mistake free win over James Madison last weekend by poorly executing every facet of a 47-13 loss to Villanova.

The Wildcats had an infinite amount of "get out of punt free" cards at their disposal, as the Minutemen continually provided caveman intelligence penalties and miscues to a 'Nova offense that didn't need much help scoring anyway.

The 'Cats had been averaging

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Omari Howard was stopped on a key fourth down play in the second quarter of Saturday's loss to Villanova

Mass Attack outranks No. 14 Friars on the road

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. – A pair of win hungry squads took the ice Sunday night at Providence's Schneider Arena, but it was visiting UMass-Amherst that went home with a victory in its Hockey East opener.

UMass	4
Providence	3

With the No. 14 Friars (1-4-0, 0-2-1 HE) and the Minutemen (2-2-0, 1-0-0 HE) locked in a titanic struggle for two precious Hockey East points, it was expected that an ill-timed bounce of the puck would tip the scales of the game.

Just over five minutes into the deciding period, Brad Nizwantowski centered a pass that slipped through linemate Jimmy Callahan's legs, off PC defenseman Dominic Torretti's skates and over the goal line.

"It was just hard work," Callahan said. "Nizwantowski got it on the boards and threw it toward the net. It went through my legs and just bounced off someone's skate and into the net."

Nizwantowski's miracle bank shot gave UMass a 4-3 lead that it would not relinquish. Mike Johnson was clutch in net for the final ten minutes of the third. The senior made ten saves in the third period alone including his snuffing of a PC power play late in the final frame.

Nearing the end of UMass' penalty kill, Friar forward Drew Omicioli slid unnoticed into the slot and fired a one timer labeled for the shelf. But the anticipatory Johnson moved to the top of his crease and engulfed the puck in a symphony of padding.

Johnson's stoning of Omicioli was a sort of revenge from the only blemish on a near perfect third period.

"It is really no surprise to us that [Johnson] is doing as well as he is doing," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

Following a blocked shot on a UMass power play early in the third, Omicioli countered, beating freshman defenseman Jeff Lang before firing a top shelf slap shot from the left circle that beat Johnson glove side.

Omicioli's shorthanded marker momentarily knotted the game at three. The tally erased a slim one-goal margin that the Minutemen had held for the better part of the middle frame.

The second period was a virtual stalemate for the first eight minutes until an aggressive UMass forecheck resulted in a Callahan goal at 11:12.

Junior defenseman Samuli Jalkanen cycled and fed forward Darcy King who, with defenseman Shawn Weiman draped on his back, threaded a swiveling backhand pass to a cutting Callahan for the goal.

"We had a lot of guys who were interested in getting on the puck," said Cahoon of his squad's tenacious forecheck. "That is the way we are going to score goals, by going to the net."

The junior's tic-tac-toe tally was the only material thing to be taken from a period dominated by the Minutemen. UMass notched nine shots in the period, to PC's four, including a breakaway by Nizwantowski and a left circle snap shot from Matt Walsh.

"Our guys were anxious to play and we did a good job putting pressure defense," Cahoon said. "That allowed us to tilt the ice a little bit."

The Friars Nolan Schaefer continually made brilliant saves on prime UMass scoring chances. Instead it was the fluke shots that ended up beating him.

UMass' first goal came on a miscommunication between Schaefer and defenseman Regan Kelly. Freshman forward Craig MacDonald took advantage of the turnover by sliding the puck through the Friar goalie's wickers.

The Minutemen opened the Hockey East season with a win for the second year in a row, while Providence failed to take its first conference game in two tries.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Junior Tim Turner got the UMass power play back on track with his first period goal.

Hard-hitting UMass gets off its Schneid

PROVIDENCE, R.I. – After playing an up-tempo, hard-hitting style of hockey last Saturday night against Colorado College, the Massachusetts hockey team hoped to transfer that intensity shown against a reeling Providence Friars squad. This time, the intensity of the Minutemen paid off, as they out-hustled, out-muscled and out-maneuvered Providence en route to notching their first Hockey East victory of this young season.

From the opening faceoff until the final buzzer, the Maroon and White beat the Friars to loose pucks all over the Schneider Arena surface, and constantly forced PC to be in retreat as UMass kept the offensive pressure on for the entire 60 minutes. Had Providence netminder Nolan Schaefer not pulled out several clutch saves on odd-man rushes, the score likely could have been out of hand for the Friars.

One key aspect of the victory for the Minutemen was the stellar play of their seven freshmen in the lineup, as they played like polished seniors instead of timid newcomers. Freshman forward Craig MacDonald notched his first tally of the season as he exhibited one of the most important qualities of a top goal-scorer: patience. After a Schaefer misplay in the crease, MacDonald waited for several seconds until the perfect opportunity to stuff the disc through the five hole. Greg Mauldin also was a consistent offensive threat throughout the whole game, leading the team with six shots on goal, and Tim Vitek created havoc all night for Providence, playing with reckless abandon and throwing his body around on each shift.

ANDY VOGT

"They're doing everything they're supposed to right now; you can't ask too much of them, being freshmen," junior forward Jimmy Callahan said. "But as of right now, they're above and beyond what they're supposed to do."

The defensive presence of the Minutemen kept the Friars at bay as well, as senior defensemen Toni Soderholm and Randy Drohan punished the hosts with brutal checks while the Maroon and White as a whole prevented the PC offensive attack from gaining the middle of the zone.

"We really tried to stand up and neutralize them in the middle of the rink, but you need good checking position from the wingers and you need good support from the forwards in order to do that," Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "I think the two working together created [the ability to stop the Friar attack]."

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

Christmas in October? Get your holiday groove on with Destiny's Child.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The UMass field hockey team went 1-1. Read about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 38 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, October 30, 2001

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

A touch of happiness
Grab your coffee kids, the cold weather is upon us!

Boltwood project unique experience

By Joanna Zeitlin
Collegian Staff

For 32 years the Boltwood Project has given students an outlet to help support the community. Merele Willmann, a former professor of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning at the University of Massachusetts, started the Boltwood project to help students get involved with assisting the people that they were most likely not to come into contact with in their daily lives. This project helps integrate two communities together, and link them by much more than community service.

Within the Boltwood Project there are 115 student volunteers, 14 student supervisors, and two student coordinators. The project represents 42 different majors and six double majors. There are 14 different programs within the Boltwood project. Each project is designed to help and support a different aspect of the community. Boltwood's programs extend from Amherst, Northampton, Hadley and Turners Falls. This range allows students to meet with all kinds of different people from all areas of the community.

Some of the places that the volunteers visit are community centers, homeless shelters, nursing homes and group homes. The volunteers mentor people from all different walks of life. They help people who have mental, physical, or social inabilities by giving companionship and friendship to people who really need it.

Each group of volunteers visits its specific locations for 10 weeks, two hours each session. Each volunteer is paired up with a buddy, whom they share this 10-week experience. This system allows for a close relationship to evolve and for the participants to really feel as though they are getting the friendship and the help that they need.

The volunteers try and make the time that they share as satisfying as they possibly can. They plan trips and outings to help stimulate and reintegrate these people into the community. They also bring them out to the movies, bowling, jazz concerts and parades to help offer a diverse evening that is fun and enjoyable for everyone.

This project impacts the lives of not only the participants, but the students' lives as well. "Out of the three and a half years that I have been here at UMass, I have never been a part of something, nor have I ever really enjoyed any work that I have done," said a student volunteer and Spanish/English major. "I feel that I got to teach and learn through Boltwood – being a part of something that is interactive and community-oriented was very useful to me... I learned a lot about the way that people work and the way that I work...I went in with the attitude that I was only there to help them, but I realized that they were also helping me."

Boltwood is a great way for any student to get involved in the community. In the first week of every semester, the Boltwood project recruits new volunteers to join in its program. For the second week of every semester, Boltwood holds recruitment nights for students who are interested in the program. These meetings give the students information on how to join the Boltwood Project and on what kinds of programs the students would like to participate in for the semester. To help is as simple as coming to the meeting, and committing yourself to helping others for just 10 weeks.

Boltwood helps students share a unique experience with all different kinds of people. The students not only help the participants, but also connect with them in a way that is rewarding for both. Boltwood helps students understand and interact with people that are much different from them. It lets the student educate themselves about different aspects of life and teaches them that even though people are different, connections can be made and friendships can be created.

"Through my experience with Boltwood I have learned many things," said a sophomore Geology major and volunteer. "People with disabilities are no different than people without. They enjoy having a good time and have bad days just like everyone else."

This project helps UMass students make connections and share experiences with people. Boltwood helps the students meet and create friendships with other volunteers and with their participants. It promotes leadership and outreach skills.

"I have learned so much from doing the Boltwood project, it is nearly inexplicable. I have learned so many people skills... I look at the world in a whole new light," said one senior Sociology volunteer. "This program lets students get away from their daily problems and immerse themselves in a different life.

"Students also get the opportunity to learn about different ways of life and appreciate the connections that they can make in the community. "It is easy to identify the single greatest learning experience for me from my Boltwood experience... I was humbled by the abilities and the intelligence of the participants that we worked with, and just because someone is different, it doesn't mean that the person doesn't have skills and talents...they helped me look past what I see and find out about the person before making any judgments."

The Boltwood Project is holding a

Turn to BOLTWOOD, page 3

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Serving up some soul
These girls sang a-capella for a huge crowd at the Theater Guild's Coffee House last night in the Student Union Ballroom

Ghosts in the classroom next lecture installment

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Is the use of adjunct faculty in higher education a national disaster in the making? Michael Dubson seems to think so. He is the editor of a recent book, Ghosts in the Classroom, Stories of College Adjunct Faculty – and the Price We All Pay. He will be delivering a lecture based on the book at Food For Thought Books on Tuesday at 7 p.m.

The lecture is another installment in the Food For Thought Reading Series. According to Joan Barberich, Publicity Coordinator for Food For Thought, the series showcases authors and scholars from a wide variety of disciplines. The

Turn to LECTURE, page 3

Student Legal Services offers more help to students with credit debt

By Tom Ollila
Collegian Staff

Help is available on the University of Massachusetts campus for those in serious debt.

The Student Legal Services Office provides assistance to those with apparently insurmountable credit card debts. It offers both information on debt and legal advice, with many pamphlets and a newsletter addressing the issue.

First, students should be aware of the specifics of their credit card. Some offer lower annual interest rates, and others have longer grace periods. If one plans on using the credit card for large purchases, a low annual interest rate will save money over the long run. However, for minimal use of small purchases that can be paid fully each month, a grace period will stop interest from occurring. It's important to know the specific details of the card.

In addition, most cards have fees hidden in the small print, including late payment fees, over the limit fees, annual fees and monthly fees. While the credit card company must provide the annual percentage rate and finance charge before signing the contract, they must provide the billing information upon request.

At the Student Legal Services Office, Senior Staff Attorney Michele L. Leaf urges students to seek help at the Office. She discussed a range of possibilities available to students on payment options and how to deal with creditors.

"We want to make students aware of what their rights are and help them negotiate with creditors. Every year we see more students in high debt," she said. "They have multiple credit cards maxed-out and every card has late fees and over the limit fees of usually, $29."

Each year, the Student Legal Services Office sees about 1500 students, with a full fifth of the problems relating to debt. Leaf commented on some students with enormous debts. "I have seen three or four students $40,000 to $70,000 in debt, just from credit cards," she said.

The staff attorney really wants students to know the actions they can take. "We first examine the actions of the debt collector," said Leaf. "The student can make a demand of monetary compensation from the debt collector, or at least have grounds to stop the debt. They can make them provide documentation of debt. Often times, fees have been added in violation of debt."

A good description of improper debt collections can be found in Gary Klein's book, Surviving Debt: A Guide for Consumers in Financial Stress. In it, Klein writes, "Remember the cardinal rule about debt collectors – unless they work for your landlord, utility, mortgage holder, or other secured creditor, they often have no bite behind their bark.

Turn to DEBT, page 3

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Going South?
These geese are, and just in time, too.

FacSenate to hear Story

By S.J. Port and Erik Hoan
Collegian Staff

Representative Ellen Story will present legislative updates to the Faculty Senate at 3:30 p.m. Thursday afternoon. Following Story's address, Dr. John Walsh of the University of Massachusetts at Worcester will speak to the Senate concerning the "Proposed modifications to tenure at the University of Massachusetts Medical School."

Representative Story's update on legislation will give a "premise of the 'hot items' in the legislature – this time probably having to do with the budget." Faculty Senate Secretary Ernest May said. The budget cuts will continue to be a major issue for the Faculty Senate, concerning speaker Walsh as well, since he is a member of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

As a member of AAUP, Walsh is concerned with maintaining academic freedom and ensuring valid tenure for himself and his peers. The last time tenure modifications were proposed was in 1998. At that time the movement to establish post-tenure evaluations of faculty were strongly cautioned against by the AAUP. Tenure modifications this time are aimed at professors at the UMass Medical School.

"The goal of John Walsh's presentation is to keep our faculty informed about changes in personnel practices across the University that might have some impact here," Senator Roland Chilton said when asked what he foresaw as Walsh's focus. "Specifically, some members of the Medical School faculty are concerned about a proposed change in procedures for deciding tenure and salary at the school. I am looking forward to learning more about the issue and the possible impact it might have on our campus."

Following Walsh's address will be an open question and discussion period.

In addition to addresses by Story and Walsh, the Senate will decide whether or not to approve a series of undergraduate and graduate courses. The Academic Matters Council, responsible for developing policy recommendations on academic and curricular life on campus, has proposed the addition of nine undergraduate courses. The courses include: Witchcraft and Magic in the Greco-Roman World; Introduction to Medieval Studies; Modern Political Trials, Human Rights and Wrongs; Globalization, War Crimes Tribunals, Death Penalty in America; Applied Computations in Turfgrass Maintenance and Consumer Marketing for Horticultural Crops.

The Graduate Council has recommended the addition of four courses: Researching Language, Literacy, and Culture; Molecular and Cellular Entomology; Water in Foods and Conflict Resolution.

Following the motions to add courses the Senate will conclude with its regular announcements.

National Briefs

Pennsylvania

By Rebecca Blatt
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – For the past several weeks, Osama bin Laden and Taliban book titles have topped the National Campus Bestseller List at the Penn Book Store. But none of those books were published by the University of Pennsylvania Press.

The Penn Press, which boasts an active backlist of more than 800 titles, has no books of particular insight or relevance to the events of Sept. 11.

Penn Press Director Eric Halpern said the organization had focused primars on its historical series instead of books with contemporary importance.

As a result, the Penn Press is flailing in the wake of the terrorist attacks, according to Halpern, who called September sales "dismal." The press brought in only two-thirds of the money it expected for the month.

Widespread economic distress has disturbed book sales across the nation.

But presses at competing Ivy League institutions were more prepared to meet the rush for Middle Eastern titles.

Columbia University Press has enjoyed tremendous sales, reprinting Hazbollah: Inside Terrorism and Terrorism in the Media after Sept. 11 Demand for these books continues to overwhelm the publisher.

Penn Press Book sales have been suffering since last April. And Halpern said he does not anticipate that sales will reach anywhere near last year's admittedly meager level.

Books, magazines and other print entertainment are especially struggling to find their niche following the attacks on New York and Washington.

And Halpern anticipates its slump will continue for months to come.

"Because books take so long it's not easy to react quickly," said Halpern. "They can sometimes take years."

Halpern said that "there is a lot of soul-searching going on. It's resulted in reappraising what it is we do."

Now, the Penn Press plans to pay more attention to books of global relevance.

The press will expand its series on Middle Eastern cultures, political science and human rights. However, these long-term projects will not add on the immediate sales crisis.

But several Ivy League presses can not keep their Middle Eastern titles in the shelves.

Religion and State, published by Columbia earlier this year, recently sold out of stores and is currently on back order.

And Yale University Press experienced a similar spike in sales. In one month, the Yale Press increased its printing of The Taliban from 10,000 copies to over 200,000 copies.

"With the demand for those books comes a decreased demand for other books," Yale Press spokeswoman Heather Dauria said.

In the meantime, the Penn Press will pump up promotions for its recent, non-terrorist related titles, including The Man Who Made Wall Street and La Face A Garden and Landscape in Tuscany.

Illinois

By Kristen Schorsch
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

(U-WIRE) CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Microsoft launched Windows XP, the most advanced Windows computer technology since the pop culture phenomena of Windows 95," on Thursday said University of Illinois alumnus Joe Berry, who helped develop the newest version.

Windows XP, otherwise known as Experience, gives the best of both worlds by combining the consumer and business versions of previous Windows programs to create an entirely new system, Berry said. Now, when consumers or corporations buy computers they will buy the same system.

Before the new creation, Windows consisted of two separate systems, a consumer version and a business version. The business version was stable, more modern and 10 to 15 years newer than the consumer version. Created in the early 1980s, it was built stronger than the consumer version so businesses could run their entire computer systems on it.

The consumer version was not as stable and was built on older technology designed to maximize compatibility with old hardware.

The old version of Windows, whether business or consumer, wasn't "user friendly" and was hard for people to understand, Berry said.

Windows XP has several advantages for computer users. The newest features allow for more than one person to be logged onto a computer at the same time. Preferences are set up for a specific user, and programs won't interfere with each other. The new interface makes it easier to access options, Berry said.

He said the photographs has been "beefed up" as well. If users have a digital camera, a wizard will appear on the screen to help transfer the pictures to the computer. Burning pictures onto compact discs also is easier.

Berry said the new features "make the computer a lot more useful."

There is "no compromise," Berry said. "This is a product we've been trying to get to for years."

The completion of Windows XP marks the end of a gradual process that began several years ago. A new system was needed to reduce the many problems people had with computers, such as unreliability.

More than 1,000 Microsoft employees began working on this specific system about 18 months ago, he said. Berry compared the collaboration of Microsoft workers to the large number of people who work on a car in its production stage.

John C. Hart, University associate professor of computer science, said he doesn't know how the new system will affect his department.

"I haven't seen enough difference between the old operating system and the new one to be able to measure the difference," Hart said.

Hart said he had one student put Windows XP into his computer, and the system locked up once. Despite the disadvantage, Hart said the system has many features that could be put to good use.

Microsoft spent a large amount of money on the making of the system and also had many partners help sponsor the production, Berry said.

There are two different ways to get the new system. Berry said he estimates about 90 percent of people will get it when they purchase a new computer. Windows XP already will be installed in new computers, and the program will set up automatically. Others can buy the system on a compact disc to upgrade their existing system.

Windows XP will be sold in a home edition and a professional edition for businesses. The home edition will cost about $99 and has new features in addition to everything the previous systems had. The professional edition will cost $199.

As for the future of computer technology, Berry said, "This product will take the whole industry a whole step forward."

Iowa

By Rebecca Cooper
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

(U-WIRE) AMES, Iowa – For the third year running, 11-year-old Seth Babcock will trick-or-treat as Darth Vader – and although his mother used to make his costumes, this year's flashing sword and glow-in-the-dark mask came off the store shelves. Seth and his 13-year-old sister, Heather, both of Ames, Iowa, scoured Wal-Mart for the perfect trimmings to their outfits in preparation for the big night Tuesday.

"I'm gonna be Darth Vader again this year, because I like Star Wars," he said. "I have a glow-in-the-dark Darth mask and my new sword lights up too."

Gone are the simple days of the homemade witch, pumpkin and ghost costumes – today's most popular Halloween costumes are store-bought pimps, genies, ghouls and cheerleaders.

Trish Vennink, who works at the Halloween Bootique at North Grand Mall, said the most popular costumes for men are ghoulish figures, hippies and pimps. Women prefer to transform themselves into genies, gypsies and pink ladies from the '50s, she said.

Woody and Buzz Lightyear from the movie "Toy Story," all the "Shrek" characters, and Dorothy from the "Wizard of Oz" were best-sellers for the kids, Vennink said.

But the full costumes were overshadowed by the costume accessories – wacky wigs, funky nylons, crazy hats, plastic weapons, makeup and more.

"Even the employees get a kick out of it.

"It's so much fun – we tried on everything," said Vennink, senior in exercise and sport science. "Everyone seemed to want accessories this year. My favorite was the sorority-girl wig, because it felt so real."

Matthew Secrist, sophomore at Ames High School, said he was at Halloween Bootique to get a wig to complete the costume he plans to wear to school Wednesday.

"I'm trying to find a natural-feeling wig today, because I want to dress like a girl on Halloween to scare the people at my school," Secrist said. "I have the skirt and everything, but I still need to find a shirt – either in pink or one with the Backstreet Boys on it."

Julia Juergens, senior in biology, bought a bubble-gum pink 50s soda fountain shop dress for when she works as a waitress at People's Bar and Grill, 2428 Lincoln Way.

"I just need a costume for work Wednesday night," Juergens said. "This was the first place I looked, and I just decided to buy it because it was really cute."

Texas

By Monalisa Solis
The Daily Cougar (U. Houston)

(U-WIRE) HOUSTON – More Americans want to know about Islam since the Sept. 11 attacks, which is a huge step toward understanding each other for the better sake of humanity, said Najat Elsayed, president of the Council of American Islamic Relations, at a discussion held at the University of Houston on Thursday.

Sponsored by the UH chapter of the NAACP and Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., the forum's primary focus was the issue of "racial profiling."

"I think definitely a lot more people are asking questions and they're inquiring what Islam is really about," said Lema Mousilli, humanitarian director of the Arab American Student Association.

Panelists said more individuals are coming forward with interest in Islam, but racial profiling is still a problem.

"People try to put a face on Islam and Islam doesn't have just one face," said Shahid Rahman, a member of the Muslim Student Association.

Rahman said he thinks people try to associate a particular look with all American Muslims, but this a mistake.

"In America, there's between six and eight million Muslims, and a third of them are African-American," Rahman said. "When people try to narrow down Islam to one group or face it's counterproductive, because Islam isn't just one kind of person. That's where ignorance plays a part."

Racial profiling is sometimes a factor when looking for a potential suspect, UH Police Department officer Jeremy Johnston said.

"I can see where the racial profiling might come in, but at the same time we (sometimes) have very little (else) to go on," Johnston said.

Hortense Edwards, an audience member, stated that everyone has been guilty of racial profiling at some time.

"We are all at fault for racial profiling. We do those things ourselves," she said.

Edwards suggested that people do a self-evaluation to help minimize racial profiling.

"You can't really say that you're doing your part to stop it if you're not doing any self-evaluation," Edwards said.

Chalon Clark, vice president of Delta Sigma Theta and moderator of the forum, asked, "How has your family and you been affected by the Sept. 11th attacks?"

Rahman said he thinks some individuals are only now beginning to speak to Muslims, Arabs or people of the Islamic faith after the terrorist attacks.

"Sitting in this forum today, I really doubt we would be talking to each other if it wasn't for these events," Rahman said.

Elsayed stated that she has experienced more acts of kindness, whereas Mousilli said she was offended by a co-worker who stated that all Muslims should be killed.

"It was very trying on me and I was incredibly offended," Mousilli said. "However, a lot of my co-workers were sympathetic."

The panelists also had ideas on where we should go as a country and as a community because of the terrorist attacks.

"I think settings like this are the greatest thing," Mousilli said. "The only way to build tolerance is through educating our peers, co-workers and colleagues."

Chigozie Nwokear, a member of the Nation of Islam, suggested that people admit their own prejudices.

"Admit your faults, because being prejudiced really isn't a bad thing. All it means is that you have preferences," Nwokear said.

Elsayed said, "I believe education is the key to the world's problems. We need to educate ourselves to know about each other and what's going on in the world."

Rahman agreed, saying people's differences make them unique to each other, but knowledge of others is critical to creating a cohesive society.

National briefs are compiled from the U-Wire.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts – operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Index became the Collegian in 1911, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1991. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginzye-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Smiawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

DJ MIKE
* every Tuesday
* no cover
positive ID required
McMurphy's

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 → Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 → A great place to get contact lenses
3 → Convenient hours and location
4 → FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 → Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Open House !!!
UVC-TV 19 is holding its annual open house for the campus and you are invited.
• Tour the studio...
• Meet the staff...
• Promote your RSO...
• Learn more about membership..
• Watch a live cablecast starting at 1:00 PM...
• Oh yeah, lunch is on us !!!!!!
UVC-TV 19
216 Student Union Building (next to the Hatch)
10/31/01
12:00 PM to 6:00 PM

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES, FUTONS, BEDS & ETC
"BYOB" (bring your own bed)
328 COLLEGE ST • RT 9 • AMHERST • 253 BEDS
2 mile from Amherst, UC Berkeley, and U. Mass
THE AREA'S BEST RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE LIVING

Dissertation Advisement Consulting
Former NYU School of Education faculty member is now available in Amherst for individual assistance with quantitive research proposals -- problem identification, variable identification, theory and hypothesis statements, library resource direction. Reasonable rates, short or long term. No charge for initial consultation. Call Jim, 253-0459

YAMAHA HONDA DUCATI KTM Husqvarna
VALLEY MOTORSPORTS
M.V. Augusta Kawasaki CAGIVA
State Inspection & Winter Storage
SUPERB, PROFESSIONAL SERVICE

■ lecture

continued from page 1

talks are intended to boost publicity for the speakers' work, educate the public of Amherst and draw customers to Food For Thought, Barberich said. Previous talks have featured Agostin Lao-Montes, a scholar of Latino culture, and Bill Storandt, who read from an autobiography about gay life and sailing the high seas.

Adjunct faculty are hired by colleges and universities to do a professor's job, but are denied the tenure, health insurance and other benefits usually given full professors.

The trend, according to Dubson's book, "began innocently enough, as bad things often do." Experts were brought in to "teach on the side," but continued to support themselves with another career.

According to Dubson and the essayists in Ghosts, colleges and universities have come to rely heavily on adjunct faculty, compromising the quality of the education students receive. They foresee a coming breakdown of higher education in America if the use of adjunct faculty continues.

Barberich said that this talk should be especially interesting to students in the UMass community, but that the problem of adjunct faculty is also a worker's rights issue.

"You have all of these talented people," Barberich said, "and they're getting trapped in this system."

"Adjunct faculty are the underclass of higher education: a combination of migrant workers, sweatshop staff and slaves," Dobson remarked in the introduction to Ghosts. "No one can justify and endorse such treatment without first dehumanizing the person doing the job.

"If teaching college is a profession, then all of the people doing that work needed to be treated as professionals," Dobson went on. "If teaching college is not a profession, or important work, then we need to stop lying to ourselves and one another about what a college education is all about, and what is really going on in college classrooms."

■ debt

continued from page 1

"It is illegal for a collector to contact your employer or neighbors about your debts, call you late at night, call you at work, call you repeatedly, make false threats, misrepresent who is contacting you, or engage in any other form of deceptive conduct or unfair harassment," added Klein.

In addition, students can work on payment plans. "Students can make consumer credit agreements in which they agree on monthly payments they can really make and the creditor will usually knock off some charges," Leaf said.

Students can contact Student Legal Services by visiting their office in the Campus Center, calling 545-1995, or visiting them on the web at www.saris.admin.umass.edu/slso.

"A lot of people I know have gotten a lot of help from legal services for a broad range of things," said sophomore Lucas Maloney. "It's really good that they help people with credit and credit collectors too."

■ Boltwood

continued from page 1

seminar for the people residing in the Berkshire Hills Music Academy on November 5th. The residents of this school are born with an innate ability to play musical instruments and speak different languages, but they cannot do simple tasks like the average person. They are holding this seminar so that these people, who are ages 18-25, can interact and share their gifts with the community.

The Boltwood project does so many things that help in letting people who have disabilities share their talents. This way we can see past the disability and see the contributions that they can make to the community.

The motto for the Boltwood Project is "your life will never be the same." A sophomore Engineering major and volunteer agrees that this motto embodies the Boltwood Project. "My life will never be the same...through the past 12 weeks I have grown more than I have in the past four semesters at the University."

Ants sticky secretions

By Amanda Borsky
Collegian Correspondent

A biologist at the University of Massachusetts, along with a team of scientists, recently completed a study regarding how certain types of ants and bees are able to work on vertical surfaces.

The study used high-speed video and microscopes to view insects scurrying along glass plates – specifically honeybees and Asian weaver ants. The study observed how ants retract the pad of their foot that allows them to adhere to a surface, back into their foot and continue in motion.

"This was the first study of adhesive pads in ants and bees," said Elizabeth Brainerd, a UMass biologist. "We had to look at something really small and happening really quickly."

The study was conducted by Brainerd, in conjunction with Walter Federle and Bert Holldobler of the University of Würzburg, Germany, and the late Thomas A. McMahon of Harvard University.

"The feet of ants and bees are surprisingly complex structures," said Brainerd. "When viewed through a microscope each foot has a pair of claws that resemble a bull's horns, with a sticky footpad in between the claws.

"When an insect runs across a surface, the claws attempt to grasp the surface. If the claws aren't able to catch onto the surface, they retract and the footpad comes into action," Brainerd added. "The footpad unfolds and fills with blood, allowing the adhesive pad to stick to the surface. The footpad then deflates and folds back. The entire process is completed in tens to hundredths of a second and is repeated with each step."

The footpads also secrete a fluid – allowing the insects to adhere to smooth surfaces. "The same way a wet piece of paper can stick to a window," the scientist said.

The findings from this study have allowed scientists to understand the adhesion properties of ants, which can be used in a variety of fields in the future.

"If we understand how ants and other household pests stick on surfaces we can prevent them from sticking in new non-toxic ways," Brainerd said.

The results also have assisted the understanding of the ecology of ants and bees. Bees use adhesion to stick to plants, just as ants do. The types of surfaces they can adhere to affects the types of plants they can pollinate.

According to Brainerd, there has been a co-evolution between ants and "ant plants" that has occurred in tropical flora. These plants have a waxy surface and prevent most species from adhering to them. However, a few have evolved and are able to stick.

In the future, the findings of this study may help develop mechanisms to clean the inside of computers, and will be used in the development of miniature robots used in medical procedures.

The study was completed in three years and was published in the July issue of Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. Brainerd said they began the study "as pure curiosity." They saw insects crawling up windows and "had a high-speed video and a microscope ... to see for ourselves how this was done."

JEFF SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Home of the brave
These students studied on the steps of the Student Union yesterday despite the brisk weather.

Interns anticipate getting back to work on Capitol Hill

By Jason J. Safdié
U-WIRE (DC BUREAU)

(U-WIRE) WASHINGTON – Unfazed by the new dangers of bioterrorism, determined students working as interns on Capitol Hill said they eagerly anticipate returning to their offices this week.

Because of the security sweeps conducted by health and law enforcement authorities, many students have been out of work for weeks.

"I'm not really concerned at all," said George Washington University sophomore kinah Zinn, an intern for Rep. Jim McGovern (D-Mass). "There was no anthrax found in Cannon."

The Cannon House Office Building reopened Thursday.

Michael Mershon, press secretary for McGovern, said demand for staff and interns had to be reduced temporarily because the General Accounting Office's temporary office space could not accommodate all staff and interns.

Mershon said interns were back to work at the end of last week. He also noticed that since mail has been under such great scrutiny, use of e-mail has picked up "noticeably."

Students expressed their readiness to return to work.

"No one is thinking of quitting in my office," said GW junior Erik Yassenoff, who works for Rep. Dave Hobson of Ohio. "Everyone is taking (the anthrax scares) in stride."

Yassenoff said he will be "watching more closely" for suspicious mail than he had in the past.

One intern working for Sen. Charles Schumer of New York in the Hart building noted she would not be handling the mail anymore. The Hart building is where the first known detection of anthrax took place on Capitol Hill two weeks ago in a letter addressed to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, exposing nearly 30 members of his staff and others in the vicinity.

"I'm not going to do the mail the anymore; I'll do something else in the office," junior Arianna Gleckel said. "It's been a nice break, but I'm ready to go back."

Mershon added any interns feeling uncomfortable with handling the mail would be afforded the opportunity to work on other projects. He said sealed plastic bags similar to those used to keep sandwiches fresh have been distributed to all offices to better contain suspicious mail when identified.

The U.S. Capitol Police are also in the process of briefing interns in person on how to process mail believed to contain biological agents, said Mershon.

Congressional staff have been in daily communication with interns and their parents to keep them updated.

"My congressman's chief of staff and internship coordinator called me to keep me informed and gave me their telephone numbers if my parents wanted more information," Zinn said.

Capitol health authorities' management of bioterrorism information received high marks from interns.

"The Capitol Physician's Office has done a great job of keeping us informed," Mershon said.

"I trust the authorities are doing everything they can to help keep us safe," Zinn said.

The Longworth building, home to House offices and containing one of Capitol Hill's largest mailrooms will remain closed pending further investigation.

Possibility of war a step closer for U. Penn ROTC students

By Alex Lapinski
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Pennsylvania)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA – With American planes flying low over Afghanistan and new reports arriving every day of special forces infiltrating the country's interior, students in University of Pennsylvania's Reserve Officer Training Corps are facing a global picture different than the one they saw when they first enlisted.

Nonetheless, ROTC students see the responsibility they've shouldered as a source of pride.

For several, the news of casualties in Afghanistan has only strengthened their resolve.

Two U.S. Army Rangers were killed in a helicopter accident in Pakistan on Oct. 19, reportedly due to poor visibility.

"We know that people are going to go abroad and not come home," said Marine Corps ROTC student Kate Florenz, a college junior. "It's part of the sacrifice that people have been making for years and years to make this country what it is. A lot of people are going to be making more money than I am when they graduate, but no one will have more honor."

"I definitely feel proud of what I'm doing," said Army ROTC student Geoffrey Pelletier, an Engineering senior. "It's something only a very small number of Penn graduates do. I'm definitely taking a pay cut and could possibly give my life. I'm proud of that."

But Air Force ROTC student Alex Rimoldi, an Engineering senior, said that there is actually only a small chance that any ROTC student will be involved in a combat situation. He said that students will more likely participate in non-combat positions.

"A lot of people work in support roles," he said. "There are over two million serving... and there might be a couple hundred troops in Afghanistan."

According to Political Science Professor Avery Goldstein, at present it doesn't appear that the United States is sending many ground troops to Afghanistan, and is instead utilizing highly trained Special Forces troops.

And Political Science Professor Robert Vitalis said that the war on terrorism does not resemble any other recent conflicts.

"This is not the Iraq war," he said. "The only similarity is the strategic bombing."

Additionally, Rimoldi attributed the fears of the average citizen to a misunderstanding of the way the military functions.

"It is these types of misunderstandings that represent the difference in the mindsets of civilians and soldiers," he said. "There are always those feelings of fear or anxiety, but we know what we're capable of.

"The fear comes from more of a lack of understanding... just not understanding what really goes on on a daily basis," he added. "We have the same fears, but a better understanding of how things operate."

Whatever the future holds, ROTC students are faced with far different prospects than the average civilian. It is a future, however, with which they say their training has prepared them to deal.

"You don't necessarily look forward to going to a war situation, but I wouldn't say anyone is afraid of it," Pelletier said. "I feel that at some point I'll have to go and I look forward to serving the country."

College senior Piers Platt, also part of Army ROTC, said he and the other cadets are ready to fight a war if called upon.

"It's a very different situation for us now and I think everyone is ready to willing to do the job we've been trained for," he said.

"On the one hand it's a little exciting, but it's a lot scarier too," he later added. "Personally, I would prefer not to have to serve in a war... but I will if I'm called upon to do so."

During the year, ROTC students have physical training two or three times a week, a weekly lab period where students participate in a variety of activities, ranging from listening to guest speakers to more training.

Despite the events of Sept. 11, however, the training programs have remained unchanged.

After graduation, ROTC students go through several months of basic training before going to a school for specialized training based on their chosen career path. They are then assigned to four years of active duty followed by another four years of service with the reserves.

"When they get their commission, depending on their career path... they go on to their follow-on school," Chief of Naval Education and Training spokeswoman Michele Harrison said. "They have follow-on training that they have to go into before they go into the operation side of things. That hasn't changed."

Remember! News meeting tonight at 5:30.
If you already write for News or you'd like to, be at the meeting!

Your mother always said that nothing in life is free.
There is an exception.

FREE RIDES ON HALLOWEEN
Call 374-7532
10pm-4am
Rides are free to everyone whether you are in no condition to drive or just don't want to walk home in the cold
Sponsored by MERCYhouse – www.knowmercy.org

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Taliban opposition:
it needs our help

The Afghans are asking for our help. Yeah, that's right. Everyone has seen the children holding toy guns and the citizens dancing and burning American flags while the World Trade Center buildings collapsed into rubble. How many people realize that not everyone in Afghanistan is happy with the Taliban government, and is in fact asking for American support to overthrow it?

A group resisting Taliban rule in Afghanistan has put out a plea: "We will need American help."

While the United States does need to be extremely cautious in any kind of serious military advancement, certain missions are worth pursuing. Opposition leaders met Sunday to plan an all out offensive on the northern Afghan city of Mazar-e-Sharif. According to these leaders, capturing the city would give opposition groups a chance to arm the poorly equipped Afghans opposed to the Taliban. The leaders also consider it vital to carry this mission out in the next few weeks, before winter hits.

Taliban opposition has asked for heavy United States air support, a request that the United States could fill without question. Hastily landing troops is premature, but providing air assistance to Afghan opposition groups is important. This is their country, too.

No one wants another Vietnam, and the United States has done a good job of teetering at the edge of that line so far without crossing it. Landing thousands of ground troops and involving ourselves in guerilla warfare does not benefit us – it's a war that we probably cannot win without heavy casualties, heartache and pain.

Bombing so far has not accomplished much in the scheme of things. As a nation we are not bombing Afghanistan only to make the "we're mad" point – we're supposed to be doing it as the first step in rooting out terrorism and squashing it. Helping the opposition forces in capturing Mazar-e-Sharif is a good beginning to finding what the United States has been looking for: justice. As long as the Taliban remains in power, the threat of terrorism will never diminish. The opposition is not asking for the world, and they're not even asking for ground troops. Helping them capture Mazar-e-Sharif is in our best interests.

Information from Boston.com was used in the writing of this editorial.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial staff.

Your guide to Halloween stardom

MELODY ZAGAMI

Kids, Halloween is right around the corner. Do you even have a costume picked out yet? I bet you don't. I bet you're going to wait until the last minute, grab something lying around the apartment, throw it on and pass it off as a "costume." As College students, you can't really afford to go to the K-mart or Wal-mart and get one of those plastic bag jobbies. Those are unoriginal anyway. So I, your Tuesday columnist, would like to offer some fun-filled Halloween costume ideas and some tips on Halloween safety.

I'm no Martha Stewart, but I think that I've done enough trick-or-treating to offer a bit of advice on how to have an enjoyable All Hallow's Eve. For those of you who don't celebrate Halloween for whatever reason, whether you don't believe in it because you think it's a pagan holiday, it was created by marketing execs at Hershey's, or you think dressing as a witch is blasphemous to the poor individuals killed in the many witch trials throughout history, I have two words for you: free candy.

Halloween is one of the only nights of the year you can act like a child, be whomever you want and use glow-sticks without looking like a foolish person on ecstasy. Allow me to present to you, in no particular order, my ideas for Halloween 2001.

Tom Ridge – for one splendid evening you can be the new Secretary of Homeland Defense. Costume must include one bold-colored tie, one set of dark eyebrows (Dukakis-thick), a navy suit and one American flag pennant, preferably on the left lapel. I however, urge you to be your own Ridge and put it anywhere you want. If people ask you questions, try to look as confused as possible, and if they ask about your title, just start talking about Pennsylvania or the Amish.

Firefighter or Policeman – I've heard these costumes are popular with the kids. That's great, but if you're a big boy and you're in uniform, chances are the ladies will think you're a stripper. I'm not saying that's a bad thing, I'm just warning you.

Katie Couric and Matt Lauer – this is my favorite for coed trick-or-treating. The woman must have orangish self-tanner skin tone and an adorable smile. The man must look good in an expensive suit and be able to follow Katie's lead.

Tom Brokaw – this one is a great choice for the older costume-clad graduate student or professor. The wearer must be able to say anything with authority. Construct a news desk out of cardboard and attach to the lower half of your body. This costume does not require pants.

Personally, I love the journalist costumes. I always get a chuckle when I look in old scrapbooks and see Halloween photos of myself dressed as a little Diane Sawyer. One year I went as Barbara Walters. That was the same year I got egged and the other kids said I wasn't a "real" journalist. When I was ten I went out as Mickey Rosnes, but the costume wasn't very authentic because I couldn't find a big, old-fashioned stop watch. Instead I got a plastic one, wore it around my neck and was mistaken for a white Elava-Flav.

Dubya – this one's going to be really popular this year, although you could probably go out as Clint Eastwood and get the same effect. The wearer must be able to look scared, sympathetic and in control, all at the same time, which is no easy task I assure you. Given that Halloween is tomorrow, you best start practicing now. Furrowed brow and detachable big ears are a must. There are two outfits you can work with – serious, speech-giving-Bush, which requires a suit, blue tie and shiny shoes, or vacationing-on-the-ranch-Bush, which includes a cowboy hat, plaid shirt, jeans and boots. OOOOH I forgot about Kennebunkport Bush. For this one you'll need boat shoes, Dockers and a windbreaker. These are great ideas – I'm going to market them to Mattel as action figures.

Bin Laden – you knew this one was coming. Costume Requirements: pretty basic – a white turban and beard. Also, the wearer must have an assault weapon on hand and a case of Pepsi. Offer a can to anyone who crosses your path. When you give it to them, denounce American capitalism and tell them it's the "choice of a new generation." This one might be dangerous. "Invisible Pedestrian" is probably a smarter choice.

There are, of course, countless other costume possibilities. You have your basics: ghost, witch, clown, devil, angel, hooker, kitty, etc. Those are all fun and easy, but you're an adult now. Challenge yourself, for chrissakes. Do not, I repeat, do not attach a vacuum tube to yourself and tell people your costume "sucks." That's the lamest thing in the history of Halloween costumes. It's not your costume that sucks. It's you.

While trick-or-treating always go with a buddy. If an old lady gives you pennies, throw them at her. Always carry a flashlight so that you can signal Batman. Check all apples for razor blades. Actually, if you're going to accept apples as a treat you should have a horrible accident. Be careful, but more importantly have a good time. I hope this column has been helpful and will add to your Halloween enjoyment.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

Minuteman not worth your time

The Minuteman pisses me off. No, not the school mascot, even though I'm not too happy with that character either. I'm talking about that bimonthly excuse for a publication you might see laying around the Franklin Dinny Hall entrance in several pieces. You might find it in large stacks, sitting on the corner of the Young Republicans Club table in the Campus Center. Just take my word for it though – don't get too close to that table.

Ok. I want to make sure everyone understands I am not anti-Republican. Actually, quite contrarily, I am somewhat conservative. I do not consider myself a Democrat at all. What ticked me off about this miniscule piece of propaganda was that even though the views expressed in it were so extreme and narrow-minded, it dared label itself "Republican" and "conservative" and "American".

I think this gives real Republicans a bad name. My feelings all started when I picked up The Minuteman for the first time a week ago. Though I am a dedicated Collegian reader, I thought I'd give it a chance (big mistake).

Of course, most of the articles revolved around Sept. 11th and the aftermath. One article in particular strongly criticized the students who held a peace rally, to the extent that it called them "pieces of human debris." What's wrong with peace, anyway? This so-called "American" publication mocks peace efforts and asks its readers to laugh at the proponents of peace? There is something wrong about this. Regardless of whether the peace activists are right or not, The Minuteman not only calls them anti-American but also insults them in print. Obviously the first amendment grants any group the right to demonstrate peacefully. Even more obvious is that the law doesn't grant anyone the right to slander a group in the press.

I continued reading the paper hoping it would get better (Mistake No. 2). One section displayed a list of the top 10 anti-American organizations on campus. This makes me wonder if they have been smoking pot while holding séances with the ghost of Joe McCarthy. Who died and left these guys defenders of America (if that's who they believe themselves to be)? America was based on independence and freedom. Being able to take advantage of that freedom is what it means to be American. If a person can't take advantage of the basic human freedoms guaranteed to him or her by the Constitution, like The Minuteman is suggesting, we might as well shackle ourselves up and start a tyrannous dictatorship.

The Minuteman seems to believe that any group that opposes one American policy becomes anti-American. Well welcome to democracy!

It seems that The Minuteman hates everyone. A few notables from the top ten Anti American list were ALANA, the Radical Student Union, Students for a Peaceful Response, the Graduate Employment Agency and (get ready here is the best one) the Student Government Association. Keep in mind that the SGA was one of the first to put up the stars and stripes after Sept. 11th. Not to mention that the SGA funded The Minuteman while it was getting on its feet.

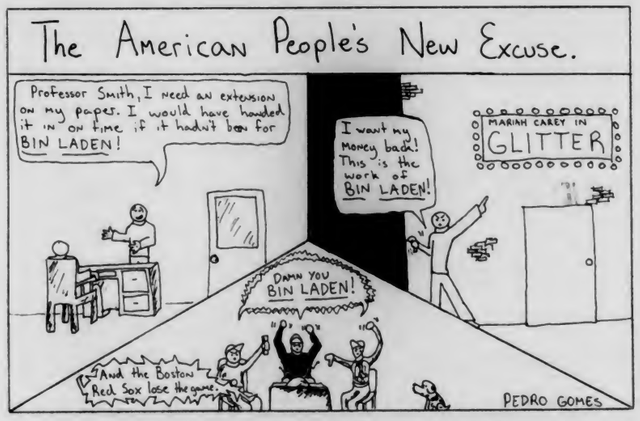
If The Minuteman enjoys making an ass of itself, it is doing a great job. Another section on the back page relates the country of Syria to Adolph Hitler, saying that having Syria on the UN Security Council is like having Hitler at the Allied Forces Meeting. This just proved to me that whoever edits this paper is a candidate for the most-ignorant-man-on-campus-award.



To gain a seat on the UN Security Council, like Syria recently has, a country must be one of two from its continent that was approved by the remainder of the continent. So, all the Asian countries have approved Syria as a country that they want representing them on the Security Council. This is a simple democratic principle, but then again, it seems The Minuteman isn't aware of democratic principles. Also, it's about time a vocal Arab country like Syria has the chance to be represented on the Security Council, so it can at least have a voice before their fellow Arab nations are attacked, as usual.

And when I thought it was all over, I happened to stumble on the "Jackass of the Month" segment of The Minuteman. Two SGA members were ridiculed with their pictures being placed on a donkey. This practice is not only slander towards two individuals, but it is downright unethical in the world of journalism. Since The Minuteman believes it can proclaim people jackasses, all I have to say to them is that it takes one to know one.

So the next time you're in the mood to decrease your intelligence or just want to laugh, pick up an issue of The Minuteman. You can probably find it on the floor of the Franklin Dinning Hall in about two weeks. That's where I picked up my first copy. Gee, I wonder why anyone would have left it there?

YOUSEF MUNAYYER

Yousef Munayyer is a UMass Student.

First Baltazar, then who?

It sucks when you contradict yourself. I particularly hate it because it makes me look like I have no convictions and can be easily persuaded into anything, which in most cases, is untrue. However, there are times when I do have to admit that things I would usually cheer for instead enrage me.

A few weeks back, I wrote an article proclaiming the glories of big business. I meant everything I said in that article, and I still feel that most big businesses are a healthy and welcome part of our society. In some industries though, when big businesses work together towards the common bad, rather than competing against each other, we as consumers lose.

To most people, radio is not a business. Radio is simply entertainment in your car, your dorm room, or wherever you want to hear music. I too love to listen to the music, but I also see radio as a business and as an art form. The problem: business and art usually don't mix.

Radio since its infancy has been about creativity and style. Since the days of playing music on the radio began, there was always a personality behind the music – the disc jockey. DJs can become so famous that nationwide most people know who they are, whether it's Rick Dees and Casey Kasem, or their ancestors Alan Freed and Wolfman Jack. As a DJ myself, I know about all the hard work and practice that goes into sounding good on the air. One must get their style down and constantly practice how they are going to sound on the air so that it comes out just right. I could go into all the little details, but really that's not the point of this article.

As long as there have been unique personalities in radio, there has also been the business aspect. Radio is one of the more lucrative industries in America for those who make it big, both in front of and behind the microphone. Radio stations used to be owned by tons of small companies, as there were government limits on how many stations in a given market one owner could control. Within the past decade the restrictions have been severely loosened, and thus, certain companies have ballooned to gigantic size. Radio is now, for the most part, controlled by a number of large nationwide owners.

The list includes such names as Infinity (part of the CBS-Viacom empire), Cox, Citadel, Entercom, Saga and of course, Clear Channel.

Most of those names probably seem foreign to you, but I'll bet a number of you have heard of Clear Channel. The monopoly Clear Channel has over radio makes Microsoft seem tame. They own somewhere between 800-1000 radio stations, while the largest of the other owners has about 200- 300 at the most. I champion Clear Channel though, because most of the radio stations they run are great stations to listen to. The production is often top notch and the music is enjoyable, in whatever format you're looking for. I've not had a problem with the Clear Channel monster, until now.

Every market has some DJs that are institutions. Boston radio is a very different place if you take away Matty in the Morning, Loren and Wally, the recently retired Charles Laquidara, or Baltazar. Wait – scratch another name off that list, as Baltazar has said so long to the Hub.

Baltazar, the morning show host for the past seven years at WMJN-FM (fam'n 94.5) in Boston, will be let go by the end of February, and he performed his last show on Oct. 26. His replacement, Ramiro, a.k.a. the "Freakin' Puerto Rican", is a more than competent DJ and I'm sure will do a fine job in his new time slot. I didn't even listen to Baltazar that often, as I prefer to turn to Matty. However, the reason Baltazar was let go is what has me so mad. His most recent ratings were his best ever and over the years he had developed one of the most listened to morning shows in the 8th largest radio market in America.

REGAN MCKENDRY

WJMN says that their decision to not renew Baltazar's contract had to do with "strategic conversations and thoughts about the future of the station." That's bull! What this all came down to was a matter of money, plain and simple. Officials at the station don't want to admit it, but the real reason that Boston's radio dial has changed again is the almighty dollar. Baltazar was hot, and rightfully wanted to be compensated for the huge amounts of cash he brought to his employer. Instead, they let him walk.

This is only one example of many that have caused Clear Channel to earn the nickname of "Cheap Channel" in the industry. Clear Channel, owners of not only a ton of radio stations, but also of SFX entertainment, which operates a majority of concerts in America and a massive amount of billboards and outdoor advertising, constantly feels that it must cut costs and it does so at the expense of its listeners. It's not often so drastic as the WJMN case, but there are other, more subtle ways that the creativity in radio is taken away.

When you listen to the radio and hear a DJ, especially one that is identifying the station and talking about local events, you must be hearing a live person...right? Wrong! Welcome to the world of voice tracking. Voice tracking is when a DJ comes into a studio and records all that they plan to say for their show. A computer then plays the sound bites when appropriate, in between the songs, so in actuality the whole show is automated. In certain instances, the DJ may not even live in the area. When I interned at WXKS-FM (Kiss 108) in Boston, one DJ I worked with taped two shows, one for Denver and one for Orlando, once he was done with his own shift in Beantown. Some stations don't even go that far, and just have a computer play the music without a DJ. This saves money, by the way, because the DJ is only paid for the time they spend recording, not the amount of time over which their show is aired.

Let me be the first to state that Clear Channel is not alone in this practice – most large radio companies voice track in some way or another, often in small markets. However, soon the overnights at both Kiss and Jam'n, two of the biggest Clear Channel stations in one of the nation's largest radio markets, will be voice tracked. This is a shame not only to listeners but also to those hoping to enter the field. For as more and more shows are voice tracked to save money, there become fewer and fewer slots for young DJs to earn their stripes so that they can advance in the industry.

There are other ways that people say radio is being ruined by the giant conglomerates. Music has become similar across the market. However, stations still have Music Directors who make choices on which songs will work best in their own given market. And even so, if you can't find a song you want to hear, you can always go buy it in the store or download it from some website onto your computer.

For a radio fan such as myself, though, there is no substitute for the always unpredictable DJ. When I pop in a CD of the latest hit songs, they just play, one track after another, with no question as to what's coming next, and even more importantly, without some clever person doing his best to entertain me. Though this is not an issue to most, it is one that deeply disturbs me, as my view of radio hell, completely automated stations in the nation's top markets with no live people at all, seems to be an ever more likely reality.

For now the casualties are light. I'll just have to wait and see what happens. I hope and pray that things will reverse course, and more local and live DJs will return. All I can think of at the moment is that I won't get to hear any more Jam Scams.

Regan McKendry is a UMass student.

We want feedback.

Send email to:
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

RealityTV: really low ratings

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

If the Nielsen ratings are to be believed, the public's love affair with reality television appears to be on the wane. Over the past month and a half, most Americans have had enough reality to last a lifetime, and with the proliferation of so many new entries, it probably was inevitable that only the fittest would survive anyway. The trauma viewers suffered as a result of the terrorist attacks simply hastened the process – and, quite frankly, that's not a bad thing. Sometimes, the jump-on-the-band-wagon mentality could use a good-ahem-reality check.

Earlier this year, the fledging reality genre spewed one show after the other, with varying degrees of success. The fact that reality television got excessive was crudely defined by coarse language, sex and violence. (Unlike some TV gems, like "The Sopranos", which use these antics with redeeming virtues of magnificent writing and acting, "reality" shows employ these tasteless tactics just to see ratings surge.) But the thought of reality TV, post Sept. 11th, seems even more revolting than it ever has before.

Which is exactly why I have been glowing over reality television's ultimate demise. Since the attacks, Americans are clearly losing interest in the genre's programming, as ratings are down for the fare. As Thursday's "Tube Notes" stated, "Friends" has consistently beaten "Survivor: Africa," a show which seemed indestructible last season. The same reaction is felt on other would-be hits, like CBS' "The Amazing Race" and Fox's "Love Cruise: The Maiden Voyage." Even poor Regis' "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" is loosing steam, and thankfully, the oh-so-annoying Anne Robinson is becoming NBC's own weakest link. (The fact that the inane catchphrase "You are the weakest link, goodbye!" became an instant common-day line proves that Americans are starving for some good entertainment).

The genre was hurt by over saturation – a consistent problem that arises every time a Hollywood formula becomes successful. There's so much reality programming out there, a leveling ratings epidemic was inevitable. In fact, there is not a single night of the week where you won't be able to find a reality show. Sad.

But don't expect the reality genre to instantly fade. Oh, no. Convincing network execs that the trend is over is as useless as beating a dead horse. Heck, even Fox's "Who Wants To Marry a Multi-Millionaire?" mishap didn't teach those network bigwigs a lesson. Moreover, the creative process of these shows requires little imagination. Writers and producers don't have to think up a witty storyline (God forbid!) and the economics of it is incredible. Some stars, such as Rachel and co. of "Friends" command up to $1 million per episode, whereas celebrity-hungry contestants vie for spots on sleazy shows for nothing ($0.000 plus auditioned for "Survivor: Africa"). And since game shows like "Weakest Link" cost only $500,000 per episode to produce (compared with the $9 million NBC pays for one hour of "ER"), the concept of producing reality-based television is brainless. And CBS undoubtedly doesn't give a rat's roasted tail about the "waning" reality ratings, as the third installment of "Survivor" averages a modest 20 million viewers.

Some networks faced the wrath of disgusted viewers over crass programming after the Sept. 11th attacks, and final decisions forced nets to cancel some future reality-based shows. MTV did some of its own soul-searching earlier this year when "Jackass," (following in the footsteps of moronic father-figure "The Tom Green Show") ultimately called it quits in August after a controversial year that inspired several teens to mimic the ridiculous acts of the show's idiotic host, Johnny Knoxville. Apparently, the music network has supposedly opted to play more music videos (unthinkable!) in light of the controversy-plagued

Turn to SOUND OFF, page 6

Banana, Addison & Dispatch: Live on Stage

By Peter Blandino
Collegian Correspondent

DISPATCH
Calvin Theatre
October 21

COURTESY JANA CUSHNER

Addison Groove Project played with Dispatch last Sunday in Northampton to a crowd predominantly from UMass.

A fervent gathering of youth from the five-college area assembled last Sunday night at King Street in Northampton. Anticipation shook the walls of the Calvin Theatre, flooding the modestly sized venue with sizzling vibrations.

Resonating their jazzy funk through the bones of the living crowd, Addison Groove Project opened up the show with a fiery performance. Hailing from Beantown, Addison Groove entwines the improvisational jamming of the Grateful Dead with a soulful rhythm characteristic of James Brown. The combination of jazz and funk, highlighted by the radiant stage presence of alto saxophonist John Hall, mirrors the same confluence of musical elements mastered by Deep Banana Blackout.

But Addison Groove Project is lacking where DBB thrives. Hope Clayburn's striking vocals, in addition to her stunning manipulation of the saxophone and the flute, add a certain intangibility to Deep Banana Blackout, making them one of the most successful bands to emerge from the Northeast. Conversely, AGP's Brendan McGinn's uninspired and dull vocals created a sizeable void in an otherwise fulfilling set. McGinn's performance had the audience thankful that Addison Groove Project's music focuses more on instrumental worth and less on the lyrics. All things considered, the powerful horns, backed by John Hall's stunning display, led the way in a performance packed with funk that affectively got the crowd grooving in time for the main attraction.

The Dispatch sound plants its roots in different genres, creating a sound that continues to prosper in today's music scene. With transitions from jazz to reggae to hip-hop, the band keeps its audience in suspense. The funky bass work of Pete Heimbold will have one jiving to reggae reminiscent of Bob Marley and the Wailers. The guitar work and vocals of Chad Urmston will fill your head with a "sublime" high. The tri-vocalists show their multi-faceted talents by switching instruments for a change in pace. Brad Corrigan emerges from behind his drums to perform dazzling guitar solos as Heimbold replaces his bass to strum acoustic melodies and Urmston pounds out the beat on percussion. The versatility of Dispatch produces a flowing set that is constantly shifting from one style to another.

With the release of a new live album, entitled Gut the Van, on the horizon, Dispatch was fired up for the show. Early in the set, John Hall resurfaced with saxophone in hand for a jazzed up version of "Bang Bang," the title track of the 1997-released album. The remainder of the show consisted partly of tunes from the same album, including "Here We Go" and a crowd-pleasing performance of "Out Loud" that flowed into a medley of classic Bob Marley songs. Throughout the set, Dispatch played to the crowd. Heimbold honored the mainly UMass-comprised crowd for its energy and support. Boston native Urmston praised Ray Bourque for his Stanley Cup victory, garnering a huge response from the crowd. The show was highlighted by a soothing version of "Cover This," that featured the glowing vocals of both Urmston and Corrigan as well as Heimbold's melodious strumming of the acoustic guitar. The conclusion of the show saw the crowd eagerly singing along to the popular hit, "General," followed by an intense encore presentation of "Bats in the Belfry."

Fans in attendance witnessed a terrific show, but I for one am reluctant to say that Dispatch has the potential of reaching luminary status. There is no doubt that this young trio is one of the most naturally gifted and talented bands on the scene, but they lack in originality, and above all, powerful lyrics. Their sound is derived from many great artists, but upon hearing it, one might believe he or she is listening to OAR or Dave Matthews. Dispatch has yet to display anything groundbreaking or especially innovative in their live performances or in their five previously released albums. Lyrically, Dispatch fills their songs with repetitive ideas and trite expressions. These weaknesses should not hinder the young musicians to the top in today's music scene, but they will prevent them from leaving the impact on the industry as such legends as The Doors, Bob Dylan and Sublime.

Please have yourself a 'Bootylicious' Christmas

COURTESY ANTOINE VERGLAS

Get in the holiday spirit with three independent women who have survived bills, bills, bills and bugaboos. And who have survived five ridiculous song references...

Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

DESTINY'S CHILD
8 Days of Christmas
Columbia

Destiny's Child has had a bootylicious, finger-lickin' good year. They rose above inner group turmoil, quietly avoided talk of an authoritative manager and became the world's best-selling female group. And, the R&B trio, made up of Beyonce Knowles (whose father is supposedly the "controlling" manager), Kelly Rowland and Michelle Williams, released the commercially and critically acclaimed album Survivor earlier this year, selling over 3 million copies.

After reaching a creative peak on their Survivor album, high hopes were held for a Christmas record. Few in the industry can harmonize like this trio, just take a listen to their latest release "Emotions" – so much soul and emotion is poured into the classic 1977 disco ballad you can cut it with a knife. So it was a brainless concept that Destiny's Child recorded a Christmas album chock full of classics, ranging from "Silent Night" to "O' Holy Night." Their lilting harmonies could imaginably send these classics soaring.

Unfortunately, such is not the case on the group's venture for a holiday album, 8 Days of Christmas is instead a poorly produced compilation of classic songs (as well as some new tracks). The songs sound mechanical and little emotion or soul is apparent in the cuts.

Destiny's Child tries to stamp each song with their own distinctive R&B touch-a-little attitude, a lot of harmony and a few vocal swoops. But the overall product falls short from the catchy hits they've churned out one after the other.

"A 'DC' Christmas Medley" is inadequately shaped, even with the inclusion of such legendary cuts as "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town," "Jingle Bells," "Frosty the Snowman," "Have a Holly Jolly Christmas," "Deck the Halls" and "Here Comes Santa Claus." These up-tempo songs are poorly mixed and the song's slow R&B rhythm downgrades their secular joyfulness.

"Winter Wonderland," "White Christmas," "Platinum Bells" and "This Christmas" all fall short from evoking any seasonal spirit with their bland production. Little Christmas rhythm can be felt in the songs and the backtracks are uninspired pieces of work.

Each of the women in Destiny's Child was given a chance to step out and show off their vocal chops on the album. Knowles, who co-wrote and co-produced nearly every track on 8 Days of Christmas (just as she did on Survivor) is featured on "Silent Night". The tranquil classic is a beautifully sung track.

Turn to DESTINY page 6

Custom costume suggestions for your last minute needs

COURTESY NBC

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

Boo! Oh stop crying you baby... it's just Halloween! That's right, Halloween is tomorrow – and if you don't have a costume, worry not. What follows is a list of costumes for all you procrastinators and date forgetters – and if you're still at a loss, you can always just dress like a pimp or a can-can girl like everyone else.

Halloween is a time of great revelry on college campuses, which more often than not leads to some serious injuries. If you're on crutches this Wednesday, due to a tragic drunken debacle involving a coffee table and Irish step dancing, embrace your crutches and get sassy. Dress all in white, pop on a halo and wings (but give them a little tilt), draw some scrapes and bruises and be a fallen angel.

For those who like to cry wolf – paint your face blue, and walk around the party clutching your throat. Great hilarity will ensue when people figure out that you're "choking"... just make sure to take it easy on the jaw breakers, for no one will believe you if you actually stop up your windpipe.

Put cotton balls or batting around your neck, and have your head in the clouds.

Dress all in black, cover yourself with those stretchy cobwebs and fake spiders and hide in the corner all night. If a pesky French maid comes at you with a duster, run the other way... or don't, you naughty, naughty cobweb.

Please note: the following costume is not a wise idea to wear to Frat Row. Be Fratty McFratster – toss on a sideways visor, a Hawaiian shirt and a pledge pin. Make up some fliers advertising your latest Pimp 'n Ho party, and hand them out, stick them under doors, or place them on the windshields of cars.

For all the guys out there: be a Babe magnet – stick baby dolls to yourself... or be a Chick magnet and stick little chicks on yourself.

For all Jane Austen, Napoleon, Albert Einstein, or Abraham Lincoln fans – dress up as your favorite dead famous person. Get one of those jointed paper skeletons, and attach it to your body. P.S. – this only works if your favorite dead famous person was buried – cremated peops just aren't gonna work.

Cut out a house and stick it to your chest. Proceed to throw pebbles and stones at passerbys. When people react, turn around, and point to the sign on your back that reads, "I don't live in a glass house, so look out."

For all those with a significant other, be single for Halloween. If your boyfriend or girlfriend catches you, just use the whole costume excuse. (Now I'm going to get nasty e-mails from angry girlfriends for giving their boyfriends this idea. Well, just deal!)

Sketchy boys... need help picking up some girls? Cover yourselves in horns and be horny. Cover yourself in dirt and be dirty. I'm sure the girls will flock.

Sketchy girls... I was going to give you an excuse to get all naked, but judging from the lack-of-costumes I saw this weekend, I don't think you need any excuses.

For the duct tape lovers, wrap yourself in red tape and be Whitmore administration building.

For the academically minded – wear a costume suited to your major:

School of Management majors – dress up as your favorite Collegian columnist – Ken Campbell.

Journalism/Legal Studies majors – strap a poster board to your chest with the First Amendment written upon it. Then spout off what you think about anything and everything. Free-speech kids, it's a great thing.

Psychology majors – this is where I give props to the best costume I saw all weekend – a Freudian slip. Wear a slip and throw on a Freud nameplate. Brilliant.

Biology majors – if you are really tiny, ride piggyback style on your boyfriend's back all night, and steal half of all his food and drink. Your lab TA would be so proud of your parasitic interpretation.

To rile up the Amherst protester crowd, have one friend carry about a "Reduce/Reuse/Recycle" sign, shouting "Save the Paper." Than you, the militant paper hater, can light a paper bag on fire. Have a friend walk around asking people to sign the "No More Burning the Bag" petition. It's a protest Amherst hasn't seen yet! If you don't get this, read a newspaper for Christ-sake.

And finally, for those who loooove the stereotypes, it's time to pick on your least favorite residential area:

Be Southwest – squeeze yourself into some black bootcut pants and a tube top... or get together an angry mob of friends and run around chanting "Yankees suck."

Be Northeast – be nondescript. (Sorry, I haven't met any major Northeast stereotypes yet.)

Be Central – mess up your hair, wear a hand-woven shirt, tie your shoes to the back of your one-shouldered bag and go about as one of the barefoot people.

Be Silvan – put a box over your head... because once you go into Silvan, you never come out. Does anyone actually live there?

Be Orchard Hill – Dress as your favorite Snood/Dungeons and Dragons/Hobbit character.

Have fun this Halloween – and remember, creative is always best, but anything with glitter and a feather boa always comes in a close second.

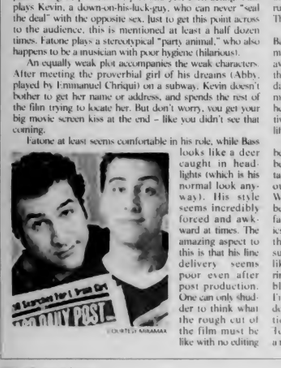
N'Sync stinks up screen

'On the Line' locks originality

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

On The Line
Starring Lance Bass, Joey Fatone, and Emmanuelle Chriqui
Playing at Cinemark, Hadley

If when walking into a movie looking for your seats, all you can see is a sea full of preteen and teenage girls, you know you are in trouble. Such was the case when Assistant Arts editor Shauna Billings and I (she took notes for me) attended On The Line, the new film starring N'sync heartthrobs, Lance Bass and Joey Fat One.



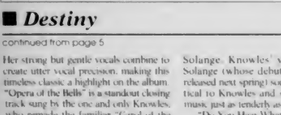
While the film has likened itself to Sleepless In Seattle in its ad campaign, On The Line doesn't even manage to live up to the low standards of the Tom Hanks film.

Sure, the plot is incredibly predictable (boy meets girl, loses track of girl, gets girl back) and the jokes hackneyed (anybody for a good office joke about how the copy machine doesn't work?), but that isn't all that derails On The Line.

The films self-nemesis is its one-dimensional characters, poor dialogue, production, plot and yes, even acting. Bass plays Kevin, a down-on-his-luck-guy, who can never "seal the deal" with the opposite sex, last to get this point across to the audience, this is mentioned at least a half dozen times. Fatone plays a stereotypical "party animal," who also happens to be a musician with poor hygiene (hilarious).

An equally weak plot accompanies the weak characters. After meeting the proverbial girl of his dreams (Abby, played by Emmanuel Chriqui) on a subway, Kevin doesn't bother to get her name or address, and spends the rest of the film trying to locate her. But don't worry, you get your big movie screen kiss at the end – like you didn't see that coming.

Fatone at least seems comfortable in his role, while Bass looks like a deer caught in headlights (which is his normal look anyway). His style seems incredibly forced and awkward at times. The amazing aspect to this is that his line delivery seems poor even after post production. One can only shudder to think what the rough cut of the film must be like with no editing to mask Bass's lack of acting acumen.



When fellow N'Syncer Justin Timberlake appears in a cameo role as a feminine-acting makeup artist, one can only question why Bass, the least charismatic of the group's members, was the one cast in the lead role. Timberlake's performance was seriously hilarious, and there is already talk that the producers of "Friends" want to cast him on the show playing a similar character to the one he portrays in the film.

Another noticeable and embarrassing aspect of the movie is the dubbing out of "bad" words such as "ass" and "screw". To see characters clearly saying one word, while the sound of another comes out is almost unheard of in first run large screen showings of movies. That was, until On The Line broke the trend.

The cheesiest moment in movie history also occurs when Bass begins shaking his hips while standing by the copy machine. The teenybopper song "On The Line" (soundtrack available now by-the-way) is blasting, while the light from the copy machine lights Bass up in God-like fashion in the darkened room. The result is truly an avant-garde film moment. Bass has his moment of Zen in the scene, where he decides to make an ad (how brilliant, he's an ad executive after all) to find his subway lover. This teaches us the life lesson that teenybopper music equals self-inspiration.

Our moment of Zen was when exiting, we were walking behind a group of ten-year old girls giggling after they had been royally entertained for the previous 90 minutes. When did we become such high falutin movie critics, unable to enjoy the simple pleasures of cinema, like a movie starring the incomparable Lance Bass? I'm not sure, but I do have one question, when is O-Town going to have a movie?

■ Destiny

continued from page 5

Her strong but gentle vocals combine to create utter vocal precision, making this timeless classic a highlight on the album. "Opera of the Bells" is a standout closing track sung by the one and only Knowles, who remade the familiar "Carol of the Bells" with the power and sophistication only she knows how to deliver. The title track (and first single) was also dominated by Knowles, who again gives her distinctive touch to the track.

"Little Drummer Boy" was also covered on 8 Days of Christmas, but this time the vocals fall into the hands of Solange. Knowles' younger sister. Solange (whose debut album will be released next spring) sounds nearly identical to Knowles and sings the sacred music just as tenderly as her older sis.

"Do You Hear What I Hear" allowed Kelly Rowland to shine on her interpretation of the song. Passing the baton to Michelle Williams, however, was a mistake, as she faltered on her rendition of "O' Holy Night." The vocally challenged Williams, who was also the weakest presence on Survivor, remade a horribly twisted version of one of the most instantly recognizable holiday songs.

This group was destined to have a flawless year in showbiz. Why did they have to go and ruin it with this haphazard release of old Christmas tunes? Much like greatest hits compilations (which slide like an avalanche during the holidays), it seems as though the group and their respective record label were all in it for the money.

Knowles seems to be the only one peddling the success of the group – after all, she is the group speaker and leader who produces and co-writes most of the group's songs. She attracted an impressive 3.1 million viewers in MTV's "hip-hopera" "Carmen" earlier this year, is in talks for snagging the female lead in Austin Powers 3 and, in addition to her work with Levi's and Candie's, she's inked a deal with L'Oreal to become a spokesperson. So, this singer-songwriter-producer-actress may find alienating the group and splitting off into a solo career a great idea. And since Knowles seems to be the only creative presence in the group, Rowland and Williams should each receive a lump of coal in their respective Christmas stockings.

MSPP
Doctor of Psychology (Psy.D.) Degree
Specialty tracks in Health and Forensic Psychology
Concurrent theory and practice throughout the program
A variety of opportunities for field experience
Highly accomplished faculty
Post-doctoral Master of Science in Clinical Psychopharmacology
Respecialization programs for Psychologists
Continuing Education Courses
Classes for credit for non-degree students
Fully accredited
Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology
VISIT OUR BOOTH AT THE GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL INFORMATION DAY AT THE STUDENT UNION BALLROOM ON OCTOBER 31ST
WWW.MSPP.EDU

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals. Free Drinks. and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

THE ASIAN DANCE AND MUSIC PROGRAM PRESENTS
Handance World Percussion
Glen Velez
Yousif Sheronick
Samir Chatterjee
Saturday, November 3
Bowker Auditorium at 8pm
Handance explores an eclectic mix of traditions and drums to create a feast of dancing hands and singing drums. Velez enchants the audience by the incredible variety of drums he uses, including the South Indian kanjira, the riq from the Middle East, the gavel from Central Asia, the pandeiro from Brazil, and the tamburello from Southern Italy. Samir Chatterjee is a leading tabla performer and teacher in India and the US. Yousif Sheronick has studied the various traditions of world percussion and joins Velez and Chatterjee to complete the trio of Handance
GENERAL ADMISSION $15, STUDENTS $7
WORKSHOP with GLEN VELEZ
Saturday, November 3, 1 to 3pm, free www.glenvelez.com
The Fine Arts Center
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets Visit us at www.fineartscenter.com/asian

Family Values Rocked

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

FAMILY VALUES TOUR
Hartford Civic Center
October 26

The Family Values Tour rocked the Hartford Civic Center last Friday, with Stone Temple Pilots, Staind, Linkin Park, Static X and Deadsy rolling through more than four hours of music.

Opening the Family Values Tour was Deadsy. Sounding like a bad Orgy cover band, Deadsy got absolutely no one into their act, with the arena seats at least half empty and the floor two thirds of the way so. Thankfully, their half hour set ended quickly.

Next to take the stage was metal band Static X. Static X put on a decent thirty-five minute set, weaving their old and new material together. From man Wayne Static "screw". To see characters clearly saying one word, while the sound of another comes out is almost unheard of in first run large screen showings of movies. That was, until On The Line broke the trend.

The cheesiest moment in movie history also occurs when Bass begins shaking his hips while standing by the copy machine. The teenybopper song "On The Line" (soundtrack available now by-the-way) is blasting, while the light from the copy machine lights Bass up in God-like fashion in the darkened room. The result is truly an avant-garde film moment. Bass has his moment of Zen in the scene, where he decides to make an ad (how brilliant, he's an ad executive after all) to find his subway lover. This teaches us the life lesson that teenybopper music equals self-inspiration.

Our moment of Zen was when exiting, we were walking behind a group of ten-year old girls giggling after they had been royally entertained for the previous 90 minutes. When did we become such high falutin movie critics, unable to enjoy the simple pleasures of cinema, like a movie starring the incomparable Lance Bass? I'm not sure, but I do have one question, when is O-Town going to have a movie?

alone like they did at the July Expo Center show. The difference was remarkable, and the gut-wrenching effect to the song returned. Staind closed for the night with the angry "Spleen," the last track on Dysfunction.

Headliners STP amazed the many in attendance that stayed to watch. I'd say at least a thousand teenyboppers left after Linkin Park and Staind, totally writing off Stone Temple Pilots as a waste of their time. Big mistake. Considering their diminishing popularity in the past few years after a few lackluster albums, STP's performance was a joy to behold. They rolled through all the classics, covering most of their best-selling albums, Core and Purple. After opening with "Crackerman," STP pounded out raucous covers of "Plush," "Wicked Garden," "Interstate Love Song" and several others. The tempo on many of these was slower than the album versions, but they were hard, edgy and gritty. No one seemed to mind.

After running through most of their hard hitters, STP switched stages. On a revolving stage with couches, they acoustically covered "Sour Girl," "Days of the Week" and "Creep," among others.

A major highlight to Stone Temple Pilots' performance was "Dead and Bloated." To the crowd's delight, front man Scott Weiland called out Linkin Park vocalist Chester Bennington for the song. With Weiland and Bennington each wielding a megaphone on opposite sides of the stage, the two took turns belting out the beginning verse of the song, in rounds. Bennington then added his snarling screams and vocals to the rest of the tune, supplying energy and comedy with his showmanship.

STP came out for an encore with patriotic colors galore and a New York City backdrop. Weiland came out carrying the American flag. To the crowd's surprise, STP launched into a cover of the Beatle's classic, "Revolution." The song was very fitting and well received. Then things got weird. Weiland did the predictable rock-star thing: he tried to block people. Draping the flag around his waist like a towel, Weiland removed the rest of his clothing. The crowd gasped. Why? Even if it may have been funny to some, it was in incredibly poor taste and tacky. That's why, STP closed the encore with "Sex Type Thing," with Weiland singing wearing the flag. He was then stripped of his flag by band mates and ran off the stage bare-butt naked.

The middle act of the night was Linkin Park. Opening with "With You," Linkin's energy and musicianship were both amazing. The half-empty Civic Center filled up quickly as they hit the stage. They proceeded to play most of the songs on the Hybrid Theory disc that has won them fame. Loud, boisterous covers of "Points of Authority," "Papercut," "Crawling," "Runaway," "In the End" and "Pushing Me Away" got the crowd up and on its feet, with most in attendance belting out every word along with vocalists, Bennington and Mike Shinoda. Linkin Park closed with "One Step Closer."

To make it clear, the music did not command the full attention of the crowd until Linkin went on. Realistically, I thought they stole the show. The crowd got what they expected with Staind – great, angry, emotional music without too much of a live show. The crowd was pleasantly surprised, but not overwhelmed with Stone Temple Pilots. Linkin was outstanding. I for one did not think they would be that good in person. I had written them off as an over-dubbed, corporate group that made good album music. I was wrong. Linkin Park puts on one hell of a show.

Stone Temple Pilots headlined the Family Values Tour last Friday. STP played with four other groups including Staind and Linkin Park.

■ sound off

continued from page 5

shows and in the wake of the tragedies.

I never understood why "The Tom Green Show" was propelled to instant success in the first place. Was Green so desperate for fame that he decided to humiliate himself by sucking on a cow udder, humping a dead moose and daring strangers to wallop him in the crotch with a bat? America (or is that just twisted 13-year-old boys?) finally realized his stupid behavior when Freddy Got Fingered was released to theaters this summer to a dismal box office take.

Although most of the country's tastes haven't changed much after the attacks, it has become prevalent that the nation is no longer reality hungry. As the "Fear Factor" sets in, eating rats and watching complete strangers feud incessantly and paranormally hook-up (à la "Temptation Island"), is no longer a pastime pleasure. Much like the public finally caught on to Green's outlandish antics, so has the country finally realized the repugnant programming of overall reality-based television.

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/MADLEY • 256-0811
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-1 a.m.
Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
CARDS ACCEPTED
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
FREE
VALID TUESDAYS ONLY
Delivery and Carry out
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

With opening tip-offs tonight, Straub breaks it down; NBA style

The Eastern Conference

Up until about a month ago, the Orlando Magic was the biggest story to come out of the Eastern Conference thanks to its off-season acquisitions of Patrick Ewing, Horace Grant and the return of Grant Hill. However, a certain superman-like fellow has shifted the talk to a team that has not seen this much attention since they were called the Bullets.

The media eye will most definitely be on the Washington Wizards this season. The return of the greatest basketball player of all time, Michael Jeffrey Jordan has suddenly made the Wizards a contender for the playoffs. Jordan may drop 30 points a game, but if the rest of the squad were to play a top-25 NCAA team, they would probably lose. Chances are the Jordan effect will not help the lowly Wizards into postseason glory.

Now, getting back to the team I predict to finish No. 1 in the East: the Orlando Magic. Without a doubt, Orlando has the best starting lineup in the East, and maybe the best in the entire league. The key to this team's success is the health of aging veterans Ewing and Grant. Hill will be taking on the point guard role and he will surely pick up a lot of assists passing to Tracy McGrady.

The Philadelphia 76ers bring a new look to this years' squad. Allen Iverson is still the MVP of the NBA, but unless he wants to take the same beating he did last year, he will need to share some of the offensive duties. The defending Eastern Conference champions recently acquired troubled forward Derrick Coleman from the Charlotte Hornets to help with scoring duties. This squad is still tough defensively and will definitely still be playing in late May.

Can you recount which team the 76ers beat in the Conference Finals last year? Not too many people can. The Milwaukee Bucks have the best team in the league that never gets noticed. Ray Allen has turned into a superstar and with Glenn Robinson, they make a dynamic duo. A player that may put them over the edge is Anthony Mason. The recently signed forward will give the Bucks much-needed rebounding help.

Eastern Conference Predictions:	7. Charlotte 8. New Jersey 9. Indiana
1. Orlando	10. Boston
2. Philadelphia	11. Atlanta
3. Milwaukee	12.Washington
4. Toronto	13. Detroit
5. Miami	14. Cleveland
6. New York	15. Chicago

In the late 90's, three teams (other than the Jordan's Bulls), dominated the eastern conference – the Indiana Pacers, the New York Knicks and the Miami Heat. However, their days of domination may have come to an end. The Heat still have a solid nucleus around Alonzo Mourning, but if he is not healthy another first-round knockout will be in the cards for Miami. The Pacers are a young team – except for Reggie Miller – and they will be fighting to make the playoffs. For the first time in a long time the Knicks are falling down the ladder. Their off-season plan to get Chris Webber or Terrell Brandon failed miserably. Now they have to rely on having a healthy Marcus Camby, an inconsistent Allan Houston and very unhappy Latrell Sprewell.

While some teams are dropping in the ranks, there are others that are on the rise. For starters, the hometown team, the Boston Celtics, have a good outlook for this season. Now that there has been a smooth transition from the Rick Pitino era to the Jim O'Brien era, this team is more of a solid unit. The focus has been shifted to the players such as Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce, rather than onto the sidelines. Other than the two big stars, their rotation is pretty weak. However, the exquisite play of Walker and Pierce may help the Celts squeak into the eighth spot of the East.

Vince Carter showed the basketball world last year that he has the ability to lead his team through a playoff run. That is why the Toronto Raptors will be one of the top teams in the East this year. With the addition of Hakeem Olajuwon, the Raptor lineup will be more balanced and their team defense will most likely improve. They will miss Charles Oakley's leadership and hustle now that he is playing for the Chicago Bulls, but Antonio Davis will make up all the blue-collar duties that Oakley left behind and the Raptors will enjoy another winning season.

There are two teams that may turn some heads this year – the New Jersey Nets and the Atlanta Hawks. The Nets made a blockbuster deal over the summer, trading away its franchise player, Stephan Marbury, to the Suns for Jason Kidd. They did this in order to improve the chemistry of the squad. The risky deal will pay off. With a bulked-up high-flying Kenyon Martin and an older but wiser Keith Van Horn, Kidd will have a lot of fun leading the break.

The Hawks picked-up Shareef Abdur-Rahim and he is the best-kept secret in the NBA. They have a triple-threat with him, Toni Kukoc and Theo Ratliff on the frontline and the Hawks will be a big surprise this year.

FULL COURT PRESS with Glen Straub

The Western Conference

A dynasty is slowly forming in the West. The Los Angeles Lakers are going for their third-straight title and chances are they will reach that pinnacle once again. Shaquille O'Neal is still the most dominant player in the league and Kobe Bryant is one of the most exciting players in the league. At any given point, one of these two superstars can take over a game. The rich got richer over the off-season as they picked up veteran guard Mitch Richmond to provide a spark off the bench. It is going to be real hard for a team to dethrown the Majesties of the West but some cowboys may be able to pull it off.

The Dallas Mavericks made a surprising trip to the play-offs last year and now they are my favorite for finishing first in the Mid-west division. The Mavs have new uniforms this year and they have a quality squad to sport the new colors. Marc Cuban did a great job of bringing in new players to add to the solid nucleus of Michael Finley, Dirk Nowitzki, Steve Nash and Juwan Howard. Danny Manning and Tim Hardaway are two aging veterans that will provide leadership to a young Mavs squad.

Another team that will contend with the Lake Show is its in-state rivals, the Sacramento Kings. Chris Webber signed a major deal this summer to stay in Sacramento but he will not be able to play for the weeks of the season due to an injury suffered in preseason, but the Kings will still be the second best team in the West by the end of the season. They now have a better-decision-making point guard in Mike Bibby. Kings management traded away the flashy Jason Williams to Memphis for the more mellow-mannered Bibby.

The Portland Trailblazers had their chances at glory in the past couple of years but the right chemistry has not been there. This year under rookie coach Maurice Cheeks, they hope to find a good balance between all their prominent players. Maybe this is the year Rasheed Wallace will realize that technical fouls are not positive stats. If he does the Blazers can go far.

An always-reliable squad will be reliable once again. The San Antonio Spurs bring back their nucleus of Tim Duncan and David Robinson but there are some changes on the court at the Alamo Dome. Avery Johnson, one-time team leader, is now a Denver Nugget and Derrick Anderson is a Blazer thanks to a trade bringing Steve Smith to the San Antonio. The Spurs will continue to be in the upper-ranks of the western conference.

The elder statesmen of John Stockton and Karl Malone will try to keep the Utah Jazz atop the Mid-west division for yet another season. Donyell Marshall finally reached his potential last season and his scoring will help the aging veterans.

The Minnesota Timberwolves have the best all-around player in the league, Kevin Garnett, and that is why they will always be in the play-off hunt. The T-Wolves made no major additions over the summer, but the combination of Terrell Brandon and Garnett will keep Minnesota over the .500 mark.

The team that everybody wants to watch these days is the L.A. Clippers. It seems as if it was only a year ago that the Clippers were the laughing stock of the league. Clippers management added a great player to their roster in Elton Brand over the summer. With him and Lamar Odom in the frontcourt the Clippers again Shaquille O'Neal is still the most dominant player in the league and Kobe Bryant is one of the most exciting players in the league. At any given point, one of these two superstars can take over a game. The rich got richer over the off-season as they picked up veteran guard Mitch Richmond to provide a spark off the bench. It is going to be real hard for a team to dethrown the Majesties of the West but some cowboys may be able to pull it off.

Western Conference Predictions:	7. Phoenix 8. Minnesota 9. LA Clippers
1. LA Lakers	10. Seattle
2. Sacramento	11. Houston
3. Dallas	12. Memphis
4. San Antonio	13. Denver
5. Portland	14. Golden State
6. Utah

The Minutewomen were closest to leveling the score about 10 minutes after the restart as Bartlett won herself a corner with a strong run down the right flank. Her resulting corner found sophomore Janelle Khouri open in the center of the box, but her header was again blocked and cleared off the line by a Spider defender. Fellow sophomore Erin Lilly, playing for the first time since Oct. 12 because of a shoulder injury, then had a goal-bound strike cleared away at the post by yet another defender.

UMass kept up the pressure but could not get the ball past Samuhel, and soon found itself behind by a two-goal margin in the 79th minute. Again it was a long ball from the back on the counterattack that proved the Maroon and White's undoing. Following a shot off the foot of Stephanie Santos that was blocked, Richmond's Molly Rettig launched a long ball toward midfield. UMass' Sarah Cook and Richmond's Jessie Marino went up for the ball, with Marino winning it before advancing on the UMass net and chipping it over Podhrasky and just under the crossbar to make it 2-0.

The goal killed off any chance the Minutewomen had of mounting a comeback in the match, but did not kill the team's spirit, as they head into the final weekend of the regular season.

"The positive thing to come out of this is that almost all of our kids said we know we are better," Rudy said following the match. "We outplayed them but it's the scoreboard that counts."

Erin Lilly returned from injury this weekend.

Minutewomen singing the Buckeye blues

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

Many states in our great nation have that one thing that makes them unique. Idaho has its potatoes, Florida has its oranges and Kansas has its tornadoes. Unfortunately, Ohio is one of those states that become lost in the middle of things. However, the Buckeye State might now have a new claim to fame to advertise: dominant volleyball teams.

Xavier	3
UMass	0
Dayton	3
UMass	0

The Massachusetts volleyball team found this out the hard way when it lost a pair of matches last weekend in its annual trip to Ohio. Facing off against Dayton and Xavier, the Minutewomen showed glimpses of the dominant offensive performances shown in its two previous contests, but could not string together a consistent attack against two of the top teams in their conference.

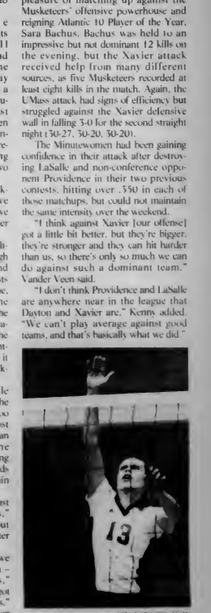
"We expected a really tough week end, since Dayton and Xavier have always been in the top four since I've been here," senior leader Lauren Vander Veen said.

Friday night, the Minutewomen bolted out hard but ultimately fell to a tough Flyers squad, 3-0. The Maroon and White came out hungry against the hosts and competed valiantly in the first game, but fell short, 31-29. However, the offensive struggles that have haunted the Maroon and White periodically this season returned in the second frame, as the visitors registered a .000 hitting percentage in dropping a 30-22 game that left it facing a 2-0 deficit heading into the locker room.

The UMass attack gained a little more firepower after the break, but the talented Dayton team proved to be too much, as the Maroon and White lost game three by a tally of 30-25. With an impressive opening frame, the Minutewomen believed they could hang with one of the more dangerous squads in the Atlantic 10, but mistakes again proved to be their Achilles heel.

"I thought in our first game against Dayton, we did some good things," Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said. "But then we missed two critical serves after 28 points. That shot our feet off."

"We thought we were in there, we thought we could compete with them – we just had to limit our mistakes," Vander Veen said. "But then we just got on a couple bad runs that really hurt us."



Clare Baxter led the Minutewomen against the Flyers, tallying 11 kills and a .500 hitting percentage, while Nitia Small slammed home eight kills and contributed eight digs on the defensive side. However, the Dayton duo of Xinxin Zhang and Katie Ferriell could not be contained, as Zhang threw down 14 kills and Ferriell racked up 13 terminations en route to the sweep.

Saturday evening, the Maroon and White again started off strong in the opener against Xavier. However, the Maroon and White on this night had the pleasure of matching up against the Musketeers' offensive powerhouse and reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, Sara Bachus. Bachus was held to an impressive but not dominant 12 kills on the evening, but the Xavier attack received help from many different sources, as five Musketeers recorded at least eight kills in the match. Again, the UMass attack had signs of efficiency but struggled against the Xavier defensive wall in falling 3-0 for the second straight night (30-27, 30-20, 30-20).

The Minutewomen had been gaining confidence in their attack after destroying LaSalle and non-conference opponent Providence in their two previous contests, hitting over .350 in each of the matchups, but could not maintain the same intensity over the weekend.

"I think against Xavier [our offense] got a little bit better, but they're bigger, they're stronger and they can hit harder than us, so there's only so much we can do against such a dominant team," Vander Veen said.

"I don't think Providence and LaSalle are anywhere near in the league that Dayton and Xavier are," Kenny added. "We can't play average against good teams, and that's basically what we did."

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Senior Celia Wiste

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

BOO
Candles
Incense
Masks
Hats
Rings
Bracelets
Chains
Bandanas
Earrings
The Mercantile
GreatGifts
Visa / MC
Th.Fri.9PM
Sun 12-5:30
Daily 10-6
Amherst-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

Great Student Airfares
available with your ISIC or IYTC
We will Meet or Beat Any Student Airfare
Check Out These Deals
London $195.00
Paris $259.00
Brussels $265.00
Milan $265.00
council travel
America's Leader in Student Travel
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413 256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL www.counciltravel.com

Graduate Degrees with a Cutting Edge
Hawai'i Pacific University
www.hpu.edu/grad
HPU graduate programs provide the tools and skills to help you succeed in today's fast-paced environment.
Program of Study
• Master of Arts in Communication
• Master of Arts in Diplomacy and Military Studies
• Master of Arts in Global Leadership
• Master of Arts in Human Resource Management
• Master of Arts in Organizational Change
• Master of Arts in Teaching English as a Second Language
• Master of Business Administration
E-Business and 12 month MBA programs
• Master of Science in Information Systems
E-Commerce program
• Master of Science in Nursing
Graduate Certificate Programs
• E-Commerce
• Information Systems
• Organizational Change Management
• International Management
Visit the Hawaii Pacific University representative on campus Wednesday, October 31
Ask about scholarship and assistantship opportunities. For more information call 1-866-GRAD HPU or visit us online at www.hpu.edu
Graduate Admissions • 1164 Bishop Street, Suite 911 • Honolulu, Hawaii 96813
Phone: (808) 544-0279 • Fax: (808) 544-1280 • E-mail: graduate@hpu.edu

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

For the best deals when it comes to skiing check out snosearch.com. And for the best ski and ride equipment chec kout extremeuniverse.com username: snowboards password: college deals. CHECK IT OUT!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Dodge Caravan C/V, V6, AC, 5 seater, new brakes, struts, 134,000miles. $2700 B/O. Call Jack 256-4963

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Mercury Capri, red convertible, automatic. $2500 please call after 6pm. 413-549-6331

1995 Chev Cavalier station wagon 180,000miles. Sticker to 7/02. A beater $250. 586-5961

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500.

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$350 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Massprg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

EMPLOYMENT

"Handyman" (maintenance, costodial) $8.00 hr. 549-1578

Japanese and/or Korean speaking candidate wanted for P/T software/sales position. Contact: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA, 01002; fax: 413-549-1038; e-mail: info@remi.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office: get hands-on exerience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.Fluid Visions.com

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning lease? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

4 Bedroom, 3 1/2 bath 73 Amity Place 1/2 mile away from Umass. 413-592-0540 best after 7:00

FOR SALE

Salamon Snowboard 156-550 Like New Call 256-4797 Ask for Dave

African Drums: Djembes, Drum Repair Didjeidoos. 413-529-2215 One World

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

One person to share a room in Brandywine. $231 a month heat and hot water included. Starts January 1. Call Meghan @ 549-5359

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

SPRING BREAK #1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

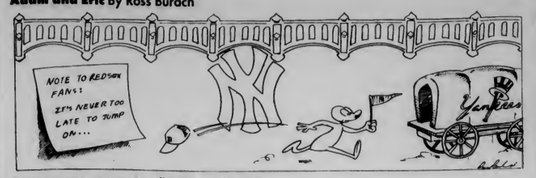
Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (early-birds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.spring-breakdirect.com

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1	HSCN Boston Board
2	CBS 3 Hartford
3	CBS 3 Inc.
4	ABC 40 Springfield
5	HSCN Movie Channel
6	UPN 20 Hartford
7	HSCN New Movie Channel
8	NBC 30 New Britain
9	Fox 61 Hartford
10	WB 56 Hartford
11	NBC 22 Springfield
12	Independent (Comm)
13	UMATV (Academic Channel)
14	WB 59 New Haven
15	ESPN
16	ESPN2
17	CVE TV (Student Channel)
18	Weather Channel
19	Good Sports Channel
20	C-Span
21	CNN
22	CNN Headline News
23	Turner Classic Movies
24	USA
25	TBS
26	TNT
27	A&E
28	The Learning Channel
29	Discovery Channel
30	Nickelodeon
31	Disney Channel
32	Cartoon Network
33	Nick at Nite
34	TV Land
35	Comedy Central
36	BET
37	Lifetime
38	Bloomberg Financial Network
39	College TV Network
40	MTV
41	MTV2
42	VH1
43	The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 30, 2001

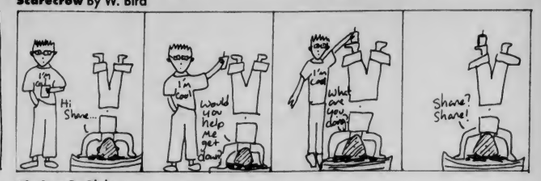
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Sex: Unknown" (N)		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N)		In the Life (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Redemption" (In Stereo)		Guardian "Indian Summer"		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Redemption" (In Stereo)		Guardian "Indian Summer"		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Charlie Brown	Boo to You	Dharma-Greg	Alias "Truth Be Told" (In Stereo)			News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Hothead" (In Stereo)		News		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Emeril (N)	Three Sisters	Fraser (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	9	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "Hothead" (In Stereo)		News	Hsms Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Emeril (N)	Three Sisters	Fraser (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	World Series: Game 3 – Diamondbacks or Braves at Yankees or Mariners				Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	Emeril (N)	Three Sisters	Fraser (N)	Scrubs (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Sex: Unknown" (N)		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N)		News	Nightline
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Charlie Brown	Boo to You	Dharma-Greg	Alias "Truth Be Told" (In Stereo)			9th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Roswell "Secrets & Lies" (N)		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	NBA Basketball: Trail Blazers at Lakers
WTBS	29	Rosanne	Friends	NBA Tip-Off	NBA Basketball: Washington Wizards at New York Knicks (Live)
A&E	33	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Sartor"		Biography: Caligula		Investigative Reports (N)		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Pest Imperfect"
CNN	20	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	23	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Sheen's Money	It's "Mr. Money" (1992, Comedy) Damon Wayans,				Battlebots		Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	28	Wild Discovery: Mountain		Wild Discovery: Cats		New Detectives "Blood Money"		New Detectives		FBI Files "Small Town Terror"		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		NFL Films Presents (N)		PBA Bowling: Johnny Petraglia Open. (Live)				Wonderful World of Golf (N)		Timber Series	Sportscenter
LIFE	34	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Linda Blair"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "In the Deep Woods" (1992, Suspense) Rosanna Arquette,		Real World	Becoming (N)	Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	42	Direct Effect (N) (In Stereo)		Criminal	Music Videos	Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		Real World	Real World	Cheers	Cheers	Dismissed (N)	Jackson
NICK	43	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongebob	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers		Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	45	Star Trek "The Naked Time"		Babylon 5 "Knives" (In Stereo)		Farscape (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Outer Limits (In Stereo)		Star Trek "Mudd's Women"	Crossing Over
TLC	24	Movie Monsters Revealed		Haunted Lighthouses		Emily (N)		Hauntings Across America		Great Books: Tales of Poe		Haunted Lighthouses
TNT	25	NYPD Blue "Lucky Lucano"		Pretender "Jarod's Honor"		Law & Order "True North"		Law & Order "Patsy" (In Stereo)		Charmed "Size Matters"		★★½ "The Craft" (1996)
USA	32	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Recovery" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Missing Key"		★½ "Bride of Chucky" (1998, Horror) Jennifer Tilly, (In Stereo)				★½ "Child's Play 3" (1991)
HBO	60	★½ "Son-in-Law" (1993, Comedy) Pauly Shore, PG-13				Pest Sports				★★½ "Hollow Man" (2000, Suspense) Kevin Bacon, R		Band of Brothers (In Stereo)
MAX	61	(5:30) ★★½ "Bedazzled" (2000)		★★½ "Heat" (1995, Drama) Al Pacino, Robert De Niro, (In Stereo) R						★★★ "American Psycho" (2000) Christian Bale,		"Red Planet"
SHOW	65	★★ "Unstrung Heroes" (1995, Drama) Andie MacDowell, PG				★ "Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2" (2000) R		A. Rice-Feast		Resurrection Blvd. "Anxieties"		Queer as Folk "Adoration"

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach



Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Skybox By Blake

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrod X

Quote of the Day

"You need to know the literary history of a city before you go and run over a duckling like that!"

–Overheard

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
High: 52 Low: 27	High: 50 Low: 34	High: 61 Low: 45

Horoscopes

It was a great weekend for Collegian employees, cool (or lewd) with us. Please Brady@lovesports.com.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Do you dance to a different beat? Does the sound of a man beat boxing drive you wild with desire? Are your rhythms just not panning out? Talk to DJ Surds. Sure, he's the 6'1" Original Gangsta with the Unibeard, but he'll mamamake your lafatantastaes come trattratratrue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Do you have an issue that is plaguing your mind? Did Ken Campbell's last column offend you? If you answered yes to one of those questions, then you should contact the Ed/Op playas better known as Matt and Dan. Remember, if it wasn't for Desprez, you'd never get laid. Reach Dan or Matt at wereallycarewhatyouthink@edop.com

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – "Are you going to bark all day little doggie, or are you going to bite?" Adam, better known as Mr. White, will answer all your romantic queries. On your first date, Mr. White will say, "Alright, let's go get a taco."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Do you enjoy math? How about trigonometric functions? Well, Brady is the man for you. Not only is he Sports Director at WNUA, he enjoys a little hockey of a different kind if you know what I mean, and I think you do. Reach him at Brady@lovesports.com.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Do you want to be a millionaire? Do you want to be a pop star? Is your price right? Tube Notes columnist Kurt Polesky is the former boy band expert for you. Not only can he give you the latest network ratings, he can program your VCR. Reach Kurt "Natural Boy" Polesky at kurt@dismissedinthebestshoewer.com.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Heeeeeeyyyy you guys!?! Sacco needs a date. He's the 6'0" hockey superstar who enjoys long walks on the beach and conversations on how to please you best. Look for him in the Campus Center Basement or looling around town in the Urban Assault Vehicle. Get in touch with Sacco at spotYO@hockey.com.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – What's your fantasy? If you don't have one, Editorial Production Manager Kulak, better known by his followers as Kojack, can draw you up one. He's crafty with the mouse so you'd better watch out! Reach him at 1-999-FAST-FINGERS.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Isn't it time you got down to business? Do you want to "sell some ads?" Give a holler to Amy and J. They'll do anything for money and they know how to work your calculator. Reach them at amyandj@weretakingcarsofbusiness.com.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Do your friends often tell you your clothes are mis-matched? How about that your color schemes aren't right for your skin tone? Style Fite columnist Shauna Billings is the one for you. Not only does Shauna know what's in this season, but your clothes will look great crumpled up on her bedroom floor. Reach her at shauna@ucantdresuerself.com.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Do you hate Amherst College? What about the marching band? Try giving Sam Wikinson a call. He's our most popular model. Reach Sam at thatsamherstcollege@hatetheband.com.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Do you need a little spice in your life? Then you should call Collegian Diversity Editor Jake Liken. He's the only one who can diversify your assets. Call him at 1-999-HOT-LIPS.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Are you stars in alignment? Do you see a power hour in your future? Call Jess May. Not only does she write your horoscopes, she can drink you under the table. You can reach Jess at collegianflipcupchampion@jelloshot.com.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-3626 for more information.

LUNCH

Beef Ragout

Potato Pancakes

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan)

DINNER

Chicken Pot Pie

Cod with Herb Topping

Vegetable Stir Fry (vegan)

California Quiche (vegetarian)

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E. HAMPTON 413-586-8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413-781-5142

ACROSS

1 Tickle
5 Recital piece
9 Family man
12 Soprano Gluck
13 Pub sign
15 Ocean motion
16 Trot or gallop
17 "— Vice"
18 Stratford's river
19 Sarcasm
21 Sloth
23 Spring bloom
24 Use a calculator
25 Large primate
26 Sleeper's spot
33 Works on tents
34 Type of lock, e.g.
35 Big Foot's kin
36 Clapp's Abner
37 Roamed about
38 Bruins' grp.
39 Slippery one
41 Baseball's Tommie
42 Intentional sight
44 Like guys who work out
46 Skimpy
47 Forty-niner's quest
48 Woodlands grazer
49 Window-box flower
53 Ingenuous
57 Type of interview
58 Process cheese
60 Muffin spread
61 Imitates
62 Rabbits
63 Chowder tidbit
64 Curtain hanger
65 Most excellent
66 Winglet of "Titanic"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-0-01 © 2001, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN

1 Poultry seasoning
2 Vivacity
3 Give off (heat)
4 New England grades
5 Kingdom
6 Modules
7 LAX info
8 Pack firmly
9 Plunge in the pool
10 Hubbubs
11 Bears' abodes
14 Copied illegally
15 Sleazy
20 February 14 figure
22 Sonnet kin
23 Amazon port
26 Good-bye, in Cannes
27 Pay them!
28 Falter
29 Neutral position
30 Inclinations
31 Singer Merman
32 — daily
34 Swoons
36 Exercise system
37 North Carolina capital
40 Talent seekers
42 Bump into
43 Scull part
45 Vase with a foot
46 Lassi
47 Goes out with
49 Mellow fruit
50 Canadian prayer
51 Knotted
52 Sheik
54 Ms. Fitzgerald
55 Usher's target
56 A few
59 "— you kidding?"

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician: Jeff Swarts
Copy Editor: Jesse Greenspon
Production Supervisor: Mike Kulak
Production Staff: Jess May, Cara Horowitz

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutemen crowned ECAC champs

Carlos Ramos (right) and the UMass men's water polo team are headed to the CWPA playoffs.

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Eastern College Athletic Conference crowned 12th-ranked Massachusetts men's water polo team its champion this weekend at Harvard University, when a three-goal comeback was capped off by a late goal from senior Evan Lutz.

In its second come-from-behind victory against St. Francis, UMass rallied from a two-goal deficit heading into the fourth quarter, and played inspiringly to beat the Terriers 9-8. The clincher came with eight seconds remaining, on what Head Coach Russ Yarworth called "the best shot of [Lutz's] career."

"He took one from about eight and a half meters," Yarworth said. "It was a skipper, and it banged in off the post."

UMass	9
St. Francis	8
UMass	12
Bucknell	4
UMass	8
Princeton	4

UMass had been showing some signs of a letdown after a tremendous week, in which it won five games, including an emotional home win against Harvard on Wednesday.

The defense, which had thus far been exceptional throughout the season, came out sluggish in the second half, letting five goals through in the third to give the Terriers the two-goal edge.

"We made mistakes we're trying to avoid," Yarworth said.

The Maroon and White began to resemble the team that it put in the water against St. Francis slightly over a week ago, when it was again down by two heading into the final session. However, UMass came out strong in the fourth and finally grabbed the lead back on Lutz's goal. Not to be ignored was the play of senior netminder J.R. VanderWall, who made nine saves in the game for a total of 22 in the tournament.

"J.R. kept us in the games," Yarworth said. "Especially against St. Francis."

VanderWall, who has been brilliant throughout the season, took extra time after Wednesday's matchup with Harvard to prepare for the Minutemen's playoff run.

"We worked with J.R. on some technique on Thursday and Friday, and it got him refocused," Yarworth said.

The Maroon and White also received help from a supporting cast that seems to change from match to match. Senior Mike Foley continued his excellent play with three goals in the effort, and four overall on the weekend. Also contributing were junior Chad Arnold with two and senior Carlos Ramos, who had three assists against the Terriers.

Sunday's win was the culmination of an overall great effort from the Minutemen for the weekend. On Saturday, UMass prevailed over Bucknell 12-4, and in a rematch of a game in which Massachusetts lost in double overtime, beat Princeton by a score of 8-4.

The pair of games were relatively easy for the Minutemen, which received goals from Foley, Ramos, Trayer and senior Adam Moore.

"We were consistent," said Yarworth of the Saturday matchups. "We put together a nice game plan."

The Princeton matchup was especially important to the Minutemen, after their earlier meeting.

"The kids were pretty psyched up for that one," said Yarworth.

Up next for the Minutemen is the Northern Division playoff. First up in the weekend tournament is the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, followed by Connecticut College. While neither team is a particularly prominent foe for UMass, it will be without one of its best players.

"[Greg] Trayer will be at a family wedding, and will be unavailable for the weekend," said Yarworth.

Trayer, who has 40 goals thus far, has been an offensive keystone for the Maroon and White. This will mean a need for production from an offense that has only recently begun to generate goals with any regularity.

Trayer will also be looking to work on the setup for the offense this week. "I'm not real pleased with our counter-attack right now, so we'll work on that, as well as perfecting the [offensive] pattern we're looking to use," Yarworth said.

UMass will be using the games against M.I.T. and Connecticut College to gain good standing in the Eastern Conference tournament, set to take place Nov. 17 and 18 at Princeton, New Jersey, where Yarworth expects to see Southern powerhouses Navy and Princeton.

Women's soccer limps on down the East coast

By Justin Pearson and Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

WASHINGTON — Coming off a deflating loss on Friday, the Massachusetts women's soccer team (10-4, 2-2 Atlantic 10) took the pitch in the nation's capital against conference rival George Washington University (7-9, 4-5 A-10) on Sunday afternoon.

"We heard that they could play incredibly well or just terrible," Minutewoman Head Coach Jim Rudy said.

The Colonials' Senior Day sparked an enthusiasm into the home team that was further fueled by a 3-0 victory over the Minutewomen on Friday in which GW's head coach Tanya Vogel called "the biggest win of [her] career" – a 5-0 triumph.

Vogel had the UMass squad well scouted and played the Maroon and White much like Richmond did earlier in the weekend. Vogel's Colonials overloaded the defensive side of the field, dropping eight players back at a time, while looking to capitalize on a quick counterattack.

"Teams are playing us that way," Rudy said.

The setup worked for Vogel almost immediately, as GW jumped out to a quick 1-0 lead less than two minutes into the contest on a Kim Warner goal that beat sophomore keeper Kelly Sugh on a breakaway.

"That was a wakeup call," Rudy said. "We had some players that just didn't show up early."

The goal put the Minutewomen against the wall early, a place they had trouble fighting out of all year. UMass has not come from behind to win a match all season.

The Maroon and White put more and more pressure on the Colonials throughout the game, but couldn't break the plain of the goal.

"I felt like we were very unlucky in not getting in the goal," said Rudy after standing up numerous times, expecting to celebrate the team's first goal of the weekend, only to sit back down, disappointed.

"It was a case of inches or five taps," he added.

After being pinned back on defense for most of the first half, GW doubled its lead to 2-0 when a Tiffany Williams header sank through the defense to an open Meghan Cracken. Cracken shot the ball into the net, and had the Colonials knowing they had a great shot to beat UMass for just the second time in the two teams' 18 previous matches.

"As we went they got more and more confident," Rudy said. "They played to that team maximized their season potential."

The GW defense was impenetrable throughout the second half, with the UMass attack unable to take advantage of eight corners and to shoot Colonial sophomore keeper and former walk-on Christine O'Malley made five saves and earned her third shutout of the season.

The difference in the game was one, team's ability to take advantage of its opportunities, while the other was not.

"I felt like they had five chances and they put in three," Rudy said. "The other two went off the post."

RICHMOND, Va. — Prior to heading to the nation's capital to play GW, the Minutewomen first had to travel down Interstate 95 and do battle with the University of Richmond. The Spiders, many people's preseason A-10 favorites, were looking to get back on track following a 2-0 loss at LaSalle the week before, and take a major step toward qualifying for the conference tournament.

As it did against the Spiders, UMass fell behind early when junior midfielder Jenna Merriam lofted a hopeful long ball into the UMass defensive third. Two Minutewomen went up for the ball and collided, with the ball falling to the feet of Laura Gincel who beat the onrushing Julie Podbrasky to the ball and slowly rolled it into the open net for a 1-0 Spider lead just 12 minutes in.

The goal seemed to kick start the UMass offense, as both Brooke Bartlett and Katelyn Jones began to push forward and create chances. However, the Maroon and White

Turn to WOMEN'S SOCCER page 7

One last goal for UMass field hockey

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Going into the season goal number one for the Massachusetts field hockey team was gaining the top seed in the Atlantic 10 tournament. With a 1-0 win on Oct. 21st against Temple, that aim was met.

Goal number two for the Minutewomen was going undefeated in conference. This past Saturday, that mission was marked successfully as the Maroon and White used a 2-1 overtime victory over Richmond to propel itself to 6-0 in the A-10 (9-9 overall).

Vir. Comm.	1
UMass	0
UMass	2
Richmond	1

Now, UMass looks ahead to the conference tournament next weekend, when it hopes to meet – a pair of Atlantic 10 victories that would propel it to its sixth straight NCAA tournament.

"We did what we needed to do, and that was take care of Richmond," Massachusetts Head Coach Patty Shea said. "The other part of our weekend was used as a dress rehearsal for the A-10 tournament."

The weekend was not all successful for the Minutewomen, however, as memories of Saturday's victory were quickly erased with a 1-0 Sunday loss to Virginia Commonwealth. It was only the third win of the season for the Rams, and ended the regular season for the Maroon and White on a somewhat sour note.

Only 1:28 into the game, Lauren Sparrow took a pass from Marilyn Baton and drove it by UMass keeper Ashley Egland. That would prove to be the only score, as the last 68 minutes of the contest would see no tallies from either side.

With only 30 seconds left, the Minutewomen had a chance to tie the game, but a Sarah Bohonowicz penalty corner shot was stopped by VCU goalie Abby Stiles, preserving her first-career shutout. Overall, the game was even on both sides, as the Rams managed a slim 13-12 shot advantage while both teams were able to garner seven corners.

"Virginia Commonwealth is a very deceiving team," Shea said. "They are well-coached, have good speed and they put one in early. They came out with fire and held on – we just couldn't put one in. Their record is not indicative of the type of team they have."

Against Richmond it was a different story, as UMass was the one that took the early lead. Lindsay Abbott was able to notch her third goal of the year off a pass from Bohonowicz only 5:36 in, and the Maroon and White took its 1-0 lead into the half.

The score continued to stay that way for the majority of the second half as well, but with just over 12 minutes remaining, leading Spider scorer Heather Rice converted a penalty corner to knot things up at one. That sent the game into overtime, where Kaitlyn Byron knocked home the game-winner off a rebound of her own shot to give her team the win with 11:39 left in the frame.

Throughout the game, Egland shined in net for UMass, making 12 saves and keeping the Richmond offense relatively at bay. The Minutewoman defense was also outstanding, holding Rice to a single goal despite the fact that she has totaled 61 career scores throughout her illustrious four-year career.

"Their strength is Heather Rice," Shea said. "Take care of her and you have taken care of the majority of their threats."

Next Saturday, the Maroon and White will have to take this advice to heart again, as none other than Richmond stands in the way of an A-10 finals berth for UMass. The Spiders garnered the fourth and final seed in the tourney with a 3-1 Sunday win over Rhode Island, and will be looking for revenge when the two teams square off for the second time in a week next Saturday.

In the other A-10 semifinal game, St. Joseph's will match up with West Chester in another repeat of one of last weekend's games. This time around, the Hawks will be looking to avenge a 2-1 overtime loss for a chance to advance to the finals and play either UMass or Richmond.

"We need to clean up our corner unit, balance in the different parts of the circle and improve our communication on defense," Shea said. "But we'll be fine. I'll put our team up against anybody."

Postseason play begins next Saturday with a 12:00 start in Philadelphia.

The Atlantic 10 tournament is up next for sophomore Beth Percival (left) and the UMass field hockey team.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Lit's latest is short on tricks but turns out to be a real treat. Turn to Arts.

ARTS p. 5

Girls, Girls, Girls, Girls. UMass Womens Soccer team we do adore. Check 'em out in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 39 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, October 31, 2001

The ghosts that haunt today's higher education

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Author Michael Dubson met with a small audience last night at Food For Thought to discuss his book, Ghosts in the Classroom. The book is a collection of essays about the current trend of the use of adjunct faculty at colleges and universities.

For Dubson and the book's contributors, the trend is also a problem. Adjunct faculty are those hired by a college or university to teach classes on a part-time basis. They are not granted the perks and privileges afforded full time or tenured faculty members. According to Dubson, the trend emerged decades ago when experts in certain fields, such as business management, would offer their expertise to students by teaching a course at a local college in addition to their careers. But, Dubson said, adjunct positions have come to constitute a career for those looking to start in the field of higher education.

Dubson said he has taught in the adjunct track at a number of Massachusetts community colleges, and that the book began with his personal experience in the field. He said he thought of the book's title when a fellow adjunct faculty member commented, "I feel like a ghost at this school."

He linked the trend to greater shifts in ideas about the purpose of higher education.

"It's become more goal-oriented," Dubson said, adding that students and administrators have come to look at higher education as preparation for work. "There's this idea that going to school is a dreary thing, and that people who are smart are geeks or nerds or teacher's pets. [Because of this] adjunct faculty and students have to grit their teeth and get through [school].

But schools offer a service. It isn't offering a product. Running schools for profit corrupts education. We're turning workplaces into factories."

Only four people were in attendance, and the talk became a discussion forum rather than the lectures usually offered by the Food For Thought reading series.

Leslie Chalmers, who called herself "an unemployed adjunct," has worked as an adjunct faculty member at a number of community colleges in Massachusetts, and said she recently turned down an offer of employ-

Turn to Ghosts page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Michael Dubson spoke at Food For Thought bookstore, in Amherst, about his book Ghosts in the Classroom.

Jhally sets record straight: "We are confused about race"

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

UMass Communications Professor Sut Jhally delivered a lecture at Smith College yesterday on the pervasiveness of racism and classism in American culture. The lecture was one of the featured events of the Ottelia Cromwell Day celebration, a symposium held in honor of Smith's first known African-American graduate.

Jhally's lecture, titled, "Why America Can't Think Straight About Race," dealt with how popular culture affects Americans' understanding of social issues. His talk utilized video clips from films such as Do The Right Thing and Office Space as a way of demonstrating culture's effects.

Jhally began the lecture by answering the question posed in its title. "America can't think straight about race because America can't think straight about class," he said.

He then spoke about the continued presence of racism in American culture.

"We are confused about race," Jhally said. "When Martin Luther King, Jr. in 1963 outlined his dream of what America would look like, no one was confused about race. It was clear to everyone that racism existed and was stitched into the fabric of American life.

"In the [following] period," he continued, "people of good will have become confused. There's a widespread belief that racism is one of those things that was in the past.

"What has caused us to become blind?" he asked.

Jhally maintained that lack of consciousness of racial issues has resulted from a "segregated world."

"When [segregation] is your reality, how do you find out about people that don't look like you? Most people get it from stories," he said. He went on to say that popular culture provides the "stories" that influence racial views, and that the depiction of blacks in films and television shows is exceptionally important.

Jhally said that popular culture has told three stories about blacks. The first of these stories, he said, is the portrayal of blacks as criminals.

In the early days of film and television, he explained, blacks were generally cast as clowns or fools. Today, while the situation has improved, blacks are often portrayed as drug dealers or pimps.

At this point in the lecture, Jhally broadcast a mock advertisement taken from the film Hollywood Shuffle. The ad, a promotion for a "Black Acting School," features white acting coaches teaching upstanding black to speak and act like hoodlums.

"Blacks are shown disproportionately as criminals," he said.

The second story, Jhally continued, is that of black affluence.

"The first images of blacks were connected to crime and violence. In the last few years, there's been another set of more positive images."

Jhally devoted much of this section of the lecture to the impact of "The Cosby Show," which presented a rich, upright black family.

"In terms of black representation, you can divide [history] into two periods: pre-Cosby and post-Cosby," he said. "When you talk to African-American groups, they say that 'The Cosby Show' gave an image of dignity and respect. It allowed people to look at an intact black family as perfectly normal.

"The dead Cosby struck was, 'I'll tell you what. I'll let you look at

Turn to Jhally page 3

Massachusetts struggles with effects of testing

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

As Massachusetts grapples with the issue of state-mandated tests – particularly with last week's release of the 2001 MCAS scores – an independent national commission issued a report calling for the need of standardized tests to improve educational instruction.

The Commission on Instructionally Supportive Assessment outlined nine requirements that states should adopt when creating state-mandated tests like the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) exams as well as the annual tests that will be administered for grades four through 10 if a federal education bill passes this fall.

As part of the "No Child Left Behind" plan, the bill will allow individual states "adequate time for planning and implementation ... [and] may select and design assessments of their choosing," according to the U.S. Department of Education website.

University of Massachusetts Professor Stephen G. Sireci of the Research Evaluation Methods Program and the Center for Educational Assessment in the School of Education is one of the 10 volunteer members who comprise the

"These are the days of accountability," Sireci said, noting the Congressional bi-partisan support of educational testing coupled with the implementation of exams such as the MCAS. The MCAS has attracted some negative response from the parent and teacher communities, which leads him to believe that "there's a real need to educate the public about the strengths and weaknesses of the tests.

"I'm seeing the need to bridge to gap between psychometrics and the public, in general and in particular the educational policymakers," he added.

The Commission's report aims at educational policy makers, in particular state board of education and affiliated politicians. In addition, Sireci believed that the report should be "embraced" by test developers and teachers as well. In fact, the largest teacher's union in the U.S., the National Education Association, has already endorsed the document.

Sireci added that parents and other stake holders in the educational process would be find the report useful.

"There's the goal of helping all students grow intellectually and grow in terms of their educational achievement – who can argue with that?" he said.

Among the nine requirements, the Commission suggests that states must prioritize their curriculum and content standards because it is improbable to create a statewide test to measure the entire curriculum. When the state implements a testing program, Sireci clarified, they should also implement professional development activities for teachers.

Professional development is important because approximately one-third of teacher's jobs involve tests – developing, scoring, interpreting and preparing students for tests – and yet there is very little training, according to Sireci. He noted that the UMass School of Education, which trains many teachers for the state, has no course requirement on testing.

The report also outlines that the tests must adhere to the professional standards of the education field. These standards could stick directly to the Education and Psychological Standards compiled by the American Psychological Association, the American Educational Research Association and the National Council on Measurement in Education.

In light of the "No Child Left Behind" legislation, one of things the Massachusetts Board of Education will have to think about is how they are going to incorporate the MCAS into the new state mandated program, Sireci explained. In light of the Commission's guidelines, he said "[The BOE] will be able to develop tests that will be more relevant to instructional improvement, that will foster professional development for teachers, and that will probably be more cost effective."

The MCAS exam results show progress in every ethnic group, narrowing the gap between white and Asian students and their black and Hispanic classmates, but the minority group scores remain low, according to both the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald. Sireci lends this fact to the lack of educational sources and socio-economic issues.

While critics state that the MCAS is biased towards particular groups, Sireci said, "I think it's more of a socio-economic issue than a Massachusetts issue."

The high rate of failure of high school sophomores (37 percent of the black population, 29 percent of Hispanics, 68 percent of Asians and 77 percent of white students passed both the English and math sections of the exam) according to Sireci is due to a lack of educational resources. This includes starting education too late with respect to learning to read, someone at home to work on academic skills, proper resources in the schools such as books, adequate classrooms, reasonable class sizes and trained quality instructors.

"The problem is that there's a disconnect between teachers and parents and the Board of Education on the utility of the MCAS and how students should be tested," Sireci said. He added that if these groups were working together with a goal of keeping MCAS' strengths and working on its limitations, there would be a better success rate.

Sireci believes that the MCAS is a high-quality exam and is doing a good job. He also backs the state's determination with the test.

"The state is being served a hard line because people are saying 'You failed 80 percent of the black students in the state' and the state is saying 'That's right, it's about time people are paying attention to this particular problem,'" he said.

The Commission was created by the American Association of School Administrators, the National Association of Elementary School Principals, the National Association of Secondary School Principals, the National Education Association and the National Middle School Association.

The full report can be found online at www.aasa.org.

Nine requirements that must be met to ensure a responsible educational assessment system for the improvement of learning:

Requirement 1: A state's content standards must be prioritized so support effective instruction and assessment.

Requirement 2: A state's high-priority content standards must be clearly and thoroughly described so that the knowledge and skills students need

Turn to MCAS page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Just passing through...

The grounds near the Durfee Conservatory are covered in leaves as autumn continues in Amherst.

Junior dies in accident

A University of Massachusetts Journalism student was killed in a car crash early Sunday morning in Royalston. Ashley Beth Softic, 20, of Athol, MA, was a junior at UMass.

According to an article in the Greenfield Recorder, Softic had been driving west on Winchendon Road in Royalston when her car crossed into oncoming traffic in the eastbound lane, went through the guard rail and flipped over before coming to a rest on its roof.

Softic was pronounced dead at the scene after being thrown from the car during the crash. The accident is still under investigation with the Royalston Police.

According to the Recorder and her co-workers at Rafters, where she was a part-time waitress, Softic was interested in art and traveling. She had also had aspirations of writing children's books.

"The one thing about her is she was very unique as an individual," said Winnie Coston, also a waitress at Rafters and Sunderland resident. "She had her own way of doing things, the way she looked, appearance wise, [the way she] presented herself. Her own personal way of coming off."

"She just was really nice and she was quiet, she wore cool clothes, she had a different kind of style," said Jen Mulvey, a UMass BDIC Wholistic Health major. "I know sometimes she'd go home on the weekends to be with her family and she would go home to watch her brother play sports."

Softic, born in Greenfield Dec. 23, 1980, graduated from Athol High School in 1999. In high school she played basketball and field hockey and ran track. After high school she spent her freshman year at Keene State in Keene, N.H.

Softic leaves behind her parents, Enver and Ellen Softic, three brothers, one sister and several aunts, uncles, cousins and grandparents. Her funeral mass will be held at 10 a.m. in Our Lady Immaculate Church, 192 School Street, Orange, MA. There will be a funeral procession from Witty's Funeral Home, 158 South Main Street, Orange, at 9:30 a.m., followed by the burial in South Cemetery, Orange.

"You have to work as a team and she was definitely a team player. She worked here over the summer when it was quieter," senior Sarah Bartlett said. "We're all really sad here, pretty much everyone who works here will be going to her calling hours."

-Catherine Turner

Majors Fair an informational treasure chest

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Correspondent

The Majors Fair, held annually at the University of Massachusetts, provides students with a chance to learn more about the variety of majors available to them on campus.

This year's Majors Fair will be held in the Student Union Ballroom on Thursday, Nov. 1. It is co-sponsored in part by the Commonwealth College/Honors Program and by the Campus Career Network, as well as Pre-Major Advising Services.

"It is very important that once a year, students can find this under one roof – in a rather informal, friendly setting so it's not so difficult to make the first move," said Susan Machala, an academic advisor.

The event, which will be held from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., will represent 87 different departments. Based on totals from previous years, the Campus Career Network estimates that 1,000 students show up for the event.

Information that will be covered at the fair will also include minors,

Turn to Fair page 3

Cultural Events Calendar

FILMS

VHH RSI – The film Bagdad Cafe will be shown at Amherst College's Merrill Science Center A on Thursday, Nov. 1, at 4:00 and 7:30 p.m. The film, a comedy, centers around a Bavarian "hausfrau" stranded in the Mojave Desert with the feisty black owner of a run-down roadside cafe. This event, part of the German Film Series, is free.

NORTHAMPTON – Hillel House will be organizing a group to travel to Northampton to see the film Trembling Before God, which deals with the public debate on Orthodoxy and homosexuality. Meet at Hillel House at 6:45 if you are interested in attending.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Abbas Kiarostami's film Life and Nothing More, about the aftermath of an earthquake in northern Iran, will be shown in Room 101 of Mount Holyoke's Dwight Hall on Sunday, Nov. 4, at 7:30 p.m. This event, part of the Muslim Words Through Film Lecture Series, is free.

UMASS – Warrior and Islam Hopes, a film about the pervasiveness of sexism in today's society will be shown on Tuesday, Nov. 6, at 7:00 p.m., in Room 917 of the Campus Center. This event, part of the Radical Film Series, is free. The film will also be shown at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 7.

UMASS – Video of Noam Chomsky's lecture, "The New War On Terror", will be shown in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 6.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The film Miracle of Marcelino will be shown in Room 101 of Mount Holyoke's College's Dwight Hall on Tuesday, Nov. 6, at 7:00 p.m. This event, part of the Spanish Film Series, is free.

PERFORMANCES

MOUNT HOLYOKE – "Chopping" a one woman show by Magdelena Gomez will be performed at Theater 314 of Mount Holyoke's Mendenhall on Wednesday, Oct. 31 at 7:00 p.m. This event is free.

UMASS – An Evening With Roy Brown and Jose Gonzalez, a performance of contemporary Puerto Rican music, will be held on Thursday, Nov. 1, at 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5 for the general public. This performances dedicated to the people of the island of Vieques and will feature music from each musician's extensive recording career and include a special reunion set commemorating them critically acclaimed early recording Distancias. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

SMITH – In the Fullness of Time a play written by Juliana Okoh, a Fulbright scholar in residence at Smith, will be performed at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 1 at Smith College's Earle Recital Hall. The play deals with the subject of female circumcision in Nigerian society.

UMASS – Folksinger David Rovics will perform songs of social significance on Friday, Nov. 2 at 7:00 p.m. in Room 227 of Herter Hall. The performance will follow a lecture by Michael Albert. See LECTURES/DISCUSSION for more information.

SMITH – "Capacity to Enter," a one woman show by Asian-American performance artist Cindy Sam, will be held on Friday, Nov. 2 at Smith College's Mendenhall Theater Center, in Theater 14, at 7:00 p.m. The play surrounds the issues of desire and identity when Buddhism and American culture collide.

SMITH – Arnab Chakrabarty and Jakir Hossain, two young virtuosi of the Hindustani tradition of Northern India, will perform North Indian Music at Smith College's Pratt Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 2. This event is free.

UMASS – Hundance World Percussion, a "feast of dancing hands and singing drums," featuring an eclectic mix of traditions and musical styles, will be held on Saturday, Nov. 3, at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Call 545-1980 for tickets.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Andean music group Inca-Sapi will perform at Mount Holyoke's Blanchard Campus Center on Saturday, Nov. 3, from 8:00 - 9:00 p.m. This event is free.

UMASS – Israel Horowitz's one-act comedy "The Line" will be performed at Hillel House on Sunday, Nov. 4 at 2:00 and 7:00 p.m. This event, performed by Hillel's own drama group, is free.

UMASS – A session of "Words on the Move," an open mic series for spoken word artists, will be held on Tuesday, Nov. 6, at 7:00 p.m. in the New Africa House's Augusta Savage Gallery. The mic opens to the audience after performances by more seasoned wordsmiths.

DANCES

SMITH – The Smith African Students Association [SASA] will present the SASA Jam on Saturday, Nov. 3 at 5:00 p.m. in Scott Gym. Food, performances, and music from the African Diaspora will be featured, and dinner will be served. Admission is $5.

CONFERENCES

HAMPSHIRE – The New England Anarchist Bookfair will be held on Saturday, Nov. 3 at Hampshire College's Franklin Patterson Hall, from 9:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Speakers will include Michael Albert, Noel Ignatiev, Jaggi Singh, and Cynthia Peters. Admission is free. Call 549-9418 for more information.

RELIGIOUS

AMHERST – Affirmations: An African American Worship Service, will be conducted at Amherst College's Chapin Chapel at 11:00 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 4. The Rev. Dr. Bruce Klick, pastor of Mount Zion Baptist Church of Germantown, Pennsylvania, will be the preacher.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

UMASS – Professors Ann Ferguson and Eileen Walsh will deliver a lecture, "Whatever Happened to Women's Liberation in China?" on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 12:00 p.m., in Rooms 805-809 of the Campus Center.

AMHERST – Chinese writer Wang Meng will deliver a lecture, "Dilemmas of Intellectuals in China," in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 4:15 p.m.

UMASS – The UMass Yoga and Meditation Club will present "Mindfulness Through Breath in Modern Daily Life," a lecture by Kamlesh Patel, on Wednesday, Oct. 31 at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge. The lecture will focus on the issue of mental clarity.

SMITH – Gina Dent, Visiting Scholar at the University of California – Berkeley, will deliver this year's Otelia Cromwell Day keynote address, "The Intersection Between Cultural Appreciation and Appropriation," in Sweeney Auditorium at Smith College's Sage Hall, at 1:15 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 1. The lecture will be followed by group discussions.

UMASS – The ALANA Lecture Series will feature, "The Island of Vieques: The Struggle between the Puerto Rican People and The United States' Navy", a seminar featuring Roy Brown and professors Martin Espada and Roberto Alejandro, on Thursday, Nov. 1, at 2:00 p.m. in the Student Union's Cape Cod Lounge.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Author Jamie Pastor Bolnick will read from her book, Living at the End of the World: How I Survived in the Tunnels of Grand Central Station, at Odysseo Bookshop on Thursday, Nov. 1, at 7:00 p.m. The shop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

UMASS – The UMass Women of Color Leadership Network will present Sex Talks With Kassia, described as "raunchy, raucous and racy conversation about sex, gender, preference and wisdom with you in mind," in Room 205 of Wilder Hall on Thursday, Nov. 1, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m.

UMASS – Viviane Namaste will present a lecture, "Invisible Lives: Methodological Reflections on Studying Transsexuals," in Rooms 904-908 of the Campus Center on Friday, Nov. 2 at 12:30 p.m. This event is part of the LGBT Studies Lunch Lecture Series.

UMASS – Z Magazine's Michael Albert will deliver a lecture, "The Current Crisis: Vision and Solutions," on Friday, Nov. 2, at 7:00 p.m. in Room 227 of Herter Hall. Also, folksinger David Rovics will perform. See PERFORMANCES for more information.

SMITH – Marc Steinberg will deliver a lecture, "Class and Gender Among London Silk Weavers in Early 19th Century England," in Kahn Colloquium Room of Smith College's Neilson Library, on Monday, Nov. 5, at 12:00 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Katalin Fabiyan will deliver a lecture, "Making an Alternative Public Appearance: The Welfare-Related Activism of Hungarian Women '89-'99," at 4:30 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 5, at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center. The Center is located at 83 College St., South Hadley, on the Mount Holyoke campus.

SMITH – Naomi Seidman, a professor at the Graduate Theological Union at Berkeley, will deliver a lecture, "The Sexual Politics of the Modern Hebrew Revival," in Room 207 of Smith College's Seelye Hall on Monday, Nov. 5, at 4:30 p.m.

UMASS – Howard Zinn, author of "A People's History of the United States," will deliver a lecture in the Student Union Ballroom on Monday, Nov. 6, at 7:00 p.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts; operations costs are covered by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the other half of the College Signal in 1890; the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Everyday Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a periodic publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays, between 7:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Gargamia Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gitczec-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

Your mother always said that nothing in life is free.

There is an exception.

FREE RIDES ON HALLOWEEN
Call 374-7532
10pm-4am

Rides are free to everyone whether you are in no condition to drive or just don't want to walk home in the cold

Sponsored by MERCYhouse – www.knowmercy.org

FIVE COLLEGE INTERCHANGE

Take courses at any other Five College campus, at no extra cost!

5 Easy Steps
to Five College Interchange

Check out how to walk through the online Five College Course Guide at www.fivecolleges.edu/fcolcc.html)

1. Go to the registrar's office on your home campus.
Cross register during the regular registration periods at your own campus.
University students cross register at the University Advising Office, 614 Goodell.

2. Get a separate Five College Interchange form for each course.
Forms are available wherever you register for courses at your home campus.

3. Talk with the course instructor.
Obtain the signature of the instructor, ONLY if it is required by all students. Most faculty welcome interchange students, although they have final authority for their own course enrollments.

4. Obtain appropriate home-campus approval.
Your academic advisor must sign the interchange form. Other signatures may be needed.

5. Turn in the form to your home campus registrar.

NOTE: All students observe the registration deadline of their home campus.
More information about procedures and other guidelines for interchange appears in the Five College Academic Calendar. Copies are available in all registration offices.

Take the bus to your class . . . It's free!

Illustration by Lynne Rossetto

www.fivecolleges.edu & www.fivecolleges.edu/interchange
6,000 courses, 550 student organizations, 8,000,000 books, and a yurt!

Fair

continued from page 1

internships and majors affiliated with academic and non-academic programs on campus.

"If you look at the list of the groups that are coming to the Majors Fair, it's not just majors; it's also a lot of other interesting programs," Machala said.

Representatives from Library Resources will be available to answer questions during the fair. They provide a useful system of experts for students to consult on every subject area.

They also provide contact information for students, such as faculty representatives' phone numbers and email addresses, which are also part of the search system.

The Majors Fair is also a useful tool in helping students to choose courses for the upcoming spring semester. Class registration for the upcoming term begins on November 9 and ends on November 15.

"It conveniently happens in the fall of the year prior to the week of pre-registration, so that students can learn more about the majors and programs they're interested in so they can more purposely register for their spring semester," Machala said.

Clarkson Edwards, the Associate Director for the Campus Career Network, agreed.

"Certain majors which are more technical and have more requirements may be more preferable to be declared more sooner than others," Edwards said.

Machala went on, explaining that each student that comes to the fair must take the initiative to find out what the major entails before making a decision. Videos, packets, literature, poster board presentations and department representatives provide much of the needed information.

"So if [students] have a question or a doubt about a major, I don't think there is one other opportunity better than this one," said Peter Woodsum, another academic advisor at the Commonwealth College.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Cleanin' up

As the leaves fall from the trees, the UMass grounds crew is out in full force cleaning them up.

MCAS

continued from page 1

to demonstrate competence are evident.

Requirement 3: The results of a state's assessment of high-priority content standards should be reported standard-by-standard for each student, school, and district.

Requirement 4: The state must provide educators with optional classroom assessment procedures that can measure students' progress in attaining content standards not assessed by state tests.

Requirement 5: A state must monitor the breadth of the curriculum to ensure that instructional attention is given to all content standards and subject areas, including those that are not assessed by state tests.

Requirement 6: A state must ensure that all students have the opportunity to demonstrate their achievement of state standards; consequently, it must provide well-designed assessments appropriate for a broad range of students, with accommodations and alternate methods of assessment available for students who need them.

Requirement 7: A state must generally allow test developers a minimum of three years to produce statewide tests that satisfy Standards for Educational and Psychological Testing and similar test-quality guidelines.

Requirement 8: A state must ensure that educators receive professional development focused on how to optimize children's learning based on the results of instructionally supportive assessments.

Requirement 9: A state should secure evidence that supports the ongoing improvement of its state assessments to ensure those assessments are (a) appropriate for the accountability purposes for which they are used, (b) appropriate for determining whether students have attained state standards, (c) appropriate for enhancing instruction, and (d) not the cause of negative consequences.

Taken from the "Building Tests to Support Instruction and Accountability: A Guide for Policy Makers" prepared by the Commission on Instructionally Supportive Assessment released on Oct. 23, 2001

Jhally

continued from page 1

a black family every week. But I'll never once remind you of the reality of race in America," Jhally said.

"Some people said he made [his characters] white," Jhally added. "That isn't true. But he made them 'normal' by making them middle-class. On television, to be normal means to be middle-class. In order to survive on television, Cosby had to present an abnormal version of black life."

The third story, Jhally said, is "the story of absence."

"This is a story of classlessness," Jhally said. "This is the story of the American dream, which tells us that class does not exist."

Jhally explained that Americans are taught that class barriers are always surmountable.

"Our dream says that while some are born rich and others are born poor, the playing field is level," he said. "Anyone, if they work hard, can make it. But that's the opposite of what any social scientist will tell you."

By examining these three stories, he said, one can draw three conclusions about black poverty.

"The first conclusion is that it's racism – that there are racial, legal and political barriers. But there are a lot of black billionaires. If racism is the only problem[, all blacks should be in the same place.

"The second conclusion," Jhally continued, "is classism – and that's the answer I would give. Racial barriers put blacks where they are, but classism keeps them there."

The third possible conclusion, Jhally said, is that black culture promotes failure.

"We're much too sophisticated to say it's a matter of genes," Jhally said. "So people say there's something 'about' black culture – which is no different than saying it's something about blacks themselves.

"The only way to explain the existence of the black underclass is through the class perspective," Jhally concluded. "The Cosby Show was one step forward and one step back. The one step forward was dignity and respect. The two steps back was the attitude that, 'if the Huxtables can make it, why can't the rest of them?'"

At the conclusion of his lecture, Jhally opened the floor to questions and comments from the audience. One attendee made a statement about the prevalence of racism among even the uppermost classes.

"I want to push you on the intersect between race and class," said Brenda Allen, a professor of Psychology at Smith. "Just because you have achieved class status doesn't mean that you have escaped racism."

"I hope that in nothing I've said I've given the impression that racism doesn't exist," responded Jhally. "Racism still operates. But it doesn't explain everything."

Jhally's lecture received an extended ovation. Most audience feedback was positive.

"What Professor Jhally is arguing for is a complete reading of experiences," said Andrea Harrison, a professor of Theater at Smith.

"The systems of dominance have been allowed to live among us because our understanding of these experiences is not complex," she said in agreement. "We can not make the changes if we don't know what we're trying to change."

Ghosts

continued from page 1

nient from Holyoke Community College because the pay was too small. "I felt literally sick when they told me what my pay would be," she said. "I feel like [the adjunct system] is a lot of wasted human potential."

Chalmers, like Dubson, linked these problems to societal attitudes toward education. "In this country we're not interested in long-term human investment," she said. "We're interested in the short-term bottom dollar."

Adam Zerda, a doctoral candidate in Polymer Science and Engineering at UMass, said that he felt that adjunct positions were necessary. "Not every teacher can be tenured," he said.

Once the realities of adjunct faculty employment were discussed, the question of how to reform the current system of higher education was explored by the group.

Dubson said that employees of colleges and universities had to mobilize and organize. He cited a 1998 campaign by faculty at UMass-Boston, which resulted in better pay and the granting of benefits to adjunct and part-time faculty members there. Dubson said that at UMass-Boston, students also aided in the effort, which included marches, demonstrations and petitions. Since then, he said, the state legislature and teaching organizations have been doing more to resolve the problem of adjunct faculty. "I think that state schools will be the leaders in cleaning up the problem," he said. "They have more unions and more students."

Chalmers said she disagreed. "Reform has to come from the consumer – the students and the parents of the traditional-aged students that are paying a lot of money for tuition."

Zerda said he felt that change had to come from the employees that Dubson and Chalmers described as "used and exploited" by administrators. "There is a tendency to treat adjunct faculty as less than regular faculty," he said. "But what do you want? Is it equal pay for equal work? Adjunct faculty aren't doing equal work. I've never really seen being adjunct as a career. In my opinion you shouldn't expect to be full time.

"Adjunct faculty is a problem, but on the other side of the coin – you're not working full time, and you're not supposed to," he went on. "You're thinking it's a career and it's not supposed to be a career."

Dubson said that he partially agreed with Zerda, but that the problem is that adjunct positions have become the only option for those seeking a career as educators.

"You are right to some extent on this—it was never supposed to be a career," Dubson replied. "But when you train for this career and when you get out of college, what else are you supposed to do?"

Zerda said he still felt that administrators should not carry all of the blame for that system. "It's not purely an administrative problem," Zerda said. "Things should be done in such a way that they don't hire adjunct faculty to do this job."

"Bingo," Chalmers responded.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?

Come to the MAJORS FAIR!

Thursday, November 1, 2001
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 70 departments & programs in one location.

Sponsored by Pre-Major Advising Services, The Commonwealth College, & The Campus Career Network

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?

YANKEE

-DISCOUNT OIL-

NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888

• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

STUDENT TRAVEL

FREEDOM

Freedom to travel will never be compromised.

STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 5, LAST SEATING AT 9

AMHERST'S HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.

TUESDAY KARAOKE 80s MUSIC! HOSTED BY STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS	FRIDAY RED BULL PROMOTER: PIMP AND HOE PARTY W/ DJS DON DONS & IRON
WEDNESDAY 80s HALLOWEEN PARTY! "NO COVER" WEAR A COSTUME	SATURDAY HIP HOP/ REGGAE W/DJ TRENDZ
THURSDAY STRAIGHT HIP HOP NO CHASER W/DJs OOC AND SAMMY NEEDLES	SUNDAY DRUM & BASS

SORRY, NO LONGER DOING SUNDAY BRUNCH. ALL COUPONS HONORED AT DINNER.

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!

THURSDAY
40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
sco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
tro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.

NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Halloween: put real fears aside

Halloween has long been a favorite holiday among people of all ages. It represents an opportunity to get dressed up and, most of all, have access to a large amount of free candy. But with the current anthrax scares sweeping the nation and a prevailing fear of anthrax showing up in Halloween candy, a lot of people seem to be opting out of Halloween completely.

Many present the explanation that the fear of anthrax in candy makes trick-or-treating a dangerous process and that the recent terrorist attacks make it dangerous to even open your door to a stranger. Although it is always a good idea to exercise caution in the face of new and potentially problematic situations, to change your life because of fear eliminates the fun from the holiday and teaches children that terrorism has won. While changing your habits may be a sign of necessary precaution, changing your life is not. Staying close to home and only taking candy from those you know may be in order, however refusing to allow anyone in and out of your house may be going a bit overboard.

Dangers surrounding Halloween and candy have been prevalent in the past as well. At times parents have gone to such lengths as to scan their children's candy in x-ray machines at local hospitals in order to search for razor blades embedded within. While those were a way to make many feel safer, often times there were no dangers to be found in the candy. Furthermore, the chances are relatively unlikely that Anthrax will be found in candy at all, or at least no more so than in other types of food.

Other fears have surrounded Halloween following the September 11 attacks as well. For example, a number of emails have gone out warning against entering shopping malls on the 31st for fear that they may be bombed or attacked. While this is likely just a simple hoax like so many others that have sprung up in the wake of the attacks, the threat has permeated society and caused people fear.

The attacks made it more obvious that the United States is vulnerable to terrorism. Yet facing this by changing our lives, refusing to go to shopping malls and visit retail establishments only weakens our economy. It gives terrorists what they were looking for, a chance to scare the American people into submission and a way to destroy the things that we enjoy such as holidays.

While safety is always a valid concern, changing the way that we live our lives is not an option. By going outside on Halloween and stepping into shopping malls, the American people are overcoming their fear of terrorism and making yet another step towards healing the damage that the attacks caused.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

If you want to bite for ed/op, come down to Campus Center Dungeon and talk to Matt or Dan!

The ceiling over our heads

BILL LARKIN

I have the solution to our ALANA retention problems.

If the University of Massachusetts wants to foster the academic success of all its students, then it should obtain Osama bin Laden and George W. Bush to advertise in its recruitment department. I cannot imagine who could inspire more interest in the fields of academia offered by a college or university. Biology. Theology. Economics. Have not the actions authorized by these two individuals piqued the country's interest and demonstrated its ineptness in such fields?

For me, the events of the past two months have turned the focus of my heart's eye away from the media. No matter how many reporters cover Pentagon briefings, no matter how many international television stations broadcast the diatribe of bin Laden, they will never uncover the roots of this crisis.

I know not of a writer with the literary ability to convey the atrocity of a military occupation to a society whose members have never feared traveling on a bus, have never seen their homes leveled by a helicopter, and have never languished in a refugee camp. As demonstrated by the American public's unwillingness to accept the responsibility of its government's actions and refusal to demand peace, any authors of this nonfiction would waste words on their audience. Perhaps some Vietnam veterans might remember the sleepless nights they spent on the Hanoi streets, but even they cannot imagine watching invading soldiers overrun their towns, rape their daughters, and shoot their sons.

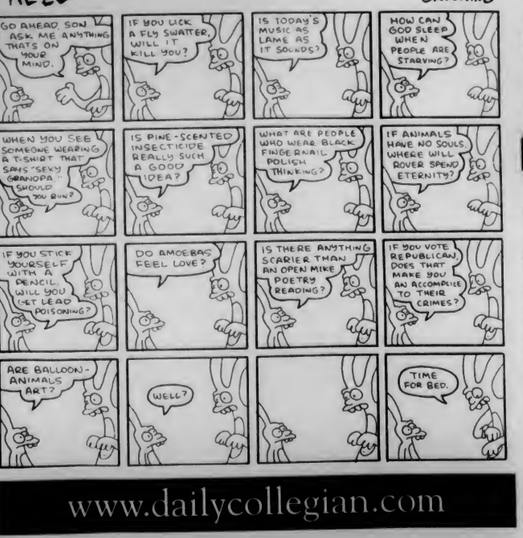
Therefore, instead of investing my talents in journalism and political science, I wish, at least for now, that I had used the university to study psychology and philosophy. However awful, wartime reflects the most insightful view into human nature, forcing us to clarify our beliefs and form allegiances beyond the doubt of question. As bombs cleanse trenches and mortar shells shatter limbs, a juxtaposition of black against white supercedes the irresolute grayness maintained in affluent civilizations draped in ambiguity.

Since January, the Al Qaeda group and the U.S. military have corrupted the planet's skies, transforming the azure breath of the planet's lungs into a platform of murder. The majority of this country supports the extension of this loss of life, the slaughter of civilians and the death of troops both domestic and foreign, thereby ranking the integrity of human life in a series of hierarchies separated by geography, affluence, ethnicity, gender, and religious beliefs.

"...America has dissected the earth by refusing to accept the common bonds of humanity, valuing the lives of the English-speaking world over its Arabic counterpart."

The U.S., Afghanistan, and the Al Qaeda group share responsibility in this congregation of death. I dare not label America as the only perpetrator of human loss and suffering. Yet I direct my criticism toward this country alone, as it represents the wealthiest possessor of the resources required to stop this vicious cycle. America has chosen to define greatness as military strength, economic ruthlessness, and moral insensitivity. Apparently, greatness does not include forgiveness, compassion, and understanding. A great nation, according to the model served by America, has the power to squash instead of the power to uplift. Those warmongers who would promote revenge over civility, fixate a ceiling of loveless savagery over our heads, under which we cannot see the sky.

The futility of the fight between Afghanistan and the west represents the most lamentable aspect of this reality. Never before has a nation responded to a large terrorist or state-sponsored attack on its soil with understanding and concession. Instead of promoting the moral fortitude required to attempt an unprecedented campaign for peace, the US continues to wage a war it will not win.



Even if America manages to evict the Taliban from power and capture Al Qaeda, it will not end the existence of terrorism. The members of bin Laden's organization have displayed an unquestionable willingness to die for their cause. If, in their minds, they are already dead, then what will jailing or executing them accomplish? By declaring war on Afghanistan, all America might do is elevate the Northern Alliance, a group no less corrupt than the current regime, and encourage further chaos in a region already scathed at our presence within its borders.

Although a diplomatic approach to resolving the conflict might not satisfy the Middle East, it would accomplish no less than the war machine. It might even raise standards of global civility. Nevertheless, America has dissected the earth by refusing to accept the common bonds of humanity, valuing the lives of the English-speaking world over its Arabic counterpart. Yet one nation cannot divide mankind so easily. When the self-eroding sensibility spawned over time when some profit at the labor of others necessitates revenge, human nature reveals itself. As creatures of guilt, we require the self-assurance provided by dominance to survive. As creatures of need, they exhibit desperation and jealousy through unrestrained reprisal.

Therefore, I would ask the pamphleteers who pander the university to green high school students to recruit the handmaidens of terror who lay in the White House and hide in the hills of Afghanistan. So much enriching and insightful literature could grow out of the harvest of inhumanity sowed by the nations of our earth in the past two months. As we retire the hope of growth, we can dedicate ourselves to a brutal honesty about the peak of our potential, a subject students of any nationality can pursue.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

Stop the presses! Wolf Wilkinson steps in

WOLF WILKINSON

Halloween's a frightful day indeed! Sam Wilkinson, whose column normally runs in this space, has disappeared. Taking his place? Wolf Wilkinson, a newspaperman from the later 1940's.

Graft? Scandal? Corruption?

Stop the presses and get me the front page, Mr. Editor! Do it quickly and do it now, and I'll sell all the papers and the extra press-run! Those newsies will be working all day and the men on the street are going to want to know what's going on.

What do I do? I'm in Amherst what Mencken was to Baltimore, what A.J. Liebling was to New York City: I'm a journalist. I tell ya at breakfast what you never thought you'd read. In all my travels, in each of the local speakeasies, through the grime of the local clubs, I've learned a few things.

The local machine is spinning out of control. Without a newsman like me to show these hoosiers, who would? Think they haven't already caused turmoil? Look no further than our local Coolidge Bridge.

Cianbro Brothers were hired to do the work and what have we got instead? Here's what: snarled traffic, hacked-up passengers, angry motorists, rage on the street, children crying, and everybody on edge.

And for what, what, I ask ya? Building a bridge with four lanes doesn't exactly fix the two lanes of traffic on either side of said bridge. Seems like our town government is more interested in stroking the Cianbro mob connection than making transport easier for Joe Main on the street. State Rep. Stan Rosenberg and House Rep. John Olver? Have they even driven across the bridge since the work began? Have they noticed the backed-up traffic?

Of course not. They're too busy blotzoed in capitals filled with fatcats, all snaking hundred-dollar bills into their sagging coat pockets. Both agreed to a project that's costing 20 million clams and taking two years to complete while at the same time solving none of the obvious problems of the Northampton-Hadley area. Would anybody suggest that our politicians weren't soused when they agreed to this rotten deal?

Stop those presses, Mr. Editor, and stop them quick! If that tale of woe won't woo our seemingly witless public, maybe the following can.

We stuck it to those Germans and we stuck it to those Japanese and the only question for me is when we're finally going to take Osama bin Laden over our knee? And how about some patriotism on the local campuses instead of the knee-jerk liberalism?

Think Franklin Delano Roosevelt wouldn't have gotten out of his chair when he saw a couple of rapscallion youths burning an American flag? That flag is a lot more than a piece of cloth and unfortunately, our rampantly boozing and carousing youth don't seem to understand that. Too busy with their SUVs and color TVs.

The local reds aren't much better. Declaring that we oughta make peace with Afghanistan before hiding behind police guard? Declaring your right to free speech before trying to silence others. Sorry, Jennie Traschen, but Joe Workingman doesn't take it kindly when his proudest flag is trod upon. Perhaps you'll think more before you make your ridiculous accusations?

Say, Mr. Editor, I see it top of the fold: "What's wrong with our boys?" It'd be an in-depth study of our children and where we forgot about pounding a good morality into 'em. How's about "Liberals are Pinkos!" We'd really take it to those Stalin-supporting-lefties. We'd sell a million papers easy, and that'd only be after the newsies hands fell off, their throats closed up, their backs broke under the heavy loads. We don't move papers unless we've printing good copy!

And what of the Little Dig in the middle of Amherst? Brand new parking garage or ugly hole in the ground? Readers, I'll leave it up to you. What I'll do myself is say this about whomever greenlighted the proposal: it took guts. I'm talking a real gusto to think that there should be a giant hole, smack in the center of our fair town. It'd take an investigator like Sam Spade to figure out what's really going on down there, but my sources in city hall say its nothing that anybody would consider up to snuff. I may not be a private dick from the moving pictures, but on the ground and in the mud, I'm a muckraking son-of-a-gun.

Stop those presses and give me a chance, Mr. Editor! Give me the story and I'll keep those newsies on the streets past midnight selling papers to the priests and the whores and everyone in between. There's stories on top of stories around here and the local media only look the other way. Must be too interested in their own causes to uncover the real corruptions. But not me, Wolf Wilkinson's got moxie, a pad of paper and a pen.

Wolf Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

String Cheese tours New England colleges

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, I was treated to three magical nights of increasingly intense String Cheese Incident. As the String Cheese Incident's fan base has increased so rapidly, I was not alone in being hesitant about the larger "arena" style shows the five boys from Colorado would be holding during their Fall Tour. Having only seen this band, known for its tight intimate performances, at small theaters and outdoor festivals, I really could not imagine it could continue to put on such amazing shows in these large hockey arenas. Something had to be lost. Well, I was partially correct. The intimate, more close-knit feeling had been lost, but a lot more had been gained. Despite the larger crowds, String Cheese was still able to transfix its fans with three mesmerizing performances through the use of an incredible sound and lighting system as well as immaculate set lists and song choices.

So the trip began Thursday afternoon as I headed up to Durham, site of my first Fall Tour show at the Whittemore Center Arena on the campus of the University of New Hampshire, whose police are known around New England as being "good at what they do." My traveling friends and I learned this first hand. Never have I been to such an unfriendly venue with undercover cops inside the concerts and outside in the lots. People could be seen getting picked off by these cops all through the show and get thrown out of the venue. First off, this does not make for a very great concert experience. To add to that, there was the fact that this concert did not sell very well with the floor being substantially full, but only about 500 others in the stands. Needless to say, there was plenty of good dancing room. This poor turnout did not seem to matter very much to the band as it put on a stellar performance anyways.

The first set began with an average "Outside Inside," and moved along slowly through a few bluegrass tunes before hitting its high point with a great "MLT," followed by the reggae-funk song "Bend Down Low." At this show in particular, String Cheese varied its sets expertly, giving a great mix of both bluegrass and funk tunes. As the set ended, everyone proceeded to the closest vendor or bathroom as usual. As most fans made their way back to the floor for the beginning of the second set, the building rang with the sounds of fire alarms going off, followed shortly after by an evacuation notice. Realizing that the building was filled with smoke, everyone figured that was the problem and headed out side for some much needed fresh air. The smoke did apparently cause the alarms to sound and the crowd was let back in once cleared. Due to the events, I was expecting a fiery "Fire On The Mountain" or maybe a Hendrix "Fire."

To my surprise, String Cheese began the second set with this roaring opening and chorus of Deep Purple's "Smoke On the Water." It was a very good start, which gave a little foreshadowing towards the classic rock encore. Highlights of the second set included solid versions of "Shantytown," "Black and White" and "Panama Red." The set concluded with a good "Search," sending the crowd into a bout of appreciation cheering and yelping, anticipating what the encore could be. When the band returned onstage, it delighted the crowd with a fantastic cover of Aerosmith's classic "Walk This Way" with roaring guitar riffs during the intro and chorus and slow bluegrass twang for the verses. Overall a good show, not great, but got everybody ready for the UMass show the next night.

I made the trek back to Amherst on Friday morning and waited in anticipation for my first "hometown" String Cheese Incident show. Upon arrival to the Mullins Center, fans were treated to a slideshow of sorts between the main entrance and the small hockey rink. With performers juggling fire and a massive light show, the energy level was extremely high entering the show. The band was obviously excited as it opened the show with a stellar "Searching for Answers" after a short, confusing pre-recorded rant as the members took their spots onstage. The boys proceed to play a somewhat ordinary first set filled with average songs including "Latinissimo," a short "Resume Man" with in-song note-holding contest, as well as the new "These Waves" which might just have some potential. The set turned completely unordinary as the band busted out an amazing "Got What He Wanted" into "Restless Wind" to close the set. Encouragingly, the Mullins Center was decently filled, with a sold-out floor and solid ring of fans on the first tier of the seats.

From the very start, the second set was something to remember. With possibly the best ever version of "Rivertrance" starting things off, my anticipation level grew as the band blasted off with each coming song. Great versions of "Turn This Around" and "Rhythm of the Road" ensued with a phenomenal jam in between. But the highlight came when the band broke out the beginning guitar licks to the fan favorite "Rollover," which played the bread's role in a sandwich containing Paul Simon's "Under African Skies." The transition back into "Rollover" was something out of legend as fans around the venue dropped their jaws as SCI ended the set. For the encore, the band came out with another cover. This time it was an epic version of Miles Davis' "So What" followed by an original "White Freightliner Blues." Overall, this was an amazing show with a blockbuster second set. It certainly whet my appetite for the show the following night at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, New York.

As I pulled into the RPI Fieldhouse's parking lot, I was pleasantly surprised to see the best parking lot scene yet. The seventy cold weather did not keep people in their cars, as they walked around and enjoyed all the hedonistic pleasures of the lot scene.

The pleasure only continued inside as the renowned jazz trio Medeski, Martin and Wood was opening. Whether it was simply MMW or some other reason, the Troy show was the most attended show, close to if not sold-out. It was amazing to step back and see the new "grand" scale of the String Cheese scene. As the members had said at UMass the night before, they had played the Iron Horse Music Hall (which holds about 200) in Northampton only a few years ago. The RPI Fieldhouse easily held 7,000 people, and I can sure tell you, it was a great sight to see. String Cheese came onto the stage and opened with a great cover of the band's friend Keller Williams' tune "Best Feeling." This is one of my favorite Keller songs and the Cheese played it perfectly. Again the first set progressed averagely through solid versions of "Lonesome River Blues," "Pretty Polly" and "Lost" before exploding with the help of some special guests. As John Medeski and Chris Wood of MMW made their way onstage, the anticipation level rose dramatically. They sat in for an amazing instrumental "Impressions" and broke out into a rocking "Superstition" with Medeski tearing it up on the keys alongside Kyle.

The first ended very strongly, but nothing could be com-

Turn to Cheese, page 6

Snoop's Bones is creepy, but predictable

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

BONES
Directed by Ernest Dickerson
With Snoop Dogg and Pam Grier
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Snoop Dogg stars in the spooktacular movie Bones.

A demon dog with glowing red eyes vomits thousands of wriggly maggots onto a dance floor of writhing young bodies. A slimy tableau of Hell reaches out with grasping hands to snatch an unsuspecting victim. Severed heads are forced to stay alive, just so they can face eternal damnation. Bones, the supernatural revenge thriller starring rapper Snoop Dogg, may be pure trash, but it's delectably gruesome trash. It may be the first horror film in years that isn't actually good, yet still carries an oozy, visceral charge.

Two suburban black brothers, Patrick and Billy (Khalil Kain and Merwin Mondesir), their white sister Tia (Katherine Isabelle) and their friend Maurice (Sean Amsing) buy a rotting brownstone in the middle of a crime-laden ghetto, in hopes of turning it into a hip-hop dance club.

The boys' father (Clifton Powell), a black man who left the ghetto for a white woman and successful life, is strangely nervous about the boys owning the building, while a local psychic (Pam Grier, looking less disdainful of the script than she did for Ghosts of Mars) warns about evil lurking in the wall.

In the '70s the brownstone was owned by benevolent neighborhood protector Jimmy Bones (Dogg). Bones was a criminal, but he cared for those in the 'hood, and refused to go in on a deal with a local dealer, a corrupt cop, and had his own right hand man to bring crack onto the streets. He wound up dead, his body buried in the basement, and his spirit looking for the right time to exact revenge.

Bones embraces cliches of the genre and then... well, it simply embraces the cliches, never transcending them; right up to the sequel set-up ending. Is it any surprise that the psychic's daughter (Bianca Lawson), whom Patrick is attracted to, would also be Bones' child? Or that much of the cast is nothing but cannon fodder? Nothing in Bones is all that surprising- scary- but it still has a tinge of Halloween funhouse creepiness. Horror movies have either become so enraptured by their hushed austerity that they seem like museum relics (The Others), or they've become so loud they give the Dolby Digital System a workout (13 Ghosts). It's nice to see grisly, old-fashioned yarn that doesn't want to be anything more than it is.

Talented cinematographer-turned-director Ernest Dickerson usually directs junk, both good (Tales From the Crypt: Demon Knight) and bad (Bulletproof), and here he finds a middle ground. The cinematographs by Flavio Labiano recalls the Italian giallo of Argento and Fulci, and the script by Adam Simon and Tim Metcalfe makes a stab at social commentary before petering out into gruesome shock tactics. It isn't terrific, but it's better than a lot of the year's other horror films. If you want to see a truly good scary film, see the entrancing From Hell, the nasty jolt of Joy Ride, or even David Lynch's haunting and evocative thriller Mullholland Drive, one of the year's best films. Bones is a B-movie for hardcore horror fans, not a film for people who will brush it off as a Candyman rip-off.

Snoop Dogg fans will be disappointed because the rapper appears only in sporadic flashback scenes for the first hour, before coming to life as a pimp-daddy Freddy Krueger. As an actor, Dogg has a snarling, liquid-cool meanness. It's too early to tell if he knows any other tricks, but right now he's the alpha male of the rapper-actor pack.

LIT'S ATOMIC SENDS OUT A POSITIVE CHARGE

Lit's latest release is rockin'.

COURTESY RCA RECORDS

By Mike Kulak
Collegian Staff

LIT
Atomic
RCA

Two years after A Place In The Sun, Lit returns with Atomic. Let me just say, this album rocks!

This is one of those few albums where you can listen through the whole thing without skipping a song. While oozing with Lit's style, Atomic has a different tone than Sun. This album is much more melodic than anything Lit has done so far. Atomic could also be considered more rock-ish than its predecessor. Not to say that Sun wasn't a rock album, it most certainly was; but Atomic's new melodic elements make it a better rock album in general. Also, this album is unbelievably catchy. Each song has this groove that just draws the listener in, and after I listened to the album for the first time, I caught myself humming the tunes in my head.

In the years since A Place In The Sun, there have been many bands that could be classified as Lit rip-off bands, such as American Hi-fi and Sugarcult. Nothing against these bands (I happen to like both of them), but they just aren't Lit. Despite those similar bands, Lit manages to keep their own particular style, and Atomic is an amazing disc.

Each song has an individual flair while keeping a Lit-esque attitude. The first track, "Something to Someone," has about a 40-second build-up to the beginning of the song. This is remnant of the band's first CD Tripping The Light Fantastic, where they do the same thing. "Something" is a straight-up rock song with a driving beat and a phat bass line. "Impressions" and broke out into a rocking "Superstition" with Medeski tearing it up on the keys alongside Kyle.

"The Last Time Again" was featured in American Pie 2 this summer, although you won't find it on the soundtrack. Have you ever listened to a song and have it send a shiver down your spine? Or just bring a smile to your face? "Last Time" does this. This song, the breakdown especially, is a prime example of the intricate melodies and harmonies of this CD. I can't help but shiver when I hear the chords in the breakdown. "Addicted" illustrates Lit's groove the most; you can't help being drawn into this song. Also, Jeremy Popoff delivers a stellar guitar solo. Between hysterical lyrics and excellent musical elements "Addicted" is one of the best songs on the album.

The first single off their new album, "Lipstick And Bruises," sounds slightly like "Down" (off of Sun), only faster. If Sun is any indication, there are sure to be more singles off of the new album; Sun had three hits: "My Own Worst Enemy," "Miserable," and "Zip-lock." The next track, "Everything's Cool" is another great tune. Everything about this song is great. The guitar riff is catchy, the solo is well done, and the lyrics are cool. Also, like "Addicted," this song has a distinct groove that draws you into the song.

The rock ballad "Happy In The Meantime" is something different. In this slow tune, Lit incorporates strings – not a full-piece orchestra, but a violin or two. I know what you're thinking: Lit? Using strings? You may have asked the same question on Sun when horns appeared in "Happy." But the violin is really a nice touch, and they pull it off well. This song is just A. Jay and Jeremy Popoff on acoustic guitars, and a small string section. It is a beautiful song.

Popoff describes their music perfectly by saying "we naturally just write poppy songs that have a heavy feel because that's what we grew up on: heavy metal and pop music."

"Drop D" is a good illustration of this. The verses are pretty heavy, while the chorus is light and poppy. Lit contrasts the two styles flawlessly. The band makes it clear that they are from California (Orange County, to be exact) with "Sunny Weather." When listening to "Sunny," the first thing that comes to mind is The Beach Boys. This song definitely belongs on Endless Summer. Again, the groove "Next Time Around," is filled with a driving cymbal and rockin' guitar riffs.

"Slip" is what amounts to a rock epic. The first and only thing that comes to mind when listening to "Slip" is Queen. "She Comes" is my favorite song off the album. It's fast, it's mellow, and it's got everything a Lit fan likes: good lyrics, a poppy feel with rock undertones, and my personal favorite, chords that make you tingle.

Just like Sun, Lit ends this CD with a huge song. "I've For This." Lots of guitar and a huge bass line make "I've" a powerful song, just like "A Place In The Sun." The last track on Sun, As an added plus, "Over My Head" was thrown in as a bonus track. "Over My Head" could only previously be heard on the Titan A.E. soundtrack. This is a great song. It's really fast, and really catchy. And it holds a hidden surprise. When you hear someone screaming "over my head" in the background, that's none other than Steven Tyler of Aerosmith. In fact, Tyler does all the harmonies on "Head." "Over My Head" has more of a Sun vibe to it, but being a great song, it only adds quality to Atomic.

And for those of you who still question Lit's musical abilities, when you buy Atomic, you get a second CD with two bands off of Lit's record label, Dirty Martini, and an acoustic version of "Down." This version of the song is amazing, proving to any disbeliever the musical talents of Lit.

Overall, this is a great CD. Chances are, if you didn't like A Place In The Sun, you won't like Atomic. But if you did, Atomic is a must-buy. Once you hear it, you won't take it out of you stereo.

Information from www.litlounge.com was used in this article.

Ozzy goes soft in his old age; Jettingham watered down punk

OZZY OSBOURNE
Down to Earth
Epic

Ozzy we love you. You're the man. But for the love of God, please stop making albums.

You're forgiven for thinking, for a split second after seeing that usually-provocative video director Jonas Akerlund directed Ozzy's new video "Gets Me Through," that contrary to all expectations, Ozzy might be trying a radical new approach to his sound. But as soon as Zakk Wilde's boring-ass riff hits and the Ozzman is going through the motions as a haltered, jewelry-anchored, black-robed warlock, we know that this isn't the season premiere it's just another repeat.

Don't get me wrong. Ozzy's shtick is priceless – it's just that it's so old and decrepit now that it would barely have the lungs to break the skin on the bat's neck. "Gets Me Through" feels like it's stuck in a time warp, with Ozzy reminding everyone that he's not really "bad" or "dangerous" the outlaw image that no one has had of him since the mid-80s. He goes further to let us know that the comical maelstrom he suffers through every day is what gets him through. Ozzy, Britney Spears' latest video is more controversial than you are nowadays, and the dream really is dead when I can picture you dissing Eminem for a media battle to give you some street cred.

So, knowing Ozzy is as harmless as a teddy bear, we can comfortably, during the fading moments of "Gets Me Through," settle around the fire for the remaining ten tracks on Down To Earth that play out like dad-metal to the extreme. Every tale, from the flaccid "Dreamer" to the offensively mundane drug tale "Junkie," are conservative enough to lull the kids asleep, assuring them that rap-metal man isn't under the bed waiting to scare them and everything will stay the same. And it all sounds fine, with its slick production and feel that with songs this mundane, why stop at eleven, might as well pull out a 3-CD epic and gouge the kids some more.

Ozzy, we still love you. But I can see the record company gouging you for another album you don't have in you so they can gouge us for an album we don't have the strength to listen to. Where's the outrage? (Michael Delano)

CYCLUB
Cyclub

This 3-song EP from local indie band Cyclub leaves much to be desired. It starts off relatively well with the song "Silver Mauve Man" (I hope you like the way that sounds since the song consists of pretty much just that phrase with some subtle chord changes). I actually liked the song quite a bit but before I knew it, the track ended and a song that sounded just like it started playing. Now I might be tone deaf and maybe also just plain deaf, but I know what good music sounds like and it kind of sounds like this. Kind of.

On each of these three tracks, Cyclub demonstrates an ability to craft a good tune. But then some factor screws everything up – sometimes it is lyrics ("you and me are clownfuckers"), sometimes it is experimental excess (the entire track "Go Go 2001"). At any rate, each song has some element that needs to be taken out. This is perfectly understandable since this is just an introductory EP and simply exists to get the band's music out to the few people at the show that were drunk enough to think that they liked the songs the band played.

I think while recording each song, the lead singer sang the lyrics too fast or lost the lyric sheet altogether. Each song ends with screaming and/or a melodic humming of some note (followed shortly by more screaming). The vocals are delivered in the sort of apathetic style that has been perfected by Julian somethin' or other of The Strokes. Of course, they do it much better and they sing about real things instead of "surreal candy dreams." Ultimately, this first EP from Cyclub isn't half bad, although I think I could write some better songs by taping the noises I make in my sleep, playing the tape backwards, running it through a mixer and adding some drumming to the recording. The band should stop what they're currently doing and do the exact opposite and then there could be a great chance for success. (Serge Pinsky)

JETTINGHAM
Jettingham
Republic

I sure am glad that major labels are spending money promoting talented bands like Jettingham. I think that their sound could sell a lot of albums. You see, I am a huge fan of derivative crap. I like bands that manage to sound completely like Sum 41 and the Barenaked Ladies at the same time. Does that make you cringe in your seat? I had to cringe for twelve brilliant songs.

Jettingham takes punk rock, grabs it by the balls, and proceeds to rip out any balls that punk today can claim. I am almost offended by this album. A few bands can pull off a sound like this. They steal from Weezer blatantly in an attempt to give this album some merit. Only Weezer can pull it off, Jettingham can't.

I guess now I'll review the album. I had to listen to it, so here is the rundown for you lucks folks that didn't. It starts off with a song called "Good Life" (Pinkerton, anyone?). Take the Weezer song, add the new Blink 182-type production, and strip off all of the irony and clever wordplay that the Weezer song provides us with. "Cheating" allows us a voyeuristic view into a teenage relationship where one of the parties has been cheating, and now he won't admit it at a party. Anybody throw up yet? Good. Song four, "Never, Never, Never" could be the most annoying song I have ever heard. The vocals sound like a nasal Barenaked Ladies, the guitar is slow pop punk with token one-note solos, and the chorus is the word "never" repeated ad nauseum.

I've stopped the review. If I keep moving forward, this review will become just as repetitive as this horrible CD. Jettingham did not have one new idea. They are also unable to make old ideas fresh, which is just as important as new ideas. It's an awful CD. I look forward to its debut on TRL. It could knock Sum 41 out of crap punk supremacy, because Jettingham is even worse. (Michael Carpentier)

significant 0 others

The Last Star is a great rock record all the way through. Guitarist Johnny Rock squeezes some excellent tricks out of his guitar, from a Morello-esque laughing sound ("Drive Away") to a beautiful Murray-like Maiden tribute (bridge of "I Lied"). The extra effort places him among the top axemen in the current straight forward rock revival, most of whom are content to simply throw a riff down and play on autopilot. That's not to say Rock isn't a solid riffer though; he lays them down with a lot more variety than most, at times holding back and other times ("Over") just pummeling with a metal hammer.

It's to singer Sarah "Starr" Reitkopp's credit that she meets the noise assault head-on and is never washed away. Contrary, she keeps the sound at a leash's distance with her cool, unaffected delivery. Thankfully, the songs aren't the same ol' tales of succumbing to the siren call of sex and fast cars. "I Lied" chews men up and spits them out, while during "Held Under" Reitkopp takes naughty pleasure in watching a gent squirm and crumble in her presence. "Drive Away" and "Glitter" are pretty fatalistic with only the slightest glimmer of hope but things aren't all bad, as "Thanks for the Ride," an ode to vibrators, succinctly shows.

P.S. Halfcocked's style (the urge to full-on glam tempered with punk thrift, leather accessories, and denim) is so good that if I don't see it dissected in an upcoming Style File there is no justice in the world (Michael Delano)

HALFCOCKED
The Last Star
Megatronic

I hate to get all cheesy and personal in the classically cocky and detached forum of rock reviews, but man, there is something about cruising around the mean streets of Amherst late at night blasting Halfcocked with the windows down. It makes me forget about damn near everything.

The String Cheese Incident toured New England and we followed.

■ Cheese

pared to the second and final set of my mini-Cheese vacation. The band began with a new exciting instrumental titled "BAM," which really has potential of becoming a fan favorite. The jammed out "BAM" slowly segued into some noticeable riffs as they broke out into the lively "Round the Wheel," which has made its way as one of the most powerful songs String Cheese plays, evident by the mass of jumping heads during the opening. The band rotated through the set with mind-boggling versions of "Born On the Wrong Planet," "Sittin' on Top of the World" and the old favorite "Jellyfish" before masterfully segueing back into "Round the Wheel" to end the set. My fall String Cheese experience ended with a Peter Gabriel cover, a well-received version of "Shakin' the Tree." And so it was over.

As we drove back home to Amherst, I had a good opportunity to think about what I had experienced the last few days. The String Cheese Incident was no longer a little secret shared by just a few people across the country. The band have joined a very short list of jambands capable of stepping to the larger venues. I really hope that the Cheese's success continues and that the band's fan base continues to grow, but that its values and excitement as a band stay where they always have been. Most amazing about the larger venues was the amazing sound and a mind-blowing light show that just might rival that of Phish lighting master Chris Kuroda. Not to be outmatched, however was the equally masterful job of sound by the amazing Jon O., who made all three hockey arenas sound like sound stages. I'm just hoping I can find some cash to make my way out to San Francisco for New Years.

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Barbados Florida & More!
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
OOPS!
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS

This is Ted.
Ted had no friends.
Ted had no future.
Then Ted got a job selling ads at the Daily Collegian.
Look at Ted now.
Sell Ted, Sell.
Follow Ted down to the Collegian Center Basement where the Collegian is now accepting applications for advertising representatives for Spring, 2002. Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply. Stop by 113 Campus Center or call 545-3500.

What's a good way to explore my grad school options??
Are my grades good enough for grad school?
What are the grad school tests like?
When should I start the process to apply?
Can I defer admission for a year?
Can I go to grad school part-time?
Have Questions? Come to the
ANNUAL FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL DAY
TODAY! Wednesday, October 31, 2001
10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom, UMass Amherst
Over 130 graduate, medical, dental, law and other professional schools will be represented along with schools of social work, theology, international relations, education, library science and a range of other post-baccalaureate options from across the continental US and Hawaii.
Excellence Within Your Reach
Call 413-577-0417 for more information
See www-ccn.acad.umass.edu and click on 'Events Calendar' for a list of attending schools/departments
UMASS

UND splits series with Badgers

By Matt Schill
Dakota Student (U. North Dakota)

(U-WIRE) GRAND FORKS, N.D. - For the first time since March 7, 1998, the Wisconsin Badgers hockey team walked away from Grand Forks with a victory Friday night. But that is all it would get, as the North Dakota Sioux prevailed the following night, splitting the weekend series.

Wisconsin never trailed in Friday night's game, as it got on the board early after UND forward Tim Skarperud was sent to the box for charging. UW took advantage as Kent Davyduke slipped the puck by UND goaltender Andy Kollar for the power play goal at 4:05 in the first period.

"We never had the lead and it takes you out of the game," UND Head Coach Dean Blais said, crediting Badger goalie Scott Kabotoff with a great game. "He had his angles down... we shot into him a bit, but he made some real nice plays."

UND fought back midway through the second period, tying the game at one. Freshman Brandon Bochenski scored an unassisted goal, his first goal of the season, at 7:13. But Wisconsin retained its lead five minutes later as Dave Hergert scored at 12:55 in the second period.

The Sioux stormed back again early in the third period after Badger Andy Wheeler was called for slashing at 0:53. Ryan Hale scored his second goal of the year at 1:42, putting the puck past Kabotoff. The goal was assisted by Kevin Spiewak, and evened the score at two.

"We had a lot of opportunities," Hale said. "We played a good game, but Kabotoff played a better game."

But the Badger offense stormed back late in the third period and Wheeler scored the game-winner at 15:12, giving Kabotoff a win in his first game of the year after saving 32 UND shots.

"The problem is, (Kabotoff's) been a junior in our program and hasn't gotten a chance to play," head Wisconsin coach Jeff Sauer said. "He got his shot and deserves to have the success he had tonight."

Kollar had 17 saves in the loss. UW was outshot 34-20 in the game.

On Saturday night, it was UND that never lost the lead, defeating Wisconsin 6-4. Ryan Bayda and Bochenski led the Sioux, each scoring two goals and an assist. Dave Lundbohm, the center of the Bochenski and Bayda wing had three assists in the process.

"After Friday's loss, we knew we needed the win," Bochenski said. "We came out strong and put the pressure on."

And the Sioux applied the pressure early on freshman Wisconsin goaltender Bernd Bruckler, who was playing in his first conference action.

Tim Skarperud put the Sioux up early as Chris Fournier made a beautiful pass under a Badger defender before Skarperud buried the puck. The goal came at 7:59 and was also assisted by Matt Jones.

UND continued its pounding, as Bayda scored two goals, first at 10:22 in the first period and then at 5:50 in the second period. Bayda's first came off as he put in an easy rebound. Bochenski and Dave Lundbohm were credited with the assists. It was Lundbohm's first of three on the night.

"Our lines are starting to gel, and everything is starting to feel better as games go on," Bayda said.

Bayda's second goal of the night came at 5:50 in the second. While short-handed, Chad Mazurak found Bayda wide-open. Bayda faked Bruckler before slipping the puck past his pad.

Rene Bourque got the Badgers on the board at 8:46, when he fired the puck past Kollar.

Two Badger penalties killed Wisconsin's momentum as Matt Murray and Erik Jensen were called for roughing and interference, respectively, at 11:54.

UND took advantage of the 5-3 advantage, as Bochenski scored his second of the weekend. Lundbohm and Bayda got the assists on the goal. Wisconsin stormed back with two goals of its own making a late run on UND late in the second period.

Andy Wheeler scored a short-handed goal at 13:43, while Brad Winchester fired the puck through the legs of Kollar at 16:09.

Bochenski came up big again for UND scoring his second of the night at 17:40. The goal came on a power play, when Badger Brian Fahey was charged with playing without a helmet.

"The bounces went our way tonight," Bochenski said. "We just keep pounding, and we finally got the puck in the net."

Wisconsin came within one goal at 16:19 in the third period as Murray slipped the puck across the goal line. Kollar had the puck covered, but the play was ruled a score.

UND held their lead and added a late Kevin Spiewak empty-net goal at 19:59 sealing the Sioux victory.

DAN SANTILLA/COLLEGIAN

Game on!
Senior tri-captain Shannon Crooks and the Minutemen will host an exhibition against the BABC All-Stars Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center.

Flyers, schmyers
Brooke Bartlett and the UMass women's soccer team will host A-10 leader Dayton Friday afternoon at Totman.

■ hockey east

continued from page 10

Will he bounce back to play phenomenally later on this season? It's quite likely, but his defense is a tremendously young core of which six of seven players are either sophomores or freshmen. The Friars are undoubtedly suffering from the loss of the combination of Ian Leach and Matt Libby, who were leaders both on and off the ice. Most of the pressure falls on sophomore Regan Kelly, a 2000 draftee of the Flyers.

Sure, BC and PC will probably turn their seasons around, but for now the students of both colleges are certainly more worried than they were three weeks ago.

River Hawks showing last year wasn't a fluke

On the other end of the spectrum sits UMass-Lowell. The River Hawks have come out flying early in the season, and in the latest U.S. College Hockey Online poll, they stand at No. 9.

Last season, UML defeated UNH in the first round of the HE playoffs to shock the world and show its legitimacy as a team on the verge of moving to the next level. But many people thought that the departures of Head Coach Tim Whitehead and star defenseman Ron Hainsey, who left for the NHL, would cripple the River Hawks' hopes of maintaining that level.

Not so.

UML brought in Blaise MacDonald to patrol the bench and continue its recruiting in France to put together an experienced and talented team that has already begun to turn heads nationally.

The key for Lowell this season is a tremendously experienced defense in front of a goalie who has matured significantly in his college experience. In fact, the only underclassman in the six-man defense rotation is Jeremie Domish, who has three goals and two assists in the team's four games. His plus-six rating has made the team all but forget Hainsey's presence.

But the startling fact is that every Lowell player who has logged a minute of ice time has a plus-minus that is in the positive register. This is tremendously good news for netminder Jimi St. John, who has registered a sub-par .860 save percentage. However, he is doing what he is asked to, with a 2.67 goals against average, as the stifling defense is allowing an average of only 20 shots per game.

In fact, Lowell's worst offensive shot output this season is 28, which it registered against Providence. On the other hand, the most shots the team has allowed is 21, which was logged by BC.

Up front, it has been the trio of Ed McGrane, Laurent Meunier and Peter Hay providing the firepower for the River Hawks. McGrane's seven points and Meunier's five assists are tops on the team, while Hay, a sophomore, has been strong, as he is tied for the team lead in goals, with three.

Of course, the important thing for Lowell is the fact that it will lose three players – Meunier, senior Yorick Treille and freshman Baptiste Amar – to the Olympics, as they will play for France.

The truth is that Lowell is a legitimate contender in HE, and will almost definitely have a spot in the postseason. Will it be a national power? Probably not, but the Hawks could possibly sneak in to the NCAA tournament this year if they show well in the postseason tourney.

Terriers back on top

After a season in which it disappointed even the most loyal of its fans, BU was in desperate need of a rebirth. What coach Jack Parker did is bring in what is perhaps the most talented incoming class in the country to go along with an already polished team. The shocking thing is, however, that the Terriers are performing so well, so fast.

BU finds itself sitting at 3-0-0 (1-0-0 HE) and in the Top 10 in USCHO at No. 8.

Leading the offense is Mike Pandolfo, who though decidedly not as talented as brother Jay, is still an upper echelon player in one of the best conferences in college hockey. Pandolfo's five points lead the team, while sophomore Frantisek Skladany is right on his tail with four. The Slovakian was impressive in his freshman year, but will be counted on to use his talent to maximize the Terrier offense.

Still, defense is the biggest attribute of this team, as an experienced defensive unit, led by seniors Dyment and Pat Aufiero as well as junior Freddy Meyer, has held the opposition to an average of 23 shots per game.

This team definitely has the talent and the experience to win the conference this year, but a challenge sits on the horizon, as a pair of conference match-ups at Walter Brown Arena loom this weekend in the form of Northeastern and UNH.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian Sports...
...all Brady, all the time.

Graduate Degrees with a Cutting Edge
Hawai'i Pacific University
www.hpu.edu/grad
HPU graduate programs provide the tools and skills to help you succeed in today's fast-paced environment.
Program of Study
• Master of Arts in Communication
• Master of Arts in Diplomacy and Military Studies
• Master of Arts in Global Leadership
• Master of Arts in Human Resource Management
• Master of Arts in Organizational Change
• Master of Arts in Teaching English as a Second Language
• Master of Business Administration
E-Business and 12-month MBA programs
• Master of Science in Information Systems
E-Commerce program
• Master of Science in Nursing
Graduate Certificate Programs
• E-Commerce
• Information Systems
• Organizational Change Management
• International Management
Visit the Hawai'i Pacific University representative on campus: Wednesday, October 31
Ask about scholarship and assistantship opportunities. For more information call 1-866-GRAD-HPU or visit us online at www.hpu.edu
1164 Bishop Street, Suite 911 • Honolulu, Hawai'i 96813
Voice: 808 544 0279 • Fax: (808) 544 1280 • E-mail: graduate@hpu.edu

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Yo! Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

For the best deals when it comes to skiing check out snosearch.com. And for the best ski and ride equipment check out extreme-universe.com username: snowboards password: college deals. CHECK IT OUT!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Dodge Caravan C/V, V6, AC, 5 seater, new brakes, struts, 134,000miles. $2700 B/O. Call Jack 256-4963

1991 Mercury Capri, red convertible, automatic. $2500 please call after 6pm. 413-549-6331

1995 Chev Cavalier station wagon 180,000miles. Sticker to 7/02. A beater $250. 586-5961

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

"Handyman" (maintenance, costodial) $8.00 hr. 549-1578

EMPLOYMENT

Japanese and/or Korean speaking candidate wanted for P/T software/sales position. Contact: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA, 01002; fax: 413-549-1038; e-mail: info@remi.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on exerience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$350 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

www.FluidVisions.com

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

4 Bedroom, 3 1/2 bath 73 Amity Place 1/2 mile away from Umass. 413-592-0540 best after 7:00

FOR SALE

Salamon Snowboard 156-550 Like New Call 256-4797 Ask for Dave

FOR SALE

African Drums: Djembes, Drum Repair Didjeidoos. 413-529-2215 One World

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR I NFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

SPRING BREAK #1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 HSCN Bulletin Board
2 Channel Guide
3 CBS Boston
4 ABC 40 Springfield
5 NBC 6 Springfield
6 HSCN Movie Channel
7 UPN 56 Hartford
8 HSCN New Movie Channel
9 NBC 10 New Britain
10 Fox 61 Hartford
11 UPN 24 Hartford
12 NBC 22 Springfield
13 Nickelodeon Channel
14 HBO (Cinemax Channel)
15 WB 30 New Haven
16 PBS
17 ESPN2
18 WSBK 38 Boston
19 LIVE TV (student Channel)
20 Weather Channel
21 Canal to Canal
22 Cspan
23 CNN
24 CNN Headline News
25 Lifetime
26 USA
27 TBS
28 TNT
29 E!
30 SciFi
31 Discovery
32 Nogin
33 Cartoon Network
34 Nickelodeon
35 TV Land
36 Comedy Central
37 BET
38 Discovery
39 Bloomberg Financial Network
40 College TV Network
41 MTV
42 MTV2
43 VH1
44 The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — OCTOBER 31, 2001

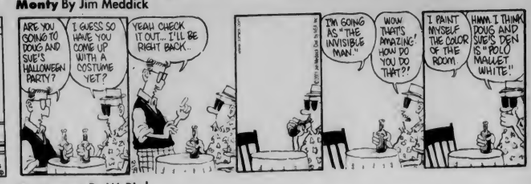
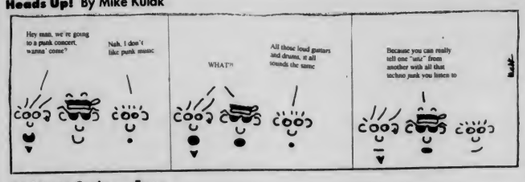
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Hunt for Battleship Hood		Secrets of the Dead (In Stereo)		Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"		Mystery! "The Wyvern Mystery"
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Amazing Race (In Stereo)		Wolf Lake "Four Feet Under"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Amazing Race (In Stereo)		Wolf Lake "Four Feet Under"		News	Nightline
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	My Wife-Kids	[According-Jim	Drew Carey	Bob Patterson	20/20		News	Raymond
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Miss Conception"		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "On the Day Before"		Law & Order "Possession"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "Miss Conception"		Law & Order "Possession"		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		West Wing "On the Day Before"		Law & Order "Possession"		News	Seinfeld
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	World Series: Game 4 – Diamondbacks or Braves at Yankees or Mariners						News	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		Sweeney Todd in Concert: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street (N) (In Stereo)				News	Charlie Rose
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Seinfeld	Frasier	Ed (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Possession"				News	Nightline
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	My Wife-Kids	[According-Jim	Drew Carey	Bob Patterson	20/20		5th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Enterprise (N) (In Stereo)		Newhouse With Jim Lehrer		Ent. Tonight	Frasier	Ripley's Believe It or Not!
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		Law & Order "Possession"				Law & Order "Out of Control"
A&E	265	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Expert"		Biography: Vincent Price		American Justice: Mystery		City Confidential		Greenfield	Moneyline
CSPAN	21	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		South Park	Primetime	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
COM	266	Saturday Night Live Halloween		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Inside the KKK - Faces of Hate		Machine Gun (N)				Justice Files	"Love And Death"
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Wolves		Who's Afraid of... Bears								Deadline Discovery (N)
ESPN	26	Sportscenter		Sportscentury	Sportscentury	NHL Hockey: St. Louis Blues at Colorado Avalanche. (Live)						NFL Films	Sportscenter
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Tippi Hedren		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Crimes of Passion I Know What You Did" (1996, Drama)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Michael Jackson's Ghost		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		TBA		Criminal (N)	Dismissed	Dismissed (N)	Who Knows?
NICK	46	Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Nicktoons TV	Told by Ginger	Invader Zim	Hey Arnold!	Brady Bunch	Diff. Strokes	Family Ties	Cheers	Cheers	Laverne
SCIFI	55	(5:00) "Nightmare on Elm St. 3"		★½ "The Prophecy II" (1998, Horror) Christopher Walken				★★ "The Prophecy II" (2000, Horror) Christopher Walken				Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	28	Night Visitors		Ruby Ridge – Anatomy		Monster Machines: Miners		Junkyard Wars "Gliders" (N)		Extreme Machines "Bridges"		Monster Machines: Miners
TNT	63	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Pretender "Baby Love"		NBA Basketball: Toronto Raptors at Miami Heat (In Stereo Live)						★½ "Poltergeist" (1982)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger "The Children of Halloween" (In Stereo)				Nash Bridges "Jackpot"		★★ "Halloween II" (1981, Horror) Jamie Lee Curtis. (In Stereo)				★½ "Cherry Falls" (2000)
HBO	15	(5:45) ★★★ "The Legend of Bagger Vance" (2000) Will Smith.		Creature Features "She Creature"		Reverb (N) (In Stereo)		Curb Enthem	Mind-Married	Band of Brothers (In Stereo)		Creature Features: "Teenage Caveman"	"Halloween" '98
MAX	51	Creature Features				Creature Features: "How to Make a Monster"				Soul Food "Sex and Money"		"Resurrection"	"All Clear"
SHOW	50	★ "Bio-Dome" (1996, Comedy) Pauly Shore.				★½ "Bless the Child" (2000, Horror) Kim Basinger.

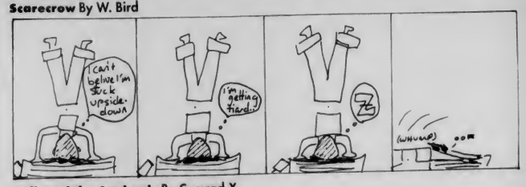
Adam and Eric By Ross Burach



Monty By Jim Meddick



FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Monty By Jim Meddick

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Scarecrow By W. Bird

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"There is no life I know to compare with pure imagination." –Willy Wonka

Amherst Weather

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 38	HIGH: 65 LOW: 44	HIGH: 68 LOW: 46

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You'll find yourself in a mess if not unexpected situation today which requires you to solve routine problems in highly imaginative, creative way. That dream you had about forgetting to put pants on and going to class is really a way of telling you not to forget to wear pants to class.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You're being a little too possessive today. Is it because you cannot admit that your emotions are getting the better of you? Yes it is. You really need to leave that stuffed animal at home.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone may be trying to keep you emotionally off-center today in order to further his or her own personal agenda. Keeps your wits about you and don't listen to that crazy guy in your biology class.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Both people and situations are likely to prove far more forgiving than you may expect. You won't have to be as defensive as you have been recently. But beware of that sketchy guy on your floor.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Don't look too far back today, or you'll find yourself getting lost in a fog of memories that do not directly relate to your present life. Remember when that boy who sat behind you in your third grade class pulled your hair? Let it go!
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Love is in the air – but very likely not in your heart! Someone may have a hard time getting you to respond in an amorous fashion today. But that's alright, because you have someone else in mind.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Someone in your inner circle may object to your methods or motives quite suddenly today. Does this promise that a major rift is on its way? Just throw him off the island. Survivor style.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The closer you are to home today the stronger and more confident you will feel. If you find yourself far away, it's a good day for a phone call. Remember to call 1-800-collect!!!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You will discover today that your interests are similar to the interests of someone you've been avoiding. The fact is, you may get along well! But you probably won't because you have hangover paranoia and won't get along with anyone today.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your warm and sensitive side is likely to be revealed today through a chain of unusual and unsuspected circumstances. It's because you obligated to be nice to the kid whose eyebrows you shaved off this weekend when he passed out drunk.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21) – Despite what you have been saying all week long, luck is indeed a factor today. You'll have a brush with destiny before the day is out. Don't fear the reaper.
LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 22) – Someone is likely to surprise you today by being right there for you, supplying your wants and needs in abundance. Take advantage of this!!!

Sheep By Arthur Poor

In an effort to improve sagging ratings, ABC decides to bring back a classic show with three new faces and one little twist...

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Jamaican Pulled Pork

Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)

Beef Enchilada

Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

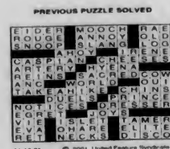
DINNER

TRICK OR TREAT

HALLOWEEN SURPRISE!

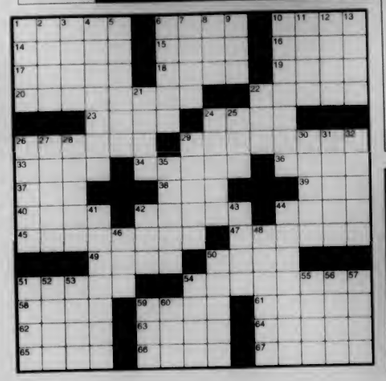
Vampire Steak

Ghostly Fish



R.I.P. Chicken

Goblin Casserole (vegan)



THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900

ACROSS
1 Of ships
6 Practice boxing
10 Type of shark
14 Old Greek marketplace
15 Ice-cream holder
16 Like a yard-sale item
17 Sects
18 Tall vases
19 And
20 Freedom
22 First and reverse
23 Jerks
24 Gourmet cheese
26 Float site
29 Potting-soil component
33 Sign of the future
34 Hurricane
36 "Gunsmoke" star
37 Alphabet starters
38 Net 'neath
39 Dentist's org.
40 Type of soda or chair
42 Singer Yma
44 Spoken
45 Those with unorthodox beliefs
47 Very fancy
49 9 lbs a wallet
50 Red veggie
51 Radiantly happy
54 Fanfic materials
58 Punks
61 Ice hockey locale
62 Unusual
63 Elegant coiffure
64 Muscle
65 Seraglio rooms
66 Rain hard
67 Carries

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Table salt, in the lab
2 Water, to Juan
3 Electrical unit
4 Potter or glass blower
5 Continuect
6 Moves swiftly as a cloud
7 Skin ointment
8 Dear Abby's sister
9 Legal matter
10 Outdoorsmen
11 On the ocean
12 Deborah of old films
13 Ben Jonson works
21 All-purpose trucks
22 Acquire
24 Baseball's Yogi
25 Go on the — bed
26 Fish without a license
27 Wonder about
28 Happen again
29 Robert Frost's works
30 John or Maureen
31 Nobelist Arwar
32 Low-lying land
35 Feed
41 Looks good on
42 Family nickname
43 Sorority woman
44 Ottawa's province
46 Prize marble
48 Meat
50 Shapely, in a sense
51 Bushy hairdo
52 Egg on
53 Flatbread heroine
54 Whipped up
55 Small coin
56 Palette site
57 Cuts wood
59 Unlock
60 Unfold, to Blake

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Esther Danzig
Production Staff	Pete Preston, Mike Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Coming in from the cold

Co-captains Janeen DeMarte (front) and Lymarie Llevet (top right) are hoping that some home cooking will soothe the heartburn from a recent road trip.

UMass, URI looking to get back in win column

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

As the cold months roll into New England, people will gain so much pleasure walking into their homes and out of the cold air.

The Massachusetts volleyball team (11-11 overall, 4-8 Atlantic 10) certainly hopes that the cozy atmosphere of the Curry Hicks Cage will be a soothing touch, as it returns tonight from a harsh trip to the Midwest in which it went 0-2 and failed to win a single game.

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, the Rhode Island Rams will be thundering into Amherst, looking to trample the home squad in their quest for the A-10 championship.

"I think Rhode Island has better firepower than we do offensively, and we need three hitters, maybe four, to have a good offensive match so we can win," UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny said.

The Rams (15-9, 9-5 A-10) had a 10-match winning streak snapped on their trip to Ohio, falling 3-0 to Xavier and 3-1 to Dayton.

"URI got beat just as badly as we did," Kenny said. "They went four with Dayton, but they got annihilated by Xavier. That's probably the lowest point total Rhode Island's had all year – they got beat 30-10 in the first game."

In that match, Xavier hit an extraordinary .380, while URI hit a paltry .127. The Rams were spiked by reigning A-10 Player of the Year Sara Bachus, who dumped 17 kills on the visitors to go along with just three errors.

"I think they have to be a little bit down [after losing the two matches]," Kenny continued. "I'm sure they have to make adjustments, but hopefully they won't have enough time to make a lot of adjustments before they come in here and play us Wednesday."

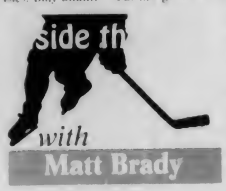
Still, URI stands in third place in the A-10 and is led by a plethora of offensive forces. Five players for the Rams are averaging in excess of two kills per game, with senior Yolanda Bogacz and freshman Brooke Ecklund leading the way with their 3.27 and 2.88, respectively. Bogacz was the lone bright spot for the Rams this past weekend, as she posted 19 kills and a .441 hitting percentage against Dayton.

"We're not going to beat URI unless we can contain Bogacz, Ecklund, and Mary Kate Reardon," Kenny said.

As for the Minutewomen, they will likely need to find a consistent offensive attack in order to defeat their opposition. Inconsistency has plagued the Maroon and White attack all season, as it has fought to find several day-to-day contributors. Highlighting the attack in Ohio were senior Lauren Vander Veen and junior Clare Baxter. Vander Veen notched 19 kills in the two matches, while Baxter posted an impressive .500 hitting percentage by throwing down 11 kills in the loss to Dayton. Nonetheless, UMass posted two of its four worst hitting percentages of the season on the trip.

"We need to regroup, get our confidence back up. We need to work hard these next two practices," Vander Veen said. "We should try different things with our offense because teams are expecting us to do the same things we've been doing, so we need to mix it up and work on it."

Game time tonight is set for 7:00 p.m.



Isles are an early surprise in NHL

A crossing pass through the center finds an open man, who quickly puts the biscuit in the basket to propel the New York Islanders to yet another victory. Mike Bossy and Bryan Trottier? Nope – it's Shawn Bates and Mark Parrish.

A defenseman wearing an Islanders jersey intercepts a centering pass and starts a brilliant breakout the other way. Denis Potvin? Hardly – try Adrian Aucoin.

A brilliant glove save sends yet another hard-fought game into overtime for the Isles. Billy Smith? No way – you guessed it, it's Chris Osgood.

Okay, so this year's Islander squad hardly evokes images of its ancestors from the early 80s. But the comparisons are bound to be made for a team that has started its season by earning points in each of its first ten games.

But this team is more than a fluke. No, Osgood will not keep up his pace of allowing less than two goals per game or turning aside nearly 90 percent of the shots he faces. And it's quite probable that Parrish will not keep up his goal per game pace.

Aside from that, though, there are very few things going on for this team that are likely to change throughout the season. On paper, the Isles are one of the top teams in the Eastern Conference. And it is very easy to see how they went about building such a skilled squad.

First off, the Isles pulled off a bold move on draft day, trading away the second pick (which turned out to be future star Jason Spezza) in a deal that brought former holdout and crybaby supreme Alexei Yashin in from Ottawa.

Then, they went and brought in another former holdout in the person of Michael Peca, who despite his absence from the NHL last year, is still one of the best two-way centers in the game. Not only that, but the team took the initiative to sign both players to contracts that will keep them in town until at least 2006 if desired.

The next move was to bring in Bates, who was shown no interest by king of the penny pinchers, Jeremy Jacobs. After that, the Isles sured up a couple of their current young players in Mariusz Czerkawski and Brad Isbister. They then signed Aucoin to a one-year deal, and then made one final move... picking up Osgood in the expansion draft.

What it all adds up to is a 9-0-1-1 start that has drawn much attention, but has gone as a sideshow in the upside-down NHL. But unlike most of the other upstart teams, the Isles are sitting pretty in the top-heavy Eastern Conference. Not to mention the fact that they have inked the majority of their talent for a long time.

The Islanders are almost as good from top to bottom as any other team in the East. Aside from the forwards already mentioned, they also have former UNH star Jason Krog and the ever-underachieving Oleg Kvasha. The one weakness of the forward core may be the fact that the majority of the talent is still pretty young, and that inexperience could haunt the team.

On D, the Isles have a bunch of talents who have as of yet not panned out in their NHL careers. Kenny Jonsson and Roman Hamrlik, along with veteran Kevin Haller, provide the squad with a tremendous amount of talent in front of Osgood, who is outperforming all of the expectations put on him.

Will this team go the season without a regulation loss? Of course not.

Will it make the playoffs? In the East, it's certainly possible.

The question is, can it continue to show the cohesion that they have shown in the first stanza of their 2001-02 campaign?

In my opinion, there is no reason to believe they won't.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist

In Hockey East, which way is up?

Only [illegible] hockey season, the Hockey East is a league that is completely upside down. [illegible] the team ranked first in the preseason poll [illegible] a weekend [illegible] the team ranked ninth. It has [illegible] the defending National Champion [illegible] its first few contests going 0-2 in [illegible] games. Only [illegible] tops[illegible]

HE award winners

On Monday, Hockey East announced its weekly award winners, with participants from three different league-[illegible] awards. Boston University's Chris Drury received HE Player of the Week honors for his two power play goals and an assist from the Bluelme in the team's 4-0 win over Merrimack.

UMass junior defenseman Sami Jalkanen brought home Defensive Player of the Week honors following the team's 4-3 triumph over Providence. Jalkanen was plus-two on the contest and posted two assists to push his season total to three good for tops on the squad.

The Rookie of the Week went to Northeastern freshman Jason Guerriero, who posted three assists in the team's two ties this weekend. The Manorville, N.Y. native has tallied eight assists so far this season, good for the top spot in the conference.

Providence, BC limping out of gates

After Boston College lost six seniors and three underclassmen from its title winning squad, many analysts thought that Providence College would be the team to take over the reign in Hockey East. Yet both squads are off to sub-par starts, with BC standing at 2-3-1 overall and the Friars garnering only one win in its first five contests, a triumph over Sacred Heart.

The Eagles opened their 2001-02 campaign with a win over Vermont before traveling west for a spot in the Nye Frontier Classic in Anchorage, Alaska. There they took a tough loss at the hands of Western Collegiate Hockey Association stronghold Denver and fought to a 4-4 tie with up and coming Alaska-Anchorage.

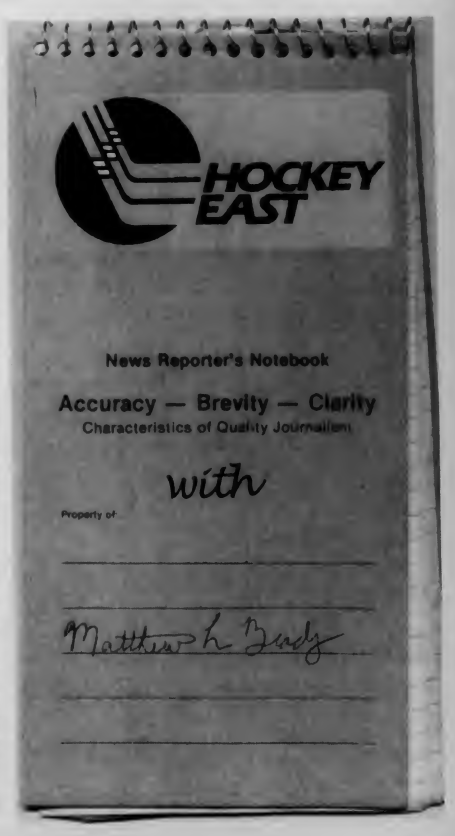
That's when things got interesting for Head Coach Jerry York and his troops.

The Eagles headed home for their opener at Kelley Rink and were promptly swamped by UMass-Lowell by a lopsided 7-2 score. Junior Tim Kelleher was unimpressive in the game, allowing seven goals on only 36 UML shots, including a pair of goals by upstart defenseman Jerramie Domish.

The following night, BC traveled across town to do battle with Northeastern. This time, highly-touted freshman Matti Kaltiainen was in net, with hardly better results. The Eagles lost this time 4-3, with Kultianen allowing four goals on a paltry 18 shots.

What this all amounts to is the Eagles standing at 0-2 in the conference and desperately missing departed senior Scott Clemmensen, who was not only a talent, but the majority of the experience BC had in net. In fact, after appearing in 17 games as a freshman, backup Kelleher only appeared in five games last season. Add that to a freshman goaltender trying to adjust to U.S. college hockey, and what it equals is severe growing pains for the Eagles' netminders.

But even more startling is the lack of defense on this year's team. Sure, BC lost its top three scorers, but even more glaring is the fact that the team lost three of its top four defensemen, including future NHL-ers Bobby Allen and Brooks Orpik. The majority of returning experience falls on the shoulders of sophomore J.D. Forrest, who had a tremendous freshman campaign, but is far too young to have the weight of a team placed on his shoulders.



As for Providence, many factors have led to the team's downfall so far this season. Aside from the team's victory over Sacred Heart, it has been outscored by a 20-12 margin. Nolan Schaefer, counted on to be one of the top players between the pipes, has been shaky at times this season.

Turn to HOCKEY EAST, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

BC's defense has suffered from suspect defense this season, partly due to the departure of Bobby Allen (right), who graduated. The Eagles have looked to J.D. Forrest (left) to shoulder the load.

NOVEMBER

Sssee Artsss for a ssseriousss review on cartoonsss passst and presssent.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

UMass men's hockey plays two games this weekend. Read about it in Sports.

ARTS p. 5

SPORTS p. 14

Volume CVIII Issue 40 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, November 1, 2001

TABORA GIRCZYC-BLUM

Ann Ferguson

Women Studies prof lectures about China

By Jake Lilsen
Collegian Staff

Ann Ferguson, a professor of Women's Studies and Philosophy, lectured yesterday in the Campus Center about the role of women in Chinese society. She discussed a recent visit to China, and her observations on women's lives there.

She began her lecture by describing a weeklong course she taught last summer in a Chinese philosophy school. In her course, a feminist critique of Western philosophy, she asked students about their views on women's rights.

"The discussions we had were interesting," Ferguson said. "The belief that women and men naturally play complementary roles was a belief that was held, of course, by a lot of the men – and some of the women. Most of the women were very strong in their opposition to this idea, though."

The men, Ferguson said, were divided in their beliefs about women's ideal role. Some supported gender equality, while others felt that women were biologically inferior.

"A few thought that men were superior to women because of physical strength, and the psychological strength that comes with it," Ferguson said. "One man argued that women, throughout history, hadn't done anything much. He got jumped on by the women, and didn't come back to the class."

Ferguson felt that the course offered a unique opportunity to Chinese students to speak freely about gender issues. The younger generation, she said, often didn't have the chance to discuss women's rights.

After discussing the philosophy course, Ferguson showed slides of photos taken throughout her trip, and displayed unique objects she had collected. She then segued into a discussion of the history of Chinese women's liberation.

"China is often used as an example of a place where patriarchy was challenged,"

Turn to CHINA, page 3

Serious Grievances Again

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association will face a judiciary hearing regarding legalities in this fall's Senate elections.

Petitioners Steve Morin and Steve Castillo accuse Speaker Aaron Saunders, President John Sheehan, Secretary of Finance Gabriel Tavares

Turn to SGA, page 3

Town delays discussion of legal zoning

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

Zoning bylaws, local ordinances governing legal types and locations of development, are the cause of frequent argument between developers seeking maximum profit from their land and conservationists seeking as much open space as possible.

In Amherst as in everywhere

Turn to TOWN, page 3

Video Tries to Demystify Media Myths

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

A conservative agenda supported by corporate interests dominates the media's coverage of issues such as welfare, labor, and foreign affairs, according to a movie shown in the Campus Center last night by the Radical Student Union (RSU).

"The Myth of the Liberal Media," produced by the Media Education Foundation, suggests that the American media advances "elite propaganda." Twenty-six students and local residents watched the movie, featuring activists Noam Chomsky and Edward Herman, that attempts to demystify liberal control over modern news.

According to the movie, no evidence exists that the media tilts towards the left of the political spectrum. In fact, the majority of news articles and editorial columns lean towards the right or lay in the center, the movie said.

"As conservatives assert the opposite of what is true about the media, they eliminate evidence supporting their influence in it," the movie said. "Since conservatives have established that the media supports the left, the question is, are the media too liberal?"

Critics of the "liberal" media suggest that the political affiliations and voting records of most reporters reflect a bias in the nation's newspapers and television broadcasts, the movie said. However, their evaluation does not acknowledge the presence of four filters through which news owners, advertisers, sources, and outside flak force news to run.

Seven large corporations, whose ownership adhere to conservative philosophies, control the modern media, the movie said. These owners operate in "interlocking relationships" with other corporations, whose interests the owners safeguard.

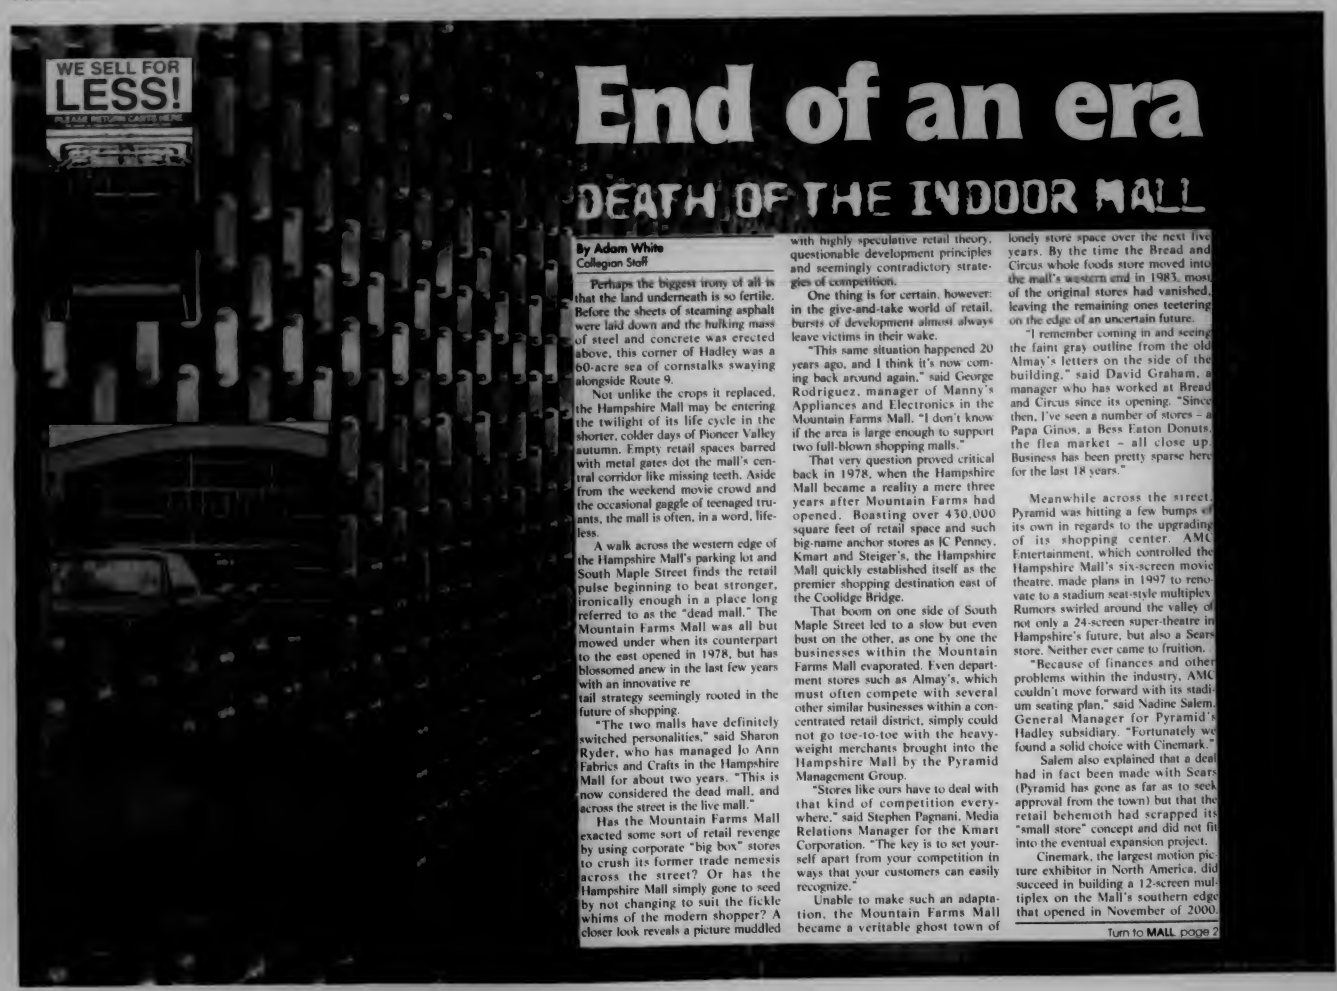
"Conservative critics have a tendency to ignore ownership," the movie said. "They claim Dan Rather and Peter Jennings control news from the bottom level."

The media sells information to businesses by avoiding conflict with potential advertisers. For example, contemporary news never criticizes the auto industry because it represents 25 percent of media advertising.

"PBS has become conservative because it needed to take on sponsors," the movie said. "Now, what was supposed to be the focal point of liberalism, has become dominated by corporations."

The movie also said that the media cannot avoid selecting experts to express opinions about the news. Therefore, coalitions have established thinktanks, such as the American Enterprise Association, to meet conservative standards of analysis.

According to the movie, eight percent of all sources used by the media express progressive or liberal political opinions.



Turn to FILM, page 3

TABORA GIRCZYC-BLUM

Pumpkin Pie

These gourds are ready to sacrifice themselves for your dessert needs.

End of an era

DEATH OF THE INDOOR MALL

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Perhaps the biggest irony of all is that the land underneath is so fertile. Before the sheets of steaming asphalt were laid down and the hulking mass of steel and concrete was erected above, this corner of Hadley was a 60-acre sea of cornstalks swaying alongside Route 9.

Not unlike the crops it replaced, the Hampshire Mall may be entering the twilight of its life cycle in the shorter, colder days of Pioneer Valley autumn. Empty retail spaces barred with metal gates dot the mall's central corridor like missing teeth. Aside from the weekend movie crowd and the occasional gaggle of teenaged truants, the mall is often, in a word, lifeless.

A walk across the western edge of the Hampshire Mall's parking lot and South Maple Street finds the retail pulse beginning to beat stronger, ironically enough in a place long referred to as the "dead mall." The Mountain Farms Mall was all but mowed under when its counterpart to the east opened in 1978, but has blossomed anew in the last few years with an innovative re tail strategy seemingly rooted in the future of shopping.

"The two malls have definitely switched personalities," said Sharon Ryder, who has managed Jo Ann Fabrics and Crafts in the Hampshire Mall for about two years. "This is now considered the dead mall, and across the street is the live mall."

Has the Mountain Farms Mall exacted some sort of retail revenge by using corporate "big box" stores to crush its former trade nemesis across the street? Or has the Hampshire Mall simply gone to seed by not changing to suit the fickle whims of the modern shopper? A closer look reveals a picture muddled with highly speculative retail theory, questionable development principles and seemingly contradictory strategies of competition.

One thing is for certain, however: in the give-and-take world of retail, bursts of development almost always leave victims in their wake.

"This same situation happened 20 years ago, and I think it's now coming back around again," said George Rodriguez, manager of Manny's Appliances and Electronics in the Mountain Farms Mall. "I don't know if the area is large enough to support two full-blown shopping malls."

That very question proved critical back in 1978, when the Hampshire Mall became a reality a mere three years after Mountain Farms had opened. Boasting over 430,000 square feet of retail space and such big-name anchor stores as JC Penney, Kmart and Steiger's, the Hampshire Mall quickly established itself as the premier shopping destination east of the Coolidge Bridge.

That boom on one side of South Maple Street led to a slow but even bust on the other, as one by one the businesses within the Mountain Farms Mall evaporated. Even department stores such as Almay's, which must often compete with several other similar businesses within a concentrated retail district, simply could not go toe-to-toe with the heavyweight merchants brought into the Hampshire Mall by the Pyramid Management Group.

"Stores like ours have to deal with that kind of competition everywhere," said Stephen Pagnani, Media Relations Manager for the Kmart Corporation. "The key is to set yourself apart from your competition in ways that your customers can easily recognize."

Unable to make such an adaptation, the Mountain Farms Mall became a veritable ghost town of lonely store space over the next five years. By the time the Bread and Circus whole foods store moved into the mall's western end in 1983, most of the original stores had vanished, leaving the remaining ones teetering on the edge of an uncertain future.

"I remember coming in and seeing the faint gray outline from the old Almay's letters on the side of the building," said David Graham, a manager who has worked at Bread and Circus since its opening. "Since then, I've seen a number of stores – a Papa Ginos, a Bess Eaton Donuts, the flea market – all close up. Business has been pretty sparse here for the last 18 years."

Meanwhile across the street, Pyramid was hitting a few bumps of its own in regards to the upgrading of its shopping center. AMC Entertainment, which controlled the Hampshire Mall's six-screen movie theatre, made plans in 1997 to renovate to a stadium seat-style multiplex. Rumors swirled around the valley of not only a 24-screen super-theatre in Hampshire's future, but also a Sears store. Neither ever came to fruition.

"Because of finances and other problems within the industry, AMC couldn't move forward with its stadium seating plan," said Nadine Salem, General Manager for Pyramid's Hadley subsidiary. "Fortunately we found a solid choice with Cinemark."

Salem also explained that a deal had in fact been made with Sears (Pyramid has gone as far as to seek approval from the town) but that the retail behemoth had scrapped its "small store" concept and did not fit into the eventual expansion project.

Cinemark, the largest motion picture exhibitor in North America, did succeed in building a 12-screen multiplex on the Mall's southern edge that opened in November of 2000.

Turn to MALL, page 2

■ mall

continued from page 1

TIBORA GINCZY-BLUM

Long, empty halls bring no business to the Hampshire Mall.

Salem has described the impact of the new theatres on the rest of the mall as "phenomenal," pointing to some solid statistical evidence to back up her claims. AMC drives an average of 200-250 thousand viewers a year to its six plex, while Cinemark is estimating a draw of between 600 to 650 thousand moviegoers in its first year of operation – which concludes this November.

"The response has gone far beyond our expectations," Salem said. "The increase in traffic has resulted in big increases for our food vendors and also other businesses throughout the mall. Radio Shack, Hallmark and Hamouth Jewelers have all reported significant increases this year."

But not all of the Hampshire Mall's tenants have reported increases in business over the last few years. Some have reported losses. Some have fallen silent, ceasing to report anything at all.

The sign for Cherry and Webb, a women's clothing store, still hangs outside the mall's western entrance; the store itself folded back in January of '99, a few short months before the entire chain succumbed to bankruptcy. The popular ice cream restaurant chain Friendly's closed its Hampshire Mall doors the following year, like it did at so many other locations nationwide. Other mall shops followed suit: Edie's Vintage Used CDs, the Dream Machine Arcade, the Vision Center and Klein's All Sports have all pulled out of this supposedly solid marketplace within the past three years.

"I think this mall started going down years ago, but I can't believe how many stores are gone," said Kelly Tower, a former Sunderland resident and mall regular who returned to the area this week after three years away. "I'm really sad to see that they got rid of the arcade, because there's less and less stuff in here now for kids."

What would motivate such businesses to jump ship just when a new state-of-the-art movie theatre was setting sail in Hadley? Sources within nearby Vision Showcase, which purchased the accounts of the Vision Center from departed Dr. John Harris, indicated that Harris was disenchanted with the "high rent" at the Hampshire Mall the has since signed on with JC Penney Optical in Holyoke). Patrick Simpson, the district manager for Klein's, indicated that the Hadley store's lease had run out and renewal talks with Pyramid had "broken down," leading to the store's closing in early September of this year.

It seems odd that the largest privately owned development company in the country would allow so many diverse businesses to slip away from a mall that once defined shopping for the surrounding area.

"If they don't bring in new stores, less and less people are going to want to make the trip here," said Bill Wait, a Turner's Falls resident who would like to see more novelty gift stores, such as Spencer's and Hot Topic, added to the slate at Hampshire. "If they had more interesting stores that pulled me in, I would shop here instead of driving all the way to places like Holyoke."

Even as its neighbor to the east was beginning to struggle, Mountain Farms was being eyed by powerful forces intent on breathing new life into the "dead mall." W / S Development Associates LLC took control of Mountain Farms in '99, and subsequently launched the most aggressive redevelopment campaign the area had ever seen. The Chestnut Hill-based development firm had already completed construction of four million square feet of retail space in Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Connecticut, and viewed Mountain Farms as a prime spot to incorporate some big corporate businesses into the area's shopping scene.

"We saw an opportunity to take a literally dead property and redevelop it by bringing in some of the top stores in the country," said Rob Gottlieb, Corporate Director of Marketing and Public Relations for W / S Development.

Other area merchants saw the Mountain Farms project in much simpler terms as a situation where someone where significant monetary resources were finally brought to the rescue of a crumbling property.

"That was just one big building in a serious state of disrepair," said Jonathan Elvin-Epstein, who has owned and operated his own sporting good's store, Jonathan's, at the corner of South Maple St. and Route 9 for over four and a half years. "In essence what happened was that someone came in who was in a position to, and willing to, put a lot of money into it."

Soon after purchasing the property from Henry Rosenberg, a New York-based real-estate developer, W / S set the wheels in motion to bring retail giant Wal-Mart into Mountain Farms. Word of such aspirations spread quickly throughout the community, causing an instant uprising among several human rights groups that accused Wal-Mart of a wide array of atrocities. These activists staged an organized demonstration in the Mountain Farms parking lot last fall, giving a rain-soaked testimony to the retail chain's deceptive practice of trumpeting American-made goods while buying largely from China and other repressive countries.

"We know that eight to 10 million people are in the Chinese prison system and forced to produce items for sale overseas," said Greg Denier, a spokesman for the United Food and Commercial Workers' Union (UFCW). "We have also confirmed through import records that Wal-Mart purchased goods from the Chinese Peoples' Liberation Army."

Wal-Mart got into hot water of a different nature during construction of its Hadley store, when the retailer reportedly violated the Clean Water Act by not complying with stormwater regulations. Its contractor, Bowdoin Construction, allegedly allowed silt fences to fall into disrepair and disturbed an adjacent wetland with a visible trail of silt. The company also failed to perform periodic checks to make sure its stormwater controls were functioning.

Wal-Mart was subsequently fined $1 million by the Environmental Protection Agency and forced to establish a $4.5 million environmental management plan to improve compliance at future building sites.

"We expect the retail and construction industries to comply with federal clean water requirements," said John Cruden, Acting Assistant General of the Justice Department's Environmental Division. "With this settlement, we are taking an important step to protect streams and lakes across the country."

Despite such obstacles, Wal-Mart did indeed open its doors in the fall of 2000. Its competitors, namely Kmart, braced for a downturn in business that would come even quicker than expected.

"Kmart and Wal-Mart are definitely direct competitors, and Kmart at first felt a significant impact from Wal-Mart's opening," said Salem.

Kmart had, in fact, undergone a renovation of its own curiously close to the Wal-Mart opening, shifting considerable emphasis toward its "pantry" department of consumable (but mostly non-perishable) goods. Pagnani contends that such an expansion had nothing to do with Wal-Mart, which also happens to have shifted more toward grocery items over the past few years.

"We've renovated all of our stores nationwide," said Pagnani. "The pantry section has always been a very good draw for us, bringing in a new clientele that would normally have stopped elsewhere for what they need."

The rebirth of the Mountain Farms Mall didn't stop with the addition of Wal-Mart, however. Two more massive stores, clothier Old Navy and home furnishings supplier Linens 'N Things, were added to the plaza in October 2000. A third "big box," Barnes & Noble, is set to open its doors on November 13, while construction has already begun to add a Marshall's clothing store and Michael's craft store by the spring of 2002.

These new merchants could be either a blessing or a curse for Hampshire Mall stores, depending on whom you ask. Some managers, such as Mike Turecki of Dave's Soda and Pet Food City, think that the new stores "will help out everybody in the long run."

"The addition of these new places makes it a lot more worthwhile for people to stay on this side of the bridge," Turecki said. "It should boost business in both malls."

The brass at W / S sees the new Mountain Farms as providing an alternative to the more traditional stores in the Hampshire, especially clothiers like JC Penney and Jonathan Reid. Old Navy provides a "value-oriented apparel store that caters largely to a younger crowd" in the words of Gottlieb, something that area youths seem to echo.

"You can find some decent stuff, and it's reasonably priced," said Katie Sachs, a sophomore at Amherst Regional High School. "And just the atmosphere – I can't stand the mall."

Ryder, whose craft store will face direct pressure from Michael's, has bigger things to be concerned about than keeping pace with her neighbors.

Turn to MALL page 3

TIBORA GINCZY-BLUM

Long customer lines exemplify Walmart's booming commerce.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian's finances fully independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Index Echo became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then in 1969

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 1, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

The selling of tragedy?
Don't buy into it.

As if the state of American television wasn't deplorable enough, we're now seeing our nation's sets used as devices to funnel money from the sympathetic masses.

Of course, that happens anyway.

Buying through television is one thing. That we're being sold the single greatest tragedy to occur on U.S. soil, however, is hideous.

Shades of September 11 have rapidly spread from the daily news, crossing over to the commercial slant that dominates our airwaves. With flags flying proudly in the background, family gathered around and a sense of stern resolve in tow, we've seen various pitchmen use the attacks to sell us cars, insurance, matching flags for our automobiles and decorative plates emblazoned with images of the New York City Police and Fire Departments.

Decorative plates? This, folks, is not only feeding off of the bottom, but instead, it is greedily searching for more.

To the credit of some, proceeds from such sales will benefit the friends and families of those lost in the attacks. That's fair, and, in some senses, an admirable mission: to help fellow citizens in need. Must it come, though, by way of flimsy designer dishware? It cheapens everything surrounding the day, particularly and most offensively the memories of those who died.

The University of Massachusetts has latched onto the trend as well, selling NYPD and NYFD hats on campus. Again, proceeds will be donated to support the relief effort, but the effort surfaces as shallow and easy. Dig into your own pockets, UMass, and send off some of the profit you earn by selling overpriced university apparel.

The desire to help those in need is strong with us right now; a natural reaction to an overwhelming situation. That desire seems most appropriate, though, when it's channeled into something positive, something creative, rather than forced down into some make-a-quick-buck scheme on TV. If these companies that buy ad time and then proceed to hawk their wares to us are so concerned about what's going on, then why not cut out the false middleman and speak directly to the point? Can't they perform the task quietly and tactfully without screaming for attention? Even the golden egg that Is publicity needs time out of the sun every now and then. This, now more than ever, would be that time.

Go out and throw your energy behind whatever side of the issue you happen to be on. Our country right now is a unique instant that is being propelled by the effort of those who seldom have a chance to exercise it. We at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, however, feel that effort should not be concentrated into commercializing the tragedy, to making it something that happened on television and on television only. It only helps to further erase the human element and, as we continue down this road, we'll only lose sight of where it was that we began.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Deep fall reflections

ROB SCHULTZ

It's cold, and the wind stings my face. There's still enough of the setting sun to see clearly. On the mountains it makes the trees look like they're engulfed in red and yellow flames. The darkness, though, is definitely gaining the advantage. I should wind up my walk soon, I think.

Still, the world is lovely, and especially New England in the fall. I've been to places that have especially struck me with their beauty - the wild of Northern California, the shine of metro Toronto – but none of them can compete with western Mass. and Vermont as October fades into November. I don't want to part with it yet, returning to the artificial light and toys of my apartment, so I sit on fairly solid pile of dirt next to the pond and try to just be.

I can't, though. There are things in the air around me, whispers and hints, things that won't fade. Unease overtakes me.

It's no fluke that Halloween comes when it does. There is something threatening in the very atmosphere of late October, not overt, but clear to the soul that opens itself to the pervasive feeling.

It suddenly does not at all seem implausible that the dead could once again walk, come back to take revenge. Of course, my ghosts are more benign than those in the legends. My grandma would shake my ear and give me a decent slap in the gob for not having been in a church since Confirmation. Mr. Westberg, my old coach, Scoutmaster, and friend whom I miss very much, would pop an O'Doul's and make me tie a double half-hitch while he once again regales me with the story of how I tripped over my shin pads and literally sat on the ball in the middle of a very important Plymouth Youth Soccer game. That is the sort of revenge I'd give a year of my life to suffer for a moment.

It isn't just the specter of those lost that gives Halloween time in New England its special character, though. The feeling of loss comes up from the country-side itself. From my perch on the dirt I see an unplowed field growing ragged with weeds, an abandoned barn rotting with grace, a dignified old silo now rusted through. On the ground to my left is the rust-covered iron crosspiece of an old horse-drawn plow; how many years it has been decaying in these leaves is anyone's guess. "I am OLD," New England says, "and look at what has been lost. Look at what has ceased to be."

I feel mournful. Fatalism invades my mind: What use is it, I think? The leaves are beautiful, but they will fall within the month. Snow will cover them. They will rot, just as all these structures and tools and those who made them rot. The sun is already setting. The wind stings my face. What's the use? The most I can hope for is that the trees will bemoan my loss as poignantly as they do those who built the silo. I doubt I can achieve even that much.

The autumn is deceiving. Beneath its beauty is death. The smell in the air is change, and not change for the better. It is only the pathway to winter, and not a New England wonderland like the postcards would have you buy into, but the kind that killed off almost all the Pilgrims that first horrible winter. A white wasteland.

A leaf hits my face. I swat it away, and I am myself again. I shake it off. It's infectious, the gloom of the trees. It lures you in with its beauty then tries to suck you into its malaise. That's the real threat of the Halloween season. The dead don't come back to try and enter your home and cut your throat. Ghosts and goblins don't want to take your candy or break your Jack O'Lantern. They simply want you to be like them. To give up hope.

I rise, stretch, and turn up my collar. Time to get home. I need to make dinner, listen to some records, hit the books, call my girlfriend, to be alive. Life is good.

I don't need to feel the regrets of those that came before me. I feel the sadness of New England. I feel its loss. I won't be entranced by it, however. Will all I do pass? Absolutely. However, hundreds of years hence, the tree that grows over my bones might break the lamentations of the forest around it. A life lived to the fullest might result in one ghost that celebrates the past rather than mourning its passing. A different sort of scent is in the air, one that might move a nearby kid to take heart. To lessen the sting of the wind.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

Another year for America's National Pastime

Autumns of discontent

Here I am again, staring out my dorm room window, watching the leaves change color. While some enjoy the chilling of the air and the changing of the leaves from green to reds and yellows and oranges, I sit here and mull over the misery of this time of year for the local Red Sox fan. I have experienced 19 falls just like this, with no celebration of a World Series Championship for the Boston Nine. My father has experienced 48. His father has experienced 76.

The seasons determine the mood of the Red Sox Nation. In winter, we long for the coming of the warm weather, pools, barbecues...and Saturday afternoon baseball games with our legs sticking to the rigid seats of Fenway. While trudging down the road through six inches of snow, we rub our hands together feverishly trying to regain feeling. But in the back of our minds, we know that in a few months the sun will come out, and baseball will return to Beantown.

In spring we work in the yard, go to the Tweeter Center for shows, and count down the days in anticipation of the hottest time of the year – Opening Day. After months and months of waiting and eagerness, months and months of hearing speculation and following off-season transactions, the most popular of all Boston sports begins. The Red Sox almost annually start out well, and our hopes and wishes of the preseason seem to be justified. Then invariably someone utters the thought that seeps into all of our minds when the Sox play well: maybe it's "The Year".

Maybe, just maybe, this is the year that the Red Sox will break the Curse of the Bambino. Ever since the day that Babe Ruth was sold to the hated Yankees, the Red Sox have yet to win a World Series title. I'm not a superstitious person, but as much as I hate to break it to you, ladies and gentlemen, the curse is real.

Look at the evidence. From Johnny Pesky's hesitation in the 1946 World Series, to the ground ball through Buckner's legs in the 1986 Series, to the fact that Pedro still hasn't won a game since he threatened to drill the Babs in the butt if we could somehow wake him up. Men have done all they can to break the curse. The Kid hit 400. Nomar won back-to-back batting titles. Some guy named Yastrzemski even climbed to the top of Mt. Everest and placed a Red Sox cap on the peak. All of these efforts have been in vain however, and we fans are left to sit here and hope.

Whenever I get an eyelash on my finger and blow it off, or see a shooting star, or blow out my birthday candles the wish is always the same, and has been for years: I wish this is The Year. I wish to not have to feel that horrible sense of disappointment when I come to terms with the fact that I will have to survive another winter looking ahead. I wish for the day that I could go to bed at night knowing that the Red Sox are world champions. Regardless of my wishes and prayers however, the time inevitably comes when the Red Sox fate is sealed for the year and it has been coming every year for eight to nine years.

MARK QUINNAN

Then football starts, shorts change to pants, and I cheer for whoever is playing the Yankees. Anyone. Who is it this year? The Diamondbacks? Yeah, they'll do. I even now, with all of the atrocities of September 11, I cannot bare the thought of the Pinstripes being on top of the baseball world. I am not a callous person, and I feel for New Yorkers and everything they have been through. But this is baseball, and the Yankees winning the Series isn't going to bring Osama Bin Laden to justice and its not going to provide solace to anyone who had a family member killed in the attacks. I love baseball, but if the Yankees winning the World Series can lessen any sort of sadness you feel about what happened, then they care too much about the game.

But I digress. What I am getting at is this: all Red Sox fans are connected through this terrible cycle of anticipation, hope and endless disappointments. We all feel it. We all know it will be there again next year. But we press on. This forms the very soul of the Red Sox nation. This is why we feel an instant emotional bond with anyone else we see in a Red Sox cap. We all endure this same pain; we all feel a pang of futility in the fall when the Red Sox finally disappoint us once again, and touch off another long winter of wishing. One can walk down the street and ask almost anyone they see if they know the score of the day's game. Not only will you more than likely find out the score, but also you will probably enter yourself into a long conversation with the individual about any number of things surrounding the state of affairs of the team.

The camaraderie among Red Sox fans, the utter devotion to the team through the years, and the certainty that the same devotion will be there in the future is what makes Red Sox fans the best in baseball. The true test of a fans commitment to a team is how they react when the team is going through tough times. As far as I can tell, the Red Sox have been going through tough times for over eighty years now, and their fan base remains loyal. I dare say that fans in other baseball cities would have a difficult time enduring this, such as a certain other team whose fan base wavered significantly during the late 80's and early 90's when the team fell on hard times <cough, Yankees>. But for a Red Sox fan, it comes with the territory, and through it all we stand by the club.

So the seasons will continue to pass. And the media will play on our emotions time and time again. And men will climb Mount Everest with Red Sox hats. And Fenway will sell out. And players will come, and players will go. And ticket prices will go up. And the finger pointing will run rampant. And someone will make a fortune off "Yankees Suck" t-shirts. And the Yankees will win anyways. And until it all changes, I will continue to blow out my birthday candles with the same wish in mind.

Mark Quinnan is a UMass student.

That Yankee tradition

I am not a big baseball fan. I'm not a Red Sox fan or a Yankees fan. If I had to cheer on a team, it would have to be the Minnesota Twins, but they haven't been the same since Kirby left. That said, and even though I'm not a regular member of the baseball viewing audience, I do associate with many people who are extreme baseball fans, and therefore I do catch the occasional game.

The other night I was watching Game Two of the World Series and I noticed something. First of all, this is what, the sixth year that the Yankees have been in the pennant race? I think there's something suspicious about that, almost like it was planned and enforced. As the camera panned over the Yankees dugout, I looked at all the player's faces and realized that they all look like they belong to some crime family. That's when it hit me: the Yankees ball club is more than just a baseball team, it's a mafia. No wonder they've been in the World Series so many times! They've been involved in clandestine activities that have guaranteed their spot in the championships.

Now before all you Yankee fans or Yankee haters start sending me nasty e-mails, just hear me out. Think about it, don't they all look like shady characters? I think so. Let's review the Yankee roster and go over how this team could be and possibly is an organized crime network, and how everyone fits in.

The team:
- Derek Jeter – knesharck
- Andy Pettitte – bookie
- David Justice – con man
- Jorge Posada – hitman
- Orlando Hernandez – 'The Drifter'
- Roger Clemens – the intimidator
- Randy Velarde – runner
- Mike Mussina – money launderer
- Mariano Rivera – the clean-up guy, "mops up the mess"
- Bernie Williams – bodyguard
- Luis Sojo – chef at the Italian Restaurant
- Scott Brosius – creepy pervert guy at the strip club
- Mike Stanton – corrupt NYC cop
- Chuck Knoblauch – corrupt NYC cop (Mike's partner)
- Tino Martinez –'The Snake'
- Alfonso Soriano – crack dealer
- Ramiro Mendoza – 'The Rat'
- Clay Bellinger – thief
- Paul O'Neill – psychopath (like Joe Pesci in Goodfellas)
- Shane Spencer – fence
- Don Zimmer – the bald guy (there's always a bald guy)
- Joe Torre – underboss
- George Steinbrenner – the boss, the Godfather

Just imagine some FBI office somewhere with the hierarchy all drawn out on some wall with Steinbrenner at the top and all his henchmen ascending down through the ranks. They all pose as baseball players during the games, but behind the scenes, they're engaged in racketeering, expropriation, extortion, bribery, blackmail and coercion – all the classic activities in which a mob is involved. Still not convinced? Let me expand on some theories that I've been working on regarding this Yankee crime family, and why they've forced themselves into the playoffs for the last six years.

The Yankees have plenty of covers for their money laundering and expropriation of funds. Let's talk about the vending industry. The Yankees probably have an 'arrangement' with the vendors in the ballpark where they hike up prices on soft pretzels, beer, hot dogs and pop, and then give kickbacks to the vendors while they put the rest of the money into fake accounts that will later be used to bribe umpires to make calls in the Yank's favor, and to presidents of other ball clubs not to sign or play certain players. They probably all bet on their own games too, and launder the money through the refreshments stand. I little do the fans know that when they spend that $5 for a hot dog their money is getting mixed in with the dirty money from backroom gambling.

CATHERINE TURNER

Like other mafia families, they use force to get what they want. Through coercion they can convince other teams not to win, be it by blackmail, exploitation or just plain threat. Think about all the players on the disabled list this year. Accidents? I think not. Javy Lopez of the Atlanta Braves – ankle injury; Curt Leskanic of the Milwaukee Brewers – rotator cuff; Jason Kendall of the Pittsburgh Pirates – thumb surgery; Benny Agbayani of the Mets – 'broke' his arm/wrist; Tony Gwynn of the Padres – knee injury; Nomar Garciaparra of the Red Sox – broken wrist; Carlos Guillen of the Mariners – Tuberculosis; and Jeff Bagwell of the Houston Astros – torn labrum. The Yankees will go to great lengths to get what they want.

Picture this: it's a dark night. Mark McGwire is driving home from Busch Stadium when he's tailed by a black Suburban. He pulls up to a stoplight and the Suburban pulls up alongside him. The window goes down, and to Mark's surprise, he sees Tino Martinez. The two cars pull into the back of a local grocery store. Mark gets out of his car, and out of the Suburban hops Tino "the Snake," Jorge Posada, and Roger Clemens, the resident tough guy. They make Mark an offer he can't refuse. They say, "Hey Mark, we're tired of you being a big star. Now either you get out of the spotlight, or we take you out of the spotlight!" and of course Mark then says, "You guys don't fool me! I'm not going to quit playing like a champ just because you don't like It!" But the Yankees won't be stopped. The next game Mark is out with a "bad back." Remember Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan? It's the same thing, except more clandestine. The Yankees don't have a bunch of anonymous thugs doing their dirty work in public, they do it themselves and in secret.

Yeah, the Yankees definitely have a conspiracy going. Steinbrenner just sits in his office, smoking a big stogie, eating some lasagna from Sojo's restaurant, coordinating the plans to keep the Yanks in the race. But it's not just that. With Ieter's lonesharking, Sorianо's crack dealership, Mussina's money laundering and Pettitte making the bets, the Yankees have a bonafide crime empire on their hands. And don't worry, they've got Rivera to clean up any messes they accidentally make. Like when they gave Carlos Guillen TB. He wasn't too happy about that and Rivera had to come in and sanitize the scene.

It's like every mob movie you've seen and every episode of the Sopranos. The difference is that unlike the Corleones, the Yankees are tied together through baseball, not their Italian ancestry or their neighborhoods. And while Tony Soprano runs a lucrative strip club and garbage company, Steinbrenner runs a successful team. So successful because they'll do anything to win. Anything. Accidents? I think not. Javy Lopez of the Atlanta Braves – ankle injury; Curt Leskanic of the Milwaukee Brewers – rotator cuff; Jason Kendall of the Pittsburgh Pirates – thumb surgery; Benny Agbayani of the Mets – 'broke' his arm/wrist; Tony Gwynn of the Padres – knee injury; Nomar Garciaparra of the Red Sox – broken wrist; Carlos Guillen of the Mariners – Tuberculosis; and Jeff Bagwell of the Houston Astros – torn labrum. The Yankees will go to great lengths to get what they want.

Picture this: it's a dark night. Mark McGwire is driving home from Busch Stadium when he's tailed by a black Suburban. He pulls up to a stoplight and the Suburban pulls up alongside him. The window goes down, and to Mark's surprise, he sees Tino Martinez. The two cars pull into the back of a local grocery

Catherine Turner is a Collegian Staff member.

Write for Ed/ Op
Check us out in the Campus Center basement and ask for Matt or Dan

The UMass Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Arts Editor
Mike Delano
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Toons: Then and Now

Sgt. Slaughter reports from the frontlines

CODENAME: Note Book
Joe News Network

The Pentagon has reactivated G.I. Joe, America's daring, highly trained special mission force. The announcement comes just one day after the Central Intelligence Agency released communication intercepts between known al-Qaeda lieutenants and Cobra operatives.

Defense officials today confirmed that the Joes were deployed in southern Afghanistan and have already carried out several "successful" missions.

"It is believed, by our people on the ground who com we trust, that there is a significant threat from Cobra. We sent the Joes in by a variety of methods, which we will not discuss here, and they carried out successful operations on several targets," Donald Rumsfeld, secretary of Defense, said. "They [G.I. Joe] represent the best we have; they are real American heroes."

Cobra, a ruthless terrorist organization determined to rule the world, is led by Emperor Serpentor. Serpentor was created, of course, by the evil Dr. Mindbender, from genetic material collected from the world's greatest military leaders.

Rumsfeld refused to elaborate on the methods used in the attacks, although he did specify that the targets were an airport and the Cobra stronghold, the Terrordrome.

JNN have received, through its sources, video and photographs of the raid on the airport.

The videos are shot with night vision cameras and depict the attack beginning with a strafing run by Dragonfly helicopters. Several Tomahawk transport helicopters then landed and deployed Joes onto the tarmac. The Dragonflies hung around overhead, providing fire support as Joe teams led by Beachhead blew up Cobra Rattler airplanes. The Rattler pilots escaped safely, however. By this time, the enemy is on full alert, and three H.I.S.S. battle tanks positioned themselves at the far end of the landing strip. These were quickly taken out however by radar guided bombs dropped from Skystrikers. The Skystrikers were launched from the U.S.S Flagg just in case the F-14 power is needed. Even though a terrific explosion ripped apart the Cobra armor, the tank drivers escaped safely.

Joe reinforcements arrived as several MOBAT tanks and Wolverine missile launchers crashed through the fence and fired large colorful blasts of laser fire at the assembling Cobra troops. A ferocious firefight ensued, resulting in no casualties.

The photos released from the attack on

Turn to G.I JOE page 8

SNAP SHOT/JNN

Two Joe infantry soldiers rest following a successful raid on the Cobra held Terrordrome.

Girl toons truly outrageous

By Shauna "Synergy" Billings and Nick "Popple Punter" Pizzolato
Collegian Girlie Cartoon Analysts

The 1980's bring to mind three words: yuppie, greed, and Popple. Popple, you ask? WTF does that have to do with yuppies and greed? EVERYTHING! In the 1980's, marketing executives discovered the brilliant idea of creating cartoon shows to promote new lines of toys. So, every television show had it's very own set of dolls, clothes, playsets and more. Executives also saw that by marketing specific shows to girls and specific shows to boys. They could double their profits by forcing people to comply with gender restrictions. The girls got television shows about fashion models, fairies and stuff that revolved around going steady. The boys got shows about cars, robots and war.

Today's society prides itself on being gender neutral. Many of today's cartoon shows have mixed the genres and girls like Dragon Ball Z and Rugrats. Very few shows are still gender specific. But, as children of the

Turn to TOON page 8

Livin' in the golden years

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

It didn't matter where he was.

At any time, in any setting, Prince Adam could hoist The Sword of Power into the pink and purple ambiance of Eternia, ramble off some uncontrollable lexis, and turn into He-man: the most powerful man in the universe.

You know the drill.

"By the Power of Grayskull...I have the power!"

His sword representing the most efficient lightning rod ever invented, Prince Adam could transform into He-man in just seconds.

That procedure was something you just never questioned.

Castle Greyskull appeared behind He-man during every alteration, even if, in the prior instant, Adam and Cringer had been situated in the middle of a forest, nowhere near the strongold of Eternium.

It slighted precision, of course. But we were all young then and slow on the ingestion of information. Plus, it's not like we cared about cartoon accuracy at that time anyway.

He-man was damn cool. And that, in turn, pushed us (assuming you tuned in) into that same distinguished category. Because other than The Sorceress, Man-At-Arms, Orko, Queen Marlena, She-ra, LightHope and Loo-Kee, we were the only ones who knew He-Man's secret.

We knew, that even though He-Man was clearly no more than the sun-baked, half-naked, big-sword-carrying version of Prince Adam, no one would ever find out who he really was.

But again, that wasn't something we really thought about either.

All we cared about was the never-ending Masters of the Universe battles we'd stage in our rooms.

Life was easy.

It would start with Snake Mountain in one corner, and Castle Greyskull in the other. Behind Snake Mountain was good ol' screechy-voiced Skeletor, trailed by his frightening little black kitty, Panthor. And behind Greyskull, He-man (Regular He-man, Battle armor He-man, Thunder Punch He-man, Laser Light He-man, Wonder Bread Mail Order He-man...whatever your preference) sauntered peacefully with Battle Cat a.k.a. "his fearless friend."

Usually, you'd throw Orko and his magic back there with He-man, and sometimes you'd add Man-At-Arms, depending on how well you thought the others could defend Grayskull (if you were a disturbed little child, you'd lock He-man inside Grayskull with Teela and the Sorceress; and if you've grown into a disturbed young adult, you still fantasize about being locked inside of Eternia's palace with them).

Turn to HE-MAN page 8

the bowl, I'll let you sucker-punch me in the stomach. SpongeBob is the main character, literally a sponge decked out in square pants that lives in an underwater pineapple and works as a fry cook in a restaurant called the Krusty Krab. (Somehow it isn't quite as hilarious in print.) Take my word for it: you want to watch this show. And then go jelly fishing.

Similarly recommended: The Fairly Odd Parents (Nickelodeon), Adult Swim (Cartoon Network)

The best action cartoon has to be Batman Beyond. The show is currently rotting in limbo, but the word on the streets is that it'll be making a reappearance on Cartoon Network in the near future. The show's premise is sketchy – in the future, Bruce Wayne is a broken old man, who takes a young punk named Terry MacInnis under his wing to become the new Batman. In execution, however, Batman Beyond is truly haunting. The futuristic Gotham is fantastic and the ultra-violent fight scenes are engrossing, but this is one cartoon in which the plot and the dialogue are really the stars of the show. The relationship between Bruce Wayne and his ward, Terry, is the source of age and off beat humor. It's always exciting, and the heartbreak and pain of the show's victims is not too much for most animated [illegible], but the show pulls [illegible] punches. If this was a live action [illegible] it would have to be shown [illegible] Should it ever get back [illegible] Samurai [illegible] Jewerk), X-Men [illegible] am I would have [illegible]

[illegible]ON, page 8

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

COURTESY OF CLIVE BOURNELL

Fields of Gold

The Academy of St. Martin in the Fields with Art stic Director Kenneth Sillito will perform pieces from Mozart and others on November 8 at the Concert Hall.

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – From October 18 to November 11, Central Gallery will be presenting an exhibit entitled Icon and Golem by Judith Shaffer. There is a Gallery Talk on November 6 at 3 p.m.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn. North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – The critically acclaimed show "Ballet Hispanico" is coming to UMass. The show has been recognized as the foremost dance interpreter of Latino culture in the United States. Founded in 1970 by Tina Ramirez and has toured around the U.S. and the world. "Ballet Hispanico" will be at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Wednesday, November 14 at 7:30 p.m.

UMASS – World Percussion Workshop will be put on in Bezanson Recital Hall at 1 p.m. on Saturday November 3. The public is welcome.

UMASS – "Music and Myth" is a percussion ensemble featuring music by Victorio, Read, Miki & others. It will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. and costs $10 and $5.

UMASS – New World Theater presents Project 2050's Creative Cadences: Identity, Immigration, Incarceration, Exploitation, & Negotiation. It is the culmination of a series of summer workshops in which local youth, scholars, and professional artists. They created a new type of theater that battles youth stereotypes. The performance will be at Bowker Auditorium on November 10 and are $10 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 545-2511 or (800) 999-UMASS.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – Professor Nigel Coxe will perform Beethoven's Opus 27 Sonatas. During the show, Prof. Coxe will also provide the audience with commentary during the show about Beethoven and the selected works. The event will take place on Tuesday, November 13 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $4 for seniors and $8 for everyone else. For more information call 545-2511.

UMASS – Handance featuring Glen Velez are a group that experiments with percussion and Asian music. Velez is a Grammy award wining drummer, composer, scholar and teacher and he has also created his own unique style, the style that he and Handance will be performing on Saturday, November 3 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. General admission is $15 and students are $7.

UMASS – The Academy of St. Martin in the Fields performs with Artistic Director Kenneth Sillito. The chamber music orchestra will be featuring selections from Mozart, Bruckner and Tchikovsky. The show will be at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday November 8 in the Concert Hall. Prices range from $15 to $40 for the general public and between $5 and $10 for Five College Students. For more information call 545-2511.

UMASS – The ALANA Affairs Office and UPC will be bringing Puerto Rican singer/songwriter Roy Brown and guitarist Jose Gonzalez for an evening of music. The performance will take place on tonight, November 1 at 7:30 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium. The event is $5 for the general public and free for UMass students.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents The Legacy of Iva Dee Hiatt performed by Jane Bryden and Frederic Cohen. Ive Dee Hiatt was a member of the Smith College Music Department and served as Director of Chorale Music for many years. It will be held on Friday, November 9 at 8 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents the Autumn Serenade Concert. Featuring selections by Ippolitiv-Ivanov, Gardner, Perera, and Wheelock, the concert is an annual event. It will take place on Saturday, November 10 at 8 p.m. and is free.

AMHERST – Gilbert and Sullivan's musical/comedy "The Grand Duke" will be performed by the Valley Light Opera of Amherst. The performances will take place on Fridays November 2 & 9 at 8 p.m. and Thursdays November 3 & 10 at 8 p.m. with a matinee on Sunday, November 4 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $14 for adults and $10 for students and seniors. To order tickets and more information call (413) 256-4065 or go to their website, www.lsse.org.

MONTAGUE – The music improv group The Bop Ants and Thomas Ciufo and Jason McGill will be performing at the Montague Bookmill on Thursday, November at 8 p.m. The price is six dollars per person and for more information call 413-367-9206.

NORTHAMPTON – The center for the Arts Northampton is sponsoring a Sing Out at John M Greene Hall. For $5 per person or $15 for a family, you are treated to a wider variety of music, with 10% of the proceeds to benefit the American Red Cross. Tickets are available at Beyond Words Bookshop and State Street Fruit Store. They can be found locally A.J. Hastings Inc.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Poet Lucille Clifton will read at Smith College on Tuesday, November 6 in Wright Hall Auditorium. Since her work debuted in 1969 she has been a respected figure in American poetry. She will read selected pieces and the reading will be followed by a bookselling and signing. The event is free to all, and for more information call 413-585-4891.

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Student Union will be showing a double feature of the films War Zone and Slim Hopes. War Zone shows what it is like to be a woman in an environment that does not look down upon male heckling, touching and following women. Slim Hopes shows how advertising uses and depicts the female body as just a sex symbol. They will be showing this on November 6 at 7 p.m. in campus center room 917. There will be a second showing in the same room at the same time the next day as well.

EVENTS

UMASS – The "World Famous" Lipizzaner Stallions will make their way to Amherst on Thursday, November 8 at 7:30 p.m. in this, their 31st year, the show is featuring a special presentation of the "Dancing White Stallions." They have been a staple of the equestrian world for the last 425 years and are now looked at like a work of art. Tickets are $18.50 for adults and seniors and kids save two dollars. For more information call 413-545-0505

COURTESY OF NEW WORLD THEATER

Creative Solutions

New World Theater presents Project 2050's Creative Cadences: Identity, Immigration, Incarceration, Exploitation, & Negotiation on November 10 at Bowker Auditorium

November '01

ARTS ON CAMPUS...

A monthly calendar brought to you by the UMass Arts Council.

Events

Thursday, November 1
LECTURE: Doug Reed: Landscape Architect 4 p.m. in the Procapio Room Hills Central. 545-6642.
%FILM: Sahara Offers a window into Hollywood portrayals of the East. 7:30 p.m. in Herter 231. 545-1980.
#THEATER: Tartuffe Theatre de la Jeune Lune boldly seeks to rediscover the sensation this play caused when it first appeared in the time of Louis XIV. 7:30 p.m. in Concert Hall. $545-2511.
MUSIC: An Evening with Ray Brown and Jose Gonzalez Legendary Brown will join guitarist Jose Gonzalez and the group Chiaki Cappelle for an evening of contemporary Puerto Rican music. 7:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Friday, November 2
MUSIC: David Kovics 7 p.m. Herter 227 545-3670.
Saturday, November 3
MUSIC: World Percussion Workshop with Glen Velez. 1 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. 545-2227.
%MUSIC: Handance World Percussion An eclectic mix of traditions of rhythms 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable presents...a high energy improvisational comedy performance! 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163C. 545-3600.
Sunday, November 4
MUSIC: The Magic of Voices Together R Wayne Abercrombie, coordinator. Performing Ensembles: UMass Chamber Choir, Chorale, Madrigal Singers, Vocal Jazz Ensemble, Women's Choir & Men's Choir with the Lexington High School Madrigal Singers and the Springfield Children's Chorus at the Community Music School of Springfield. $ 545-2511.
MUSIC: Showpieces for Trumpet Faculty Recital Eric Berlin, trumpet & Nikki Stoyanov, piano. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Monday, November 5
MUSIC: Double Reeds: Voice and Piano Frederic Cohen, Marlene Wait and Gregory Hayes. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, November 6
FILM/VIDEO: Warzone and Slim Hopes two films: address how sexism continues to operate in today's society. 7 p.m. in Campus Center Room 917. 253-0735.
MUSIC: Trombones in Concert Trombone Choir with David Sporny, director. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Wednesday, November 7
%TALK: Producing Adrienne Kennedy w/ Paul K. Bryant, assistant and Carine Jackson Smith will share their insight and experience with Kennedy's work. 4 p.m. in Herter Hall Room 301. 545-3490.
Thursday, November 8
LECTURE/READING: LA RECITATION DE L'OUBLI (The Recitation of Forgetting) A poetry reading in French and English with a conversation with the author. 4 p.m. in Herter Hall Room 601. 545-2314.
#THEATER: The Ohio State Murders This play speaks about a mother's loss while painting a bigger picture about race, class and gender in the United States. 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theater. $ 545-2511. Through 11/10 & 11/13-11/17. Matinee on 11/10 & 17 at 2 p.m.
#MUSIC: Academy of St. Martin in the Fields The world's most famous chamber orchestra performs with Artistic Director Kenneth Sillito. 7:30 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
MUSIC: Ron Wilkins: First Light Jazz Residency Jeffrey Holmes, director with Jazz Ensemble I, Vocal Jazz Ensemble & UMass Jazz faculty members. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Friday, November 9
MUSIC: Widespread Panic 7 p.m. in Mullins Center. $ 545-0505.
Saturday, November 10
%THEATER: Project 2050 Creative Cadences Local area youth collide artistic expression with their concern for social justice. 8p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
THEATER: MISSION IMPROVable 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163C. 545-3600.
MUSIC: Red Cross Benefit concert Featuring Bob's Day Off, One Movement, and Anonymous Famous. 7:00 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 546-1384.
Tuesday, November 13
FILM/VIDEO: School of the Assassins Documentary Night 7 p.m. in Campus Center Room 917. 253-0735.
%LECTURE: Artist Frank Olive will lecture about his work on display in the exhibition, The Painter's Edge. 4:30 p.m. in Marshall 14. 545-1902.
MUSIC: A Beethoven Anniversary Faculty recital with Nigel Coxe, piano. 8:15 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
FILM/VIDEO: Asian/Asian American Film Festival 7 p.m. in Herter Hall Room 227. Through 11/18. 545-6348.
Wednesday, November 14
#DANCE: Ballet Hispanico performing dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz and ethnic styles. 7:30 p.m. in Concert Hall. $ 545-2511.
Thursday, November 15
#THEATER: Into the Woods UMass Theater Guild presents this classical by Steven Sondheim and James Lapine. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
%ART Deadline for Latino Culture and Heritage Art Contest Student artists interested in creating a painting or sculpture identifiable with the theme-Latino Culture and Heritage are encouraged to apply. 545-2728
Saturday, November 17
%MUSIC: Raga & Sruthaya An enchanting evening of Indian classical music. 6 p.m. in Memorial Hall. $ 546-4596
THEATER MISSION IMPROVable 8p.m. in Campus Center Room 163C. 545-3600.
Monday, November 19
MUSIC: Faculty Recital Marjorie Merrick, soprano, Nadine Shank, piano & Christopher Krueger, flute. 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, November 20
FILM: Japanese Animation 6p.m. in School of Management 120. 545-3600. Also 11/27 at Morrill Science Center N329 at 6p.m.
THEATER: Student Valley Productions presents Toast performance. 8p.m. Hampshire Dining. 545-3600.
FILM/VIDEO: Advertising and the End of the World featuring a presentation by Prof. Sut Jhally. 7 p.m. in Campus Ctr Room 917. 253-0735.
ART Deadline for Rapid Response Call for submissions for upcoming November exhibit that responds to The events and aftermath of Sept. 11. 545-0680.
MUSIC: Music and Myth Percussion Ensemble & UMass Marimbas with Eduardo Leandro, Thomas Hagmann & William Hanley, directors. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. $ 545-2511.
Tuesday, November 27
FILM/VIDEO: 9/11 and Turning Tragedy into War Two films about the Sept. 11 tragedy and its aftermath. 7 p.m. in Campus Ctr Room 917. 253-0735.
Wednesday, November 28
GRANT DEADLINE Single Projects and Events of Note. 545-0912
Thursday, November 29
%CAFE Quintessentially Queer Cafe and Open Mic 7 p.m. in the Graduate Student Lounge. 545-4824.
MUSIC: Collaborations in Sound and Motion University Dancers & Jazz Ensemble I with Billbob Brown & Jeffrey Holmes, directors. 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Through 12/1. $ 545-2511.

Exhibits

%AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY
101 New Africa House. 545-5177
M-Th 11-7 pm, W-F 1-5 pm
CAFE: The Journeys of Cuban Artists Through Nov. 14

%CENTRAL GALLERY
Central Residential Area
Infirmary Way-Wheeler House
545-0680
M-Th 9-4 pm; SU 2-5 pm
Judith Shaffer: Icon and Golem
Through: Nov. 11
Gallery Talk: Nov. 6, 3 p.m.
Frances Kleider NEW WORK
Nov. 15-Dec. 12
Reception: Nov. 15, 4-6 pm
Gallery Talk: Nov. 15, 5-5:30

%HAMPDEN GALLERY
Southwest Residential Area 545-0680
M-TH 12-6 SU 2-5 pm
Robert Taplin: Jupiter
Nov. 6-Dec. 6

%HERTER ART GALLERY
Herter Hall 545-0976
M-F 11-4 pm; SA-SU 1-4 pm
Hennelore Baron: Collages and Box Constructions
Through Nov. 4
The Weight of Light
Recent photographs by Liza Ryan
Nov. 15-Dec. 14
Reception: Nov. 14, 4-6 pm
Robert Cummings: Selected Drawings, 1980-2000
Nov. 15-Dec. 14
Reception: Nov 14, 4-6 pm

%STUDENT UNION GALLERY
Student Union Building 545-0792
M-TH 10-5 pm F 10-3 pm SA-SU 1-4 pm
Where They Are Now
Alumni Show
Through Nov. 16
Reception: Nov. 1 4-6 pm
BFA Thesis Show
By Alex Cichi
Nov. 26-30
Reception: Nov. 27, 4-6 pm

%UNIVERSITY GALLERY
Fine Arts Center 545-3670
TU-F 11-4:30 pm; SA-SU 2-5 pm
Markus Raetz
Nov. 3-Dec. 14
Reception: Nov. 2, 5-7 pm
William Hosie
Nov. 3-Dec. 14
Reception: Nov. 2, 5-7 pm

Five College students are offered a discounted admission at Fine Arts Center events.
%sponsored, in part, by a grant from the UMass Arts Council

11/01

UMass Arts Council·101 Hasbrouck Lab·545-0202

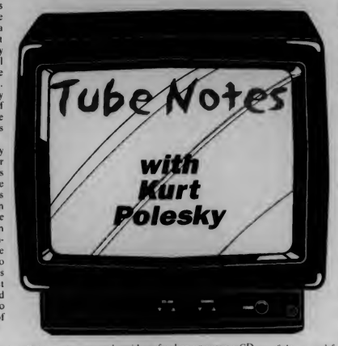
COURTESY OF SAMIR CHATTERJEE

Indian Rhythms

Renowned tablas player Samir Chatterjee will be among the performers on Nov. 3 at Bowker Auditorium.

Calling all drummers . . . this Saturday from 1 to 3 p.m. at UMass' Bezanson Recital Hall there will be a free workshop for anyone interested in learning drumming styles from Grammy Award-winning world beat percussionist, Glen Velez.

Velez, an excellent teacher who holds workshops world wide, has developed his own specialized teaching method. This method incorporates movement of both the voice and body together while learning the techniques of the frame drum. The method is meant to benefit both professionals and beginners. His music has been described by The New York Times as "A galaxy of timbres and inflections . . . remarkable rhythmic fireworks." Later that day there will be a concert featuring Velez's ensemble, Handance. Yousif Sheronick, a Lebanese American percussionist, and Samir Chatterjee, an Indian tabla player, will accompany him.



Velez will bring an eclectic mix of instruments and traditions to his workshop and performance. His world-inspired music will feature such instruments as the Egyptian riq, a small, intricately inlaid tambourine; the Irish bodhran, a large single-headed drum; and the gaval, a Central Asian frame drum. Velez also draws on influences from India, the Middle East, North Africa, Brazil, and Italy. He has been described as one of the most versatile percussionists on the planet, and pays extremely close attention to the emotional energy of the body in response to music. He believes that different kinds of drums can stimulate different parts of the body more readily than other drums.

Velez has collaborated with such notables as Richard Stoltzman, Suzanne Vega, Howard Levy, and Airto. Samir Chatterjee is one of the leading tabla players in India, and has toured regularly throughout North America, Europe and Asia for 19 years. Yousif Sheronick has been schooled in American contemporary music and jazz at the University of Iowa and Yale, but now focuses mostly on playing drums from all over the world, especially Arabic drums.

Handance will perform Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. at Umass' Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are general admission: $15, $7 for students. For tickets call 800-999-UMAS or 413-545-2511. There will be a workshop the same day, from 1– 3 p.m. at UMass' Bezanson Recital Hall. For information, call 577-2486

—Sian Wu

The Emmy's must go on: Emeril, however, won't

In this week's installment of "Tube Notes" we take a look at some hot newz (that's the way the cool people spell the word) in the world of television. Some of it is fairly insider, and some of it is not. You'll have to figure out which is which.

—After originally being slated to air almost two months ago, The Emmy's are finally set to air this Sunday at 8 p.m. on CBS, and will be hosted by Ellen DeGeneres. The commercials that have been airing seem to make out the Emmy's to be the biggest event of the year, and a show that "must go on" in the wake of the terrorist attacks.

Please, it would be no loss if this entire show was simply cancelled. All these celebrities need to get over themselves. Like the majority of Americans really care if "ER" wins another Emmy or not.

—Speaking of shows that should be up for an Emmy, the "reality" program "Blind Date" recently taped its 500th episode. The landmark episode will air sometime in December. Of course, since there are now 500 episodes, the show has more than enough to live through syndication for years to come, so we will never be dateless again. Thank God.

— In a move that is sure to disappoint the show's half dozen fans, NBC has pulled "Emeril" from the schedule, at least through November sweeps.

—CBS says that the next season of "Survivor" will take place on the French Polynesian island of Nuku Hiva, a small (127 square miles), volcanic island north east of the Tahitian Island chain. The show will debut after next year's Winter Olympics.

—If you thought Christina Aguilera looked trashy before, wait until you see the videos for her upcoming CD. Christina told MTV Asia she's planning an even raunchier look but will draw the line "at stripping."

"If you find me sexy now," she said, "you'll be surprised. I am still evolving quickly towards something more womanly. To be honest, I'd really like to go too far." However, she adds "I find that small tops, you know, that show off the belly, are much sexier than a bare body. I feel I can flirt with the limits for years to come." Nice.

—After sufficiently monopolizing the computer industry, Bill Gates turns his attention to acting of all things as he appears on the November 13th edition of "Frasier." Gates will play himself on the show. Hey, if Lance Bass can "act" why shouldn't Gates be able to?

—In the most ridiculous item of the week, psychic John Edwards, the host of the syndicated hit show "Crossing Over," was scheduled to spend an entire program next month attempting to contact the spirits of the terror attacks on September 11th. However, when advertisers grew weary, the idea was pulled. I wonder why?

—If you thought one TRL wasn't enough, how about another one. MTV sister station VH1 has tentative plans to air a live, 30 minute, 4 day a week music-themed program, complete with videos, guests and live performances. The show, which is rumored to be called "Live From Hollywood," will likely be intended for an older crowd than Carson's day-care center in Times Square is.

—Meanwhile, next door at MTV, things aren't looking too rosy. The cable network announced last week that it is planning on laying of 9% of its workforce, ranging from Senior Vice Presidents to "assistants." The layoffs are the largest in the 20 year history of MTV, and are a result of the "new economic" times in the U.S.

—After originally preempting the episode, tonight CBS will air the debut episode of "The Agency." The episode deals directly with terrorism, which is the reason the show didn't air as scheduled in September. The advertising for the program has been completely tasteless on the part of CBS, to the point where they are undoubtedly cashing in on America's fear of terrorism. Apparently one month ago, it was inappropriate to air this episode, but now it is fair game. Doesn't seem to make much sense. But when the almighty dollar is all a company cares about, it does make some sense.

-Information from zap2it.com and allaccess.com was used in this article.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Thursday, November 1, 2001
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS: representatives from more than 70 departments & programs in one location.
Sponsored by Pre-Major Advising Services, The Commonwealth College, & The Campus Career Network

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action!
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!
To find out more, attend the Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
Including small group discussions with faculty and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.
Saturday, November 3, 2001
2:00 p.m. – 5:40 p.m.
Seeyle Hall, Room 106, Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960
E-mail: sswadmis@smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw
Smith College School for Social Work

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-8, Sun 12-5
284 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

Grand Opening.
Now you can choose from a variety of affordable vehicles to answer any of your rental needs right here:
Amherst
213 College St.
(413) 259-1188
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.
Come in now and take advantage of our Grand Opening Offer.
Free Upgrade On Your Next Visit
Reserve any size car in advance. At the time of rental if a car from the next higher class is available, you'll be upgraded at no extra charge. Valid at the Amherst location through 6/02, but not in conjunction with other promotional offer.
Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.

Atlantis
41 Boltwood Walk, Amherst 253-0025
DINNER AT 8, LAST SEATING AT 9
AMHERST'S HOTTEST NEW NIGHT-CLUB AND RESTAURANT WITH DJs SPINNING VINYL SIX NIGHTS A WEEK, 10:30 TILL 1 AM.
TUESDAY: KARAOKE 80s MUSIC HOSTED BY STEVE GIBBS NYC + SPECIAL GUESTS
WEDNESDAY: 80s HALLOWEEN PARTY! "NO COVER" WEAR A COSTUME
THURSDAY: HIP HOP COLLEGE THURSDAY Free before 11pm with student ID
FRIDAY: RED BULL PROMOTER: PIMP AND HOE PARTY W/ DJS DON BOWS & RUSH
SATURDAY: HIP HOP/ REGGAE w/DJ TRENDZ
SUNDAY: DRUM & BASS
SORRY, NO LONGER DOING SUNDAY BRUNCH. ALL COUPONS HONORED AT DINNER.

ZANNA has it.....Jeans
how LOW can you go?
MAVI "Serena"
Low Rise hip band dark denim boot cut
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

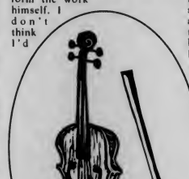
COURTESY OF AMAUT R. (KOTSKO,PHILD (TOP) AND EVERETT COLLECTION (BOTTOM)

Blues Legend

Taj Mahal comes to the Calvin Theater on November 14.

Billy Joel attempts to diversify with unsuccessful classical CD

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff



BILLY JOEL
Opus 1-10: Fantasies & Delusions (Music for Solo Piano)
Sony

Man, this is a bummer. It's not like I didn't see it coming, but now that it's here, I'm finally realizing its full effect, and gosh darn it, I don't like it one bit.

A few years ago, Billy "Piano Man" Joel said he was kaput with popular rock music, that which made him famous, and was going to start a new career in classical composition. He gave fans ample time for it to sink in, even stalling it with one last hurrah by releasing a double-set live CD from his show at Madison Square Garden on New Year's Eve of the new millennia. Nonetheless, people still thought he wasn't going to go through with it, instead either retiring for good or taking a bunch of years off and then have a huge comeback as is fitting.

Well, folks, he's done neither of the above. True to his word, he has released his first disc of classical music, Opus 1-10: Fantasies & Delusions (Songs for a Solo Piano). The largest disappointment from the album is, obviously, that it's an entirely new area for Joel. I can't honestly tell you if the material on the CD is anything extraordinary, since I don't know 'bupkis' about classical music. It's never been my "thing," even though I had hoped, somewhere in the back of my mind, that Joel's take on it could slowly ease me into enjoying such a genre. No such luck. As far as I can diagnose with my musical evaluation is that it's pretty music, and I might listen to it while I write a term paper, or wake up to it in the morning. But this is not the Billy Joel that I, and his other fans, have come to love, the guy who yells out "Don't take any shit from anyone!" at the end of his concerts. (Although that would be pisser to hear on this CD.)

I admire his wanting to try classical music, but he doesn't even play the piano on this album, for gosh's sake! He has said many times that he isn't a "good" piano player – could have fooled me – so he enlists "professional" pianist Richard Joo to play his work here. The least Joel could do was perform the work himself. I d o n ' t think I ' d b e t o o far off in saying that no one, not even his die-hard fans, will ever see him as a classical composer, no matter how good the material may be. Additionally, classical music enthusiasts probably won't run out to the store to get such a CD by Billy Joel. It's logical to think this because Joel is, first and foremost, and always will be, a rock 'n' roll star, not a classical composer, and it'd be foolish to think he is.

He's taking his new turn a little too seriously to have someone else play his music. This won't be a CD that will be held up next to Beethoven or Mozart, so the least he could have done was to meet the fans halfway in this new conundrum of his and perform the pieces he has written. No semblance of Joel is found on this record. If his name weren't on the cover, or his photo on the back jacket, I would have thought this was a re-release of The Nutcracker.

It pains me to loathe this CD, since I really wanted to like it. I listened oh-so-closely to the music, but it never did anything to me, except want to skip to the next piece in hopes that it could be better than the last. At times I thought I could hear something wonderful about to happen, but it never does.

He has occasionally dropped sneak peaks of his new style of music on the Millenium Concert CD, as well as in some interviews he has done recently. In these situations, it looked like he could actually make classical music "hip" and "cool." Even though I have an untrained ear for this type of music, it sounds like the same old racket to me, with songs that go on for eleven minutes or more sometimes.

Could he at least have added some pizzazz to it and given the songs a real name? Instead of "Waltz #1," would it have been a big deal to call it, say, "Waltz of the Heart," or "Lucy's Waltz?" Sure, it is less..."classical" to do that, yet may I again repeat that Billy Joel is not a classical pianist!

Billy, Billy, Billy, you have disappointed me as well as other fans. I'm sure. I try to keep in mind the lyrics from his song "Famous Last Words" from his River of Dreams CD: "These are the last words I have to say.... There will be other words some other day." I truly hope that there are other words, and other guitars, and other drums, and other times he'll rock the keys off of his piano, because if this is how he is going to wrap up his career, then that's a major blow to the entire thing.

Of course, that's just my opinion. I could be wrong.

WRITE FOR ARTS

FIVE COLLEGE INTERCHANGE

Take courses at any other Five College campus, at no extra cost!

5 Easy Steps
to Five College Interchange

1. Go to the registrar's office on your home campus.
   ...the regular registration periods at your own campus.
   ...register at the University Advising Office, 614 Goodell.
2. Get a separate Five College Interchange form for each course.
   ...wherever you register for courses at your home campus.
3. Talk with the course instructor.
   ...the instructor ONLY IF it is required by all students. Most faculty welcome ... although they have final authority for their own course enrollments.
4. Obtain appropriate home-campus approval.
   ...must sign the interchange form. Other signatures may be needed.
5. Turn in the form to your home campus registrar.
   ...deadline of their home campus.

...other guidelines for Interchange appears. ...Course Offerings are available in all registration offices.

Take the bus to your class ... It's free!

www.fivecolleges.edu & www.fivecolleges.edu/interchange
6,000 courses, 550 student organizations, 8,000,000 books, and a yurt!

■ nu skool

continued from page 5

given The Powerpuff Girls (Cartoon Network) the title of best cartoon in the galaxy, and it still hold up as a must-see classic. Equal parts feminism, violence and whimsy, with stylish animation and superb voice-acting, this was the show that really put Cartoon Network on the map and really got the cartoon renaissance running at full-speed. Some of the most memorable characters this side of SpongeBob have sprung from The Powerpuff Girls, including all three of the titular females and now-classic villain Mojo Jojo. Funny, inspiring, and mostly in primary colors.

Similarly Recommended: There is nothing quite like The Powerpuff Girls.

As I run out of space, I'd just like to make note of other shows worth paying attention to: Johnny Bravo and Dexter's Laboratory (Cartoon Network), Invader ZIM and CatDog (Nickelodeon) and The New Batman/Superman Adventures (WB).

Shows to avoid at all costs: Ed, Edd 'n Eddy and Courage, the Cowardly Dog (Cartoon Network), Pokemon (WB) and all its varied rip-offs and anything on major network television.

I may be a loser nerd idiot, but I know my cartoons. Trust in me. Trust in SpongeBob. Don't waste your days being 'mature' and thinking about your 'future' when you could be farting around on the couch laughing your buttcheeks off like a five-year-old. You can trust me. I watch cartoons.

■ he-man

continued from page 5

But seriously, if Buzz Off, Clamp Champ, Fisto, Ram Man, Man-E-Faces, Mossman, Gwildor, Strator, Sy-clone, Zodak, Mekaneck, Roboto, and the rest of the faces could hold fort for a while, then He-man and Man-At-Arms would have no problem getting to Skeletor speedily.

But let's just say that Horde Trooper, Blade, Clawful, Tri-Klops, Dragstor, Manteena, Stinkor, Snake Face, Ninjor, Sssqueeze, Fakor (the violet, homosexual version of He-man), Grizzlor, Jitsu, Leech, Twisted, Kobra Kahn, Webstor, Whiplash, Merman and the rest of the Eternia heels put up a good fight, and few of them got to within a couple feet of Grayskull. If that happened, then Man-At-Arms would just pull out his battle-ax, laser slay them, and join He-man for a two-on-two battle with Skeletor and...let's say, Beast Man (it didn't really matter who it was, because he and Man-At-Arms would just cancel out in the end).

At that point, the He-man vs. Skeletor exhibition would begin. And, after a few minutes, you'd throw Skeletor against the wall, scream vociferously, kick Snake Mountain to the floor, and then run downstairs for milk and cookies.

Oh yeah, victory. "Let the power return," baby.

If you don't own any Masters of the Universe episodes, go rent some tonight, or buy them online. You can get all 130 episodes for like twenty bucks, easy.

It's no worth it.

Remember "The Time Corridor" episode, when Skeletor attempts to destroy Castle Grayskull by going into the past using a device called the Wheel of Infinity? Or how about "The Curse of The Spellstone," when Skeletor, Evil Lyn, and Ittsu break into an old temple and steal the Spell Stone (a weather controlling mineral) from a race of people called the Fire Men?

Not only do you get to see He-man kick ass, but you're enlightened with a moral at the end of every episode.

"Today, Stratos of Avion learned the true value of forgiveness," He-man says at the end of the episode, "Betrayal of Stratos." "When someone does something we don't like, it can be hard to forgive. It's at times like these that we must remember everyone deserves a second chance. We all make mistakes and when we do, it's nice to have a friend who will understand and give us another chance."

Knowledge. Purely invaluable information.

"In today's story, I sure was busy," says Ram Man, at the end of "House of Shokoti, Pt. 1." "(Boing!) Boy did that hurt. Ramming things may look like fun, but it really isn't. Trying to use your head the way I do is not only dangerous, but it's dumb. I mean, you could get hurt badly. So listen to Rammy. Play safely and when you use your head, use it the way it was meant to be used: to think.

"Until later, so long.

■ toons

continued from page 5

friends. Personally, I think it was just free advertising for the lemon-limey goodness of the Coca-Cola corporations' Sprite. I say, hit 'em up early with soda propaganda.

4. "My Little Pony" – Horses with magical powers and designs stamped on their butts...enough said.

5. "Care Bears" – Take the most menacing creatures alive, add happiness, joy and all around good emotions, and you have the cuddliest superheros...ever. CARE BEAR STARE!!!

6. "Rose Petal Place"/ "Strawberry Shortcake"/ "Lady Lovelykicks" – The most cliché 80's girl cartoon was a group of girls, running around in pretty dresses, "battling" a bad guy who tried to do terrible things like make all their roses die or make it rain. But an obvious difference was needed, so execs changed things. 1. Named them after flowers (Rose Petal Place) 2. Named them after food (Strawberry Shortcake) and 3. Stuck hairy animals in their raven tresses (Lady Lovelylocks). Why on earth did these shows not last?

7. "Popples" – Sheer brilliance – bizarre animals you can pet one minute, and punt the next. P.E.T.A. might not have agreed with the punting, but many an NFL place-kicker got their start booting their little sister's Popple across the backyard. The show didn't last long, but the legacy lives forever.

8. "Pound Puppies" – The only show guys were not embarrassed to say they liked. The Pound Puppies were the Dickensian cartoon – poor, homeless puppies, just wanting some love, heat and gruel. Add to that the Pound Kitties, and you pack a powerful one-two punch.

Though for some it may be 2001, for others it will always be 1986. And it will always be 6 a.m. on a Saturday morning, wearing your brothers old Transformers footie-pajamas, slurping Graham Crackers N' Milk, yelling along with the T.V. "Care Bear Stare!," like a the glassy-eyed soldier of goodness and marketing that you were. Lucky you. You live in a much happier place. Ah, those were the days.

■ g.i joe

continued from page 5

the Terrordrome show massive damage to equipment, with plastic molded debris everywhere. Slagged Cobra F.A.N.G. helicopters, their pilots sitting dazed but otherwise fine, were guarded by stalwart Joes like Spirit and Mutt. Junkyard, the feisty little pup, had cornered the Dreadnok commander Zartan.

General Hawk, the Joe commander, commented on the success of the operation.

"Yo, Joe!" Hawk said.

Rumsfeld, in a briefing with reporters, explained that the United States is trying to offer support to the anti-Serpentor resistance, The Coil, led by former Cobra field leader Cobra Commander.

"We are trying to do everything we can to offer support to Mr. Commander, but it is difficult," Rumsfeld said. "He doesn't just want to destroy Serpentor, he wants to kill Destro, whom he felt betrayed him.

"Destro, we think, could be a viable replacement for the Taliban," Rumsfeld added.

Serpentor released a video to the press, in which he swears revenge for his destroyed Terrordrome.

"You will ssssuffer the conssse-quencesss," the Emperor said.

Rumsfeld isn't worried though.

"We know that with the Joes deployed, we can take out the Taliban, Osama bin Laden, and the Cobra threat," Rumsfeld said. "And knowing is half the battle."

Stupid games that Resident Assistants play

We're not going to lie to you. It's been a lazy two weeks for "Third and 48." The only thing we could come up with is junk about Resident Assistant athletic competitions.

We actually had someone from the Drinking Club with a Running problem come down for some coverage Tuesday, but we didn't have time last night to go to Northampton and watch those wierdos chase each other around in red dresses (which they have been known to do).

Maybe we'll call them for the Nov. 15 edition. Or maybe someone will accept our challenge to drink a gallon of milk in an hour, and not blow chunks.

Who knows?

Just sit back, and laugh.

R.A. Games

What is the difference between RA sponsored games and hall sports (a.k.a., illegal athletic proceedings within a dormitory hallway)?

Well, actually, some would say stupid themes, ridiculous names and soft-core porn undertones.

"RA's play games with their residents in an attempt to make them feel more comfortable and get to know one another," said a former University of Massachusetts RA, who wished to remain anonymous (but who we will refer to for the remainder as RA, "X").

Go check out the official national Resident Assistant website: www.ResidentAssistant.com and then proceed to the "High Energy Games" link, to experience the visions of what RAs from across the nation see as "games."

After reading them, a common after-thought, similar to "Who thinks this s*&t up?" hits your wits, followed by the realization that a majority of students have no respect for RAs.

In defense of the University's Resident Life program, our source told "Third and 48" that "UMass RAs are trained by really good, professional people, who have a variety of activities planned and are experienced."

Most people remember, however, how stupid orientation was.

"I played the name game in nursery school and kindergarten...there's no need for a three-peat," said Dan McPhee, a UMass student. "I've seen more constructive activities when cop's are trying to direct traffic."

Others still are haunted by awful orientation memories.

Take for instance, Peter Shulman, of Bryant College in North Smithfield, R.I.

"I remember one time we were split into six groups and we had to assemble a puzzle with the letters 'B-R-Y-A-N-T'. I was in the 'R' group. But I didn't even get near the puzzle because the cool kids hogged the area.

"I am an introvert now because of it."

These games must come to an end. Just look at what our research staff found. (To make it easy we've taken the most "interesting topics" and broken them done into three easy-to-follow categories: 1.) 'Nuff said: The stupidest games that need no explanation but for some reason, they have them. 2.) Just plain DUMB: The games that are well...dumb. And, 3.) Soft core Porn-ish: Games that seem to want to break more than just the ice.

'NUFF SAID

Capture the Flag: Well duh. What the hell could this game be about? According the website, "The playing area is divided in half...the group is decided into two teams...and decide where to place their flag." Are explanations even necessary?

Everybody's It: Now this game is located right in the middle of 'Nuff Said and Dumb, because frankly if everybody's "it," what the hell is the point of the game? It's like leaving your kids with an annoyed and spiteful high school babysitter or kindergarten teacher. Just let those crazy freshmen run around a field for an hour or so. Why play a game that has no freakin' point? Even our RA-X said, "Everybody's it sounds like a childish was for everyone to go out and meet people...but I don't think it defeats the purpose of tag...you still get to touch others."

Rolling Down the Hill: In the spirit of this section, "Nuff Said."

Just Plain DUMB

Bacon and Eggs: "In a sitting position in a circle, designate one person to be "it." Go around the circle and tap each person on the head and say "bacon" each time. When "it" says, "eggs," that person must run the opposite way... and when the two meet they must shake hands and say "Good morning. How are you?"...And then race for that one empty seat. The one standing is 'it'." WHY NOT JUST PLAY DUCK, DUCK, GOOSE!!?? Why mess with a classic?

"I remember one RA game was the collegiate level equivalent of "Duck Duck Goose," said UMass student Matt Bielecki, leading us to believe that Bacon and Eggs was once played on this campus. "I think that these are petty attempts to keep in coming students ever from hooking up with the opposite sex. Because once you let the RA programming slip past your defenses you allow yourself to become susceptible to something sinister and devious."

"RAs, ARDs (Area Resident Directors), and RDs (Resident Directors) can kiss my ass."

Clam Free: Just the name of this game should turn people off to it.

And especially when you read the description, because there is absolutely no connection. One person is a nuclear reactor, and all the others are clams. The reactor goes critical and attempts to tag all the clams until they are all contaminated. WHY??!!! Is there some type of political message in this game, because all I can get from it is that it is a waste of time.

Every single remaining "DUMB" game is basically tag, but with people saying stupid things. But the winner of the category is a game called "Evolution." Basically everyone starts out as eggs saying, "whobble, whobble." You go up to another egg and play "Rock, paper, scissors," and the winner "evolves" into a chicken, and must make chicken noises. After they win another game they become dinosaurs and must say "Auh, Auh (you know, that common dinosound)." The next stage is the "ultimate being" who must say, "Ultimate Being. Ultimate Being." All losers must revert back to egg form.

The entire point of icebreakers are to talk to people, but how can you talk when you're clucking like a chicken, or pronouncing that you are an ultimate being? And what happens if you keep on losing? What if you're an egg for over an hour?

This game can only led to an elitist attitude and self-esteem problems.

RA "X" defends that this is not the sort of game that one should start playing with its residents (But "Third and 48" is all about it. If anyone on this campus wants to gather and play "Evolution," we'll come cover it and laugh at you).

"Playing a name game (which usually doesn't involve a lot of touching) is a low risk game...and doing an activity where you may get really personally is considered a 'high risk game'," X said. "RAs are taught to do the low risk games at the beginning of the year and work up to the high risk games with their floors. I don't know what 'Evolution' is but it certainly sounds like a way for your floor to despise you."

SOFT CORE PORN

Finally, the section you have all been waiting for. It is not just UMass RAs that like to put students in compromising positions during orientation. Apparently it's written somewhere in the national RA code that it's cool to make people feel uncomfortable in large groups. These are those games (insert seventies porn theme from movies like "Three's Not a Company" and "The Postman's BIG Delivery"). RA-X also joined in giving his first impression when heard the name of game.

Ice Cubes: With two equal teams, have them pass down an ice cube and melt it as quickly as possible, without putting it in their mouths. Rubbing it against each other and on clothes is perfectly acceptable, however.

Let's see, college co-eds, a melting ice-cube, and water on clothing. Sounds fun to us. Guaranteed to start a complex with at least one student, having them crawl to their RA looking for advice every week, making the RA's feel wanted. (RA-X: "Porn.")

Guard The Bone: Do you really want to hear what this is about? (X: "Porn")

Life Saver Relay: Break into two teams and put toothpicks in their mouths. Then have them transport a lifesaver down the line only on the toothpicks. Not only could this lead to a sexual harassment suit, but I'm pretty sure having toothpicks in the mouths of people and trying to pass a Life Saver down the line could lead to either splinters or bleeding holes in someone's mouth. (X: "Possibly a game, but probably Porn")

Spear the Sweets: Hmmmmm? (X: "That's a tough one...Porn")

Catching the Snake's Tail: Does anyone actually want an explanation for this? Let's just leave this to the imagination. (X: "Hey, Hey. I don't know you that well.")

In conclusion, the following question is posed.

Resident Assistants: babysitters or the most sexual obsessed group on campus? You make the call.

Information from www.residentassistant.com was used in this section.

Climbing Wall

The Albertson College Activities Center is now home to a new 400 square foot climbing wall. It has room for four top rope climbers and features an extensive boulder filled course.

The Spring hours are as follows: (In JA ALBERTSON ACTIVITY CENTER ROOM #101) Tue.: 3:00-4:15 p.m.,Wed.: 5:00-7:00 p.m., Fri: 5:00-7:00 p.m.

Note: You will be required to sign a liability waiver, which will be kept on file with the Outdoor Program.

Without Nick Pizzolato this week, "Third and 48," would have absolute crap. Seriously, Nick; welcome to the family.

Co-editor Eric Soderstrom is seriously thinking about firing his understudy, Ken Campbell Campbell, yesterday, said "writing his G.I. Joe story for Arts" took precedence over this column.

Oh no he didn't.

This is a formal warning.

People, please email us at thirdand48@yahoo.com.

It's fun.

Justin Pearson, thanks for providing the Christmas Tree love doves and a big up to Leigh Torbin for all the love.

www.dailycollegian.com

This is Ted.

Ted had no friends.
Ted had no future.

Then Ted got a job selling ads at the Daily Collegian.

Look at Ted now.
Sell Ted, Sell.

Follow Ted down to the Collegian Center Basement where the Collegian is now accepting applications for advertising representatives for Spring, 2002. Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply. Stop by 113 Campus Center or call 545-3500.

Yankees win: our lives are ruined yet again (except for Sacco's).

THE MONKEY BAR
BISTRO 63
Award Winning Menu
Special Menu for Parents Weekend & Holidays
Thursday - The Return of Elements w/ DJ Boog
Friday - DJ Menace
Saturday - Featuring "Elements"
$2.25 1.75 $5.00
63 N. Pleasant St. Downtown Amherst 259-1600

LIQUORS 44
Everyday Pricing
Domestic 1/2 Kegs
Coors Light $449 + dep
Bud, Bud Light $469 + dep
Michelob Reg & Light $469 + dep
*Natural Light & Ice $411 + dep
*Rolling Rock $479 + dep
Micro Brew 1/2 Kegs
*Berkshire Brewing Co $89 + dep
*Sierra Nevada Pale $112 + dep
*Sam Adams Lager, Seasonal $112 + dep
*Harpoon Lager, Seasonal $99 + dep
Killians Irish Red $73 + dep
*Dundee Honey Brown $97 + dep
*Magic Hat #9 $109 + dep
Imported 1/2 Kegs
*Heineken & Amstel $89 + dep
ALL KEGS PLUS DEPOSIT
Beers
Bud & Bud Light case of 30-12oz cans $17.49 +dep -3.00 -MAIL
Milwaukee's Best case of 30-12oz cans $9.99 +dep -3.00 -MAIL
Magic Hat 8 pk 12oz bottles $5.99 +dep -1 PACK
Corona Extra & Corona Light 2-12pk bottles $18.99 +dep CASE
Harpoon 12pk bottles $10.49 +dep -1 PACK
Killian's Irish Red 12pk bottles $9.49 +dep -1 PACK
Smirnoff Ice 6pk bottles $5.69 +dep -1 PACK
Wines
Gallo of Sonoma Chardonnay & Merlot 750 ml $8.99
Gallo of Sonoma Cabernet Sauvignon, Zinfandel & Pinot Noir 750 ml $9.99
Magic Hat Zinfandel 750 ml $5.99
Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon Merlot, 1.5 Lt $6.99
Cavit Pinot Grigio 1.5 Lt $9.99
Walnut Crest Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon Merlot, 1.5 Lt $7.99
Almaden Wines 5 ltr box $8.99 Chablis, Burgundy, White Grenache, Seldom, Rhine, Blush, Alfresco Red
Liquors
Smirnoff Vodka 1.75L $18.49
Fleischmann's 1.75L Preferred Whiskey $11.99
Dewar's White Label Scotch 1.75L $28.99
Gilbey's Gin 1.75 Lt $14.99
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 1.75L $19.99
Bailey's Irish Cream 750 ml $15.99
Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75L $17.99
at the STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344
NORTHAMPTON 586-3007
HOLYOKE 534-4555
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
DON'T Drink & Drive

Senior Celia Wiste and the UMass volleyball team destroyed Rhode Island yesterday at Curry Hicks in what many would call an upset.

■ volley

Continued from page 14

equally spectacular, with the blockers – especially Wiste and Baxter – shutting down URI's offensive weapons.

"Defense starts with the block and the block was channeling the ball really well to the deep court, so it was easier for us to play defense," DeMarie said.

"I thought we did a great job on the block," Kenny said. "When [Rhode Island] can do what they want to do, they do it very well. When you stop them and prevent them from doing what they want to do, they don't really have a lot of different outlets."

What the success on the block equated to was a tremendous performance in defense of the Ram spikers. The team posted 55 digs, with co-captains DeMarie and Ilovet leading the way, with 16 and 13, respectively.

"I thought that we knew Rhode Island well enough that we could defend them," Kenny said. "I can't say that I thought it would be this easy but I'm glad it was."

One of the many keys to victory for the Minutewomen was a quick start, something that they have failed to see many times this season. In the first game, they jumped all over the Rams, coming out of the gates to a 10-2 lead. Games two and three saw similar results to start sets, with the Maroon and White getting out to 10-6 and 12-6 leads in the two starts.

"The games that we've lost before were the games that we were five points down and couldn't get ourselves up at the beginning," DeMarie said. "This game, we started off really strong, so it wasn't really hard to win."

Putting up a conference win at home should certainly be a momentum boost for the Minutewomen, as they approach yet another conference weekend, with games at George Washington on Friday and at Fordham on Sunday.

"We have a chance to finish the season out and be 20-10, overall and in the conference, so we just need to keep plugging away and fighting," Kenny said. "I think that they feel pretty good about how they played tonight. We've prepared hard to have a match like this and I'm glad that they finally put it together and did it on the floor."

Prisco, Champeau fall in Regionals

By Elena Panesis
Collegian Staff

With the bitter chill of winter right around the corner, the Massachusetts men's tennis team ended its fall play last week with a 5-2 loss at home to the much-hated University of Connecticut. However, two members of the squad took their game to another level at the Omni Hotels Eastern Regional Tournament.

The two senior captains, No. 1 Steve Prisco and seasoned veteran Todd Champeau represented the Maroon and White at this tournament where the best of the East battle it out in both singles and doubles play. Division I schools from all over the East send two representatives and the competition includes some high caliber ranked players.

Considering the intense level of the opposition, the Minutemen should definitely write Prisco and Champeau's performance down in the record books. The duo had never played a doubles match together before and most schools did not take the tandem too seriously.

On Friday, the two did the impossible defeating a No. 8 ranked pairing from the University of Pennsylvania. In heart stopping action, Prisco/Champeau persevered 9-8 in a pro-set that went to tiebreakers. In fact, the two men were down 6-2 in the tiebreak, which goes to seven points, but they battled their way back and advanced to the second round of action.

"Steve and I had never played doubles together before," said Champeau. "They never expected us to beat a ranked team like that. Plus we were down 6-2 in the tiebreak and we came back and won it. It was a huge shot of adrenaline."

In second round action, the tandem faced two unpleasantly familiar faces from UConn by the names of Mike Furman and Joe Lang. Since the Huskies pounded the Minutemen last week on the Upper Boyden Courts, it's safe to say that these two Huskies took the newly paired Prisco/Champeau team a little lightly. Yet, the pair once again defied the odds delivering an 8-4 victory that sent the haughty duo back to Storrs.

"We faced UConn on Saturday and we pretty much hate them," said Champeau. "They gave us no respect since they beat Steve and Scott [Sanseleeb] last week, 8-4. Yet, we pulled it out with a big win that gave us a lot of confidence."

Unfortunately, the tandem could not relive the magic one last time in the third round as they lost a tough match to the solid pairing of Johnny Lu and Ryan Murphy from Yale 8-3. In singles play Prisco advanced to the second round by defeating a player from Colombia and then lost a hard-fought match to an amazingly talented player, the No. 2 seeded player in the tournament out of Princeton.

"This was probably one of the best tournaments that we've had in awhile," said Champeau. "I don't know the last time that a doubles team from our school advanced to the round of sixteen. This was a great performance for us individually in that we beat a No. 8 seed and we beat our archrival [Connecticut]."

The rest of Judy Dixon's mighty crew is currently enjoying a short-lived hiatus before beginning the conditioning process to prepare for the vital conference matches that occur in the spring. Though the entire squad did not participate in the Omni Hotels Regional, the superb play of Champeau and Prisco does impact the rest of the squad in mentally preparing for A-10 play.

"I think the rest of the team can look at what we did in advancing to round three and learn from it," said Champeau. "We beat two tough schools and no one expected us to win. When the rest of the guys step onto the court, they can remember that every match really is winnable. I hope it gives them confidence."

BYU building strength on 'The Rock'

By Loni Johnston
The Daily Universe (Brigham Young U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVO, Utah - From player to coach, BYU women's soccer head coach Jennifer Rockwood is "The Rock" when it comes to BYU women's soccer.

Rockwood has been involved with BYU women's soccer in some capacity for the past 17 years. The Lake Oswego, Ore., native was a Cougar player for four seasons and has been a coach for the past 13 years.

Rockwood was a four-sport athlete in high school. She played basketball, softball, soccer and track. She is the oldest of five children and the only female child in the family. Her four younger brothers were also highly involved with athletics. All four attended and graduated from BYU, as did big sister.

"We are a really close family," Rockwood said. "I figure I have had a brother here in Provo with me for the past 13 years since they all graduated from here."

Two of her brothers served as the public-address announcer for the women's soccer games, but now that they have graduated, her older sister fills the void.

"It's just not the same without them here," Rockwood said.

Following high school graduation, Rockwood accepted a basketball scholarship to Ricks College in Rexburg, Idaho in 1985. She said that although she was playing basketball (her second love), she still really missed the soccer field.

Rockwood only attended Ricks (now BYU-Idaho) for one year. She made the move to Provo, where she played on the BYU women's soccer team when it was only a club group.

During her senior year at BYU, Rockwood began what would be her very successful coaching career at the youthful age of 21.

Rockwood coached girls' high school soccer at Waterford High School, a private school in Provo. The school was moved to Sandy, renamed Meridian High School, and made a public institution. Rockwood took the head coaching position for both the girls and boys soccer teams.

"I think that year of coaching high school when I was a senior gave me confidence and experience even though I was coaching on the college level when I was only 22," Rockwood said.

Rockwood graduated from BYU as a business finance major in 1989, but the road she was on took a slight turn when she was offered the head coaching position of the women's club team.

"It was definitely a surprise," Rockwood said. "I was coaching girls I had just finished playing with."

Rockwood coached the women's club soccer team for six straight years compiling a winning record of 128-25-9. While the club coach at BYU part time, Rockwood sought income from teaching as well. She taught algebra and world history at Meridian High School where she was also the middle school supervisor.

"I really liked working with kids," Rockwood said. "I have done basketball and soccer camps since I was 15 or 16."

Rockwood coached in the Premier Youth Soccer League and in the Olympic Development Program for three years.

In 1995, the BYU women's soccer team was sanctioned as an NCAA team. Much to the surprise of Rockwood, she was offered the head coaching position yet again.

"We just wanted to get the club program to the level that it could be competitive if it got sanctioned," Rockwood said. "I didn't really think I would get the job."

After BYU was sanctioned Rockwood continued to teach for only two more years. She ended her 10-year teaching career to focus on BYU soccer.

"Any coach knows how emotionally and physically draining coaching is," Rockwood said. "I am very fortunate to be where I am because my coaching career came about in sort of an unconventional way. I was in the right place at the right time."

Rockwood said she has found that coaching on the collegiate level is more demanding that she thought it ever could be.

"It is much more difficult than I had anticipated," Rockwood said. "Unless you are a coach on the college level, I don't think anyone can understand the time and energy and emotional commitment that comes with coaching. You want your players to succeed in the classroom as well and not just in the sport."

Rockwood attributes much of her success to the university and to her exceptional coaching staff.

"We are very fortunate to be supported by the university so much," Rockwood said. "As a head coach I found it very important to surround myself with excellent people to make me better."

Rockwood cited assistant women's coach and men's soccer head coach Chris Watkins as instrumental to the success of the women's team along with assistant coach Brian Jolley.

Rockwood's success has come in the form of several awards and a winning record. The long but distinguished includes 1996 WAC Coach of the Year, 1996 Soccer Buzz West Region Coach of the Year, 2000 Mountain West Conference Coach of the Year, and leading her team to the NCAA "Sweet Sixteen" in 1998 and 2000. In 2001, Rockwood is ranked fifth among the Division I NCAA coaches.

Her current BYU overall record is 112-26-2, which does not include the 2001 team's 10-6-1 overall record. This year, the Cougars are holding the No. 1 position in the MWC with a 4-1 record, and have been ranked in the top 20 nationally throughout the season.

Through 17 years of involvement with BYU women's soccer, Rockwood has seen the evolution of the soccer program and said she is proud to have seen the progression.

"I have obviously seen the program come a long way," Rockwood said. "It wasn't that great when I got here, but each year it has improved and over the past 17 years it has grown and developed to what it is today."

Rockwood enjoys the single life and her home in Springville with her chocolate lab Jessie, and said she is happy being a Cougar.

"I never dreamed or anticipated coaching on the collegiate level but I have been very fortunate. My coaching career has evolved and I am very happy with what I am doing," Rockwood said. "There is no where else I want to be."

A WONDERFUL LOVE STORY

MARK TWAIN'S
The Diaries of Adam & Eve
Starring DAVID BIRNEY & MADYLON BRANS
November 2 - 18
Sponsored by LENOX

The world's first love story seen through the eyes of America's greatest humorist. Twain's Garden of Eden bursts with wit, laughter and the lyric poignancy of the first love and the first loss. Special limited engagement.

"Mark Twain isn't just for Hal Holbrook anymore. David Birney brings Mark Twain's words to life...in a romantic adventure for the ages."
—TIMES UNION, ALBANY NY

CITY STAGE
Call for tickets: (413) 788-7033 ticketmaster.com (413) 733-2500
Purchase online: www.citystage.symphonyhall.com www.ticketmaster.com
FREE Parking
ONE COLUMBUS CENTER ~ SPRINGFIELD ~ (413) 788-7033
~ Free Parking in Columbus Center Garage ~

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE KEGS CIGARS CLOVES CIGARETTES TOBACCO
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted

Social Work in the Real World
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY
SHIRLEY M. EHRENKRANZ
SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK
AT THE NYU EHRENKRANZ SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, the emphasis is on teaching direct social work practice within the context of a dynamic, urban environment.
Weekday, late afternoon, Saturday, and evening classes are available at our Washington Square campus in the heart of New York City's Greenwich Village.
Late afternoon and evening classes are available at other campuses.
MASTER'S STUDY
Full-Time, Two-Year Program
Full-Time, 16-Month Continuous Study
Combined Part- and Full-Time Program for Employed Social Workers (One-Year Residence)
Three- to Four-Year, Part-Time Program (Matriculating Individualized Plan)
Advanced Standing Program
Financial aid, in the form of tuition remission and need-based scholarships, is available to eligible students.
POST-MASTER'S STUDY
Advanced Certificate in Clinical Social Work
Certificate in the Treatment of Alcohol- and Drug-Abusing Clients (TADAC)
DOCTORAL STUDY (Ph.D.)
Concentration in Clinical Social Work
Call: 800-771-4NYU, ext. R30
Visit: www.essw.nyu.edu/swinfo
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY IS AN AFFIRMATIVE ACTION/EQUAL OPPORTUNITY INSTITUTION

A Terrific Thursday from all of us here waaay too late, just so you can read about RA games, He-Man, and Billy Joel.

-The Management

After two straight losses, it's time for a change of plans

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

In sports, in isn't a matter of which team has the better plan A, but which team can find a good contingency plan once the opposition finds a way to stop it.

After running a system that so perfectly fit his team's abilities, Head Coach Jim Rudy has watched conference foes finally form a scheme to stop his Massachusetts women's soccer team, and it has worked.

The Minutewomen run a high-pressure offense, always looking to push the ball forward. Heading into the season, Rudy knew the types of players he had and implemented a plan that shot the Maroon and White out of the gate to a 10-2 record (7-0 Atlantic 10) in the 2001 campaign's first dozen games.

"We build our team to take advantage of what we have and we have attacking personalities," Rudy said.

While the forwards are attackers on any team (and this one is no different), it is the players at the other positions that make this team so specially made for the system. Midfielders Brooke Bartlett and Kathleen Machamer are terrific while pushing the ball forward. Defender Alexi Rudd is great with the ball and dangerous on the offensive side of the midfield.

Rudy took advantage of these players' abilities on offense and had the team push the ball hard, leaving their backside exposed.

But future opponents were watching.

Just one win on last weekend's road trip would have clinched a spot in the A-10 tournament for Rudy's bunch, but the Minutewomen returned to Amherst still looking for conference win number eight.

Both opponents, Richmond and George Washington, came into the UMass matches with very, very similar game plans with very, very similar results—two shutout victories over the Maroon and White.

The Spiders and Colonials dropped back on defense, sometimes with eight or nine players behind the ball. When a defender got the ball, she shot it up past the forward-pushing Minutewomen and onto a fast break against goalkeepers Julie Podhrasky and Kelly Nigh.

Going into last weekend, the Maroon and White were fighting to stay undefeated in the conference and win the A-10 title. Now Rudy and Co. are just trying to stay alive and make the plays, hoping to exact some revenge on the team that ended their undefeated streak, Richmond.

Now that the map showing how to beat the Minutewomen has been drawn, two questions pop up:

1. Will Dayton and Xavier, UMass' opponents this weekend and two of the best teams in the A-10, attack the home team the same way?

2. Should Coach Rudy change his approach, even though it maximizes the potential of so many of his players?

Rudy believes the Flyers (11-5, 9-0 A-10) will play their game, which is very similar to the high-pressured UMass system, in the two teams' match Friday.

"They feel like they can attack anyone," Rudy said. "I don't think they are going to come in and back [into the defensive zone] against us."

Xavier (8-7, 6-3 A-10) is more likely to use the scouting report against the Maroon and White. In a three-way tie for third place, Xavier would get a huge boost toward the postseason with a win over UMass Sunday.

With three A-10 losses, the Musketeers are less likely to have the arrogance that comes with refusing to take on a scheme that improves their chances for victory.

Now Rudy must decide what will give him the best chance to get the team back to its winning ways.

"We have a real dilemma, do we continue to do what we do best?" Rudy ponders. "Or do we [worry about] defending better? It is a tossup. You are right if it works."

There is no clear answer for Rudy, who has obviously put a lot of thought into how to plan his defense for this all-important weekend that, with another pair of losses, could keep the Minutewomen out of the playoffs they had seemed so destined for just six days ago.

"[We always felt that] our best defense is going to be a good attack," Rudy said.

But now that the attack isn't garnering any goals, the team may need a change to stay alive. What Rudy decides to do at this point is likely to determine the rest of the season for the Minutewomen.

GERALD LING, COLLEGIAN

Michelle Luttati (above) was one of the few bright spots for the Minutewomen in the teams two losses on the road last week.

Nebraska-Omaha sweeps No. 1 Michigan State

By Brian Brashaw
The Gateway (U. Nebraska-Omaha)

(U-WIRE) OMAHA, Neb. - The number one doesn't mean a thing to the Maverick hockey team. Not after Nebraska-Omaha swept No. 1 Michigan State this weekend 4-3, 5-1 to open their conference schedule.

"We're trying to defend a number-one rank, a conference championship, we're trying to defend all these things, instead of sometimes just going out and playing hockey," MSU head coach Ron Mason said.

Friday night, the Mavs won in dramatic fashion. UNO got two goals in the last three minutes of the game to score a rare come-from-behind 4-3 victory over MSU.

Michigan State dominated early. The Spartans rattled off the first 10 shots of the game before the Mavericks woke up. UNO got on the board first though, when Shane Glover swept in a loose puck 9:32 into the first.

Jeff Hoggan gave the Mavericks a 2-0 lead on his sixth goal of the season. Hoggan batted home a rebound that Miller left on the ice from an Andrew Wong shot.

Before the first period ended, the Spartans would pull within one. A defensive turnover left MSU's Mike Lalonde alone at the blue line. He snapped the disk top shelf over Dan Ellis' shoulder for the goal.

Despite a rise in physical play and increased flow, the score at the end of two remained the same.

Michigan State would tie the game early in the third. Duncan Keith scored his second goal of the year when a free puck came to him through a mess of crease traffic.

Late in the third period, the Spartans got their first lead of the game. Brian Maloney mopped up a rebound, and MSU was up 3-2 with less than four minutes left in the game.

"Normally when we get ahead, we expect to win," Mason said.

But UNO would have none of it. Freshman Gus Groslie used hard work in the corner to tie the game with just 2:44 left. Then Glover became a hero with his second goal of the night. Wong sent a blind pass from the corner to the center, and Glover tipped it in. UNO had claimed the upset 4-3.

"The thought of losing never crossed our minds. We went back out there and thought we could tire them out down low, and that's what we did," Groslie said.

Maverick netminder Dan Ellis looked sharper than he had thus far in the season, denying 31 of 34 shots, including a momentum-changing glove save in the third period. The Glover-Wong-Smith line for UNO registered eight points, and was key in the win.

"Unbelievable effort by our guys tonight," UNO coach Mike Kemp said. "Michigan State did not back down, and were able to forge back the lead, and it was just a tremendous win for us."

A similar situation occurred Saturday night, with MSU charging early. Again they were held off, and UNO opened a seemingly insurmountable gap by the end of the second period.

Tight Maverick penalty killing allowed UNO to take the lead. Taking a feed from Aaron Smith, Andrew Wong shot from the slot, collected his rebound, shot and scored at 18:01 of the first.

The Spartan defense tightened up and only allowed two shots in the second. Fortunately for UNO, the hockey gods were smiling upon them and both of those shots found the net.

Captain David Brisson scored a shorthanded goal when he picked Spartan defender Duncan Keith off the puck and skated in free.

Before the end of the second, UNO took a 3-0 lead. A clearing attempt hit Wong in the chest, who settled the puck, dropped it for Smith, who blazed it past Miller and in. UNO had the three-goal lead, but didn't rest at that.

"You never feel comfortable against a team like Michigan State. We were never comfortable with that lead, and I don't think we should have been," Kemp said.

Before MSU finally got on the board, UNO would get one more. Just after a power play, the Maverick offense had Miller scrambling. Through the traffic in the crease, Gus Groslie found a way to squeak the puck five-hole. That would be the last shot Miller would face.

"There is so much pressure on [Miller]. He's under the microscope, and when the pressure comes off it will help him a lot," Mason said. "That's all part of his education."

Michigan State did register a shorthanded goal, and UNO got one more from Scotty Turner for the 5-1 final.

"In the magnitude or history of this program I compared it to the program's first sweep against Denver. This certainly surpasses that. This sets the stage for the future," Kemp said.

The two wins over Michigan State mark the first time UNO has beaten a number-one ranked team. UNO will now go on the road for two conference series before coming home to face the University of Michigan Wolverines.

www.dailycollegian.com

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES FUTONS BEDS ETC
"BYOB"
(bring your own bed)
THE AREA'S BEST RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE LIVING

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer!"
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

ETI Educational Testing Institute
Maschusetts Teacher Test Preparation
5 Week programs with guaranteed results in Communication and Literacy
Delivering what you need to prepare for success:
- Literacy and communication skills
- Test content and test taking strategies
- Supportive setting and individual attention
- Proven test preparation book and curriculum
- Custom programs and private tutoring

Record of outstanding results:
- Pass rates improve from 12% to 71%!
- Average scores improve over 12% per section!

Join ETI and guarantee your success!
800-399-5448 or consult: www.massteachertest.com

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES 2001 - 2002
Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $10, $15 for five college students

Wednesday, November 14
Ballet Hispanico
Ballet Hispanico is smashingly theatrical – from the stunning expressive style of its dancers, to its use of sets, lighting, costumes and sound. The company's extraordinary repertory includes dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz and ethnic styles. Concert Hall at 7:30pm / Sponsored by The River 93.9

Thursday, November 8
Academy of St. Martin in the Fields
The world's most famous and widely recorded chamber orchestra, the Academy of St. Martin in the Fields performs Mozart's Divertimento K. 138, Dvorak's Two Waltzes, Op. 54, Bruckner's Adagio and Intermezzo, and Tchaikovsky's famous Serenade for Strings. The program also includes the "Innocent Ear" – their version of "name that tune" where the entire audience is invited to participate. / Concert Hall at 7:30pm

Thursday, December 6
The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company & The Dirty Dozen Brass Band in "When the Spirit Moves"
An exhilarating evening of live New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance come together in a program titled When the Spirit Moves - a series of vignettes celebrating the lineage and essence from which these two uniquely American forms emerged.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River, WEIB 106.3FM and WGBY TV 57 / Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

For tickets call:545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS or go on-line towww.fineartscenter.com

Join us for a salsa party with Ballet Hispanico on Tuesday, November 13 at the Red Barn on the Hampshire College Campus from 7-11pm. Luis Melendez of WFCR's Tertulia will be our DJ for the evening. salsa lessons from 7-8, party follows with Latin foods provided by La Veracruzana. Admission is only $10. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

ATTENTION! BMCP's Culture Clash 2002 Fashion show try-outs Thursday. November 1st 6pm-8pm RM 803 Campus Center Everyone: Be prepared to have photo taken Ladies: wear heels More Info? Call 546-2111 or email culture-clash2002@hotmail.com Absolutely everyone encouraged to come.

For the best deals when it comes to skiing check out snosearch.com. And for the best ski and ride equipment checkout extremeuniverse.com username: snowboards password: college deals. CHECK IT OUT!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

$350 - $500 A WEEK

Work with Masspirg on a campaign to protect public lands. Rapid Advancement, Career Opportunities and benefits!

Call Tony (413) 256 - 6434

Janitor Tues./Thurs. mornings. 10hrs/week, $9/hr. plus membership. Hampshire Fitness Club 256-6446

www.FluidVisions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Japanese and/or Korean speaking candidate wanted for P/T software/sales position. Contact: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA, 01002; fax: 413-549-1038; e-mail: info@remi.com

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on exerience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

FOR RENT

4 Bedroom, 3 1/2 bath 73 Amity Place 1/2 mile away from Umass. 413-592-0540 best after 7:00

FOR SALE

Salamon Snowboard 156-550 Like New Call 256-4797 Ask for Dave

African Drums: Djembes, Drum Repair Didjeidoos. 413-529-2215 One World

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

Responsible non-smoking female roommate wanted. Large apartment in Holyoke. $300/month + 1/2 utilities. 532-7959

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company. Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$. Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreak-travel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2002 Jamaica, Cancun, Bahamas or Florida. Join Student Travel Services, Americas #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips at UMass and earn cash and free trips. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, parties and More! Organize small group-earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 2002!! Prices from $419, on the beach from $529. Reliable air to Cancun, Acapulco, Mazatlan, Jamaica, Bahamas, and South Padre. Mexico Special-FREE MEALS and PARTIES, book by Nov. 15th and Save BIG!! Organize a group and travel FREE. Break with The Best www.studentexpress.com. Call for details and a FREE brochure 1-800-787-3787

Spring Break with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator. Promote trips on-campus, earn cash and free trips. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDIGRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203 WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

SPRING BREAK #1 SPRINGBREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board
3	CBS/8 Hartford
4	CBS 1 Boston
5	ABC/40 Springfield
6	PBS 5 Springfield
7	HSCN Movie Channel
8	UPN 20 Hartford
9	HSCN New Movie Channel
10	NBC 30 New Haven
11	Fox/61 Hartford
12	PBS 24 Hartford
13	NBC/22 Springfield
14	International Channel
15	UMASS (Academic Channel)
16	WB 56 New Haven
17	ESPN
18	HTC TV (Student Channel)
20	Weather Channel
21	Guest to Guest
22	C-Span
23	CNN
24	CNN Headline News
25	Lifetime
26	USA
27	TBS
28	TNT
29	E!
30	A&E
31	Discovery
32	Nickelodeon
33	Cartoon Network
34	Nick at Nite
35	TV Land
36	Comedy Central
37	BET
38	Encore
39	Bloomberg Financial Network
40	College TV Network
41	MTV
42	MTV2
43	VH1
44	The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 1, 2001

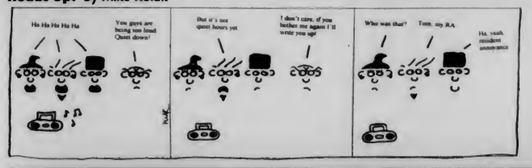
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	4	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Scenic Rail Journeys		Frontline "Testing Our Schools"		Mystery! "Second Sight"		This Old Hse.	Hometime
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Agency (N) (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Survivor: Africa (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investigtn.		Agency (N) (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	United We Stand (N) (In Stereo)				Primetime Thursday	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Popstars 2	Eliminate Del.	Charmed (N) (In Stereo)			Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Supplies and Demands"	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Popstars 2	Eliminate Del.	Charmed (N) (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Supplies and Demands"	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	World Series: Game 5 – Diamondbacks or Braves at Yankees or Mariners					News	Seinfeld
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Schwartz	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Supplies and Demands"	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Thire Old Hse.	Dns. on Call	Frontline "Testing Our Schools"		Mystery! "Second Sight"	News	Nightline
WGGB	40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	United We Stand (N) (In Stereo)				Primetime Thursday	News	Stigmates
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Fraser	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Ent. Tonight	Fresier	5th Wheel
WTBS	46		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	★½ "The Postman" (1997, Adventure) Kevin Costner, Will Patton.
A&E	41		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Animal Instinct"		Biography: Florence Henderson		Biography: Robert Reed		Ultimate Reality	Law & Order
CNN	23		Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report	Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	28		Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★ "Woo" (1998, Comedy) Jada Pinckett Smith.				Saturday Night Live	Daily Show	Sat. Night Live
DISC	42		Wild Discovery: Devil's Play.		Wild Discovery: Australia		Creatures of the Abyss		T-Creatures "Bigfoot and Yeti"		Lost Tombs of Peru	Justice Files
ESPN	43		Sportscenter		Gamedey	College Football	North Carolina at Georgia Tech. (Live)					Sportscenter
LIFE	45		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Amy Irving"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★½ "Murder at 75 Birch" (1999, Mystery) Melissa Gilbert.			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	39		Direct Effect (In Stereo)		Music Videos (In Stereo)		Primetime Videos (In Stereo)		TBA		Cribs (N)	Diary (N)	Dismissed (N)	Who Knows?
NICK	65		Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongb	Pack Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Phoenix	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	61		Star Trek "The Enemy Within"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Xenscape "The Locker"		Outer Limits " Op Ziz"		Star Trek (In Stereo)		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	26		Haunted History: The Tragic		Secrets of Forensic Science		Susan Smith: Nine Days		Daredevils: Crossing		Behind the Jump With		Susan Smith: Nine Days
TNT	62		NYPD Blue "The Old Spouse"		Pretender "The Dragon House"		NBA Basketball: Washington Wizards at Atlanta Hawks. (In Stereo Live)				NBA		★★ "The Grey Outdoor" (1988)
USA	29		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Ares" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Jackpot 100"		JAG "In Russia, With Love"			JAG "Gypsy Eyes" (In Stereo)	Martin	Martin
HBO	50		"Bothwick" (1998, Comedy) Matthew Lawrence. (In Stereo)				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		★★ "On Deadly Ground" (1994) Steven Seagal		Shallow Hal		Real Sex 2B: Bedroom Tricks
MAX	51		(5:30) ★★★ "The Patriot" (2000, Drama) Mel Gibson.				★★ "28 Days" (2000, Drama) Sandra Bullock.		PG-13				★★½ "Revenge" (1990, Drama) Kevin Costner. (In Stereo)
SHOW	55		★★½ "Jacob Two Two Meets the Hooded Fang" (1999)				★ "Supernova" (2000) James Spader.		PG-13		A Nice Face		Going to California (In)	Leap Years (In)

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

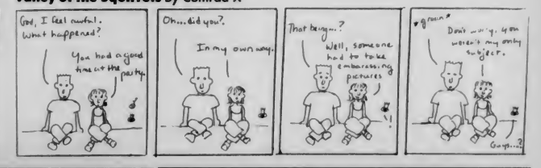
Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Monty By Jim Meddick



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"You neutered that problem."

–Charlie Higgins

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 65 LOW: 48	HIGH: 70 LOW: 48	HIGH: 66 LOW: 37

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may be hiding things unnecessarily at this time. Keeping secrets from those who are, after all, on your side will prove a waste of time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You will probably attract a great deal of attention today just by being yourself. Your charisma is increasing at this time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You know what you want – but do you know what you don't want? Knowing this will make all the difference today and in the future.

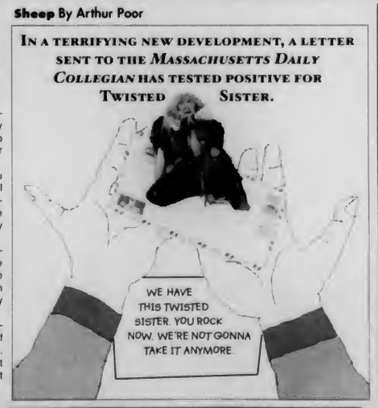
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You know just how to make people feel good about themselves, and today you'll have the opportunity to make a new friend because of this.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You will not be satisfied if you are limited to only one or tow choices today. If possible, you want it all.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Someone may try to get a little too close to you for your taste. You mustn't let this go on too long. Talk about it now and avoid a crisis.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Are you really prepared for the kind of commitment you're currently considering? Remember, what you do will affect others, so think things through!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your cultivated, easygoing manner may cover up some underlying tension for a while, but eventually, a friend will see through your veneer.



CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Give your word today only when you know you can keep it. Now is no time to risk your credibility.

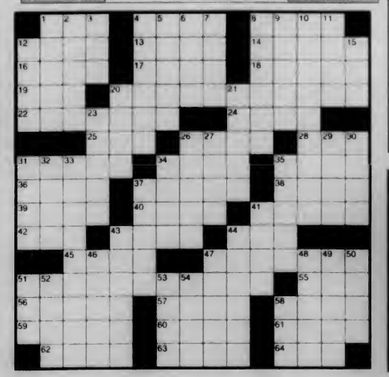
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You will rely on your practical side all day long. Avoid letting your imagination get the better of you – particularly after dark.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You can do much to improve your record at the workplace today simply by focusing on those things that are truly within your grasp.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your interest in the affairs of others will heat up today. You can learn something that will affect your overall point of view.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
Great Beer Great Food Great Service
Amherst's original brewpub serving up fine handcrafted brews and lagers.
Featuring fabulous food and great live music!!
Thursday Who's the Fat Guy Funk $2 cover
Saturday Aloha Steamtrain Groovy Rock $3 cover
Sunday Tonight at Noon Jazz no cover
34 N. Pleasant Street • Amherst 413-253-4400 WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM



ACROSS
1 Beret's cousin
4 Long-active volcano
8 Pool lengths
12 Pocket bread
13 Flintstone dad
14 Director Woody
15 A woodwind
17 Reputation
18 Bowling score
19 A thousand G's
20 Work period
22 Artist's colors
24 Dappled horse
25 Funny Charlotte
26 Garden tools
28 Smais amount
31 Test for gold
34 Rumple
35 Jazz music
36 They could be saturated
37 Goings
38 Folksinger Burl
39 Helm position
40 A Guthrie
41 Office worker
42 Race the engine
43 Inspects
44 Household pet
45 Tickish Muppet
47 Hearing range
51 Charles Atlas, for one
55 Muslim honorific
56 Worship
57 Mortar troughs
58 Skirt length
59 Bushed
60 Where Japan is
61 Hurler Hershiser
62 T-man Eliot
63 Fawn or doe
64 Rand of "Atlas Shrugged"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

J	A	C	K		R	O	O	F		P	H	D
A	L	A	I		A	V	A	I	L		B	E	A	U
M	O	A	N		V	I	R	G	O		L	O	N	E
B	U	N	G	L	E	D		S	P	R	I	N	G	S
			E	N		E	N		S		R	N
A	B	B	O	T		T	I	C		P	I	E	D
P	E	R	N		O	R	I	O	L	E		E	R	A
F	I	L	I	G	H	T	A	T	T	E	N	D	A	N	T
I	L	E		E	C	H	E	D		E	R	I	E
X	E	R	O	X		E	Y	E	S		C	A	S	E
		M	E	R				F	A	D
P	L	E	A	D	E	D		R	O	L	E	R	S
L	A	T	H		P	E	T	E	R		I	D	E	A
O	K	R	A		S	W	E	E	T		N	D	A	K
T	E	E			Y	A	K	S			E	Y	R	E

11-14-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Shinbone
2 Coral formation
3 Li'l Abner and Daisy —
4 Lacking vigor
5 Copy a design
6 "Nautilus" skipper
7 Yemeni city
8 Cowboys' ropes
9 Omega opposite
10 Mournful
11 Feudal slave
12 Splendor
15 Mosquito —
20 Linger
21 Boutique buy
23 Destroy data
26 Seed covers
27 Ibsen's home
29 Contend
30 Writing table
31 From a distance
32 Auction, e.g.
33 Cargo carrier
34 Simply
35 Forsakes a lover
37 Marshy inlet
41 John Dickson of whodunits
43 Fixes firmly
44 Type of salad
46 Ancient harps
47 Comic Murphy
48 Dangerous
49 Limerick writer Nash
50 Mouse appendage
51 Nocturnal mammal
52 Norse god
53 "— no idea!"
54 Come in last
58 Extinct bird

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Quesadilla

Ham & Potato Casserole

Szechuan Chicken (F, B, H)

Vegan Black Bean Quesadilla (vegan)

Garlic Eggplant Stir Fry (vegan) (W only)

DINNER

Grilled Ham Steak

Baked Chicken Quarter

Teriyaki Beef (F, B, H)

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Jess May
Production Supervisor	riki Alcid
Production Staff	Frank DiMeglio, Mike Kulak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Northern title up for grabs

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

This could be a season of destiny. Or, it could be another close call.

It depends on what team hits the water this weekend, when the No. 13 Massachusetts men's water polo team travels to Providence, R.I., to compete in the Collegiate Water Polo Association Northern Division playoff. If it's the team that scored 68 goals in four games two weeks ago, the team that has dominated every team it was supposed to dominate, then a trip to the NCAA Tournament could be in the cards.

However, if it's the team that has only surfaced a few times this season, but gave up games to key opponents like Navy and Princeton, then the road to glory may be out of service.

It all comes down to a weekend in which UMass will see the strongest of the Northern Division – teams like Queens and St. Francis, two teams that have given the Minutemen their biggest tests this season. UMass, which finished the regular season at 20-5 overall (9-1 CWPA), can prove itself worthy of representation in the Eastern Championship if it can finally put away Queens, which handed the Maroon and White a tough double overtime loss earlier in the season.

Or, if the cookie crumbles another way, it could come down to a third meeting with the Terriers of St. Francis, which has held a lead against UMass into the fourth quarter of each game this year.

The positives heading into the weekend are numerous. Massachusetts won the EAC tournament last weekend, handily defeating each opponent until they met up with the Terriers in the final. In that game, St. Francis held off the Maroon and White offense, until a breakthrough in the fourth quarter, when UMass came back to win in dramatic fashion.

Furthermore, senior Mike Foley was named CWPA player of the week yesterday, the second consecutive week the award was given to a Minuteman. Last week, sophomore Dave Liebert earned the honor for his play in UMass' offensive explosion the weekend prior.

However, the negatives are mounting. According to Head Coach Russ Yarworth, Foley has a bruised rib, and has not practiced yet this week. The team is also dealing with academic issues.

"It's been a rough week at practice," Yarworth said. "I'm not feeling that positive about it. I hope to keep Foley out of the Friday game [against the Massachusetts Institute of Technology], as well as Saturday Morning [against Connecticut College]."

There couldn't be a much worse time for negativity. The Minutemen will also be missing senior Greg Traver, who has led the team in every area. Traver will be tending to family matters, and will be unavailable for the entire weekend.

"Not being full-strength will probably be a handful," Yarworth said.

But, all is not lost. The team is still intact for the most part, and relatively injury-free. Foley will see action if Massachusetts advances to the semifinal, where Yarworth expects to see St. Francis again.

If the Maroon and White can keep rolling, it's likely to meet the Knights of Queens College. This would be an exciting contest, as UMass is looking to avenge the loss in the marathon battle earlier this season. If such a matchup were to go down, Yarworth has the battle plan ready. "We've got to take care of the ball, and play our game plan."

The loss of Trayer is an obvious problem, however, and it will be a true test of this team, which will graduate seven seniors after this season.

"Hopefully, it will make us stronger," Yarworth said. "And the other kids will step up."

The Minutemen have a strong cast of characters that has proven it can step up when needed. Yarworth will look to some of the younger players to fill the void created by Traiver, players like junior Ricardo Puig, sophomore Tim Craycraft, and freshmen Adam Zobler and Nick Koenemann.

If Massachusetts can take care of Queens once and for all, it will be an important moral victory for a team that has been near perfect all season. And a trip to the Eastern Championships would be a great reward for lucky number 13 Massachusetts.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Evan Lutz and the men's water polo team will take the pool against some familiar faces this weekend at the Northern Division Championships.

Dismantling A-10 power

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

For students in college, going home is often a forced chore, put on only to appease parents. But it's difficult to underestimate just how much a little home cooking can do.

The Massachusetts volleyball team (12-11, 5-8 Atlantic 10) used some home cooking of its own, absolutely demolishing Rhode Island last night at the Curry Hicks Cage. The Minutewomen dismissed the visiting Rams (13-10, 9-4 A-10) in three sets (30-16, 30-19, 30-18), dominating for the entire match, allowing their visitors to own just one lead in any game. It marked the third straight loss for Rhody, who went into this past weekend riding a 10-match winning streak.

"I haven't seen that team in a long time," said UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny, in reference to her team's stellar performance. "I'm really proud of them. I thought we did a very good job. Obviously our offense was on fire. It's the best we've served all year and I just thought we stayed very disciplined on defense. Our block was excellent – we had nine blocks, but what people don't realize is that we channeled balls and dug a lot of balls."

The Maroon and White attack hit an astronomical .370 for the match, totaling a mere nine errors, with just four coming in the first two games.

"They had a lot more errors than we did," Kenny said. "Nine hitting errors – that's got to be a record this year."

Duly impressive for UMass was its serving prowess, as the team put up 10 aces for the match with only three errors – an impressive feat for a team averaging 1.8 aces per game – with co-captain Lynnarie Hovet leading the team with four aces.

"I thought our offense worked really well for us tonight," said UMass co-captain Jameen DeMarte, who put up 10 kills – a stark contrast to her mere two errors in the match. "Our setter found holes for us that we were able to hit between and it just worked really well. We clicked better than we have in a while."

The UMass offense received contributions from every part of the court, with three attackers, DeMarte, Hovet and sophomore Nitia Small – posting 10 or more kills for the three-game set. Additionally, every Minutewoman who attempted a kill posted a hitting percentage of .200 or better.

"I thought every single person that played tonight was great offensively," Kenny said. "Our middles – Celia [Wisle] and Clare [Baxter] – might not have had as many sets, but they held [URI's] middle blockers. Their middle blockers respected them enough that our outside attack had one-on-ones."

On the other side of the ball, the Maroon and White was

Turn to VOLLEY, page 10

Preseason faves head to Mullins

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Preseason views of this weekend's pair of games against Providence and Northeastern were intimidating. Considering the Friars were Hockey East's highest ranked team and Northeastern was seen as a rising squad, there was reason for apprehension.

UMass	@	P.C.
Friday	7 p.m.
UMass	vs.	N.U.
Saturday	7 p.m.

But now that Providence has fallen from its Preseason No. 8 ranking, thanks to a 1-4-0 start, and Northeastern, despite an early 4-3 win over defending National Champion Boston College, remains out of the top 15; the next pair of matchups look a lot more manageable – but don't tell that to the Minutemen.

UMass was directly responsible for one of Providence's four losses, a 4-3 nail biter at Schneider Arena Sunday afternoon. The Maroon and White are the only non-ranked team to defeat the Friars this year and they did it at home in a conference game. So understand that the Minutemen are not expecting a welcome mat in front of Schneider Arena tomorrow night.

"It is going to be an absolute war on Friday night," said Jimmy Callahan after he scored a goal and an assist in UMass' win over then No. 14 PC. "They are going to be fired up to play us again after we beat them."

Fired up would be the operative term, as odds are low that coach Paul Pooles and his Friar squad will take a third straight loss lightly, especially when so much went wrong in a hotly contested one goal loss.

First off, all Hockey East goalie Nolan Schaefer had a less than spectacular game against the Minutemen. Schaefer made his share of brilliant saves but he stopped only 25 of the 29 UMass shots, while allowing a pair of fluke goals, including Brad Nizwantowski's game winner in the third.

Considering the multitude of talent that Schaefer possesses, it is unlikely that he will have another off game. If Schaefer decides to get hot, than UMass better find its accuracy if they hope to put up another four spot.

The Maroon and White booted numerous prime scoring chances that would have drove the UMass bench to hysterics instead of perspiration. Matt Walsh missed the lower right corner he picked in the second period, while Nizwantowski was stoned on a breakaway later in that period.

If the Minutemen can capitalize on half of those chances and continue to perform well on special teams, than a second straight win over Providence is not out of the question.

On Saturday, UMass finally returns home after four straight games away from the Mullins Center. The Minutemen's one home game drew a sparse crowd against Niagara, but with parents weekend going on and a home football game in the afternoon, coach Don Cahoon is hoping for a better turnout to support his up and coming team.

"It's always nice to come home," Cahoon said. "It's going to be a festive atmosphere this weekend with the football game, hopefully we'll be able to get some people interested in what we are doing."

Visiting Amherst will be a lukewarm Northeastern squad that followed up two wins over BC and Mercyhurst with two deadlocks against New Hampshire and Notre Dame.

The Huskies are led by one of the top defensemen in the nation in Jim Fahey. Not only is Fahey a stalwart on the blueline, he also leads the Huskies in points with 10.

"Fahey is one of the best offensive defensemen in the country," Cahoon said.

Mike Ryan, Willie Levesque and Jason Guerriero form Northeastern's top trio of scorers. The three have combined for seven goals and 20 points in only six games this year.

The rock solid Mike Johnson will likely draw the task of backstopping the Minutemen to victory and to do so he will have to contain the scoring of NU's dangerous scorers.

But after Ryan, Levesque and Guerriero, the Huskies don't go as deep as the talented Friars. Nevertheless, Hockey East games are nothing if not a battle. A win and two points are so hard to come by in the deepest league in the nation, that no game can be taken lightly.

Like any young team the Minutemen will go through their bumps and bruises. But this weekend, UMass has a chance to prove that the growing pains will come few and far between.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Jimmy Callahan is the team's leading scorer with three points.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Deren (No. 13) is the leading scorer in the A-10 this season with 12 goals and five assists.

More hardware for Deren

As the Massachusetts men's soccer team continues to annihilate its Atlantic 10 opposition, its most prolific scorer and one of the most dominant players in the conference was recognized this week for another impressive performance.

The Minutemen's Jeff Deren, from nearby Chicopee, picked up three awards to add to his already wildly successful season. Deren was named Atlantic 10 Player of the Week by the Conference Commissioner's Office, as well as being named WHMP/UMass Co-Athlete of the Week.

The junior also was chosen to the Soccer America Team of the Week, the first member of the Maroon and White to receive the honor on the season. Deren's WHMP honor follows the selection of teammate Prah Myers as last week's winner of the award.

The crafty junior racked up two goals and two assists on the weekend, leading the Minutemen to two more victories and keeping the team's winning streak alive. Deren tallied the game-winner and assisted on two other scores in UMass' 3-1 triumph against Richmond on Friday. He also picked up another game-winner against George Washington on Sunday, a 2-1 Minutemen victory, as his team improved to 13-3 on the season, and 8-1 in the Atlantic 10.

Deren leads the conference in scoring this year, as he has put home 12 goals and has assisted on five more. The 5'10" forward took home the team scoring title last year as well, becoming the first sophomore to do so in seven years.

The Minutemen look to improve on their nine-game winning streak, tied for the longest in school history, Friday night when they travel to the Buckeye State to clash with Dayton.

– Andy Vogt

Monsters and Travoltas are coming to movie theaters for post-Halloween chills and thrills.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Check out our Minutemen soccer preview inside today's Sports.

ARTS p. 5 | SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 41 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, November 2, 2001

Panel protests the US Navy in Vieques

By Bill Larkin
Collegian Staff

The U.S. government should support a global peace movement by respecting the popular demand of Puerto Ricans to remove the U.S. Navy from the island of Vieques, according to a panel of four activists.

Held in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union, "The Island of Vieques: The Struggle between the Puerto Rican People and The United States Navy," criticized the Navy's use of the island for bomb testing. Nelson Acosta, director of the Office of Asian Latino African Native American Affairs, introduced the panel to about fifty students and local residents.

"In the aftermath of the events of Sept. 11, should we talk about issues like Vieques, or go on with our lives and risk appearing unpatriotic," Acosta said. "This discussion is not about patriotism, but issues that effect all our lives."

Vieques, a popular travel destination, lies 51 miles off the east coast of Puerto Rico. The island's only town, Vieques, or Isabel Segunda, was founded in 1843. In 1941, the Navy occupied 22,000 acres, two-thirds of the island's area, for military weapons testing.

Martin Espada, an English professor at the University of Massachusetts, said that the media has ignored the plight of Puerto Ricans living on Vieques. He claimed the bombing of Vieques, which houses more than 9,000 people, has resulted in a cancer rate 27 percent higher than the rest of Puerto Rico, a 50 percent unemployment rate and a poverty rate of 72 percent.

"The Navy must leave because the land and people of Vieques are being poisoned, and that is morally indefensible," Espada said. "Puerto Ricans must learn to say 'no.'"

Roberto Alejandro, a Political Science professor at UMass, said the expansionist history of the United States explains the foundation of the Navy's occupation of Vieques. He listed the military backgrounds and policies of the country's political leaders as well as the wars waged by America since its birth.

"In addition to making war during the past 200 years, what else has the nation done?" Alejandro asked. "The United States has been practicing terrorism by killing children, women, and civilian men in areas such as El Salvador and Puerto Rico."

UMass alumna Susana Stringer Velez ('86) said she wanted to protest the Navy's harsh treatment of members of the peace movement. She spent 25 days in jail for crossing into one of the Navy's danger zones, where they practice dropping bombs from military aircraft.

"Yes, the soldiers put on a big show when they arrested the six of us," Belles said. "But the treatment given protestors by soldiers has improved because of the publicity given the island."

Roy Brown, an artist, singer and social activist, said that many of the Navy personnel harassed residents of the island, causing violence in

Turn to VIEQUES, page 3

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Director of the Office of Asian Latino African Native American Affairs Nelson Acosta introduced the panelists at yesterday's discussion of the U.S. Navy occupation of Vieques. The panel discussion was the second in the ALANA Lecture Series this semester.

Berkeley prof speaks on anarchism

By Esther Suh
Collegian Staff

The Radical Student Union hosted a lecture by a guest professor on the lost history of anarchism at the Campus Center Wednesday afternoon.

Barry Pateman, who currently teaches at the University of California at Berkeley, is the co-editor at the Emma Goldman Papers and an archivist at the Kate Sharpley Library. He teaches the history of anarchism.

"If you think UC Berkeley is radical," Pateman said. "They're not."

Pateman does not claim to be an expert on the subject of anarchism, but instead sees himself as a just another part in the movement.

"I'm not an expert," Pateman said. "Our job is to reintroduce to the world this lost part of history."

He emphasized the need to acknowledge all exploits and efforts of people who were involved in the movements, independent of how large or popular the contribution was. He stressed not wanting to dismiss any attempt.

"It doesn't matter if we agree with [the ideas] or not – how can we just forget about them," Patemen asked. "What is important is that we look at those attempts."

In attendance at the lecture were those merely interested in the subject of anarchism and those who were activists themselves. One individual asked a question concerning the history of anarchism having mainly a white demographic, making it almost a "white movement." Others had questions of what anarchism actually was.

He explained that he did not have concrete answers or magical solutions to all the questions, did give his opinions but advised the audience to take his lecture as "tentative thoughts, not statements."

"[The anarchist movement] is constantly moving," Pateman said. "There are no fixed entities, but they are reactions learned from events."

He cited numerous examples of works and thoughts from Emma Goldman, Alexander

Turn to PATEMAN, page 3

Students garner news and information at the annual Majors Fair

By Andrew Chin
Collegian Correspondent

Crowds of people attended the annually held University of Massachusetts Majors Fair last night at the Student Union Ballroom.

Representatives of more than 87 departments occupied the ballroom with their information stations. At each table, departments from all the schools at the University brought their own type of information. Students were met with an array of information in the form of video presentations, pamphlets, packets, literature and poster board presentations.

Professional staff and students (graduate and undergraduate) were also on hand to provide the information and to answer any questions that would come up.

"As soon as they gather literature from a number of different departments they're interested in, they read it carefully, and then they can take the follow up steps and make one on one meetings with a known quantity, rather than approaching a department cold," said Susan Machala, an academic advisor from the Pre-Major Advising Services.

Machala added that giving out information this way helps students to overcome the fear of having to approach someone from a major that they are interested in and allows them to take the initiative of finding a major that best suits them in a more friendly, non-threatening way.

Matthew Saradjian, a senior majoring in French and representing the French department, stressed the positive aspects of the Majors Fair.

"This is a great way to get a good faculty contact and to pick up literature about course requirements, internships or study abroad," Saradjian said. "I think it's very nice to have all these things under one roof, especially that it's in the fall and it's close to pre-registration. [Students] can have a sense of what they can do for next semester."

Other non-major programs, such as the Writing Program, have benefited from the increased exposure due to the Majors Fair.

Marcia Curtis, the representative from the Writing Program, explained that since the program doesn't have a specific undergraduate major that the fair itself gives students the chance to see what writing classes are all about. Representatives at the table explain what writing programs such as WP 111 and 112 have to offer. Curtis explained that students had an equal chance to talk to representatives about the tutoring available and to help with papers.

With the various majors available to them, students have an opportunity to tailor a major after their own interests.

Sarah Daggett, a freshman, explained that she felt that the event was helpful overall.

"It was nice because I could find the department head, ask him about [a specific major] and see about getting into a course," she said. "I thought it was pretty helpful."

MASTER SGT. RALPH HALLMON/U.S. AIR FORCE

A B-52H drops a load of M117 750lb bombs. B-52s were used in Operation Enduring Freedom for the first time this week, attacking targets in northern Afghanistan.

Pentagon urges patience; campaign will be a long one, Defense officials say

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Instant victory is not a probable thing, the Pentagon said in a released statement. The Operation Enduring Freedom campaign enters its 25th day, and it is too early to expect the Taliban and al-Qaeda to surrender.

The Pentagon also confirmed that long-range heavy bombers are being used to attack targets in northern Afghanistan.

"Smoke – at this very moment – is still rising from the ruins of the World Trade Center," Donald Rumsfeld, secretary of Defense said. "With the ruins still smoldering and the smoke not yet cleared, it seems to me that Americans understand well that – despite the urgency in the press questions – we are still in the very, very early stages of this war."

This war is a new type of war, Rumsfeld explained; one that the American people need to realize will not be won overnight.

"We are now fighting a new kind of war. It is unlike any America has ever fought before," Rumsfeld said. "Many things about this war are different from wars past – but, as I have said, one of those differences is not the possibility of instant victory."

B-52 bombers struck Taliban targets in northern Afghanistan in support of Northern Alliance forces, but are not limited to that area.

"The B-52s are being utilized in areas all over the country, including on Taliban forces in the North," Rear Adm. John Stufflebeem said in a Pentagon briefing. "We're using both precision and non-precision weapons."

The B-52 can launch either weapon type. Non-precision weapons are typically dropped in great numbers to maximize the damage to the target.

"Heavy bombers have the capacity to carry large loads of weapons, and oftentimes if a target presents itself either in an engagement zone, or when directed, it's possible to release an entire load of bombs at once, in which case – the real formal term for that is called a 'long stick,' which has also been called carpet bombing," Stufflebeem explained. "What I will say is all of our capability, which includes long-range, heavy bombers that have the capacity to carry large loads, as well as tactical aircraft, are all being utilized and they're all being considered.

"And we are applying the strikes and the power, if you will, against good targets, against known targets," Stufflebeem added. "If the targets are large or wide-spread, then it would seem logical that we might find large bombers with large loads that are capable of attacking it just as effectively as a number of smaller tactical jets."

Stufflebeem went on to describe the results of the recent attacks on targets in Afghanistan as successful.

"This is in a location called the Tarnak Farms, located near Kandahar. It's one of the major al-Qaeda training camps funded by Osama bin Laden. Al-Qaeda used to use this facility to train terrorist and small-unit combat operations," Stufflebeem said. "As you can see from the second image, much of the facility has been damaged or destroyed. This has been over the course of the last couple of weeks."

While the campaign has been successful, Americans must remember that the war is not over, Rumsfeld said.

"This is a task that will take time to accomplish. Victory will require that every element of American influence and power be engaged," Rumsfeld said in a released statement. "Americans have seen tougher adversaries than this before – and they have had the staying power to defeat them.

"In the end, war is not about statistics, deadlines, short attention spans, or 24-hour news cycles," Rumsfeld added. "It is about will – the projection of will, the clear, unambiguous determination of the President and the American people to see this through to certain victory."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

Campus Perspectives

What is your favorite television theme song?

By Martha Olivo

Heather Robbins
Sophomore
STPI C
"I grew up without a t.v. I have no interest in it."

Swetha Suvramanian
Senior
Computer science
"'Friends'."

Prashant Jeloka
Junior
Engineering
"'BBC News'. They play music before and after the news."

Svea Parent
Freshman
Psychology
"'Friends'."

Andrei Yrsche
Graduate student
Physics
"I don't have one. I don't watch t.v."

Shoshana Zysberg
Senior
Finance
"'Saved By the Bell'—It always gets stuck in my head."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broad-sheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Melissa Hammel Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Iacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

All News Staff should clear their calendars and attend the Reporter's Workshop this Sunday at 3 p.m.

Sunraise printing and copying
ROUTE 9, RUSSELL STREET • HADLEY
T-Shirts & PRINTING
Everything from T-Shirts & Sweatshirts to Business Cards & Posters
Call 586-7133 Fax 586-7166
YO! Screen Printed T-SHIRTS AS LOW AS $5
BUSINESS CARDS Our Specialty! Starting Under $20!
UMASS
All Printing Needs
• Stadium Cups
• T-Shirts for: fraternities/sororities intramurals bar crawls special events
YOUR ART HERE
MENTION THIS AD AND RECEIVE 10% DISCOUNT

SPRING BREAK 2002
Organize a group and Travel FREE! Free Meals, Free Drinks, and Free Parties.
"It's a No Brainer."
For details and the Best Rates visit: www.sunsplashtours.com
1-800-426-7710

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
BOOSTERS (PG13) 1200 1240 220 300 440 520 700 740 920 1000*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1215 410 655 1010*
THE GRID (R) 1220 480 710 950*
K-PAX (PG13) 1210 430 725 1010*
13 GHOSTS (R) 1240 415 720 1000*
ON THE LINE (PG) 1220 650*
FROM HELL (R) 1230 500 730 1040
THE LAST CASTLE (R) 700 1000
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1230 410 700 1030
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1200 740
SABRINA (PG13) 400 1010
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 1200 430 740
TRAINING DAY (R) 400 950
ZOOLANDER (PG13) 1220 715
THE OTHERS (PG13) 1010
SENIOR MOVE NOV 3
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS DOORS OPEN AT 1140AM
cinemark.com

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!
To find out more, attend the Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
Including small group discussions with faculty and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.
Saturday, November 3, 2001
1:00 p.m. – 5:40 p.m.
Seelye Hall, Room 106, Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960
E-mail: sswadmit@smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw
Smith College School for Social Work

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

SOUTH BEACH. A CLASS OR TWO. THE REST IS UP TO YOU.
FLORIDA INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY IS OFFERING A JANUARY INTERSESSION ON SOUTH BEACH DURING YOUR WINTER BREAK
FIU

ZANNA has it.....Jeans
How Low can you go?
MAVI "Serena"
Low rise
slit hand dark denim boot cut
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown
www.zanna.com

Student leads religious ceremony

By Paula Stuhr
The Crimson White (U. Alabama)

(U-WIRE) TUSCALOOSA, Ala. – Students stood on the Mound with their eyes closed. Some lifted their hands toward the sky. Several danced around, while others swayed. Still others remained motionless. All raised their voices jubilantly into the crisp night air.

From the energy level present, it could have been a Saturday afternoon at Bryant-Denny Stadium, but instead of singing the Alabama fight song, these students sang praises to God. This group, known as Dunamis, began to settle as the singing and dancing ended. The leader of Dunamis, Jeremy Simmons, put his guitar down, pulled out his Bible and began to speak.

Simmons appeared much like any other college sophomore. With a weathered Bama cap atop his head, tendrils of curly hair poking out from underneath and a plaid button down shirt untucked over a pair of faded jeans, he looked as if he could have come straight from a keg party at this top-ranked party school. But then he spoke, and that stereotype vanished as 200 eyes focused on him. He told the attentive group of his conversations with Satan, his messages from God and his ultimate desire to help the Lord take over this campus.

Simmons said he grew up in a devoutly Christian household in Birmingham, where he had a quiet time each day to read the Bible and pray. He attended high school at Briarwood, a Christian school, and always thought he was a good Christian because he followed all of the rules and was a moral teenager.

But in his junior year at Briarwood, Simmons found himself rebelling and living in sin.

"After that year, God showed me that it was all about the relationship with Him, rather than the rules and regulations," he said. "That's when my walk became powerful, and I fell in love with God."

When Simmons arrived at the University of Alabama last fall, he searched for a church and a campus ministry in which to participate. He said God did not lead him to a church in Tuscaloosa, so he commuted each Sunday to his home church in Birmingham. However, he felt led to attend Campus Crusade and became actively involved in the group.

Simmons has been a leader since birth. "I can't not do it," Simmons said. "For some God-given reason, people follow me, and I want to point people to God."

Simmons said these natural leadership qualities became increasingly evident this year when God called him to distance himself from Crusade leadership and begin a new ministry on campus.

Simmons was participating in a mission project with Campus Crusade in San Diego this summer when the vague idea to begin a new campus ministry came to him.

"While I was there, God just started speaking to my heart that he wanted it to be a lot bigger than just a praise and worship time," Simmons recalled. "He wanted it to be a new ministry, and I just thought, 'What are you talking about'?"

He shared his vision with some of his friends the first week back to school, several of whom had the same feelings Simmons did. Five days later, nearly 100 people Simmons had never met crowded into his living room, its furniture pushed elsewhere in the house, including a big-screen TV moved into the kitchen.

"It was 90 people that I had never seen before in my life. And I had about 40 people in mind that would surely come if I was having this thing at my house, and none of them were even there," Simmons said. "It was really cool to see God bring all those people there. It's not about numbers, but God's been speaking in really big numbers."

With only word of mouth as advertisement, greeks, hippies, jocks and bookworms flocked to Jeremy's house, and in later weeks to the Mound and Presidential Pavilion, for a time of student-led praise and worship. Simmons and his team of leaders named the new student ministry Dunamis because it means power in Greek and it was used to describe the power of God in ancient Greece. Simmons formed the ecumenical group with the purpose of uniting the campus in worshipping God, rather than dividing it based on denomination.

More traditional campus ministry organizations, sponsored by various churches and denominations, have large numbers of students who regularly attend, but word is getting out about Dunamis, which is not far behind in its participation. The group's mission is not to detract participation from other campus ministries, but to supplement those ministries by adding an ecumenical facet of intense worship.

Study shows colleges increased tuition

By Sara Jeanblanc
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – Public colleges have raised tuition this year at the highest rate since 1993, according to a survey released by the College Board last week.

Tuition went up an average of 7.7 percent at four-year public institutions nationally, nearly triple the rate of inflation.

Much of the national increases were because of the recent economic downturn, which has made it difficult for states to support their public institutions.

This has not been the case in Virginia, however. Tuition this year at the University of Virginia only increased 1.8 percent for in-state students and 4.9 percent for out-of-state students.

Statewide, the average tuition increase at four-year public institutions rose only 2.4 percent for in-state students and 4.5 percent for out-of-state students.

Lower increases were possible because Virginia officials "have been working for the past six, seven or eight years as a Commonwealth to modify the cost of undergraduate tuition," said G. Paul Nardo, State Council of Higher Education for Virginia communications and governmental relations director.

In 1994-1996, legislation was passed so that tuition increases for students that are Virginia were capped at three percent – the inflation rate at that time.

Starting in 1996, a statewide freeze on all tuition and instructional fees was implemented and tuition and instructional fees were not permitted to rise at all.

In 1999, tuition was rolled back by 20 percent.

Fourth-year, in-state students at the University paid $334 less than they paid when they entered the University three years ago, Nardo added.

"We really have been aggressive in restraining tuition," Nardo said.

Students and parents "are getting more value for their money," he said.

Virginia, however, has not been immune to current economic concerns.

Because the tuition freeze policy is an appropriation, and is not in code, it is up for review every legislative session.

"It's going to be a tight budget year," Nardo said.

He said he thought that the economic situation and the Sept. 11 attacks were going to create a "tough budget environment" when the tuition freeze legislation is up for consideration in 2002.

The College Board survey also showed loans made up 58 percent of student aid this year, as compared with 41 percent in 1980.

However, at the University, grants actually increased as a percentage of need-based aid. Financial Aid Director Yvonne Hubbard said.

Seventy-one percent of need-based aid was able to be met using grants only in 2000. This was up from the 61 percent that could be met with grants only in 1997-1998.

But she said she thought this was because the University was fortunate to have a large endowment that has been growing in recent years. The endowment is "phenomenal, for a public institution," Hubbard said.

■ Pateman

continued from page 1

Berkman and others that contributed to the different schools of thought that have influenced activists of today.

Pateman said he wanted to put theories into practice in everyday life, similar to Goldman. He explained that Goldman "embraced everyone and not just one class."

Goldman did not want to ignore the working class or the middle class, he explained, which she thought was where the real change came from.

"Where do our ideas come from," Pateman questioned. "Is it from everyday experiences or just brilliant ideas from certain people?

"We cannot only listen to those who write or speak well," Pateman said. "We have to break that and rescue the worker from condescension."

Pateman wants to preserve the voices of the lost people and while presently working with his archives, he is currently looking for funds to make it possible for him to work on it.

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

And on your left...

Prospective students are treated to a walking tour of the campus.

■ Vieques

continued from page 1

town from 1940 to 1960. In response, he sang in the town's center, schools and clubs to unite the island's residents through music.

"I'm speaking today because Vieques is at the hearts of many artists in Puerto Rico," Brown said. "Many of them have participated in civil disobedience acts and raised funds on the island for this multi faceted, ideological struggle."

MARTHA OLIVO/COLLEGIAN

Come and go

Bikers enjoy the last of the warm weather on the Five College Rail Trail.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Common sense needed:

Avoid hysteria

Fear is a natural response to the attacks of America. No one will be able to forget where they were on Sept. 11 when they heard that two planes had struck the World Trade Center, or that the Pentagon had also been struck, or that the towers had collapsed, or that a fourth plane had been hijacked. Those of us who live in New York or Washington may never truly feel safe in our home cities again.

However, in recent weeks a different, more unhealthy, fear has set in. The effects of paranoia are being felt everywhere.

A popular rumor in the days before Halloween centered around an alleged warning from a terrorist. An American woman, it was said, had been dating one of the Al-Qaeda terrorists, and was begged by him not to travel on any planes on Sept 11, and not to enter any malls on Halloween. Across the country, frightening messages were sent by e-mail, urging anyone who valued their safety not to shop on Oct. 31.

Halloween has come and gone, and no malls were targeted. There was never any evidence that this rumor had any validity. The FBI denied that it had received any credible information about it and the story itself defied credulity. Why would the terrorist be unsure as to whether or not his girlfriend, as the story goes, was going to fly on a commercial airliner on Sept. 11? But Americans stayed away from shopping malls nonetheless. If the goal of the rumor's creator was to further threaten the American economy, he or she succeeded gloriously.

People across the country are throwing away mail rather than opening it, fearing that the envelopes may contain anthrax. Never mind that no individual residence has been targeted, or that the act of driving in a car is far more dangerous than opening even an envelope, even a suspicious one. A recent political cartoon made a worthwhile point when it portrayed an anthrax spore and a cigarette standing in a police lineup. The anthrax spore bore a sign that read, "Four deaths thus far." The cigarette bore a sign that read, "Four-hundred thousand deaths a year." Despite these sobering statistics, which substance – cigarettes or anthrax – is the subject of more nightmares?

If anyone is to blame for the irrational fear sweeping the nation, it is the media. The amount of coverage given to the anthrax "epidemic" is startling when compared to the amount given to the bombings in Afghanistan. While the four recorded deaths of anthrax have certainly been tragic, and the possibility of a larger biological threat is terrifying, more attention needs to be focused on the lives of American soldiers stationed in Central Asia.

If those perpetrating the current anthrax mailings have access to great amounts of biological weapons, it is likely that their current actions are an attempt to gauge American reaction. If this is the case, our reaction has probably pleased them greatly. Americans need to get on with their lives, and accept the reality that, while precautions are necessary, not all attacks can be thwarted.

It is certainly understandable that panic has been widespread. The events of Sept. 11 were the deadliest terrorist attacks in history, and came unexpectedly. However, we cannot give in to the call to hysteria currently being promulgated.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Interested in writing for sweet, sweet Ed/Op? Come down to the Collegian office and talk to Matt or Dan.

Some not-so-important questions answered

JAIME LOO

Lately, I've been swamped with midterms, but in general I like to procrastinate. I will watch television, vacuum my dorm for the fifteenth time and constantly fill my Brita water pitcher. After a while I run out of things to do and trick my friends into procrastinating with me. Besides random trips to CVS, and other distractions we somehow end up in these really weird rambling conversations. These conversations stem from questions that sometimes don't really have an answer or something completely ridiculous. I've compiled a few random questions about life for you to chew on this weekend. It's better to work in groups at a crazy hour like three in the morning because by then your sense of reality is flawed and the answers are even better. I've included a few of my answers as examples.

1.) When you throw a pair of socks into the laundry and only get back one, what happened to the other sock?

Eaten by either the washing machine or dryer. After a hearty meal of a $1.25 in quarters it needs some fiber to complement it, and what better than your socks. If you use your UCard, chances are the machines will be even hungrier and you will lose more socks.

2.) If you could have three mutant, superhero powers what would they be?

Fly. I want to be able to fly. Shape shifting wouldn't be bad either, and then energy orbs. I want to be able to shoot energy balls from my hands like fireballs. Or maybe fireballs are better...

3.) Why is the heating system in Northeast so loud?

Gnomes. They're gnomes with small pick axes who are on crack. They know nothing else but to smoke crack and bang on the pipes that power small generators to produce heating for Northeast. Props to Kristen for coming up with that one.

4.) Here's a scenario: You witness a sock flopping out of someone's laundry basket either in the elevator or in the stairway. You don't know the person but they obviously live in your building. Do you chase after them to give them back the sock or do you leave it?

Wow. This is a deep one. It would be too easy for you to side with me so I'm not giving you my answer.

5.) What do you think is the strongest factor that causes drowsiness in Hasbrouck 134?

Ahh...Hasbrouck 134, also known as the Nap Lecture Hall for almost all students. It's not the classes we have in there, it's the room itself which emanates drowsiness. I think it's the lights. There's something about the lights that makes me sleepy.

6.) What is LAGNAF?

Actually, maybe I don't want to know the real meaning. Someone actually gave me a very odd answer that sounds like it could be accurate. And if it is, my goodness, that should not be on a student organization bulletin board.

7.) Here's another scenario: You see an empty parking space, another car is coming in the other direction when suddenly a squirrel appears in the space. Do you hit the squirrel to get the space or do you put on your turning signal, slow down and hope the squirrel leaves, with the risk of losing the space to other car?

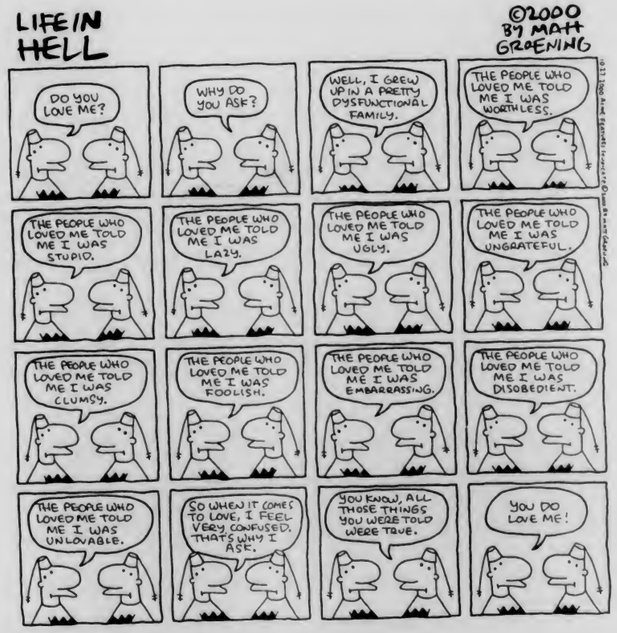
It depends on how much you want the actual space and the parking lot you are in. I was faced with this situation in early September, before I had a purple lot sticker. It was a Friday and I wanted to move my car closer to the dorm and saw a perfect space, when a squirrel and another car entered the scene. My answer to this will come in a later column.

I suppose things could have been worse. My sneaker could have gotten stuck in the net with the ball.

8.) When was the last time you felt like the cartoon character Charlie Brown?

It's only human to have a bad day like Charlie Brown and we all have one. The most recent incident that sticks out in my mind happened two weeks ago. After getting into a fight with one of my friends, I went outside to shoot some baskets to burn off some steam. I kept missing which got me even more upset. I finally got one and the basketball got stuck. Apparently the net had been changed and the ball was smaller than the net.

Since I just break 5 feet, jumping up to get it was not an option. I couldn't find anything to throw at it, which made me more angry. No one was around, so I took off my sneaker and threw it at the net, getting the basketball down. I hopped across the court to get my shoe back and the basketball. I suppose things could have been worse. My sneaker could have gotten stuck in the net with the ball.



And the eternal question...

9.) How many licks does it take to get to the center of a tootsie pop?

The world may never know.

Hope you had fun. Play again soon.

Jamie Loo is a Collegian Columnist.

Lucidity and its discontents

GEORGE THOMAS

Mark Lilla of the University of Chicago has written a timely book, The Reckless Mind: Intellectuals in Politics. Lilla wonders why so many intellectuals in the twentieth century have been drawn to and justified tyranny. In one form or another – whether it was Hitler's Germany, Stalin's Russia or Mao's China. Worse, for so many intellectuals the real evil is the West. "throughout the century, Western liberal democracy was portrayed in diabolical terms as the real home of tyranny, the tyranny of capital, of imperialism, of bourgeois conformity, of 'metaphysics,' of 'power,' even of language."

We need look no further than the present discontents to be struck by the point. The massacre of thousands of innocent lives in America by Islamic fundamentalists has led to a stunning response from intellectuals like Susan Sontag and Edward Said: America is to blame. Say what you will about Islamic fundamentalism and horribly repressive regimes like the Taliban; they're nothing compared to America.

Why, Lilla wonders, do intellectuals persist in such thinking – what he calls philotyranny – when common sense is overwhelming against them? Even after the events of Sept. 11 many intellectuals, lacking any sense of moral proportion, stridently persist in their reckless thinking. It was these intellectuals, and not Chris Erickson, at whom I was taking aim in my recent Op-Eds. Erickson's earnest insistence that we view the bombing of the World Trade Center as a "text" was inspiration for my spoof on pretentious academic thinking that casts more verbiage than light and threatens to make intellectuals irrelevant.

The events of Sept. 11 have indeed shattered our world: they've made an easy form of cultural relativism that has existed in the academy hard to digest. Many academic intellectuals held the view that we simply could not judge across cultures, that there simply is not ground on which to stand in condemning a regime like the Taliban. Cultural preferences are just that, so there's no basis for condemning certain actions as "right" and "wrong" outside of each particular culture. The Taliban makes this a pretty hard sell, but there are a lot of academics that still insist on this.

Erickson may well be right that no one "actually lives like this" despite what they may say. That's true and was the basis for my "overworked sarcasm," insisting that the intellectuals who engage in such thought comfortably live under liberal democracy while doing so. Moreover, in arguing for cultural relativism, many intellectuals elevate non-Western cultures while condemning the West as the great oppressor. One need look no further than the work of Said to see this. There is a contradiction here, but it's not mine. Other intellectuals, like Stanley Fish, have retreated from full-scale cultural relativism since Sept. 11.

Fish now says that cultural relativism was only a way to put ourselves in another's shoes, that it's simply another name for "serious thought." But people have been doing this for centuries, including liberal thinkers. Before Sept. 11, Fish's cultural relativism was much sterner. His position now suggests we should prefer our position to our adversaries' (even while understanding them), but says we cannot have "reasons" for doing so, only preferences. The result is a sort of "America – right or wrong," as we can't rationally defend it, which may call forth a potentially ugly form of nationalism.

Fish is interesting in another way; he's a leading postmodern intellectual, but one who writes in an elegant, urbane, and lucid manner. Right or wrong, Fish is always fun to read and you'd never catch him referring to the bombing of the World Trade Center as a text. The point is crucial because Erickson insists that such language is inextricably bound up with the message it's conveying and he dismisses those of us who voice skepticism on this point. Yet Fish manages to make these same arguments without turning to such tired academic discourse.

As for my "defense of White Male Liberal Democracy" (talk about a tired charge), I don't recall arguing for this. Indeed, I argued that America has had sexism, racism, homophobia and the like. Not only did I call these evils 'evils,' I said that what is best about liberal democracy is that in demanding that it live up to its own professed standards, we've gone a long way to fight these evils. Racism and sexism have existed throughout history, but the West is unique in that it was the first culture to explicitly argue against such evils (unlike the Arab nations that Said views as repositories of moral virtue).

In this, I'm in complete agreement with Erickson's insistence that we should hold our country to high standards, criticize it when necessary, and recognize that such efforts have often made America a better place. We should be careful too not to yield our rights in a time of war (although I find such self-preening intellectual concerns amusing, as so many of these same intellectuals spew forth theories that dismiss the very notion of individual rights). Even a careless reader would catch such sentiments in my earlier piece. I'd even be willing to admit that my defense of liberal democracy is a contingent defense. Something better might come along, but I'm deeply skeptical that it will come from these thinkers. As Lilla argues, "The most illiberal, anti-Enlightenment notions are put forward with a smile and the assurance that, followed out to their logical conclusion, they could only lead us into the democratic promised land."

What I find most amusing is that for someone who takes text so seriously, who insists on the importance of language, Erickson seems to have altogether missed the point that my piece was satire. But this itself is perfect: it's not just that he has no ear for language, but that what is obvious to the average reader is missed by this deep thinker, pondering things too obscure for our limited minds.

The proverbial man of the street would intuitively recognize that calling the bombing a text is nothing but errant nonsense. Such thinking and language puts the lie to any notion of starting a dialogue. This language is not meant to clarify our thinking, it doesn't engage the country in much needed debate and reflection. Rather, it's exclusionary, a clubby chat that's utterly irrelevant to the public at large. It should be the burden of intellectuals seeking to enlighten us and add to our understanding to make their arguments as lucid as possible and not, in a fit of self-flattery, act as if they're engaged in quantum mechanics.

Erickson never does shed light on why it's useful to call the bombing a "text." Playing the misunderstood genius, he simply chastises us for not getting it. Those of us who disagree are dismissed as intellectually shallow. I suppose I'll have to live without the beneficent approval of such obscurantist thinkers.

George Thomas is a UMass graduate student

Monsters Inc. provides good natured Disney scares...

...while Domestic Disturbances give psychological thrills.

By Nick Pizzolato
Collegian Staff

Are you looking for something to do with you parents this weekend? Before having them take you to Judie's or Chili's, why not head on over to CineMark 12 for this weekend's new movies? This weekend's releases have everything from kid friendly flicks to movies where you need to hold on to your mommy, and the movies where you and your dad can talk about how kickin' the fights were. You can find it all this week at the movies.

PIXAR's new film Monsters Inc., which stars the voices of Billy Crystal, John Goodman and Steve Buscemi among others as "the monsters in your closet," is PIXAR and Disney's fourth joint production using all computer generated characters. It tells the story of two monsters, who just do their jobs, which entails scaring little kids (much like the Howie Mandel film Little Monsters but probably funnier and with a better film quality). Both Toy Story and A Bug's Life have been extremely popular with both parents and kids and this film should be no exception, having been promoted as early as last year. It has already been receiving rave reviews from critics across the country, and promises to entertain children both young and old. Check out our review for it next week.

Speaking of Steve Buscemi, he and Vince Vaughn were injured in a bar fight while shooting scenes for this weekend's thriller Domestic Disturbance. The film, which also stars John Travolta, revolves around the link between a son and his recently divorced father, whom he trusts with everything. When the boy sees questionable actions by his step-dad, the only one who believes him is his father – someone's life is in danger!!! Despite the star power equated with this film, Travolta's last two pictures (Swordfish and Battlefield: Earth) have not only been trashed by reviewers, but they have crashed at the box office. You have to wonder what this weekend has in store for the former Sweathog; will he be "Stayin' Alive" or rolling Lucky Numbers in Vegas?

Finally, the new Jet Li movie The One opens today. The film originally made for WWF Superstar Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson (but who ended up taking the role in The Mummy Returns) is from the creators of the horror film Final Destination. However, due to Li's own style of filmmaking, he asked that the role and story be rewritten to represent the type of film he likes to put out, much to the rewriters chagrin, because as they told Entertainment Weekly, "with The Rock, you didn't have to write a lot of dialogue. With Jet, it's even less." The film deals with Li's character being split in two by a dimensional vortex and eventually fighting himself. Being promoted on its special effects value alone, I would expect much from this movie including Matrix-like fights.

Information from Entertainment Weekly Online was used in this article.

Mike (left) only has an eye for one girl.

Boom is Va-Va-Vom

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

tick, tick...BOOM!
Playing at The Jane Street Theatre, NYC

The name Jonathan Larson is most closely connected as the composer of the musical Rent, the show that critics and audiences alike said "reinvented Broadway" when it debuted in 1995. Larson, though, never saw his modern rock n' roll retelling of La Boheme become the Great White Way mainstay it is now, tragically dying of an aortic aneurysm only weeks before the show's grand opening. With Larson's passing also went hopes of a promising, young talent who could offer some new energy to the aging theatre world.

Fortunately, though, Larson's friends and family have created the off-Broadway show tick, tick...BOOM!, an insightful and intimate look at the artist as a young man. Assembled from songs that Larson had written and monologues he had occasionally performed, BOOM!'s three-person ensemble cast and glowing rock score carry on the Larson legacy that Rent began.

It's the week before his 30th birthday, and Jonathan (former New Kid on the Block, Joe McIntyre) still doesn't know where his life is headed. His musical career as a Broadway composer is stuck in a state of limbo, and his relationship with girlfriend Susan (80's teen movie star Molly Ringwald) is slowly coming apart at the seams. His ex-roommate Michael (Jerry Dixon) has forsaken his life-long dreams of becoming an actor and has joined Corporate America, wanting Jonathan to come on board with him. As the pressures add up, the "ticking" of the clock marches on, with Jonathan frantically trying to catch up and find his direction.

McIntyre fully embodies the role of Larson, bringing an 'awshucks' quality to the part while fully grasping the rock vibrato of the score. McIntyre showed a bit of his acting savvy last year with the release of the movie-musical The Fantasticks, but in tick, tick...BOOM! his real chops show through. He remains on stage for the full show, nearly two hours, and sings in almost every song.

Turn to BOOM, page 6

Fe-Fi-Fo-Fum
They Might Be Giants Come to NoHo

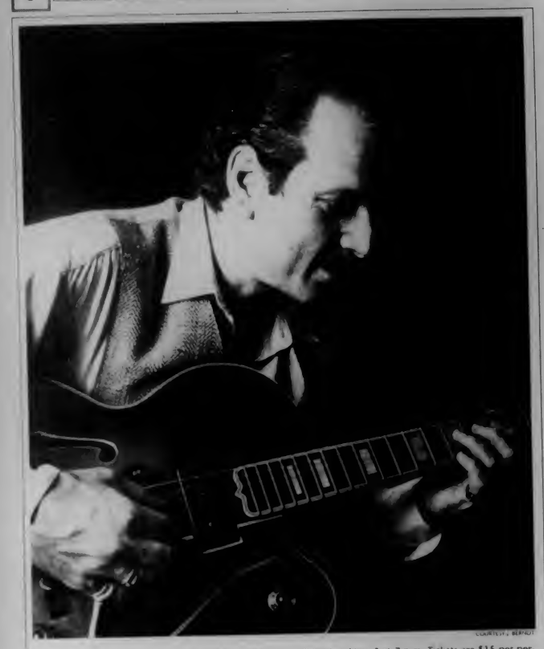
By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

Are you ready to rock in a pseudo-pop-Intellectual sort of way? Are you ready to feel a strange, ska-ish new-wave groove that you can't quite put your finger on?

Then this Sunday's They Might Be Giants at Pearl Street (starting at 8:30 with tickets costing a slim $17.50) is the show for you. Quirky beyond weirdness, They Might Be Giants' strange professional odyssey from New York City club performer to national underground super status – it can be argued that TMBG is the first and only group to survive the college rock revolution as college rockers – to quirked out guys nearing middle age.

But lest anyone assume that they aren't still rocking, the group's shows still feature a band-led conga line, and with more than eight albums in tow, TMBG can rock off any number of their greatest hits. Started in the early-80's, TMBG's self-titled first album wooed listeners with a polished strangeness – drum machines, samples, simple guitars and eccentric lyrics. On their sophomore effort, when they seemed poised to join with R.E.M. as the major underground act to pop onto the national scene, they stuck to their creative guns, going with Lincoln, a mellow album that seemed more refined that their first effort.

Lincoln may not have blown up, but it was enough for Elektra, who signed the group and pushed Flood. Easily the band's most well-known album – casual TMBG fans know it as the album with "Istanbul, Not Constantinople" and "Particle Man" – it went gold and again had the band on the verge of the popular plunge.



But again, TMBG again avoided the fall. Apollo 18 scared Elektra into simply releasing the subsequent John Henry with little fanfare. Why couldn't they just go corporate? Both albums were gems, just not easily digestible ones for mass media. Dropped after their contract came up, TMBG has floated on the choppy waves of music in their own dingy; it may not net them millions of dollars, but it's going to keep the band around.

Now touring to support Mink Car, the group's latest release, expect TMBG to fire on all cylinders and play from all albums. While all have their own unique sound – from Factory Showroom's infectious pop hooks to Apollo 18's oddities – the band has played long enough to blend it all into one delicious soup.

COURTESY ELI HERSHKO

They Might Be Giants comes to Pearl Street on Sunday.

Ronnie Earl plays Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton, Saturday, Nov. 3 at 7 p.m. Tickets are $15 per person.

By Chris Kenny
Collegian Correspondent

THE HILLS HAVE EYES
Directed by Wes Craven

I was walking down the aisles looking for a movie to get me in the mood for Halloween and I realized I had seen all the great horror movies, fifty times each. Then I saw The Hills Have Eyes. A catchy title with its premise rife with potential, I pick it up asking myself why I never saw it before. There is a soft spot reserved in my heart for horror/slasher movies made on a shoestring budget. Overall, it wasn't a half-bad experience and adequately got me in the spirit of my favorite holiday.

Wes Craven's The Hills Have Eyes is about a typical American family that has car trouble in the middle of the desert as they make their way to California. As they lament over their predicament, another family, the type that is mutated and enjoys the taste of infant flesh, is stalking them.

This movie is particularly refreshing having viewed some of Craven's newer work, specifically the softer, bloodless Scream movies. The Hills Have Eyes predates the modus operandi of his latter-day films, which are safe, ironic, and devoid of any true grit. This movie was made back when the filmmakers actually made an effort to convince you of the reality they presented rather than having them sit around and make fun of the absurdity of their own movie. Though the seeds of this development can perhaps be seen in some of the more campy and uninspired moments of the movie it is apparent that this movie was made by a young man who wanted to undermine the conventions, taking on the material with a certain amount of much-needed sadistic glee, rather than being a poster child for the norm.

With that glee comes camp. Whether it is intentional or not is hard to tell. The evil family, for instance, are ridiculously dressed in caveman-like costumes, as if they were extras for a shoddy prehistoric documentary. I wondered if the rotten teeth that the actors revealed as they gave their best growl and sneer were actually meant to look real or if they really intended for them to look as if they were rubber dentures bought from a dime store.

I would go on about the photography and the wonderful writing and all that, but to be quite frank about it, there isn't much to say. It is what it is. The writing does its job, which is to create an unlikely and contrived situation where a family is stuck in the desert, being picked off by animal-like murderers. The photography, likewise, facilitates its basic job but does nothing beyond that. Whereas films like Psycho or The Exorcist have their own subtle fingerprint, The Hills Have Eyes has its own way.

The movie is typical fare. Perhaps when the movie was released in 1978 it was considered pretty cutting edge, but in the here and now it seems that this is just standard operating procedure. Everything – from the heroic dog, the teenage survivors, and the gang of cannibals – is nothing new under the camps Hollywood sun. I know that people don't exactly flock to see these kinds of movies for the craft. It is the suspense and the terror that people expect. And as far as that goes, this film is okay. But there is a far better film about families of backwoods cannibals out there, and it is called Texas Chainsaw Massacre.

■ boom

M. Istvec completely meets the strenuous demands of the character Darlene Conville. Larson's dreams, failures, and the passion for his work. The beautiful ballad "Where in the end of the brave" a stunning example of the emotional range of the character, and McIntire's Lillias' 85 minutes as Molly Ringwald, then another 100 as Susan, including the powerful song "Come to Your Senses" which was originally intended for Larson's incomplete musical Superbia, the predecessor of Rent. Even though Ringwald hung on to left the show, replaced now by Natascia Diaz, her character was bland and unmoving in a show that heavily deals with the heightened of life. Her scenes alone in the spotlight are limited with fortunately more heap on the talents of McIntire and Dixon.

A hidden treasure of BOOM! is found in Dixon's performance, a subtle beautiful and resonating role. He perfectly conveys the dry humor of the script, as when he plays Larson's rubbish father, while candidly portraying his character's fights with AIDS without being preachy. His strong performance lingers long afterwards, and makes BOOM! more a one way story.

Director Scott Schwartz (son of composer Stephen) has given the show an intimate feel, and placed it in a theatre where no matter what your seat, you feel a part of the action. In a larger Broadway venue the relationship the audience feels with the characters would be lost, detracting a great deal from the show's overall power. The cozy Jane Street Theatre (which is actually the lower level of a Greenwich Village hotel) is a character in the show, too, illustrating the starting point of a great musical journey. The five-piece band plays onstage with the actors occasionally conversing with them too, further pointing to the clever direction by Schwartz to give the show a close-knit connection between the actors, the music, and the audience.

Hopefully, tick, tick...BOOM! will gather the same excitement and accolades that Rent did. Larson's music and words are a gift to the Broadway community, his message an enduring one, and his legacy now everlasting.

Patricia Barber comes to Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall on Monday November 5, at 7 p.m. Tickets are $16.50 per person.

College Street Motors
- Complete Foreign & Domestic Car & Truck Repair
- Oil Changes
- General Maintainence
- 24 hour AAA Towing
- Brake Jobs

260 College St.
Amherst MA 01002
Phone 253-3200

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available
ICHIBAN
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!
THURSDAY
40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
sco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
xtro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

Happy Aloha Friday!
It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available
DUBLIN $95
LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121
MILAN $132
AVAILABLE
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL
Call 24 hrs 8am Tues Nov 6 - 12am Fri Nov 9 & 10am 7pm Sat Nov 10
www.counciltravel.com

GERALD LING–COLLEGIAN

Moo-leyball!

This little visitor sauntered into the Cage Wednesday night to watch the UMass women's volleyball team in action.

Hitting the ranks

Men's soccer hits No. 19 in media poll

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

Finally, it is getting the credit it deserves.

Whether you believe it or not, the Massachusetts men's soccer team is now ranked No. 19 in the nation according to this week's CollegeSoccer.com media poll.

The Maroon and White has made leaps and strides all year and at long last it is receiving attention on the national level. UMass is standing at 13-3 on the year and is currently riding a nine-game winning streak. With an 8-1 in-conference record, the squad is tied for first place in the Atlantic 10 conference with the Rhode Island Rams.

This weekend the Minutemen finish off their regular season in Ohio when they face off with two A-10 foes, Dayton on Friday night and Xavier on Sunday afternoon.

Last Sunday against George Washington, UMass clinched its third consecutive trip to the A-10 post-season tournament, so now the goal is to grab the first place spot and hold it.

Rhode Island is making the same road trip to the Buckeye State this weekend. If the Rams lose one of the matches and UMass wins both of its, the Minutemen will have the No. 1 spot in the tourney. If at the end of the weekend the two squads still have the same record, URI will come away with the top spot thanks to its 3-2 double-overtime victory over the Minutemen on Sept. 29 in Amherst. As a result, it is very important for UMass to pick up two wins over the weekend.

But the task at hand is a difficult one, as it will duel with two quality opponents.

Dayton is currently in third place in the A-10 with a 6-2-1-conference record. The Flyers have a 9-6-2 mark on the year.

They are fighting to get into one of the top two spots of the A-10 and this weekend they have a chance to accomplish that goal – playing UMass today and URI on Sunday.

Unlike Dayton, Xavier has had an inauspicious year. It is currently 4-5 in the A-10 and 6-10-1 overall. Things have gotten so bad that Musketeer athletic director Mike Bobinski orchestrated moving the A-10 tourney to Dayton instead of Xavier because their field is "short of championship quality."

This weekend Massachusetts will try to bring some championship quality play to the Xavier and Dayton fields and possibly walk away on top of the mountain of the A-10 conference.

GERALD LING–COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Dan Colwell, on the corner kick.

■ basketball

continued from page 10

Other good news for UMass is that Nekole Smith is more or less healthy again, after missing the entire 2000-01 season with a knee injury. Two years ago, the junior forward averaged 9.0 points and 5.9 rebounds per game, and she will once again look to be a force around the basket.

Forward Siiri Liivandi and center Caroline Nehls should also contribute in the frontcourt, complimenting both Smith and Butler.

From the outside, Paige Harris and Amber Sneed are both returning, and will look to take over some of the offense that was lost with the departure of Coyner. A year ago, Sneed averaged 8.9 points per game while Harris chipped in with 6.2 of her own.

Other returning players in the backcourt are Ebony Pegues, Kristen Cannon and Cleo Foster, who all look to become more consistent in the 2001-02 campaign. Freshmen Monique Govan, Katie Nelson and Cindy Gonzalez are also hoping to make a good impression in their rookie years, and hope that a good exhibition performance will go a long way toward the garnering of more playing time down the road.

■ hoop

continued from page 10

increase as the team's No. 1 backcourt option.

While the backcourt has seen significant shifting and shuffling from last season, the frontcourt remains pretty much intact. Senior captain Kitwana Rhymer returns alongside junior Micah Brand to form one of the most fearsome low post combinations in the Atlantic 10. Rhymer, the reigning A-10 Defensive Player of the Year, averaged nearly 10 points and seven rebounds in 2000-01 while his partner in crime, Brand, averaged 8.4 points and 4.7 boards. If those two get into foul trouble on Sunday or at any point during the season expect to see either Jackie Rogers or Eric Williams get up off the bench and replace them. Rogers and Williams will also fight for probable sixth man honors.

The lone change up front for the Minutemen will be at small forward where no less than five players will be vying, not only for the starting role, but for any available minutes. Senior Ronell Blizzard, Martin, and a trio of sophomores, Willie Jenkins, Jameel Pugh and Lamb will all be looking to impress their new coach in their penultimate tune-up prior to the Nov. 16 opener against the University of Arkansas-Little Rock. Blizzard, a native of Waterbury, Conn., played the most out of those five last campaign, but it will be Jenkins who gets the starting nod against BABC.

"I think that's what's going to happen Sunday," said Lappas, about his decision to start Jenkins. "But there is nothing set in stone for this season. This is the way we are going to start this first game but I can guarantee you there is somebody on that bench that will start the season out of the rotation that will end up in that rotation."

No matter who starts or who comes off the bench for the Minutemen, the action promises to get underway Sunday at 3 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

UMass ATHLETICS
THIS SATURDAY!

UMASS
vs.
NORTHEASTERN
12:00 pm
McGuirk Alumni Stadium
THE MASS ATTACK
vs.
NORTHEASTERN
7:00 pm
William D. Mullins Center

FREE STUDENT TICKETS!
GET YOUR TICKETS @
MULLINS CENTER • CAMPUS CENTER • CURRY HICKS CAGE

UMass basketball
DOUBLE HEADER at the Mullins
SUNDAY • NOVEMBER 4th

MINUTEWOMEN
vs.
NWBL USA
12:30 pm
MINUTEMEN
vs.
BABC ALL-STARS
3:00 pm
Get the first look at the 2001-2002 Minutemen with Head Coach Steve Lappas!

FREE STUDENT TICKETS!
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 545-0810
GET YOUR TICKETS @
Mullins Center • Campus Center • Curry Hicks Cage

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Looking for 1 female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Monthly bills very cheap. Great location on Bus Route. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Janitor Tues./Thurs. mornings. 10hrs/week, $9/hr. plus membership. Hampshire Fitness Club 256-6446

Japanese and/or Korean speaking candidate wanted for P/T software/sales position. Contact: Regional Economic Models, Inc., 433 West St., Amherst, MA, 01002; fax. 413-549-1038; e-mail: info@remi.com

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on exerience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft. 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

FOR RENT

4 Bedroom, 3 1/2 bath 73 Amity Place 1/2 mile away from Umass. 413-592-0540 best after 7:00

FOR SALE

Salamon Snowboard 156-550 Like New Call 256-4797 Ask for Dave

African Drums: Djembes, Drum Repair Didjeidoos. 413-529-2215 One World

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMTION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

1 Female to share room in Brandywine Apt. Heat & hot water included. Lease starts January 1st. Please call for more info. 549-1988

Responsible non-smoking female roommate wanted Large apartment in Holyoke. $300/month + 1/2 utilities. 532-7959

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreak travel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

2002 Spring Break now booking for Umass students. Cancun Jamaica Bahamas & more. Call your Umass Campus Rep 549-8448. Book or make a deposit by Nov. 5th for extra incentives. High quality low cost 46 hours of FREE DRINKING

SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

TRAVEL

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (early-birds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.spring-breakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fill-good.com/online-mall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-72780

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Hartford
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - FOX 61 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - CBS 24 Hartford
13 - NBC 58 Springfield
14 - Entertainment Channel
15 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - ESPN2
19 - UVC TV (Student Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Good to Go!
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CSN Hartford News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - A&E
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 2, 2001

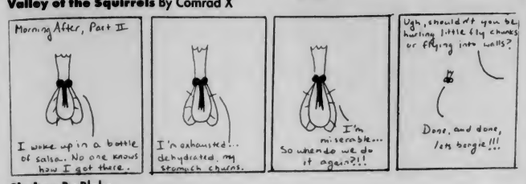
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Life 360 "Roots" (In Stereo)	News	Hows "Sex Unknown"
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N)	King	That's Life "Boo!" (In Stereo)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Ellen (N)	King	That's Life "Boo!" (In Stereo)	48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	America 24/7 (N)		Thieves "The General" (N)	Once and Again (In Stereo)		News	Raymond
WLVI	6		Nanny 2	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N)	Raising Dad	News	Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Providence "Best Man" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		4	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Sabrina-Witch	Maybe It's Me	Reba (N)	Raising Dad	News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Med Abt. You
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence "Best Man" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Raymond	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	Dark Angel "Boo!" (In Stereo)		Pasadena (N) (In Stereo)		News	Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Best Man" (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Life 360 "Roots" (In Stereo)		Time Goes By	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	America 24/7 (N)		Thieves "The General" (N)		Once and Again (In Stereo)		8th Wheel	Shopmates
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	★★½ "The Net" (1995, Suspense) Sandra Bullock, Jeremy Northam				Ent. Tonight	Frasier
WTBS	72		Roseanne		Fresh Prince	Friends	★★★ "Hook" (1991, Fantasy) Robin Williams, Dustin Hoffman.						Law & Order "American Dream"
AE	61		Night Court		Newsradio	Law & Order "Black Tie"	Biography: Merle Haggard-Rest		★★★½ "Tender Mercies" (1982, Drama) Robert Duvall,			Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	53	23	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	Larry King Live		The Point (N)		CNN Special Report		Sat. Night Live
COM	63	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Premium	Premium	Lounge Liz.	Premium	Premium	Saturday Night Live	Justice Files "I Am Innocent"
DISC	49		Wild Discovery: Rivers		Wild Discovery		Making of a Coaster		Largest Amusement Park		Giant Cranes (N)		Sportscenter
ESPN	51		Sportscenter		WTA Tennis: Sanex Championships -- Quarterfinal				★★ "Con-Ed Girl" (1999, Drama) Tori Spelling				★ "Cow Universe: Dome Yabitch"
LIFE	52		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Por		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)
MTV	56		Music Videos (In Stereo)						Music Videos (In Stereo)
NICK	46		Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Oddparents	Invader Zim	Kablam!	Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	66		Star Trek "Mudd's Women"		Chronicle (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Going Postal"		Invisible Man "Going Postal"				Invisible Man "Going Postal"
TLC	62	28	Stephen King -- Master		Secrets of Forensic Science		Daring Robberies		Extreme Machines "Bridges"		Building the Biggest		Daring Robberies
TNT	54		NYPD Blue "Sins Of Is Larry"		Pretender "The Dragon House"		★★★ "Dead Calm" (1988, Suspense) Sam Neill, Nicole Kidman.		★★½ "Poltergeist" (1982, Suspense) Jo				★ "Tremors 3: Aftershocks" (1996)
USA	47		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "We the People"		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		★★½ "Tremors" (1990, Horror) Kevin Bacon (In Stereo)				Curb-Entham
HBO	59		(5:00) Education-Tree		Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		★½ "Blue Screw" (1999) Martin Lawrence		★★ "Point of Impact" (1993, Drama) Michael Par
MAX	60		★★ "X-Men" (2000, Science Fiction) Hugh Jackman.				★★ "Medicine Man" (1992, Drama) Sean Connery.				★★★ "Rising Sun" (1993, Drama) Sean Connery,		In Stereo)
SHOW	65		★★½ "Just One Night" (2000) Timothy Hutton				★★½ "Strictly Business" (1991, Comedy)		"The Kid" (2000)		Stargate SG-1 (N)		Going to Conf.	Chris Isaak

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

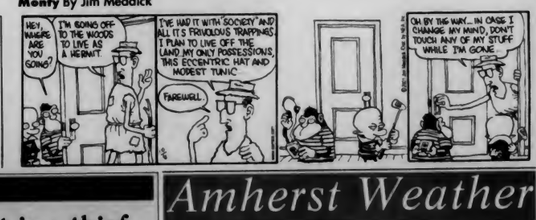
Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Skybox By Blake

Monty By Jim Meddick

Quote of the Day

"Every artist is a cannibal, every poet is a thief. All kill their inspiration and sing about their grief."
–U2
"The Fly"

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 68 LOW: 50	HIGH: 57 LOW: 50	HIGH: 50 LOW: 36

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
Something you'd thought you'd lost forever is back - in spades. Now is the time to start making very real plans involving at least one major change. The stars suggest that you dump that zero and get with a hero.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
Locusts!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19)
That which sounds most attractive to you deserves the most scrutiny. Very close scrutiny, if you know what I mean. And I think you do.
PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20)
No, I really think you should see a doctor. That growth just doesn't look healthy. Do you have one on your other arm?
ARIES (Mar. 21 - Apr. 19)
Idle talk turns into a rambling tale. Most listeners will understand that you're going to be the hero of this narrative, whatever history might say to the contrary. Audacity impresses those who are naturally timid, but there is a line that even you shouldn't cross. Specifically, it's that yellow line in the middle of the road. Did you go to the Ted Kennedy School of Driving?
TAURUS (Apr. 20 - May 20)
This is your one opportunity this month to do as you wish and leave everyone else to wonder what you're up to. When you're in this kind of great mood, the only person to whom you owe an explanation is yourself. It doesn't matter what 'they' all say; shine on, you crazy diamond.
GEMINI (May 21 - June 21)
Locusts! Wait, that was Sagittarius. What the hell is Gemini anyway? The twins. Ok . . . Kirby Puckett!
CANCER (June 22 - July 22)
Everyone understands the different contracts of being polite and being in a sincere relationship. As long as you follow the general rules of etiquette, you should be able to survive without making any big faux pas. But, one word of warning: don't wear that shirt. Seriously.
LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22)
You've got a lot to do, but don't expect to get much cooperation from the people who are supposed to be in your corner. They're all a bunch of Commies, and not in the friendly Butterfield way. Beware!
VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
At long last, your highly-anticipated appointment with destiny has arrived. Destiny, apparently, is that nervous girl who lives down the hall. She'll get her nervous boy alright, just you wait and see. Oh, yeah, you have a piece of lint on your pants.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct 22)
The more you're willing to compromise now, the more likely you can be the real winner in time to come. Give now, get later! In fact, can you give me five bucks?

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2020 for more information.

LUNCH

Shepherds Pie

Fish Nuggets

Lentil Chili (vegetarian)

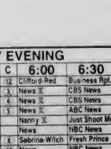
Vegan Nuggets

DINNER

Veal Marsala

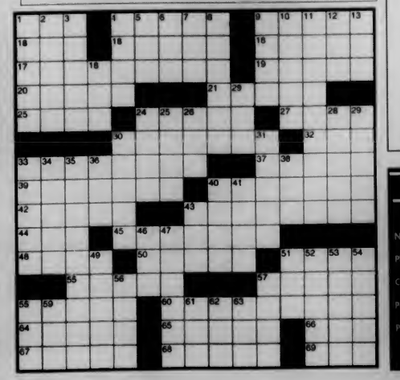
Sweet & Sour Shrimp

Potato & Mushroom Delight (vegan) (W Basics only)



Sweet & Sour Tofu (vegan)

FAT TRAX
a snowboard shop
E. HAMPTON 413 586 8766
E. LONGMEADOW 413 781 5142



ACROSS
1 Casual farewell
4 Clothes maker
9 Call
14 Limp's call
15 Moor
16 Part of a jacket
17 Pupil's time period
19 Districts
20 — of the crime
21 Clementine's dad
23 Harvard rival
24 Nodded off
27 Beg
30 Far East temples
32 Skater Babilonia
33 Texas city
37 Wield a brush
39 Candidate
40 Shellfish
42 Diving bird
43 Seedless raisins
44 Golfer Woosnam
45 Lowers in rank
48 Essay byline
50 Bishops' council
51 Borrowers' concerns: abbr.
55 Speed
57 Dancer Tallchief
58 Union demand
60 Finish (food)
64 Bread spreads
65 Frosting
66 Fem. holy one
67 Bits of straw
68 Globe substitute
69 Snake shape

DOWN
1 Domineering
2 Mexican plant
3 Merman of song
4 Loafer, e.g.
5 Electric fish
6 Gob of chewing gum
7 BPO info
8 Wrote verse
9 Strategy
10 Fawn grey
11 Surgical procedure
12 Teachers' org.
13 Overhead trains
18 Small number
22 Actress Lupino
24 Cowgirl Evans
25 Leer
26 Where tigers pace
28 Large blossom
29 Women's flyers
30 Yearned for 31 Tiffs
33 Geena Davis film
34 Virtuous
35 Priceless
36 Tease
38 In the style of
40 Garage unit
41 Ran, in the wash
43 Close relative
44 Sixth sense
47 Magoo trait
49 "Sour grapes" comer
51 Sigh of contentment
52 Novel or essay
53 Fissures
54 Vaults
56 Disorderly fumble
57 Short notes: abbr.
58 Noisy dispute
59 "The Greatest"
61 Fall mo.
62 Like Abner
63 Actress Claire

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-16-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff
Night Editor — Ken Campbell
Photo Technician — Martha Olivo
Copy Editor — Matt Brady
Production Supervisor — Adi D. Huseinovic
Production Staff — Meraj Hydary, Alicia Upano

INSIDE: Men's soccer weekend preview

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, November 2, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

The UMass field hockey team will head to Philadelphia this weekend for the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Work in progress

Field hockey looks to finish off conference

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 field hockey picture is really starting to take shape. Captain Bob would be so proud.

This weekend's A-10 tournament is essentially one big paint-by-numbers. The No. 1 seed needs two wins to

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

After struggling early on, the UMass penalty corner crew is now feared by many teams.

lock up its 10th A-10 title and go eight-for-eight against league competition for its sixth-straight conference sweep.

Not to mention that the A-10 champ gets one of six automatic bids to the field of 16 in the NCAA's Division I championship tournament that kicks off on Nov. 10. For top-seeded Massachusetts, all that stands in the way of its 18th tourney trip in 21 years are two teams, the first of which is a Richmond squad that Patty Shea's troops downed 2-1 a mere six days ago.

The tournament, held this year at Temple University in Philadelphia, will consist of a three-game sprint to the conference hardware. The Minutewomen and fourth-seeded Spiders will lock horns tomorrow at noon, after which West Chester and St. Joseph's, the second and third seeds respectively, will face off. The winners will advance to the title game at 1:00 on Sunday.

"Winning the A-10s is the only way for us to get into the NCAA Tournament," Shea said. "Our only focus is Richmond – that second game isn't guaranteed."

What is guaranteed is a knock-down, drag-out battle with the Spiders, who were nearly eliminated from tournament play after their deflating senior-day loss to the Minutewomen last weekend.

Only a desperate 3-1 victory over Rhode Island the following day kept Richmond in the fold, locking the fourth and final tourney spot in a four-way tie that the Spiders walked away with via tiebreaker.

Not that the Spiders don't have the artillery to make some noise in Philly this weekend. Their proverbial big gun is senior Heather Rice, the program's all-time leading scorer (133 points) who also happens to pace the A-10 in goals (13) and points (31).

Shea is confident that her squad can keep Rice out of the spotlight with solid team defense, something that will become easier with a bigger contribution from co-captain Kerry Ann Iaggassar.

The senior back has been sidelined for much of the season with a knee injury, but has recently worked her way back onto the field and provided an extra shot of stopping power to the UMass defense.

"We match up very well defensively against them," Shea said. "By putting [Iaggassar] in we put a few kinks into our lineup that they haven't really seen. And we have a lot of strong points that they need to deal with too."

One of those strengths is the penalty corner unit, which struggled somewhat earlier in the season adjusting to new regulations regarding the ever-critical stop. After weeks of intensive practice and the implementation of several trick plays, the Maroon and White corner unit is now firing on all cylinders.

Shea has indicated that even in their victory over Richmond, the Minutewomen didn't tip their hand too much in regards to corner trickery.

"We didn't want to show them everything we have in case we see them again," Shea said. "We still have a few tricks up our sleeve."

Should UMass indeed take care of business and advance to the tournament final on Sunday, the prospect of a sixth-straight conference crown is good. The Minutewomen blanked both teams on the other side of the bracket earlier this season; they beat West Chester 2-0 on Oct. 14 and shut out St. Joseph's 1-0 six days later.

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7

Hoop seasons to commence

Lapp-Mass era begins

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The Steve Lappas era begins in earnest on Sunday afternoon when his Massachusetts Minutemen take on the Boston Athletic Basketball Club (BABC) All-Stars in exhibition action at the Mullins Center.

It will be the first chance for Lappas, his coaching staff and all UMass fans to get a glimpse of the 2001-2002 Minutemen.

Coming off a disappointing 15-15 season that saw the Minutemen miss the postseason for just the second time in the past 12 years, Lappas and company will be looking to find some positives in Sunday's performance from which they can build a successful campaign.

"The best value of these exhibition games is to be able to take the film afterwards and watch it with them to show them the mistakes and what we want," Lappas said. "It's one thing to tell them on the court and it's another thing to watch it. I think that's the biggest benefit that you get out of this."

Joining Lappas in making their Mullins Center debuts will be five newcomers, four of whom are expected to contribute from the opening tip. Freshmen Kyle Wilson and Brennan Martin will join sophomores Anthony Anderson, Raheim Lamb and Paco Kotaridis in donning the Maroon and White in game conditions for the first time. Anderson is expected to get the start at point guard with Wilson backing him up off the bench.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks will play the No. 2 slot this year for UMass.

With Wilson and Anderson firmly entrenched as Lappas' one-two punch at the point, senior tri-captain Shannon Crooks will need to get used to a new position. After starting at point guard for the past two seasons and helping find shots for Monty Mack, the second leading scorer in school history, Crooks slides over to the two-guard slot in the UMass starting lineup.

Crooks averaged nine points per game last year and should see that number

Turn to HOOP, page 7

Minutewomen start with NWBL Elite Travel Team

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

As of now, Massachusetts women's basketball coach Joanie O'Brien is not sure which of her players will crack the starting lineup when the regular season opens with Holy Cross on Nov. 16.

Luckily for her, an exhibition game offers the perfect chance to see just where all of her players stand, and O'Brien will open up her 11th season at the helm of the Minutewomen when the National Women's Basketball League USA Elite Travel Team comes to the William D. Mullins Center for a Saturday showdown.

The game and the 2001-2002 season begin with a 12:30 p.m. tip off.

For the Maroon and White, the main objective to the exhibition game will be figuring out how to replace graduated point guard Kathy Coyner. Last year, Coyner led UMass in almost every statistical category, including minutes played per game (36.8), free throws percentage (.821), three pointers made (47), three pointers attempted (151), assists (132) and points per game (12.9). In addition, the 5-foot-6 guard was tied for first on the team with 58 steals.

Luckily for the Minutewomen, however, Coyner is the only player that was lost to graduation last spring, and there are many signs that the team has matured from last year's 12-17 (6-10 Atlantic 10) record.

For one thing, Jen Butler is back, and will power the offense down low. Last season, Butler averaged 12.7 points and 9.6 rebounds per game, and she now has another year of experience under her belt. Undoubtedly, the junior center will once again lead the Maroon and White offense.

A plethora of Minutemen blockades

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

You can't call it seismic, but there definitely was some type of activity in the pressbox of Villanova Stadium last Saturday.

In fact, it tended to the head-shaking, hands-on-cranium placing, looking at your neighbor in bewilderment, Philadelphia sportswriter brand of hustle.

And it was because twice in the second quarter of the Massachusetts football team's game with Villanova last weekend, UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple made the decision to go for it on fourth down.

But the Minutemen came up short both times.

"One of them was from [our] 41-yard line, and you always go for that," said Whipple, who has been known to take early chances. "The other one [was from the 44-yard line] and they had to call timeout because they weren't lined up right.

"But then I said, 'no, I don't want to show them that we're young, [so we went for it]. Early on I was a little more conservative...but that's not the way we play football here. You have to be aggressive."

In the last year's game with the Wildcats, UMass went 5-for-5 on fourth down conversions and it is for that reason the Minutemen wound up on the victorious side of a 38-17 decision at McGuirk Stadium.

But the Maroon and White is now, of course, an entirely different team than last year's 7-4 squad. Redshirt freshman quarterback Matt Guice doesn't have the luxury of handing the ball off to Marcel Shipp for the guaranteed first down.

Shipp, you see, could deal with mediocre blocking.

But present UMass pigskin carriers Omari Howard and Kevin Quinlan are backs that usually look to their fullback to lead the way.

And with the loss of senior Pete Cariello, who suffered a career ending neck injury on an attempted block a few weeks back in UMass' 56-6 loss to Hofstra, the Minutemen blocking scheme is now rather frail.

"We went from a guy who's got three years experience, that has played fullback in our offense, to a guy that's in his second start," said Whipple, who must now start freshman Steve Wysocki at the fullback position. "And that was the difference."

UMass' pair of second stanza errors last weekend fit perfectly with the thematic dictum for this season.

Refuse to win.

It is just one of those years for Minuteman football. Things obviously aren't going well, and bad luck is of the ill-fated essence.

UMass is not a bad football team. It is young offensively, and just lacks that winning attitude needed at this level.

And at 1-6 (1-4 Atlantic 10), it is hard to detain self-confidence.

Saturday at McGuirk, the Minutemen welcome Northeastern (3-4, 2-3 A-10), who they have beaten 15 straight times, to McGuirk for a 1 p.m. gridiron date. Last year, Quinlan rushed for 241 yards against the Huskies in Boston, just under 10 minutes from his hometown of Somerville.

A similar performance this weekend could help UMass to its second win. And there's no question the men in maroon will accept a small miracle.

It's all they really need.

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Doug White's blocked field goal attempts are just some of the problems UMass has experienced this season.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 25 42 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, November 5, 2001

Crystal and Goodman toped Lei this weekend at the box office. Read all about in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

Kyle Wilson dropped 20 on the BABC. Read all about in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Choral Spectrum a hit at the F.A.C

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

Choral Spectrum, an annual festival of various types of choral music, was held yesterday afternoon at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The University of Massachusetts Music Department hosted the event that featured performances by all the University choral ensembles, as well as guest appearances by area choirs.

The University Chorale, Chamber Choir, Women's Choir, Men's Choir, Vocal Jazz Ensemble and Madrigal singers represented UMass in last night's concert. Vivace, a children's choir from Springfield, and the Lexington High School Madrigal Singers joined them in their performance.

Event coordinator and UMass choral music professor Dr. E. Wayne Abercrombie welcomed a near-capacity crowd, which included friends and family of the performers as well as professors from a variety of different departments to the 1000-seat hall.

"Welcome to a celebration of the human voice, and of human voices singing together," he said. "People sing together all over the world, in every country. I think today's program reflects that."

The choirs sang in several world languages including Latin, Italian, English, Spanish and Russian. Selections ranged from African traditional songs to Bach motets.

In his introduction, Abercrombie also spoke of the unique attractions of the choral style in performance.

"When people sing as a group, they not only line up their vocal techniques, they line up their feelings together, and I think that's where we get into the magic of choral singing," Abercrombie said. "We breathe together. We utter things together."

The audience was then invited to participate in the choral experience by joining in as the choirs sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

Though the program is only two years old, Abercrombie said he felt that the concert was beginning to run more smoothly from a technical standpoint.

"We've worked the kinks out," he said.

Abercrombie said that he started the Choral Spectrum tradition because he felt that, "the campus and people in the community needed a place to see all of the choirs and our choirs needed to hear each other."

He said he hoped that the concert would bring choral music to members of the campus community who hadn't experienced it before.

"In this day and age, people don't get to a lot of events so I thought that a sampler was in order," he said.

Abercrombie said that he hoped that the Choral Spectrum would draw new participants to the choral

Turn to CHORAL page 3

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

The University Chorale performing at the Choral Spectrum for a crowd of more than 200 in the Fine Arts Center yesterday afternoon.

Rep. Story address faculty

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Representative Ellen Story brought the State House to the Faculty Senate while Dr. John Walsh of the University of Massachusetts at Worcester addressed the Senate concerning the proposed changes in tenure at the medical school.

"There is a 90 percent chance that we'll have a budget by November 5," Story announced to the Faculty Senate at the University of Massachusetts during their Thursday afternoon meeting. "I'm not going to make many announcements since I don't think the news we will be hearing will be very positive."

Story presented legislative updates and attempted to answer as many of the Senate's questions as possible. Updates, however, were primarily guesses into the future of the University's budget and possible cuts.

"People are panicking right now, especially since revenues came in yesterday," Story said. "I'm not looking forward to the next couple weeks in the State House."

State revenues for October were poor, but Story predicts numbers for November and December will improve due to holiday spending. Budget cuts that were originally proposed to be $600 million now appear to be closer to $800 million.

"This is going to be a tough budget. They are told daily to cut more," Story said in response to concern from the Senate about the library's budget.

Responding to alarm over the Massachusetts Society of Professors contract funding Story said, "From what I understand, it's going to be okay."

Members of the Faculty Senate questioned what, if anything could be done to support certain funding, or proposals. Story responded by saying that professors, second only to nuns, were the most appreciated visitors to the State House. Story pressed faculty members to send personal notes to, or even visit the State House and speak directly to representatives in order to show their support and concern for the University's budget and contracts.

Following Story's address the Senate heard John Walsh's presentation on the proposed changes to tenure for UMass Medical faculty.

Turn to SENATE PROPOSAL page 3

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Striking the colors

Air Force ROTC cadets lower the flag in front of Memorial Hall with the evening sunset in the background.

Scholarships and grants offer help

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

For those students interested in supplementing their educational expenses by receiving grants and scholarships, there are a myriad of opportunities. From undergraduate study-abroad programs to graduate science fellowships, many institutes and programs are eager to hand out funds.

The University of Massachusetts Alumni Association offers a scholarship opportunity for undergraduates. The Association is encouraging UMass sophomores and juniors to apply for the "Leaders in the Making" scholarship.

According to a release from the Alumni Relations Office, the program "was designed to support the academic and career pursuits of promising students from diverse campus populations whose records suggest that they will develop into alumni with admirable leadership qualities upon graduation."

Four scholarships will be awarded in the amount of $2,000 each. In order to apply, students must turn into the Alumni Relations Office a resume, academic transcript, one letter of reference, a description of the student's financial need and an essay.

Applications may be picked up at the Alumni Relations Office between 8:30a.m. and 5p.m. Monday through Friday. The office is located in Memorial Hall. For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317. The deadline for applications is Nov. 9.

The Institute of International Education is now offering funding to undergraduates to study abroad during the 2002-2003 school year. Through the National Security Education Program (NSEP), the David L. Boren Scholarships will be awarded to students interested in working in the international arena.

NSEP has already sent more than 1,580 students to more than 65 countries in the last eight years, and is encouraging more students to travel to places such as Africa, Eastern and Central Europe, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean.

Through the NSEP program, students are able to study for a summer session, a semester, or a full academic year. The program awards start at $2,500 for the summer, and range between $4,000 and $20,000 for semesters and academic years.

In order to be considered for application, students must be a United States citizen attending a U.S. university or college, and must agree "to work in the federal government in a national security position as a priority or, secondarily, to work in the field of higher education in the area of study for which the scholarship was awarded," according to their scholarship announcement.

Additional information and an application are available on the NSEP website. The deadline for the applications is Feb. 15, 2002.

For graduate students seeking to Turn to SCHOLARSHIPS, page 3

HELENE C. STIKKEL/DOD

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld (left) talks with Minister of Defense Sergei Borisovich Ivanov during their meeting at the Ministry of Defense Headquarters in Moscow, Russia, on Aug. 13, 2001.Rumsfeld visited Russia this weekend to discuss Operation Enduring Freedom.

Rumsfeld travels over weekend

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld traveled to several countries over the weekend, meeting with his counterparts and leaders in each.

America's top Defense official visited Russia, Tajikistan Uzbekistan

Rumsfeld met with Russian President Vladimir Putin and Defense Minister Sergei Ivanov on Friday in preparation for talks between U.S. President George W. Bush and Putin.

"Discussions between the Untied States and Russia have been proceeding along and they're heading toward the meetings between President Bush and President Putin in New York, Washington and then Crawford (Texas)," Rumsfeld told reporters on his way to Moscow on Friday. "It's useful we think to have some of the underbrush cleared away and to try help further crystallize a few of the issues that remain."

Rumsfeld explained that there were several issues that the countries needed to discuss.

"There are any number of political, economic and security issues," Rumsfeld said. "It's an important relationship to the United States and to Russia, and the discussions have been going on at various levels in various departments."

Ivanov commented on the role of Russia in the coalition of countries battling terrorism.

"I'm asked by the media virtually every day if Russian troops will participate in the Afghanistan operation or not," Ivanov added. "I say no, day after day, and I want to say that no one of our partners asks us to take such a step."

Rumsfeld's met with Foreign Minister Talbak Nazarov on Saturday to discuss the use of bases in Tajikistan for coalition forces. Both sides say that no agreement has yet been reached, but that the talks are moving forward.

"The discussions are going forward. There will be assessments made as to what might be appropriate, and then those discussions will proceed," Rumsfeld told reporters on Saturday. "All I can say is that we just had a very fine and forthcoming discussion."

Nazarov agreed, but declined to elaborate on the talks.

"We are talking about the assessment by experts of the future cooperation," Nazarov said.

Tajikistan borders Afghanistan, as does Uzbekistan, where Rumsfeld met with leaders on Sunday to secure relations with the former Soviet republic.

Rumsfeld would not comment on whether the visits were aprecursor to operations involving the countries.

"I think trying to interpret visits of government officials to other countries in terms of what that might or might not mean for operations would be a mistake and I would caution people against it," Rumsfeld said. "We allow those countries to characterize the kind of assistance they're providing rather than our trying to characterize it. So I think it's a mistake to think that one can read what we might or might not do from these kinds of trips."

On the Net: The Pentagon: http://www.defenselink.mil

International Briefs

By Arjun Mahalingam and Esther Suh
Collegian Correspondents

United Kingdom – Prime Minister Tony Blair discussed the ongoing war against terrorism and other current events with several European leaders, including French President Jacques Chirac, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder, Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi and Spanish Premier Jose Maria Aznar, in London.

All countries represented at the meeting have offered military support to the United States, if needed. This meeting took place after Schroeder talked to Russian President Vladimir Putin, and Chirac met with U.S. officials in Washington last week.

Blair discussed at the meeting his trip to the Middle East last week, during which he visited Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Syria and the Palestinian Authority to garner Muslim support for the battle against terrorism and to promote the Israeli-Palestinian peace process.

The Prime Minister wanted to get together with the five major military contributors to exchange views on the military campaign," Blair's spokesperson said.

Blair was to meet Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon in London, but it was reported that Sharon cancelled the meeting, citing the prevailing security situation in Israel.

"We could never have solved the Middle East problem in 48 hours," 10 Downing Street's responded to questions regarding the benefits of the trip stated. "Prime Minister Blair said it was the right thing to do."

Blair also met with new Polish Prime Minister Leszhek Miller on Poland's candidacy for membership to the European Union as well as the prevailing political situations. At a press conference, Blair said that Poland's entry into the European Union would be, "an enormous boost of prosperity and living standards and jobs and economic growth for the polish people."

A joint Polish-British contribution on the debate on the future of Europe was also published.

Israel – The death of two Israelis and injuries to more than 35 people in a bus were reported on Sunday in the northern district of Jerusalem as the result of a Palestinian gunman with a M-16.

One gunman, who Israeli Police Chief Mickey Levy said is a member of the terrorist group Islamic Jihad, died when a police officer and a soldier returned fire. Two others were seen running from the scene, but authorities question their involvement.

Three of the 35 injured were reported to be in critical condition.

"We saw a Palestinian terrorist shoot at us from the outside," a passenger reported to Israeli radio. "He didn't stop shooting."

Defense Minister Binyamin Ben Eliezer said that the Israelis were planning to pull out of some of the occupied territories in Palestinian-controlled areas.

The shooting occurred only a few hours after Israeli's decision to pull out from Qalqilya, one of the five territories in the West Bank that Israeli troops occupy due to the recent assassination of a cabinet minister.

Israeli sources reported that the withdrawal plans for the four remaining towns, Ramallah, Tulkarm, Nablus and Jenin, were tentative and did not have a set schedule.

The Israeli government said that this last shooting might interrupt plans to withdraw from the areas.

Israeli helicopters attacked three Palestinian territories before it made announcements of withdrawal plans. Not long after Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon postponed a visit to the United States to Nov. 11 because of security reasons in the area, according to an Israeli spokesman.

Israeli Prime Minister Shim Peres and Palestinian Authority leader Yasser Arafat met in Majorca on Saturday, but they have not made any negotiations.

Nicaragua – Voting for the new president of Nicaragua started on Nov. 4, and results are expected to be in later this week.

However, Hurricane Michelle which recently hit eastern Nicaragua, causing flooding, and may lead to some delay in the election results.

The two main candidates, former left-wing guerrilla leader President Daniel Ortega of the Sandinista National Liberation Front, who toppled dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979, and Businessman Enrique Bolanos of the ruling Liberal Constitutionalist party are in a close race, as suggested by recent opinion polls.

Ortega had once confiscated Bolanos' assets when he was president. Bolanos had resigned from his current position as vice-president, to run for the presidency.

Ortega's campaign is based on "love" and compromise between Nicaraguans, according to his campaign slogan. Bolanos called his opponent's campaign "hollow words."

"Remember the 1980's, when the Sandinistas expropriated private property and carried out press censorship," Bolanos said. Nicaragua's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) has reduced to half of what it was only a decade ago, owing more than six billion U.S. dollars in foreign debts.

According to the International Republican institute, there may be low voter turnout due to the "inability or lack of willingness to ensure the participation of all Nicaraguans in the elections" by the electoral authority. Nicaragua's current population is about 4.5 million.

70-year-old Bolanos has also been criticized for not fighting the corruption in the current cabinet, led by President Arnoldo Aleman.

Ortega's re-election as president could lead to an outflow of capital and investment, various corporations in Nicaragua have reported.

The White House told the press that the United States has also expressed "serious reservations" if Ortega does get re-elected to the presidency. Ortega had formed a socialist government much to the concern of the United States, from 1979 to 1980.

The third candidate in the presidential race, Alberto Saborio of the conservative party has not gained much support in recent opinion polls.

Comoros Islands (Indian Ocean)– President Mohamed Bacar, Anjouan's present ruler said he had successfully stopped rebel soldiers in Mutsamudu from an attempted coup, which started on Friday.

One person was killed as a result of the conflict, but was described as an overall calm situation by soldiers.

"I am in complete control of Anjouan," Bacar said. "Heads will roll. Some people have abused my confidence and taken advantage of the climate of peace and serenity which I have established and have collaborated in this coup."

Bacar is currently looking for Colonel Abeid, who was overthrown in August. Abeid's rebel group tried to take over the island's radio station. The radio station is back under its original status since the upheaval on Saturday.

"Bacar has the situation in hand," one loyalist soldier said. "We're looking for Colonel Abeid."

Since their independence from France in 1975, some islanders are looking for a federation, and others are looking for complete independence for Anjouan. There were numerous coups between the three islands, Grande Comore, Anjouan and Moheli, which make up the Comoros Islands.

Bacar is currently working towards reunifying Anjouan with the central government since its secession in 1997 against Abeid's opposition.

Abeid's close ally, Allaoui Ahmed who heads a militia group, criticized Bacar for favoring a new constitution.

Pakistan – President General Pervez Musharraf's request to temporarily stop bombings was turned down yesterday in Islamabad by U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

Rumsfeld is currently taking a five-nation tour, which also includes Russia, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, and India, to gain further support for the fight against terrorism.

Musharraf told Rumsfeld about his concerns of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan, which starts on Nov. 17. He asked Rumsfeld to discontinue the bombings temporarily, but said he understood that military planning is not always simple.

Rumsfeld said he would take issues such as the month of Ramadan into consideration, but he and President Bush essentially did not want to stall on their objectives, not wanting to give any opportunities for the Taliban to conjure up more plans.

"Our task is to certainly be sensitive to the views in the region, but also to see that we aggressively deal with the terrorist networks that exist," Rumsfeld said. "Beyond that, I would simply say that we do not want to discuss precisely how we are going to handle the period ahead, other than to say that it is important that the terrorists be stopped."

According to Rumsfeld, Pakistan helped the United States breakdown the Taliban's central government. The United States made great advances in their campaign due to the military assistance, such as the air bases provided by the Pakistan government.

Concerns for civilian casualties were brought up in the discourse, and Rumsfeld said that the United States is concerned only with targets that have military significance.

"Never in history has so much care been taken ... by the United States to reduce civilian casualties to the minimum possible," Rumsfeld stated. "And I think this statement is extremely valuable in view of the news that we see every day alleging increasing civilian casualties in Afghanistan."

The campaign is entering its fifth week, and Pakistani leaders are concerned with long-term economic issues as well. Rumsfeld left for India yesterday to close off his tour.

China – Beijing's computer market beat Microsoft's Windows XP official distribution date for the public, which was set for Thursday.

The local press reported that the markets already had their hands on the Chinese version of the program and were being sold in shopping malls.

Some software companies even had named the computer operating system such as "Oriental Dadian XP" and "lingying 315XP" to excite consumers and enhance sales.

According to the Beijing Evening News, the Zhongguancun computer market was selling it for 30 yuan, which is actually $3.60 in U.S. currency. Its actual retail value is $180.

The Business Software Alliance reported that China was second next to Vietnam for software piracy. This illegal activity cost Microsoft $1.2 billion last year.

"The piracy problem is very serious for the local software industry but the Hong Kong Government should be congratulated for their efforts," Mark Phibbs, who works for Microsoft's business development in Asia, said.

Officials said that the pirated copies were only samples and there is possibility that it could damage computers.

Cuba – Hurricane Michelle, the worst storm to hit Cuba since 1944, struck yesterday, leading to the evacuation of more than 600,000 people. Hurricane Michelle is a category 4 hurricane, twisting at 135 mph, entering the Bay of Pigs yesterday afternoon.

According to Cuba's Havana based weather institute, the hurricane would have severe effects in the center and west of the Cuban Islands, and after having flooded Honduras, Nicaragua and Jamaica, it is moving north. "The priority is to save the lives of this revolutionary Cuban family," Astul Castellanos, a Civil Defense spokesman said.

"We're calm, serene and secure," said President Fidel Castro, who had been involved in hurricane operations previously. Castro had left Havana to visit the badly hit Villa Clara Province yesterday.

All international and domestic flights to Cuba have been suspended.

It could cause up to 20 inches of rain upon landfall, according to the U.S. National Hurricane Center in Miami.

The Center of the storm was about 240 miles South-Southeast of the western tip of Cuba. Hurricane Michelle is currently the eighth storm in the Atlantic season, and it's position as of 6:48 p.m. yesterday was 15 miles south of Colon, Cuba.

Electricity on the island nation has been cut off as a safety measure. Cuban Television said, while the government of Honduras had declared a state of emergency since Wednesday.

"If the rains continue, it is going to be a very serious situation for the population," Juan Bendeck, head of the Honduran emergency management authority, told the media. "People need to keep their eyes open, especially if they live near rivers or areas where there could be landslides."

The Hurricane also inundated Jamaica with torrential downpours. A tropical storm watch was also announced in the Cayman Islands, a British territory south of Cuba.

The International Red Cross in Geneva reported that 24,500 volunteers in Cuba were helping in evacuation efforts.

Briefs compiled from ABC, BBC, CNN, Yahoo News, redcross.org, and hurricane.accuweather.com.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1401, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Gincsay-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrum Sports Editor
Brent Siminski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

We're not like every other high-tech company We're hiring

No one told you the hardest part of being an engineer would be finding your first job. Of course, itis still possible to get the high-tech work you want by joining the U.S. Air Force. You can leverage your degree immediately and get hands-on experience with some of the most sophisticated technology on earth. To find out how to get your career off the ground, call 1-800-423-USAF or visit our Web site at airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT
POTTERS
AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

COUSINS MARKET
OPEN
7:30AM - 11PM Weekdays
9AM - 11PM Saturday
9AM - 8PM Sunday
11 E Pleasant Street
(Next to "The Pub")
Tel: 549.3500
Grocery • Dairy • Produce
Beer & Wine • Phone Cards
Large Deli • Tobacco Domestic & International OCMP
Fax Your Lunch Orders for Quick Pick-Up
Fax: 549.3600

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✔ Student Discounts
✔ Professional Bartending Training
✔ Tips on Finding a Top Paying Job
✔ Become a Talented, Socially Conscious Bartender
✔ National Restaurant Association Alcohol Awareness Program
✔ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Call Now, Space is Limited!
Class Begins Fri. Nov. 16th 6:00pm Valentine Hall Amherst College
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

■ senate proposal

continued from page 1

Walsh, the organizer and President of the UMass Worcester Chapter of the American Association of Processors (AAUP) came to the school as a PhD fellow at Harvard when enrollment consisted of twelve students. A scientist and teacher, he has stayed at the medical school because of its dedication to medical education.

"I'm raising an academic problem," said Walsh who views the proposed changes in tenure as a threat to the Worcester campus. Walsh brought the issue to the Amherst campus Faculty Senate out of fear that, "if it plays there [Worcester], then it could play here [Amherst]."

The proposal to modify tenure agreements at the Worcester campus comes after several years of changes at the campus. In 1998 the University of Massachusetts' teaching hospital merged with the local private Memorial Hospital. The merger was an attempt to save money and stop the worsening financial crisis occurring within the University.

"When the merger was done, someone didn't do his homework. We're still losing money, and the problems have simply been made worse," Walsh said. "When the merger occurred we stopped paying attention to clinical faculty and the administration started to pay attention to where the money is."

Walsh explained that the school's financial difficulties are not exclusive to UMass, Worcester. According to Walsh, the development of HMOs, Medicare, and the state's medical insurance has made it increasingly difficult for Hospitals to cover their costs. HMO's, Walsh explained, pay back 92 percent of the costs for their patients' care, while Medicare pays 98 percent, and the state pays a minimal 70 percent. The remaining costs are left to the hospital to cover.

"Hospitals are operating more and more in the red," said Walsh.

Tenure is seen by the administration as one more way to cut costs, Walsh said.

The tenure plan proposed would guarantee full academic salary with the expectation that faculty maintain substantial contributions to the school. If a faculty member does not fulfill expectation for four years, salary reductions may be recommended. The maximum salary reduction implemented would reduce the salary to 75 percent of the average salary at rank for the basic science faculty.

"In this proposal it is only what you've done for me lately that matters," said Walsh, who added that he has seen a "change in mission" at the school.

Another option proposed for current faculty would allow them to elect to ensure their full salary, without productivity review, for twenty-five years. Walsh views this option as a betrayal of younger faculty. Senators agreed.

"That is blatant age discrimination," said Senator Chilton responding to the 25-year option.

"Bottom line is that they proposed a series of salary reductions," Walsh said. "The Vice Chancellor (at Worcester) told me personally that they can no longer make the same tenure commitments to faulty."

According to Walsh the recent addition of several research facilities and the change in direction of the school towards financially rewarding research has overextended the school's financial capabilities.

To support his claim that the school's academic quality and ability to provide for its students has waned Walsh displayed a chart of "Student Flight" since the merger of the school's hospital and Memorial. The graph showed that since 1996 there has been a drastic decline in the number of UMass medical students entering residencies at the joint hospital. In 1996 one third of the graduating class went into UMass medical residencies while in 2001 the number has dropped to 13 percent.

"We've had wonderful growth over the years-through our own efforts and our money," Walsh said. "If all this works the administration may be able to use it as a lever to push through the same kind of cuts and tenure changes across campuses. I think it's a warning to all campuses.

"There is not a single precedence in the academic world for reductions like this, anywhere in the United States," added Walsh. "Truth is gone, public governance is gone, we're being turned into clinical drones, this is the plan for the future."

Helicopter lost in crash

A U.S. helicopter crash-landed in Afghanistan on Nov. 2. U.S. Central Command reports that bad weather contributed to the cause of the crash.

Four crewmembers were injured in the landing, which severely damaged the helicopter. Central Command says that their injuries are not life threatening. The crew of the damaged helicopter was evacuated from the area, Central Command said in a released statement.

General Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, explained that the helicopter was on a rescue mission.

"There were two helicopters that were on a rescue mission to rescue one of our U.S. service members that had been taken ill that was helping out an opposition group, and these helicopters were on their way to rescue that individual," Myers said on NBC's Meet the Press. "Weather was a factor, and we think it was a factor in the fact that this helicopter had to sit down and sit down fairly hard. It injured four people. The other helicopter stayed in the area, and in a couple of hours, we rescued everybody and brought them out."

The helicopter was then destroyed by F-14 Tomcat strike planes from the USS Theodore Roosevelt, an aircraft carrier.

Central Command also announced that an unmanned RQ-1B Predator reconnaissance vehicle is missing and presumed lost while on a support mission in Afghanistan. The mission was part of Operation Enduring Freedom. The loss is also being blamed on "severe weather."

The Predator was observing al-Qaeda and Taliban activities, Central Command reports.

"There is no plan to recover the aircraft, and no sensitive technology will be compromised by not recovering the aircraft," Central Command said in a released statement.

- Ken Campbell

■ scholarships

continued from page 1

boost their financial assets, Oak Ridge Associated Universities (ORAU), a consortium of 85 doctorate-granting universities and colleges, has fellowships available for research.

The first fellowship is offered through the National Science Foundation (NSF). Approximately 900 new Graduate Research Fellowships will be awarded, including awards offered for women in engineering and computer and information science.

The fellowships are three-years long and provide a stipend of $20,500 for 12-month tenures, and a cost-of-education allowance of $10,500 per tenure year. They are awarded to graduate students seeking research-based master's or doctoral degrees in the fields of mathematics, engineering and science. The NSF specifically encourages women, minorities and disabled persons to compete in the program.

The deadline for the NSF scholarships is Nov. 7.

Another branch of ORAU, the Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education, is also offering graduate money for study in Fusion Energy Science.

The Fusion Energy Sciences (FES) Fellowship program is sponsored by the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE) and provides full payment of tuition and fees, an annual stipend of $18,000, and "the opportunity to gain either practical or research experience at a DOE facility," according to its recent news release.

"The FES program is broad-based, fundamental research effort, producing valuable scientific knowledge and practical benefits in the near term and, in cooperation with international partners, making substantial progress toward an economically and environmentally attractive energy option in the long term," the release stated.

In order to apply, students must submit an application and must have taken the Graduate Record Examination (GRE). Those who are eligible to apply include undergraduate seniors, first year graduates who have completed no more than one term by the application deadline, and all applicants must be U.S. citizens or permanent resident aliens.

The deadline is Jan. 28, 2002.

On the Net: NSFP: http://www.iie.org/nsep; ORAU: http://www.orau.org/rel/reflet.htm; FES: http://www.orau.gov/orise/edu/uggrad/fsfcfhome.htm

Alabama helps CDC

By Allison Barnes
Kaleidoscope (U. Alabama-Birmingham)

(U-WIRE) BIRMINGHAM, Ala. – University of Alabama-Birmingham has received a five-year, $4.3 million grant from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to study a new anthrax vaccine.

The study will determine the vaccine's safety and effectiveness in producing desired antibodies to fight anthrax.

Currently the vaccine is administered in six doses over 18 months. After this initial period, the treatment is followed by annual boosters.

"Preliminary studies indicate that it might be possible to reduce the number of doses and to inject the vaccine into the muscle rather than under the skin," said Dr. Mark Mulligan, director of the Alabama Vaccine Research Clinic at UAB and associate director of disease agent clinical research for the Center for Disaster Preparedness at UAB.

"The nation needs an anthrax vaccine with a reduced dosing schedule and easier route of administration," Mulligan said. "It would dramatically reduce the cost and logistical burden of immunizing U.S. military forces and make the goal of total force immunization more attainable."

Populations at increased risk of contracting anthrax will be more likely to use a vaccine that is easier to administer and proves to be just as effective as longer-lasting treatments.

"Complete immunization of all forces potentially at risk, particularly during a wartime situation, would serve as a deterrent against the use of biological weapons," Mulligan said.

The study, set to begin early next year, is a joint effort by the AVRC and CDP.

"Both groups bring a wealth of experience and expertise to this project," Mulligan said. "It is a good marriage that will serve to contribute significantly to the CDC's anthrax vaccine agenda."

UAB is one of five sites nationwide participating in the study.

"This is a very important effort," said Dr. Thomas Terndrup, director of the CDP. "The events of Sept. 11 have shaken our security and will serve as an impetus to projects like this. If the terrorist attacks hadn't happened, we would still be moving forward, but perhaps at a different pace."

■ choral

continued from page 1

program, while giving those who are already members valuable experience.

"Singing is the kind of activity that helps the rest of [a student's] social, emotional and intellectual life," he said. "It's a holistic activity that refreshes you for everything else you have to do.

"I'd like to see more people take advantage of these opportunities [to participate in choral music]," he added. "It's a godsend to have these things available."

"I'm pretty pleased with the availability of groups," said Jennifer Berlin, a junior Geology major who is also a member of Women's Choir. "But sometimes it's hard to get into a practice room. Most of the time the majors are in there."

Most of the larger ensembles draw members from outside as well as inside the Music Department. Within the Music Department, those who participate in the choral programs may have majors in other fields such as composition or instrumental performance. Both undergraduate and graduate students participate in the same choirs.

The audience at yesterday's performance was as diverse as the choirs. Sophomore Biology major Chrissy Boucher and Interior Design major Melissa Demers said they had come to watch a friend perform with the Chorale.

"This is great," Boucher said. "I haven't been to anything like this since before I graduated high school."

Of the Chorale, Boucher said, "I liked their sound because it was a bigger group. The songs were also catchier."

"I liked the fact that they came on singing. It wasn't just walking on like the other groups did," Demers added. "The variety of music they used was also great."

Both said that they would probably come to see more events in the Fine Arts Center after seeing yesterday's concert.

The audience seemed to enthusiastically support every group on the program. During the Men's Choir performance of "Kalinka," a Russian song, the audience clapped in rhythm with the chorus. The performance of the Chamber Choir was applauded with shouts and whistles. Also popular was the performance of "Student Logic" by the combined college groups because of the lyrics: "the more you study the more you know, the more you know the more you forget, the more you forget the less you know, so why study?"

After the selection, Abercrombie turned to joke with the crowd.

"That's student logic," he said. "Not singer's logic."

GERALD LYNG/COLLEGIAN

Day of the Rangers

Peter Squeglia, a U.S. Army Ranger during the Oct. 3, 1993 Battle of Mogadishu, Somaliain, gives a talk on his experiences during the 18-hour operation to recover the crew of a downed helicopter. The battle is the basis for the upcoming movie Black Hawk Down.

The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forums
Presents
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY CAREER NIGHT
DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2001
TIME: 4:00 pm
LOCATION: HERTER 601

AFTER THE BA: SOME OF THE MANY CAREER OPTIONS!

ALUMNI PANELISTS:
EMILY R. GOLD	SENIOR WRITER "BROWN ALUMNI MAGAZINE"
JOHN M. MACUGA	POLICY ANALYST, MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF HIGHER EDUCATION
RICHARD M. SHEA	CEO OF MASCO, A BOSTON-BASED SHARED-SERVICE ORGANIZATION
PETER H. WEIS	ARCHIVIST, NORTHFIELD MT. HERMON SCHOOL
MARGARET A. WOOVIS	EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, MONTACHUSETT HOME CARE CORPORATION
SUSAN HAMMOND	HUMANITIES & FINE ARTS CAREER NETWORK DIRECTOR, CAREER EDUCATION
GERALD McFARLAND	MODERATOR, DIRECTOR OF UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES

SPONSORED BY: CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

If you would like to have dinner afterward with the panelists, reserve a place by phoning 545-6757.

A limited number of places are still available.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Pundits be damned

This war takes time

To anyone suggesting that the United States war in Afghanistan is simply a military operation, we say, look again. Suffering from the fallout of the horrific September 11 attacks, the United States has acted with a swift and mindful vengeance towards its new opposition: the Afghani Taliban, and Osama bin Laden's al-Qaida.

Both liberals and conservatives have bemoaned our current effort. Liberals want faster results, desperate themselves to avoid participation in another disastrous Vietnam. Conservatives have been more blatant in their calls for revenge and destruction of all that is our opposition. Both sides have been displeased at the amount of time our operations are taking.

"Can't we just finish this now?" they seem to ask.

While the United States war capability is immense, the machinations of this particular war grind ever so slowly because we want to accomplish far more than the obvious victory over our opposition. While the defeat of the Taliban, and its apparent ally in al-Qaida, is to be absolute, the United States is taking a far more holistic approach to this fight. Ideally, the Taliban will be forever vanquished; al-Qaida's existence forever quashed. Some might say that writing in such finalities is Machiavellian in nature, we would only agree.

To any opposition that uses the innocent as weapons, there can be no mercy.

No mercy today means far different things than it did in wars past. This isn't just the dissolution of our opposition, it is the elimination of its support from around the world.

No more guns.
No more money.
No more soldiers.
No more.

The wheels of such a machine must turn slowly and although we could simply shoot and bomb our way through this war to achieve an end-result similar to that of the World Wars, the United States seeks this deeper solution because wars fought in traditional terms have rarely "ended" the problem, whatever the issue might be.

Already, America and its allies have come together, not in some handholding festival of unity, but in a hard-line position on such terrorism and its effects. There has been some slight thaw in relations between countries formerly thought to be off-limits (in Cuba and Iran) and other terrorist organizations are similarly laying down arms (the IRA in Northern Ireland). Further, despite bin Laden's consistent bleating that Islamic nations must rise up against the "Jews and the Christians" he has received little in the way of support.

Just yesterday, the Arab League, which includes staunch U.S. critics in Egypt and Syria, declared that bin Laden spoke not for Islam or for them, instead saying he spoke only for himself and his own personal crusade.

If such a statement isn't a sign that the war is being won, we certainly don't know what is. President Bush is right to say that this fight will "take time" and those on either side of the fence expecting something faster must be more subtle in their interpretation of what speed, in this case anyway, is.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Interested in writing for Ed/Op? Stop by the Collegian offices and speak to Matt or Dan, or email us at collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

Into the Bonfire Night: looking into relevace of festivals in times of trouble

"Remember, remember the fifth of November,
Gunpowder reason and plot.
We see no reason
Why gunpowder treason
Should ever be forgot!"

CLARE CHADBURN

No, I didn't get the date wrong, and no, this isn't an attempt to join in with the Sept. 11 anti-terrorism propaganda. It is, in fact, the song that every British school child, including myself, was taught to recite annually on Nov. 5. Tonight is known as "Bonfire Night" in England. And yes, to me this does feel quite inappropriate.

For those of you already familiar with our national ritual, please put up with me while I get a little historical. Every year on Bonfire Night, Brits recall the attempt of one man in 1609, to blow up the Houses of Parliament. He was aiming for the Government, the King, and perhaps even the Prince of Wales if he happened to be home. This man was Guy Fawkes, a Catholic in a country dominated by a Protestant ruling class. After the death of Queen Elizabeth I, Guy Fawkes was angry that King James I was no more tolerant of the Catholic religion than his predecessor had been. He believed that violence was the only way he could protest his dissent so he formed an extremist group of conspirators and plotted his terrorist activities.

The conspirators got their hands on 36 barrels of gunpowder and planted them underneath the Parliament building. As they worked away at the plan, it began to dawn on some of them that innocent people could be killed by their act. It took a while, but some of them had second thoughts about the whole idea. They wrote secret letters advising their friends to stay away from the House on Nov. 5. One of the letters happened to get intercepted by the King's men. They took the appropriate action and stormed down to the basement of Parliament.

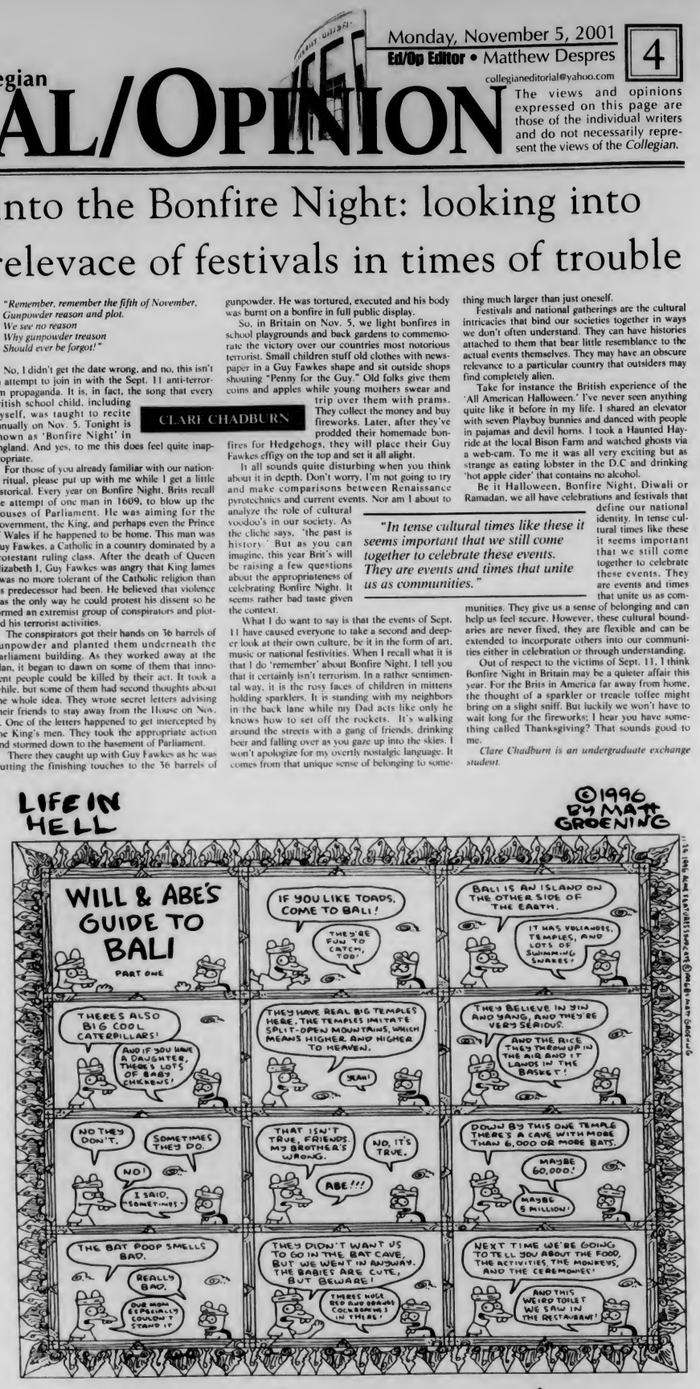
There they caught up with Guy Fawkes as he was putting the finishing touches to the 36 barrels of gunpowder. He was tortured, executed and his body was burnt on a bonfire in full public display.

So, in Britain on Nov. 5, we light bonfires in school playgrounds and back gardens to commemorate the victory over our countries most notorious terrorist. Small children stuff old clothes with newspaper in a Guy Fawkes shape and sit outside shops shouting "Penny for the Guy." Old folks give them coins and apples while young mothers swear and trip over them with prams. They collect the money and buy fireworks. Later, after they've prodded their homemade bonfires for Hedgehogs, they will place their Guy Fawkes effigy on the top and set it all alight.

It all sounds quite disturbing when you think about it in depth. Don't worry, I'm not going to try and make comparisons between Renaissance pyrotechnics and current events. Nor am I about to analyze the role of cultural voodoo's in our society. As the cliche says, "the past is history." But as you can imagine, this year Brit's will be raising a few questions about the appropriateness of celebrating Bonfire Night. It seems rather bad taste given the context.

"In tense cultural times like these it seems important that we still come together to celebrate these events. They are events and times that unite us as communities."

What I do want to say is that the events of Sept. 11 have caused everyone to take a second and deeper look at their own culture, be it in the form of art, music or national festivities. When I recall what it is that I do 'remember' about Bonfire Night, I tell you that it certainly isn't terrorism. In a rather sentimental way, it is the rosy faces of children in mittens holding sparklers. It is standing with my neighbors in the back lane while my Dad acts like only he knows how to set off the rockets. It's walking around the streets with a gang of friends, drinking beer and falling over as you gaze up into the skies. I won't apologize for my overtly nostalgic language. It comes from that unique sense of belonging to something much larger than just oneself.



Festivals and national gatherings are the cultural intricacies that bind our societies together in ways we don't often understand. They can have histories attached to them that bear little resemblance to the actual events themselves. They may have an obscure relevance to a particular country that outsiders may find completely alien.

Take for instance the British experience of the 'All American Halloween.' I've never seen anything quite like it before in my life. I shared an elevator with seven Playboy bunnies and danced with people in pajamas and devil horns. I took a Haunted Hayride at the local Bison Farm and watched ghosts via a web-cam. To me it was all very exciting but as strange as eating lobster in the D.C and drinking "hot apple cider" that contains no alcohol.

Be it Halloween, Bonfire Night, Diwali or Ramadan, we all have celebrations and festivals that define our national identity. In tense cultural times like these it seems important that we still come together to celebrate these events. They are events and times that unite us as communities. They give us a sense of belonging and can help us feel secure. However, these cultural boundaries are never fixed, they are flexible and can be extended to incorporate others into our communities either in celebration or through understanding.

Out of respect to the victims of Sept. 11, I think Bonfire Night in Britain may be a quieter affair this year. For the Brits in America far away from home, the thought of a sparkler or treacle toffee might bring on a slight sniff. But luckily we won't have to wait long for the fireworks; I hear you have something called Thanksgiving? That sounds good to me.

Clare Chadburn is an undergraduate exchange student.

The pleasure and (mostly) pain of summer employment

BRIAN LOHNES

I spent my summer screaming into a microphone at a racetrack. A couple of racetracks actually. Four days a week I would drive up to New Hampshire and for hours, extol my opinions on every car that rolled by. Hell, I actually sounded like I knew what I was talking about. Of all the weirdo jobs in the world I have held, I never actually thought that I would be offered the opportunity to make a living as a "professional" drag racing announcer. My job history is long and diverse, as I suppose many of yours are. I have done everything from working at a driving range to working as a carpet cleaner.

Driving Range laborer – I got conned into this job from my friend who was already working at this place. It paid "good." Five bucks an hour. We raked the rocks out of dirt with steel rakes for eight hours a day. Prisoners do more fulfilling work. At least they break the rocks! At night we would be in charge of collecting the balls with the golf cart, the ball collector and by hand. We were also baby-sitting Kenny, the 8 year-old pain in the ass son of the owner. After convincing him I was a ninja ilook at my picture and think ninja) he was cool with us.

Carpet Cleaner – I got work at a friend of my dad's carpet cleaning business. At first I just worked in the shop and cleaned the rugs that people brought in themselves. Problem No. 1: knowing that when you arrive at work you will be dealing with animal urine and possibly worse. Problem No. 2: it was the world's most boring job. I got the chance to do an "outside" job one night and went to a YMCA to clean the rugs with another guy. Turns out this YMCA used to hold people who are to stand trial in the nearby court the next day and we were met by an armed guard. I started cleaning one hallway and was met by screams behind the door of, "I'm gonna cut your throat!" and "You are gonna die unless you shut that thing off." Charming.

Camp Counselor – First off, I love kids. Cooked at 350 degrees for three hours. No, no, just kidding. I do really like kids. That's why I decided to become a camp counselor one summer and help out kids with tough backgrounds. Bad move. These kids were the worst. One 10-year-old boy actually got booted from camp because he put a stick between his legs, stuck it in a girl's face and began saying, "You like that? You want some of that?" He was 10.

Another 12-year-old got into a fight with a kid he knew couldn't swim, so he pushed him off the dock and tried to hold him under water. Oh, the kiddies. Yeah, I was outta there real quick.

"At first I just worked in the shop and cleaned the rugs that people brought in themselves. Problem No. 1: knowing that when you arrive at work you will be dealing with animal urine and possibly worse."

Landscaper – I know that at least half of the males on this campus have worked landscaping in the summer at some point in their lives. The exception being that you probably worked for someone who paid you. I worked for a guy that bounced my paychecks, which is why I stopped working for him. We cruised around in a beat up Chevy Blazer, towing a four-wheeled trailer...with three wheels. This guy was a champ, and may I add a UMass graduate. Best part of the story? About three quarters of the way through the summer and help out kids with tough backgrounds. Bad move. These kids were the worst. One 10-year-old boy actually got booted from camp the lawnmower, the color of my shirt, the sound of my truck, and this, the best one of all: after complaining about how hot it was outside, a guy walked into the air conditioned community room and instantly complained how cold it was. Makes me afraid to get old!

Janitor – By far the worst job I ever held. The pay was about six bucks an hour, and I worked for a guy who was 5-foot-7, weighed 300 pounds and hated the world. I was a janitor at the Junior High School I attended. Thankfully it was after classes were out for the summer, so I didn't have to deal with that issue, but I did have to deal with my boss. We had to hand clean every single seat and desk in the school. About 400 desks. Do you have any conception of how much gum that is? Way too damn much. Literally buckets of chewed gum were scraped off those desks. Not fun. Only good part of the job? The big fatty-fatso who was our boss had a trick knee, so occasionally you would be walking behind him and it would give out. Blamo! He's on the floor looking like a white haired bowling ball with legs.

That's a really small glimpse of my job history. It is kind of weird how you remember all the jobs you have held. They don't hold much importance to the operation of the world, but they sure were important to me when I was working them. Funny thing is, half of them didn't seem that bad when I was at them. One job I never held but desperately wanted? Public restroom cleaner. Now that is rewarding work.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

Maintenance Man – The only summer job that I willingly returned to. I worked as a maintenance man at an apartment complex for elderly and disabled people. This wasn't a nursing home; all of these people were living independently. Talk about stories. People complained about the heat, the sound of Monsters, Inc. witty, exciting, and endearing

COURTESY PIXAR
Mike (one eye) and Sully (hairy) in Disney/Pixar's Monsters, Inc.

COURTESY PIXAR
Monsters, Inc. bridges the gap between monsters and corporations.

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

MONSTERS, INC.
With the Voices of John Goodman, Billy Crystal and Steve Buscemi
Directed by Peter Docter
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

You can't help but have high expectations when going in to see Monsters, Inc., the latest movie by Pixar Animation Studios (a subsidary of Disney). Here is a brief history to prove that point.

Their first film was the groundbreaking Toy Story, the first fully computer-animated feature ever made. It went on to become one of Disney's crowning achievements, soon placing itself among the top 50 highest-grossing movies of all time, and winning a special place in the hearts of children and, rare for the time, adults too. Pixar's follow-up was the delightful A Bug's Life, which may not have been as enchanting as its predecessor, but was by no means undeserving of the huge success that came with it. Last year, Pixar released Toy Story 2, besting the original's financial intake, as well as having many audiences and critics alike praising it as being better than the first.

Therefore, Monsters, Inc. has a lot to live up to.

The movie victoriously conquers with its script: a witty, exciting and endearing tale about the monsters in the closet. It seems that they are all employees of Monsters, Inc., a company who bottles the screams of the children they spook in order to provide power to their city of Monstropolis. Pixar, as usual, has recruited a group of superb actors to bring life to the characters by giving them voice. John Goodman is the furry, blue-and-purple-coated behemoth James P. "Sully" Sullivan, a model employee of Monsters, Inc., having earned more scares than anyone else. His partner in crime is the excitable, one-eyed Mike Wazowski, played by Billy Crystal. Crystal heavily lays on the affected melodrama reminiscent of Nathan Lane as Timon in The Lion King and Robin Williams' Genie in Aladdin. Both Goodman and Crystal nail the comedic roles, creating impeccable buddy chemistry.

Tiny tykes will find comfort that when the monsters aren't on the clock, they are a loveable bunch of guys...errr, things, rather...and are far from frightening, appearing more like cuddly dolls than anything else. "We scare because we care," says the company's tagline, but it usually turns out that the monsters are more frightened of the kids than the kids are of them. As far as they know, humans are toxic and deadly, and can never be touched. In a recurring joke, a sock accidentally sticks to a monster, and the facility goes into extreme lock-down, including shaving and defousing the said monster, as though a nuclear war just began.

This is small potatoes, however, because the story is mostly about a little girl who sneaks into the monster world, and whom Mike and Sully must keep secret in order to return her home. The movie's humor scores big with younger kids while at the same time being hip enough to register laughs with an older crowd. Mike at one point puts in one big contact lens for his sole orb, while in another scene does a stand-up routine whose humor might go over kids' heads but is right on target with adults' sensibilities. In this respect, Monsters, Inc. is similar to last summer's computer-animated blockbuster Shrek (released by rival studio PDI), but caters more towards the crowd under five feet tall. Falling right there in the middle are jokes relating to the Toy Story movies and A Bug's Life (but I'll let you discover those gems on your own).

The movie's message about friendship is sweet, too, without being overly schmaltzy. Mike and Sully inadvertently wind up in the Alps in one scene towards the movie's end, and their friendship is put to the test, resulting in a poignant conclusion. They also learn that humans aren't poisonous, developing an adorable relationship with the little girl, who they nickname "Boo."

The deft animation is complete eye candy to the viewer, already showing the progress the company has made since their big debut just six years ago. All the different forms of beings are attention-getting, from the weasel-looking villain Russell (voiced by indie-film king Steve Buscemi, also currently appearing in Domestic Disturbance) to the multi-eyed, octopus company president (Oscar-winner James Coburn) and Mike's girlfriend with the Medusa-like snake hair (ditzy Jennifer Tilly). It is obvious that a great amount of skill has been cultivated to invent the smorgasbord of creatures. Another visual wonder includes the hair on Boo's head and Sully's furry body, which could be mistaken for real if you didn't know any better. The artistic effect of Monsters, Inc. raises the bar of computer-animation to a dazzling and exhilarating new level.

Other aesthetic ingredients are at the top of their game. Randy Newman's score is lighthearted and bouncy, especially the movie's catchy theme song "If I Didn't Have You." It further proves his remarkable talent, which will most likely give him another Oscar nomination (and a more than well-deserved win after all these years). The direction by Peter Docter is fast paced, never boring anyone. The climax of the movie finds Sully, Mike and Boo chasing Russell through an immense maze of closet doorways, and it captures the fine-tuned components all at once – the imaginative script, the fabulous vocal acting, the gifted music and artwork, plus the honed direction.

Pixar has done it again with Monsters, Inc., a movie that kids love and parents can enjoy without feeling ashamed. It will knock your socks off – just make sure those socks don't end up on a monster, or you know what will happen.

One-eyed Monsters kick Jet Li's butt

The biggest movie thus far this year is Shrek, a computer animated film that doesn't feature a single living, breathing human. What might be the second biggest movie this year? If opening days predict financial outcomes at all, it might be Monsters Inc., a film that doesn't feature a single human actor.

Romping and stomping its competition with a $65.5 million haul, Monsters Inc. beat its next closest competitor, Jet Li's The One, by more than $40 million. The movie's opening earned almost as much as Bandits, the supposedly hilarious buddy comedy starring Bruce Willis and Billy Bob Thornton, cost to make. Thus, it is again proven that dorky computer animators and their created characters dominate their more human competition.

Needless to say, the success of Monsters Inc. shouldn't trick anybody into believing that Hollywood has again endorsed films that might be described as "good" or "entertaining" or "worthwhile."

Witness Li's The One is a creatively titled film that is actually a Matrix rip-off minus the leather. Although it stole $20 million in total receipts, The One likely earned significant coin from moviegoers who had been turned away from sold-out Monsters performances.

John "starred in Battlefield Earth and lived to talk about it professionally" Travolta's Domestic Disturbance earned $14.5 million from suckers. Clearly not turned away from Monsters, Disturbance's audience believed that Swordfish was one 'heck of a ride.' Apparently not the sequel to The General's Daughter, which also blew, Travolta has continued his recent policy of starring in anything at all.

K-Pax came in fourth with $10.7 million. Starring Kevin Spacey and Jeff Bridges, K-Pax is a buddy-alien film, proving that Hollywood loves the buddy concept. Apes, The Terminator. A possibly schizophrenic alien. All make good buddies as long as the script is written in a somewhat legible English on a napkin. Kevin Spacey's career continues its freefall after his brief cup of coffee with legitimate acting status. (Note to reader: starring in many, many, many bad films does not eventually equal good.)

At the movies
with Sam Wilkinson

Thirteen Ghosts came in fifth place with $8 million. It starred Antonio Scarpaci from "Wings" as one of the film's main heroes and it didn't bank more than that!?! Will wonders never cease?

If the top was tough, the bottom was worse.

-Riding in Cars with Boys made $4.5 million, features Drew Barrymore driving a Subaru lusty that's a loaner with a boy. At least the movie was a total loaner.

-From Hell raked in $3.7 million, proving that Johnny Depp apparently can't carry a movie past a big opening weekend. At least the "21 Jump Street" star has a wispy goatee to comfort him.

-Training Day sputtered to $3.2 million. Ethan Hawke fails to bring them out, and Denzel clearly doesn't care. At least it earned a little bit of change before totally falling off.

-Bandits sucked to $3 million.

-Serendipity crawled to $2.5 million. John Cusack: he's cute, he's adorable, he's a halfway decent actor, and he's never in anything worth watching.

Meanwhile, Corky Romano disappeared from the top-ten list and

Turn to MOVIES, page 6

John Travolta needs an update on those Swordfish video sales, stat.

Disturbance plays it safe

By Arjun Mahalingam
Collegian Correspondent

DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE
Directed by Harold Becker
Starring John Travolta, Vince Vaughn and Matthew O'Leary
Playing at CineMark 12 in Hadley

Domestic Disturbance is a classic case of a divorced dad and his son taking on his ex-wife's new husband. Save for its predictability and some clear lapses in the script, it is worth a watch.

John Travolta plays Frank Morrison, a wooden boat-builder who owns a wilting business. Frank's ex-wife Susan (Teri Polo of Meet the Parents fame) goes on to marry Rick Barnes (Vince Vaughn), a wealthy philanthropist, to the displeasure of Frank and his son, 12 year old Danny (Matthew O'Leary), who apparently tends to lie and land in trouble a lot. According to Frank, Danny gets into trouble intentionally in order to bring his true parents back together. The bond that Frank had developed with his son is warm and genuine and could be seen radiantly on screen.

The evident mutual hatred between Rick and Danny is seen clearly. We are transported to Rick and Susan's wedding ceremony, which has an unlikely guest in the form of Ray Coleman (Steve Buscemi). Ray's arrival worries Rick to the extent that he chokes a bit before the big 'I Do' part, another typically theatrical scene. Frank meanwhile notices Rick's apprehension on seeing Ray and he turns increasingly suspicious with each conversation with Ray. Neither Rick's shady background nor his relation with Ray is explicitly explained.

Danny's hatred for his stepfather, meanwhile, keeps increasing, amplified by the fact that his mom is pregnant with Rick's child. He then decided to hide in Rick's car when he leaves for 'business' out of town late in the night. What follows is a bizarre few scenes in which Rick picks up Ray from the 'Shady Tree Motel' and incinerates him. Danny, meanwhile, is the only witness to what otherwise would have been a perfect murder.

He runs to Frank's place and explains what he had seen to him. Amazingly, the police find no shred of evidence that a body was burnt. There are many such lapses in this movie.

As usual, Frank believes his son's words whereas everyone including Susan does not. Like this guy sitting behind me while watching the movie said: "Travolta's a wise ass!"

Troubled by the fact that Danny saw him murder Ray, Rick then threatens him that Frank would be no more if Danny were to do anything that would hurt his mom's feelings, referring to the custody case between Frank and Susan. Danny feels a sense of hopelessness when he is forced to lie in court about what he had seen that night, and has to decide to stay with his mom and Rick. Frank meanwhile goes about searching for evidence pertaining to Rick Barnes and Ray Coleman's shady past. His findings prove his son's words right, but Rick arrives just in time to find out his past has been uncovered.

In a series of Hollywood style events, Rick then knocks out Frank and burns down his boathouse, even setting fire to himself while doing so. One well-crafted scene, this!

Susan then accidentally sees Rick bandaging his burns, after hearing that Frank's boathouse was on fire, and thus tries to flee with her son, after figuring out what had occurred.

The big climax occurs after several 'fight' scenes when Frank somehow enters at the right place at the right time and goes after Rick. What happens next is anybody's guess.

It's a popcorn movie, with a good soundtrack, so if any of you feel like taking a break from the usual spurt of midterms, you could give it a shot!

Choral Spectrum entertains students and professionals alike

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The choirs at yesterday's Choral Spectrum concert were performing a much more important service than simply singing – they were bringing music and live concert music at that, to a college audience that rarely makes it over to the Concert Hall.

And not only did they present music, but they presented it from a widely diverse group of cultures, from Japan to America, from Africa to Germany, and in as many languages as there were selections, or so it seemed. At a University that trumpets itself as the home of social diversity, this event should not be overlooked as a major contribution to that claim.

Also diverse were the members of the choirs: they hailed Middle schools, high schools, and colleges; from graduate and undergraduate fields of study; and from fields of study that ranged from the most single-minded and dedicated music majors to the most uncertain undeclared major. The very sight of such cooperation in music by such different groups of people was heartening to see.

The ensembles did not disappoint musically, either. Technical musical expertise grew more and more impressive as it descended through age groups – Vivace was as professional, polished and easy on the ears as any of the semi-professional university groups. Their bright red shirts were a beautiful visual touch, as were the flashing lights they used during their rendition of "Hotaru Koi," a Japanese folk song about fireflies.

The Lexington High School Madrigal Singers made their share of jaws drop, as well. Their short, light pieces were performed with admirable dexterity and balance for such a comparatively large madrigal group (18 singers all told). They proved as confident and capable on the stage as their university counterparts, performing a capella and undirected with grace and ease.

The University Madrigal singers were still there to show the younger ones how it's done, however. They were a small group, but they were airtight and polished. They proved capable of making even yesterday's boisterous audience fall still and silent, as they did during their performance of "Ave Verum Corpus."

Women's Choir added interest to their program with the use of cello, harpsichord, oboe and hand-held percussion during their selections. Their program was also well varied, pairing Bach with a contemporary Spanish composer. As usual, their blend of treble voices was immaculate and angelic, a welcome addition to the mixed-choir concert.

Chorale appeared to be the biggest draw to the concert. Several audience members shouted and waved to friends as they walked on, which, while exasperating to those better versed in concert etiquette, was a testament to the pure public relations power of the group, with its massive numbers and openness to members from all fields of study. Though the voices of its 85 members could have proved too bulky for even the most skilled of conductors to balance well, their sound was moderate and tasteful while remaining powerful.

The Vocal Jazz Ensemble gave a modern touch to the concert, with their "crunchier" dissonant harmonies, scat singing and vocal percussion. They were, like women's choir, a welcome variance in the mostly traditional performances also sharing the program, and an incredibly entertaining one at that.

We've been waiting a long time to see a Men's Choir really take off here at UMass, and it looks as though it finally happened at yesterday's concert. The best thing about the Men's choir performance was the energy and bombast they brought to old favorites like "Vive l'Amour." They proved themselves capable of emotional range, as well, with the quiet, poignant "Tenting Tonight." Michael Tarselli's energetic, engaging solo during the rousing "Kalinka" was one of the highlights of the concert.

The Chamber Choir has a long and prestigious history, and as such, they have an even bigger burden of expectation to support than most of the other groups. While not in quite as polished a form as they have been in recent semesters, particularly with the selection from the Bach motet, the choir still wowed the audience with "Jubilant Song." Julia Steinbok did a beautiful job with her solo, and during the intricate tintinnabuli section of the piece, Chamber Choir was its old self again.

All of the excellent performances were drawn together in a powerful finale of college songs and a selection from Leonard Bernstein's quirky Mass. While enjoyable, the finale incorporated some of the same pieces as it has in past years; it would have been nice to see the power of over two hundred singers put to the test of a new piece. But there's always next year – and after this year, the UMass audience is looking forward to it.

Dr. E. Wayne Abercrombie takes a bow with conductor Larry Fisher.

Trust and betrayal courtesy of Moliere

COURTESY JULIE BURRELL

From left to right: Sarah Agnew as Mariane, Vincent Gracieux as Orgon, and Barbra Berlovitz as Dorine.

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Staff

Don't let its age or its venerable status fool you – Tartuffe is not boring. The traveling company Theatre de la Jeune Lune breathed life into Moliere's comedy at the Fine Arts Center on Thursday.

The scene is the Paris house of Orgon, a wealthy man. His family is discussing the impact of his father's newest house guest, fastest friend and the bane of their collective existence. Only the falsely pious grandmother, played hilariously by Charles Schuminski, believes that Tartuffe is good for the family. Orgon has become so entranced with Tartuffe, whom he believes to be an pious as a saint, that he invited him into his home and provides for all of his wants and needs. He is convinced that by bringing him into the family, Tartuffe will save all of their souls by his Puritanical and, as it turns out, tyrannical behavior.

Orgon returns from a trip, silencing the talk of Tartuffe. As the family retreats to their respective parts of the house, Orgon inquires after his guest, not caring that his wife has been ill or his children discontent. It is clear that what the family has been saying is true: Tartuffe holds complete sway over the patriarch of the house. But the real manifestation of his power comes when Orgon orders his daughter Mariane to marry Tartuffe and forsake her fiancé and true love, Valere.

Despite every effort of the family, especially from the feisty maid Dorine, Orgon becomes increasingly convinced of Tartuffe's piety. He kicks his son out when he speaks ill of his guest, and makes Tartuffe sole heir of his wealth and property. It is only after Orgon, spying underneath a table, sees the lascivious Tartuffe making overtures to his wife that he believes his family.

But by then it is too late. Orgon expels his former friend and confidant, and apologizes to his family, accepting back his son. Tartuffe, though, technically owns the house. Orgon and his family are told that, now destitute, they will have to leave the following morning. And more than that, Tartuffe owns documents that he is using to blackmail Orgon, who will now have to flee the country.

Being a proper comedy, though, it cannot possibly end here. Moliere uses a deus ex machina of sorts for the resolution. As Tartuffe returns, ordering the family out of his house, an officer of the King informs him that he is being arrested for deception and that Orgon is forgiven and his riches restored.

While the ending isn't completely satisfactory, it is at least happy. Moliere might seem like a sycophant, but he depended on the good graces of Louis XIV to shield him from the inevitable backlash of the religious right wing. If the ending seems watered down to our modern palate, we must remember that although he may be kowtowing to the King, Moliere was no coward. This play is a biting criticism of the falsely pious whom he considers to be hypocrites. It was banned after its initial reception in 1664, and it wasn't published for five years, after religious tensions in France had slightly cooled.

Tartuffe's meaning doesn't rest entirely in the past, even though it is so obviously embroiled in the politics of 17th century France. To be relevant, it must touch a contemporary audience.

Theatre de la Jeune Lune, who takes its name from a Bertolt Brecht poem, specializes in bringing the new to the old. Their name translated is Theatre of the New Moon. The company was originally formed in France, and for a while traveled back and forth between France and the U.S. They are now settled in Minneapolis, but still take their performances on the road.

The script is in verse, shifting in and out of rhyme, which seemed an easy and natural transition for the company. Their open and engaging style of acting charmed from the opening scene, which was done entirely by candlelight.

These are artists who do not shy away from big emotions. These can result in humor, as in the scene between the strikingly similar Valere and Mariane. They act like impetuous children, perfect behavior for youth in love, by being exceedingly tender, embarrassed by their emotion, and angrily jealous at the drop of a hat. But this big emotion can also get them into trouble by deteriorating into melodrama. Thankfully, this happens only once, after the play's dark turn exposes Tartuffe as a fraud. The woe-is-me business lasts only a moment, and the actors pick right back up where they left off.

The company is not afraid of being physical. Their set is beautiful, but imposing, and they fill it up as if their ranks were far greater than they are. Some of the best physicality comes in Dorine's (played by Barbra Berlovitz) boisterous arguments with both Marine and Orgon. Berlovitz brilliantly executed Dorine's witty comments and wordplay, and combined it with her own adept physical humor. She often carried the humor of the play on her back, and made it seem like an easy task.

Steven Epp was a powerful Tartuffe, both repulsive and charming. His passion in all things, in false religious fervor, or in desiring Orgon's wife, commanded rapt attention.

Director Dominique Serrand occasionally forced too much symbolism. For instance, Tartuffe is constantly compared to Jesus (he stands in the pose of the crucifixion). Serrand goes too far, though, when a crown of thorns and a large wooden cross are introduced as props. The direction in all other things, though, lets the actors and the script work in wonderful harmony.

Taken away from its original context, Tartuffe still works. If religious hypocrisy doesn't exactly apply to our contemporary situation, then Moliere's sense of human nature and feeling has survived intact. The very human willingness to trust someone, and the betrayal of that trust are powerful themes that the company of Theatre de la Jeune Lune has mastered. They have also sought and found the humor in Moliere's comedy. To the audience's delight, they have certainly made the old new.

■ movies

continued from page 5

nobody noticed. Chris Kattan didn't even notice. If there has ever been a legitimate argument for capital punishment, Kattan is it.

On the art house circuit, a wacky French romantic-comedy Amlee made $140,000 from three theaters. Leon can't get a huge American release without being chopped, but we have to preserve more romantic-comedies? Good call Hollywood.

Next week sees David Mamet's The Heist (which might be good!) and Shallow Hal, which might be the most insulting concept for a movie ever. Why is it that Hollywood can never totally understand a critique of its practices? Instead of realizing that the glut of waif-thin actresses is problematic, it instead releases a movie mocking a man who can't 'see' fat women and thus loves them? Thank you Hollywood for continuing to condescend to the audience.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian staff member.

Oooohh it's a lady!!! She writes for arts.

It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available
DUBLIN $95 LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121 MILAN $132
FARES ARE ONE WAY, ROUND TRIP FARES ALSO AVAILABLE
Tickets are subject to availability and must be paid in full at time of booking. Tickets are non-refundable. Taxes and fees are extra. Additional restrictions and blackout dates apply. ISIC, ITIC, and IYTC card required. Valid for departure through March 2002. Fares are not all shown.
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
council travel
1-800-2COUNCIL www.counciltravel.com
Call 24 hrs. 8am Tues. Nov. 6 - 12am Fri. Nov. 9 & 10am - 7pm Sat. Nov. 10

UVC-TV 19
General Body Meeting
• Learn about our new lighting kit and wireless microphones.
• See a short stop animation feature.
• New members and curious are welcome.
Monday, November 5th, 7 PM
Located next to the Hatch in the Student Union

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
584 4112 • 515 1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

"Gang green" reigns supreme

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

The core of the Massachusetts rookie class had its collective training wheels taken off and its resolve tested in a weekend split of Hockey East games. The early returns are positive, as freshmen accounted for two-thirds of the six UMass goals, while green netminder Tim Warner had the best game of his young career.

A pair of Tim's (Warner and Vitek) flashed their bright potential in the faces of the Schneider Arena crowd, as the Minutemen fell to Providence in a hotly contested matchup.

Warner was nothing if not solid in his first start since a 7-1 pasting at the hands of Colorado College. The promising rook made 33 saves on 36 shots, including a plethora of stops that bordered on brilliant.

His only real gaffe of the night came on the game winner when he kicked out a shot that could have been covered, leading to a score by PC forward Jon DiSalvatore.

Warner atoned for his youthful faux pas just minutes later when he stoned DiSalvatore on a two-on-one break with Doug Wright. Wright, who assisted on his linemate's contest clincher, skated past the right circle and fed a cross crease pass to DiSalvatore, forcing Warner into a full-fledged, painful to look at split, to make the save.

"I knew he was going to pass it," Warner said. "I just looked at his eyes and he had turned his stick so I was lucky enough to get over there."

Vitek was rarely seen without speed lines trailing him, as he continually orbited the lead-footed PC defenders.

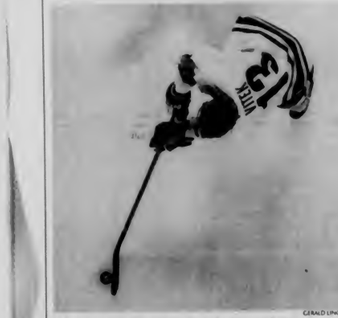
"I am starting to see the ice better," Vitek said. "I also had a lot more room to maneuver."

The Canadian speedster was spectacular in the offensive end, as he notched his first career goal to tie the game in the second period, while assisting on classmate Peter Trovato's score at 15:47 of the first.

Of the six recorded points in Friday night's 3-2 loss in Providence, freshmen recorded four, as Vitek and Trovato notched two points each.

Tenderfoots had an even more adverse effect on Saturday's conference showdown with visiting Northeastern. Another pair of upside loaded newcomers took center stage in the Minutemen's return to the Mullins Center.

Craig MacDonald put his proglazed skills on display with a two-point effort. The frosh got UMass on the board early with a corner-laced wrist shot off a feed from Tim Turner.



Late in the second period, MacDonald deked Brian Sullivan out of his jock strap before rushing the cage and causing a rebound that was shoveled home by budding rook Greg Mauldin.

Mauldin's first career goal and first pair of college hockey points marked his return from the proverbial snide.

"These guys are new and they're learning," junior Tim Turner said. "They're doing very well right now and they're very talented."

With eleven freshman added to an already young roster that includes only five seniors, it is expected that the rooks would soon shed their formerly green moniker.

With four goals and eight points in two important conference games – forget green; red, as in hot, is more like it.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Tim Vitek (above) notched two points in Friday's 3-2 loss to Providence.

■ mass attack

continued from page 10

who made 33 saves in the loss.

"I think this was really good for Timmy to be able to be thrown into the lion's den and to see how he could handle it," Cahoon said. "He battled like crazy and made some brilliant saves. Controlling rebounds is an issue for him...but I think overall it was a pretty positive performance."

UMass got on the board first, as Peter Trovato notched his first collegiate goal at 15:47 of the first. Freshman Tim Vitek carried the puck up the right side and took a demolishing hit, but somehow flipped the biscuit ahead to Scott Horvath, who set up Trovato's one-timer to give the visitors a 1-0 lead.

After Providence scored consecutive goals to take the lead, the Minutemen equalized the game with under a minute to go in the second. An attempted clear by Eric Lundberg was picked off by Turner, who darted toward the net and put a shot on PC goalie Nolan Schaefer. Vitek was there to clean up the garbage and put home the rebound for his first career goal, but it was not enough for the Maroon and White to take the victory.

The Minutemen head to East Lansing, Mich. for a game against Michigan State this Friday.

■ pigskin

continued from page 10

not let up a touchdown for the first time all year. "It was a patchwork operation...and we somehow got it done."

UMass (2-6, 2-4 Atlantic 10) forced four fumbles, blocked a punt and a field goal and added an interception by Eddie Bowman, falling out of the left side of its end zone, to upset Northeastern (3-5, 2-4 A-10) and quash the performance of tailback L.J. McKanas, who ran for a career-high 242 yards.

"I'm just a little stunned," Northeastern Head Coach Don Brown said. "We were able to run the ball well. But the thing that crops up with us is the five turnovers.

"It nullifies five opportunities."

Northeastern took a 10-3 lead in the third quarter when Art Smith picked off Matt Guice (13-for-29, 209 yards) and returned it 63 yards for the touchdown. But Guice responded on the last play of that stanza when he found DeShon Hardy on a deep slant for what ended as a 60-yard score. The reception was the longest of Hardy's career and doubled as the longest play from scrimmage for UMass this season.

The Huskies led 3-0 at halftime, but Doug White connected on a career-long 41-yard field goal early in the third quarter to tie the game.

■ women

continued from page 10

And while a win is nice in the preseason, it isn't the first priority for the coach.

"You are trying to find out who can play well together and what combinations work," O'Brien said. "You get some people that practice okay, but when the lights come on they play well and sometimes you get people who practice well and the lights come on and they don't play well."

Junior forward Nekole Smith was one player of particular interest. After dislocating her knee one year to the day of this exhibition, the Ann Arbor, Mich. native led all scorers with 15 while grabbing seven rebounds in just 16 minutes of play – effectively declaring herself ready for the 2001 season.

Junior post players Siiri Liivandi and Jennifer Butler controlled the boards. The two combined for 15 offensive rebounds, but struggled to turn them into points. Liivandi was able to draw two shooting fouls off the offensive boards, but shot just 0-for-4 from the field while Butler struggled underneath to a four-for-15 shooting performance.

"I think you'll see [the missed put backs] correct pretty quickly," O'Brien said.

Butler made up for shooting problems on defense, however, where she grabbed seven more rebounds, caused two steals, and made two blocks.

The depth in both the frontcourt and backcourt is something O'Brien isn't used to, but definitely looking forward to utilizing.

"It's going to be nice to look down the bench and know that you've got five or six people you can put in and not drop off too far," the eleven-year coaching veteran said.

After more than two weeks of just practicing, it was especially nice to see some other players opposite her Maroon and White, especially with an opening date at Holy Cross looming.

"We have been in practice for 18 days, it gets boring after a little while," O'Brien said.

"We'll see the intensity in practice pick up a little as that game gets closer."

The regular season gets closer every day and with confidence to build on after Sunday's thrashing of the NWBL elite travel team. Coach O'Brien's squad will be ready for Nov. 16.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

We are the champions!

The field hockey team won the Atlantic 10 Championship this weekend in Philadelphia, read all about it tomorrow.

■ men

continued from page 10

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Senior Eric Williams and the men's basketball team will begin the regular season Nov. 16 against Arkansas-Little Rock

Wilson's only miss came with 18:59 left in the second half, when he took two dribbles to his left and backrimmed the jumper. His six other shots were all catch-and-shoot.

Crooks, who joined Wilson in the starting backcourt at two-guard, played a solid game, contributing 18 points, seven assists, three steals and three rebounds with zero turnovers.

"Can you play much better than that?" asked Lappas, after reading Crooks' stat line. "But I'll tell you what. He has played tremendous in practice from day one. I'm not shocked."

Rhymer and Micah Brand controlled the paint for UMass, adding 12 and 16 points, respectively. Eric Williams also did his part, chipping in six points, and taking down eight rebounds.

Willie Jenkins, who started at small forward, managed only two points, but had two blocks and grabbed three rebounds.

Raheim Lamb scored nine points and dished out three assists, while Ronell Blizzard helped with seven points.

Walk-on Paco Kotaridis, filling in partly for Anthony Anderson who was out for disciplinary reasons, had three helpers in nine minutes of play.

Jackie Rogers decided not to play, playing it safe after slightly pulling a thigh muscle in practice Saturday.

NORTHWESTERN NATURALLY
Programs available include:
Chiropractic
Acupuncture
Oriental Medicine
Massage Therapy
Integrative Health & Wellness
Human Biology
Discover your future as a Health Care Practitioner at Northwestern Health Sciences University. We offer the widest array of natural health care programs in the United States.
Since 1941, Northwestern has earned an international reputation as a pioneer in natural health care education, patient care and scientific research. The individual attention and access to educational resources our students receive helps them excel in preparing to practice as outstanding health care practitioners. With our unique pioneering clinical education programs and our personal assistance in job placement, Northwestern provides an incredible educational experience.
For more information or to schedule a campus visit, call the Office of Admissions at 1-800-888-4777, ext. 409 or go on-line at www.nwhealth.edu
Northwestern Health Sciences University
Minneapolis, Minnesota

Collegian Sports:
Our layouts are always in by 7:30.

Munchie Madness 3-6PM TUESDAY-FRIDAY
Veggie Potato Skins $3.75 4.38
Nachos Especial $4.75 4.48
Sweet Potato Fries $3.75 3.38
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
TCMP Welcome Here
CLOSED ON MONDAYS
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
MONSTERS INC (PG) 1230 400 710 940
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1215 410 720 1010*
THE ONE (R) 1230 430 710 940*
K-PAX (PG13) 1215 430 720 1010*
13 GHOSTS (R) 1240 410 730 1000*
ON THE LINE (PG) 1220 430*
FROM HELL (R) 1200 500 700 1040
THE LAST CASTLE (R) 700 1000
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1235 410 730 1010
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1200 730
BANDITS (PG13) 400 1010
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 1200 400 745
TRAINING DAY (R) 420 950
ZOOLANDER (PG13) 1225 715
THE OTHERS (PG13) 1010
SENIOR MOVIE NOV 2 RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS DOORS OPEN AT 1145AM
NO PASSES/DISCOUNTS
Tues. Bargain all seats $4.50
cinemark.com

Aesthetics Skin & Body Care for Men & Women
34 Main St., Suite 1, Amherst, MA 253-
Healthy Skin begins with a deep pore cleansing facial.
Also hair waxing
-brazilian bikini wax
-whole legs
-brow shaping
-arms
Therapeutic Massage

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

Sigma Delta Tau would like to congradulate and welcome its newest sisters! Jen Barta, Tami Baruch, Samantha Berg, Meredith Brown, Alexis Carlton, Amanda Gardner, Melyssa Gleason, and Laura Hollander

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Great Sublet in Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser .com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser .com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

Janitor Tues./Thurs. mornings. 10hrs/week, $9/hr. plus membership. Hampshire Fitness Club 256-6446

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on exeience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center.

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

www.Fluid Visions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

FOR SALE

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Djata Bumpus in Amherst, call 413-731-1450

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

Responsible non-smoking female roommate wanted. Large apartment in Holyoke. $300/month + 1/2 utilities. 532-7959

SERVICES

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT NOW! GUARANTEE THE BEST SPRING BREAK PRICES! SOUTH PADRE, CANCUN, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS, ACAPULCO, FLORIDA & MARDI-GRAS. REPS NEEDED...TRAVEL FREE, EARN $$$. GROUP DISCOUNTS FOR 6+ 800-838-8203/ WWW.LEISURE-TOURS.COM

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Sun Coast Vacations wants to send you on Spring Break to Cancun, the Bahamas, Jamaica, or Mazatlan FOR FREE! To find out how, call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoast-vacations.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabond-tours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.spring-breakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/onlinemall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

Thinking of Sping Break??

Need some extra money for the trip??

Look in the Collegian Classifieds and find a job!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 • HSCN Bulletin Board
2 • CW8 Hartford
3 • PBS Boston
4 • ABC 40 Springfield
5 • CBS 57 Springfield
6 • Fox 61 Hartford
7 • UPN 20 Hartford
8 • WB 56 New Haven Channel
9 • NBC 30 New Britain
10 • Fox 24 Hartford
11 • PBS 24 Hartford
12 • NBC 30 Springfield
13 • International Channel
14 • UMASS Educational Channel
15 • WB 59 New Haven
16 • ESPN2
17 • ESPN
18 • UPN 20 (Boston Channel)
19 • Weather Channel
20 • Cartoon Network
21 • C-Span
22 • CNN
23 • CNN Headline News
24 • Lifetime
25 • USA
26 • TNN
27 • TNT
28 • A&E
29 • Sci-Fi
30 • Discovery
31 • Nogin
32 • Cartoon Network
33 • Nick at Nite
34 • TV Land
35 • Comedy Central
36 • MTV
37 • Univision
38 • Bloomberg Financial Source
39 • College TV Network
40 • MTV2
41 • MTV3
42 • VH1
43 • The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 5, 2001

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Antiques Roadshow		Masterpiece Theatre		Newport Jazz		Austin City Limits (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight		King	Becker (N)	Family Law "All in the Family"		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight		King	Becker (N)	Family Law "All in the Family"		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Denver Broncos at Oakland Raiders. (In Stereo Live)		Friends	Raymond
WLVI	6		Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond		7th Heaven "Broken" (In Stereo)		Angel "Offspring" (In Stereo)	News	News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7		NBC News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)		Dateline (In Stereo)		"Uprising" (2001, Drama) Lenies Sobeski, Hank Azaria.		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me		7th Heaven "Broken" (In Stereo)		Angel "Offspring" (In Stereo)	News	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood		Dateline (In Stereo)		"Uprising" (2001, Drama) Lenies Sobeski, Hank Azaria.		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond		Boston Public (N) (In Stereo)		"Uprising" (2001, Drama) Lenies Sobeski, Hank Azaria.		News	Tonight Show
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Dateline (In Stereo)		Masterpiece Theatre		American Roots Music (N)	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer			Antiques Roadshow
WGGB	40	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		NFL Football: Denver Broncos at Oakland Raiders. (In Stereo Live)
WSBK	38		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier		Hughleys	One on One	Parkers (N)	Girlfriends	Ent. Tonight	Frasier
WTBS	72		Roseanna	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends		* "Passport to Paris" (1999, Drama) Tom Sizemore, Willem Dafoe.
A&E	69		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "House Counsel"			Biography: Ronald Reagan		100 Centre Street "The Fix"		Minute by Minute (N)	Law & Order
CNN	20	23	Moneyline		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire		The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report	Greenfield
COM	53	33	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money		Be Fabulous	Com.-Presents	Kevin James: Sweet		Friars Club-Hemer	Daily Show
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Everglades		Wild Discovery: Mountain Goat			Stings, Fangs and Spines		Venom: Nine Ways to Die		Stings, Fangs and Spines 2 (N)	Justice Files
ESPN	21		Sportscenter		Sidelines	Monday Night		Countdown (N)		Figure Skating: Skate Canada.
LIFE	23		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Por			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Lucky Girl" (2001, Drama) Elisha Cuthbert, Sherry Miller.		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31		Direct Effect	Who Knows?	Spankin' New Pop (In Stereo)			TRL (In Stereo)		Alien Ant.	Family Values Tour (In Stereo)	Dismissed (N)	Making Video
NICK	43		Nicktoons TV	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Rugrats		Spongeb	IU Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers
SCIFI	51		Star Trek "Min"		Babylon 5 "Divided Loyalties"			Farscape "The Ugly Truth"		Outer Limits "The Nest"		Star Trek "Min" (In Stereo)	Crossing Over
TLC	59	28	Daredevils: Pushing the Limits		Medical Detect	Medical Detect		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Labor & Delivery		Surgery for the Unborn	Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	63		NYPD Blue		Pretender (In Stereo)			Law & Order "Haven"		Law & Order "Judge Dread"		Law & Order "Point" (In Stereo)	Law & Order "Haven"
USA	65		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Full Engagement"			Nash Bridges "Jumo Starr"		* "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" (1989, Adventure) Harrison Ford.			Martin
HBO	8		(5:15) "My Dog Skip" (2000)		30 by 30: Kid Flicks (In Stereo)			 "The Contender" (2000, Drama) Joan Allen. (In Stereo)		 "The Legend of Bagger Vance" (2000)		Shallow Hal	 "The Legend of Bagger Vance" (2000)
MAX	62		 "Jennifer Eight" (1992, Mystery) Andy Garcia. (In Stereo)					 "Seven Girlfriends" (1999, Comedy) Tim Daly.		 "The Art of War" (2000, Action) Wesley Snipes.		 "The Art of War"
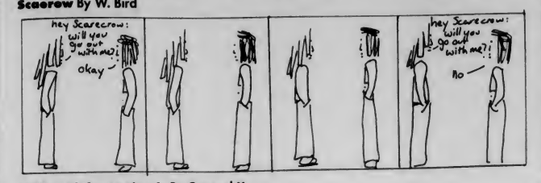
SHOW	55		½ "Home for the Holidays" (1995) Holly Hunter.					½ "Stanley the Child" (2000, Horror) Kim Basinger.				½ "In Too Deep" (1999) Omar Epps.	Beverly Hills

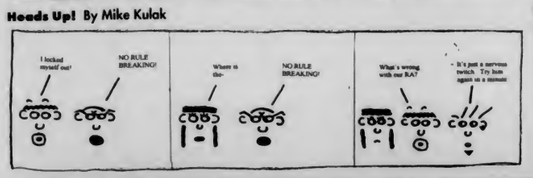


Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

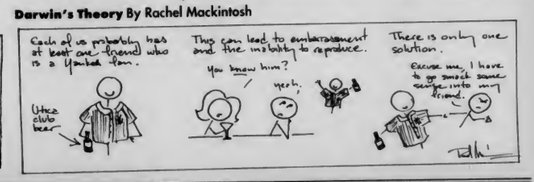
Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Scaerow By W. Bird

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Darwin's Theory By Rachel Mackintosh

Quote of the Day

"That's not a calendar; it's a poster with an excuse!"

–Jen Eastwood

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 48 LOW: 31	HIGH: 51 LOW: 29	HIGH: 57 LOW: 30

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You will have to spend the money if you want the best today. If you want to save money, you'll have to be willing to settle for a little less.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be temporarily confused as a result of a surprise encounter with someone who may not behave according to the rules.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – An unexpected discovery may have you doubting your security at this time. There are steps you can take in order to maximize safety at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – An independent investigation on your part is likely to reveal some facts that have been overlooked by authorities in the past.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Are you willing to step forward and tell others what you know? You must prepare to face the consequences either way. Trust your instincts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care not to let your emotions rise to the surface too quickly and get the better of you. Your work will depend on objectivity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You must be willing to answer questions and make choices for yourself today. Your independence will be on the line, and you must stand firm.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You must be careful today not to give people the wrong impression when you respond instinctively to certain extreme situations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You should be able to cloak an unpleasant truth today and keep others from becoming unduly upset by something they cannot control.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – What begins casually early in the day may become serious business before you are through. A friend or family member will want to take part.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may realize that it will be easier to circumvent someone's indifferent and annoying attitude rather than battling it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – The process will count more than profit today. However, in the end, your efforts are likely to yield considerable rewards.

Say What?! By Frank Casella

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Fried Chicken

Tuna Noodle Casserole

Caribbean Jerk Spiced Steak

Carbbean Jerk Tofu (vegan)

Vegetable Taco (vegan)

DINNER

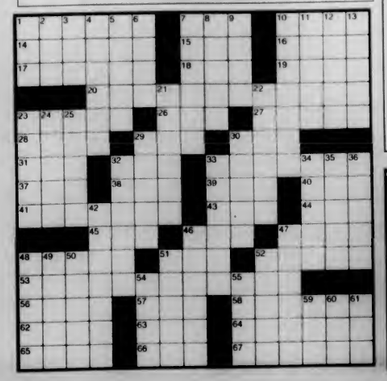
Chicken with Dijon Pecan Sauce

Beef Stew

Vegetable Stir Fry with Rice & Beans (vegetarian)

Multigrain Pilaf (vegan)

THE HARP IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!
*1/2 price munchies
9pm-close
TUESDAY!!
*Team Pub Trivia
win $ and prizes
9-10:30pm
call for details
163 Sunderland Rd.
Amherst, MA
548-6900
Start Your Own Tradition



ACROSS
1 Lodger
7 Thug's weapon
10 Messes up
14 At a discount
15 Period of time
16 Nuisance
17 Nerve cell
18 Zilch
19 Not away from
20 Football commentator
23 Hide
26 Before, to poets
27 Frontier band
28 Paris airport
29 Alan — Lerner
30 Tyke
31 Turkish title
32 Buddy
33 Laughed nastily
37 Mongrel
38 Bar drink
39 Snow boot
40 Eggs
41 Skiers
43 Kind of cube
44 Guys
45 Salamander
46 Pen's contents
47 Not bananas
48 Mail offering
51 Literary collection
52 Cousins' moms
53 Emotionally overwhelming
56 Sicily volcano
57 Female sandpiper
58 Vitamin B component
62 If could be proper
63 USCG officer
64 Caress
65 Huff
66 Hall-of-Famer Mel
67 Took a sip

DOWN
1 Ely of "Tarzan"
2 Single
3 Big Ten sch.
4 Boggy
5 Word secretly
6 Nevada city
7 Upper class
8 Develop
9 Nursery powder
10 Sitcom unit
11 Talks wildly
12 Ceremonies
13 Night nose
21 Domains
22 Each
23 Private tutor
24 Debates
25 Santa —, CA
29 Short trip
30 Talent
32 Manufactured in advance
33 Pertaining to the backbone
34 Type of candle
35 Occasion
36 Swedes' neighbors
42 Like lush lawns
46 Eat
47 Dextrose and fructose
48 Black cats, maybe
49 Climber's aid
50 Boredom
51 Real estate —
52 Elsberg of films
54 Black-and-white snack
55 Pt. of MIT
59 Portable bed
60 Marine's guy
61 Composer Rorem

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

11-5-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Melissa Hammel
Photo Technician — Gerald Ling
Copy Editor — Matthew F. Sacco
Production Supervisor — Jarrett Brimmer
Production Staff — Sean Becker, Shannon Farrington

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Hockey impressive in split weekend

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

In a league as tough as this, losses aren't only probable, they're almost inevitable.

The Massachusetts hockey team (3-3-0 overall, 2-1-0 Hockey East) had a tremendously strong pair of outings, but nonetheless split its conference weekend, dominating Northeastern Saturday night 4-2, after falling on the road to Providence on Friday by a 3-2 tally. Junior Tim Turner put up four points on the weekend, posting a goal and three assists.

Providence	3
UMass	2
UMass	4
Northeastern	2

"I thought we had used a lot of energy last night and last night's game was a difficult game for us because I thought we competed like crazy but obviously weren't as organized as we needed to be," said UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon following the team's victory over Northeastern. "Tonight we competed and the end result was that we took care of business."

Saturday's contest was the Minutemen's second victory this season in as many home contests. Greg Mauldin notched the contest's game-winner, boosting the Maroon and White into a tie for second place in the conference early on in the season.

"It was a big, big goal," Cahoon said. "I thought bringing the puck to the net was a big factor there. They were pressuring the net and he freed himself and was able to tap one home."

The play started as freshman Craig MacDonald brought the puck toward the net from the right-hand boards. After putting an NHL-caliber move on Northeastern defenseman Brian Sullivan, MacDonald stuffed a shot at goaltender Mike Gilhooly, and Mauldin was there to put home the rebound at the 19:06 mark to give UMass a 3-2 lead.

"Any goal in the last minute of play in a period is huge," Mauldin said. "Craig took the puck to the net hard and I was able to be on the doorstep and put it home."

Turner would ice an empty net goal in the final minute for the Maroon and White, but the final result seemed to be in tact less than five minutes into the final stanza. Husky winger Leon Hayward slipped behind the defense and broke in alone on senior goaltender Mike Johnson, who promptly turned aside Hayward's shot, essentially ending Northeastern's chance of victory.

"When he came down I knew that was basically the game," Johnson said. "If I made the save, we won – if I didn't, then hopefully we win in regulation or overtime."

The scoring opened up just over a minute into the game, when Mauldin sent Turner streaking to the net for a one-timer that went just wide of Gilhooly. But Turner followed his errant tip into the corner and brought it back out, sliding a pass to MacDonald in front of the net, who wristed a shot high to the glove side to give the Minutemen a 1-0 lead.

Northeastern (2-4-2, 1-2-1 HE) went on to score two goals in the first, one by senior defenseman Jim Fahey and the other by junior Mike Ryan, to head into the locker room leading 2-1 after one period. But UMass was far from finished, as the Minutemen were primed for a comeback.

"I think what we're trying to do with these kids is tell them to keep playing," Cahoon said. "There's going to be all kinds of shifts in momentum and shifts in scores and I think you try to put it out of their heads. We're trying to keep them from being too affected by those shifts."

The Maroon and White equalized the game at the 4:11 mark of the second. With Ryan in the box for an interference minor, the UMass power play stormed into action. Senior Martin Miljko slid a pass across to senior captain Toni Soderholm at the left point. Soderholm then found a wide-open Thomas Pöck in the right slot, and Pöck buried the puck to Gilhooly's glove side to turn the momentum back in favor of the Minutemen.

"Any time you can come back in a game it definitely gives guys confidence and it lets guys know that in any situation we can come back," Turner said. "We proved to ourselves that we can make a comeback."

In the weekend's first contest, 10 freshmen and four sophomores occupied the 20 available slots as the Maroon and White fell in a tight contest to Providence, 3-2. Though some might consider the contest a step forward for a young team, Cahoon insisted otherwise.

"You don't lose games and go forward," he said. "I was happy with the way we competed. I thought we competed extremely hard, but we weren't really organized and that affected us."

UMass was without five upperclassmen – seniors Miljko, Johnson, Randy Drohan and Darcy King as well as junior Brad Nizwantowski – as they were serving a one-game suspension for a violation of team policy.

"They broke a team rule – not a serious infraction, but one that I couldn't ignore and that was it," Cahoon said. "It set an example for the entire team, I hope."

What that added up to was the Maroon and White fielding one of its youngest lineups ever, with the average age of the UMass squad standing at 20 years and six months. All in all, 11 teenagers stood in uniform.

"Those young kids are all going to have good outings and then maybe a little bit inconsistent ones from time to time," Cahoon said.

Providence's Jon DiSalvatore spun around to put home the game winner at 14:50 of the third period off a rebound in front of freshman netminder Tim Warner.

Turn to MASS ATTACK, page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

UMass jumped out to an early lead in Saturday's 4-2 win over Northeastern when Craig McDonald wristed a shot high into the net (above).

Trey-mendous freshmen

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman point guard Kyle Wilson scored 20 points in his UMass debut on Sunday at the Mullins Center.

Wilson, Crooks blowout BABC

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

So this is how the season began.

Kitwana Rhymer tipped the ball to Shannon Crooks. Crooks then took two dribbles, pulled up and connected cleanly on a ten-footer.

Nothing was forced. Everything was in control.

On UMass' next trip down the court, Kyle Wilson made a pass to the left side, ran down the lane and cut to the right wing (following coach Steve Lappas' motion offense). The ball then swung back around to Wilson, where the freshman drilled a three-pointer (on the first attempt of his Minuteman career).

You know, textbook stuff.

Less than twenty seconds later, on the break, Wilson pushed the ball down the middle of the court, stopped at the foul line, and bounced a pass to Crooks on the baseline where the senior was fouled and sent to the line. He sunk both to give UMass a 7-4 lead.

You could say things started off rather well.

And it didn't matter that the plays were made against a team compiled of washed up former college players, led by graduated Minuteman guard Jonathan Depina and his nine points.

In UMass' 94-50 win over the BABC (Boston Athletic Basketball Club) All-Stars yesterday at the Mullins Center, the issue of importance was that the Minutemen proved they understood what their new coach wanted them to do.

"We had 22 assists on 32 baskets," Lappas said. "When we're playing our motion (offense) the right way, that's what you'll see.

"We made a lot of mistakes, but I thought the basic things that a good basketball team has to do, which is play unselfishly, and play hard on the defensive end – those basics were pretty much there tonight. And the mistakes are things that are correctable. As long as you do those two things, the other things are correctable."

Wilson led all scorers with 20 points on six-of-seven shooting (five-of-six from behind the arc) and added three assists and three steals.

"I was really nervous to start getting out there, but I just decided to let the game come to me," said Wilson, who connected on his first five treys of the game. "And I just played."

UMass	94
BABC	50

Turn to MEN, page 7

Freshmen step in at the point

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

According to Sunday's schedule, there was a Massachusetts women's basketball exhibition game at the Mullins Center. It should have read "The Katie Nelson Show" for the first half.

The rookie point guard silenced some of UMass' preseason questions by scoring her team's first five points and 11 in the first half.

UMass	61
NWBL	46

Much has been made in the preseason of filling the shoes of graduated star point guard Kathy Coyner, who led the team in minutes played, scoring and assists last season, but Nelson, along with classmate Monique Govan and sophomore Cleo Foster, calmed the collective uneasiness with solid performances in Sunday's 61-46 victory over the National Women's Basketball League Travel Elite team.

In a game that was virtually over when the Maroon and White ended the first half with a 10-0 run, Nelson went a perfect four-for-four from behind the arc and scored 14 points.

"Hopefully it will be this accurate all throughout the season," Nelson said with a chuckle.

The freshman did show some green, however, with four turnovers in her 25 minutes of action.

"We missed a little bit of Coyner's presence in the discipline [aspect]," UMass Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said, "but you saw the good things that we can do [at point guard]."

Not that Nelson, or O'Brien, sees herself as a shoe-filler.

"A lot of people have compared me to [Kathy Coyner]," the Ellicot City, Md. native said. "But I'm just trying do my own thing."

"She is going to get that comparison a lot, but she's very different," O'Brien said. "She's a little bit bigger, a little more athletic. I think she has done a good job picking things up."

O'Brien looks for Govan to pick up some of the slack as well. The freshman responded with four assists and, more importantly, zero turnovers in 16 minutes of action.

"She's more the prototype point guard," O'Brien said, while pointing out that Govan and Nelson will probably find themselves on the court together at times.

Turn to WOMEN, page 7

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Katie Nelson shot four-for-four from behind the arc in Sunday's win over NWBL.

'D' leads to a 'W'

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

All it needed was one late break – one small act of fortune that would at least give the team a chance to win.

And with 8:01 left in the fourth quarter of its game Saturday versus Northeastern, at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, the Massachusetts football team finally got it.

When Husky kicker Colin Gasnor took his stride toward the pigskin placed at the 23-yard line, the UMass defense had already forced the Northeastern line back a few yards.

Seconds later, the football ricocheted off the outstretched arms of Ryan McHugh to keep the score locked at 10-10 and transfer possession to UMass.

In the following 2:07 of play, the Maroon and White strung together a six-play, 77-yard scoring drive that ended on a 15-yard Omari Howard rush to paydirt, a play set up by Howard's 38-yard zigzagging scramble up the middle on the previous down.

Howard ran 15 times for 100 yards, hitting the century mark for the first time in his career. He is also the only UMass rusher to reach that mark this year.

Northeastern had a final chance on a fourth down play late in the last quarter, but UMass' Leroy Brooks broke up a pass to Andy Alsup in the left corner of the endzone to secure the 17-10 victory.

On that drive, Northeastern worked its way to first and goal on UMass' 9-yard-line, but couldn't crack the Minuteman guard.

On first down, McKanas pushed to the 4-yard-line, but on second down, linebacker Jeremy Cain drilled him for a 1-yard-loss. And on third, defensive lineman Valdamar "T" Brower sacked Shawn Brady for a 9-yard-loss.

The series was similar to Northeastern's final drive of the first half. The Huskies made their way to the UMass 5-yard-line with little time remaining, but UMass stopped McKanas twice and forced two incomplete passes.

"Our defense stepped up and made a lot of plays," said Head Coach Mark Whipple, whose defenders did

UMass	17
N.U.	10

Turn to PIGSKIN, page 7

GERALD LING/ COLLEGIAN

The weight was taken off QB Matt Guice's (above) shoulders by RB Omari Howard, the first Minuteman to rush for 100 yards in a game this season.

MTV is coming to UMass... we're serious. Check it out in Arts.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The men's soccer team's nine-game winning streak ended this weekend.

ARTS p. 5 SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVIII Issue 43 www.dailycollegian.com Monday, November 6, 2001

Campus community crazed with crime

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Southwest residence area erupted in riots Sunday night after the Arizona Diamondbacks beat the New York Yankees in the World Series. The resulting property damage ended an all-around busy weekend for University Police.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department received a call at approximately 11:10 p.m. during the last game, Jim Lyons spokesman for the UMPD explained. Officers responded to the call that a group was gathering in front of the Southwest Mall.

Twenty minutes later, when additional officers had arrived at the scene, the number had escalated to approximately 700.

"People just kept gathering," Lyons said. "So we kept sending officers to the scene."

The crowd began to become violent, Lyons explained, burning furniture as means of a bonfire, throwing items out of windows and refusing to go back inside.

"It was quite a mob scene," he said. "People were lighting furniture on fire and the officers were putting it out, only to have it be lit on fire again."

As a result of the incident two arrests were made. Eric Tinker, 18, of Medford, was arrested outside of Crampton Dormitory at approximately 12:10 p.m. for assault and battery on a police officer, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. Anthony Volpe, 19, of Amherst, was also arrested for disorderly conduct.

"The riots occurred as a result of the World Series," Lyons said. "Apparently a lot of people were watching."

An incident of burglary also occurred over the weekend on early Saturday morning in the Southwest Mall at approximately 2:14 a.m. The police received a call of a disturbance involving a number of people in a fight.

When the police arrived they discovered stolen pizzas and were told that a Domino's pizza delivery person had been robbed. The delivery driver was contacted and 17-year-old Michael Sharpe of Medford was identified and arrested for both assault and battery, unarmed robbery and larceny of over $250. His companion Daniel Rogler, 18, also of Medford was arrested for disorderly conduct.

There were a string of incidents of automobile vandalism and burglary that occurred in lot 11, north of Alumni Stadium on Friday. The first incident of vandalism occurred at 10:30 a.m. when the side view mirrors were broken off of a parked vehicle. Following that, a car was burglarized in the same lot at 1:51 p.m. when a lock was popped and several items were stolen from a vehicle. Four minutes later, a Kenwood CD player, speakers, subwoofers and tools were taken from a car in the lot. The door handle to the vehicle was damaged causing over $800 worth of harm.

The next in the string of incidents occurred at 2:00 p.m. when the driver's door to a vehicle was smashed and a CD player, equalizer and speakers were taken from the car. At 2:25 p.m. the side view mirrors were broken off of a vehicle in the lot.

There was an attempted breaking and entering at 2:50 p.m. when a lock was popped in a vehicle in lot 11. Nothing was stolen but there was damage done to the stereo in the automobile. At 3:08 p.m. the lock on the driver's side door was popped and a stereo, wave board and gym bag were stolen.

Two more incidents of vandalism and another burglary were reported within the same day. The two incidents occurred around 6:00 p.m. with one vehicle broken into and the side door destroyed and the other had its side mirror smashed and windshield cracked. The final burglary occurred at approximately 8:45 p.m. and caused damage to a parked vehicle's ignition, damaged the driver's side door, and posters, pictures and CD burners were taken.

It is still unknown as to whether or not these incidents are connected.

TIBORA GARCZYC /BUREAU CHIEF/COLLEGIAN

This was the scene Sunday night in Southwest.

COURTESY OF BOSTON HERALD.COM

Howard Zinn lectured about corrupt government, among other things, to a packed Student Union Ballroom last night.

Howard Zinn proposes a more modest nation

By S. J. Port
Collegian Staff

Author, activist, and innate pedagogue Howard Zinn addressed a gathering of students, professors, and interested community members on the benefits of knowing and appreciating history, especially in times of democratic crisis, like today.

Author of numerous essays and editorials, Zinn's largest and most widely read work is A People's History of the United States. A graduate of New York University and Columbia University, Zinn has taught at Upsala College, Brooklyn College in New York, Spelman College and Boston University.

The University of Massachusetts' Green Party endorsed Zinn's visit, along with fellow visitor Jill Stein. Stein is currently the Massachusetts green ticket candidate for governor.

Zinn opened his lecture by warming up the enthusiastic audience with jokes about Dan Rather. While providing the evening with a sense of humor, Zinn addressed various serious and relevant issues.

"I want to talk about what's going on — do you know what's going on? Something is going on, and that's what I want to talk about.

"The President says we're at war, does that mean I have to be at war?" asked Zinn. Contemplating the answer, he went on to discuss the enduring idea that "free speech is not allowed in times of crisis."

Zinn used his understanding of the classroom and the average American's experiences to explain democracy and what the war against terrorism will mean. As a bombardier for the US army during World War II, Zinn has experienced democracy, war, and government tape from the front, and as a parent and professor during Vietnam. He shared his experience of bombing targets from thirty thousand feet up and not knowing where or whom the bomb would hit. Zinn feels the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks are similar to the attacks he, as a representative for the U.S. army, enacted during World War II.

"The kind of scene we saw in New York has taken place all over the world, and the U.S. has been responsible for much of that.

"You can put democracy on the board if you're in junior high [school]," said Zinn, adding quickly that this is probably the only time democracy will look neat and effective. Otherwise, Zinn said, democracy is a difficult and complicated system, which few understand. It is this need to understand both democracy and history that Zinn views as so important.

"The Taliban is lying, our government lies, governments lie... Histories are very important, if you don't know history then it's as if you were born yesterday. But if you know some histories, then you know the history of governments lying," said Zinn, adding that he believes we are terrorizing the Afghani people.

"This is recklessness, this is immoral, this imitating the callousness with which those terrorists treated human life on Sept. 11."

Zinn proposed we take a less militaristic stance in the world, and forget the term

Turn to ZINN, page 3

Madame Lauraine's transsexual touch

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

The Stonewall Center presented "Madame Lauraine's Transsexual Touch," a video geared toward educating the clients of transsexual prostitutes about HIV, in the Campus Center on Nov. 2.

Viviane Lamaste, coordinator of a Montreal community-based transsexual healthcare project known as CACTUS, and one of the co-creators of the video, discussed the project briefly before it was shown to the audience.

Lamaste said that her organization advised the directors of the video about the issues they felt were relevant to effective HIV education. She said that they eventually decided to aim the video at the clients of prostitutes, who she explained, may need more education than the prostitutes themselves about HIV, risk and transsexuality.

"We were worried about the relevance of HIV education to the values of transsexual culture," Lamaste said. "We sat down and said, what do we need? We don't want more education for the girls. We need it for the clients."

Lamaste also said that the video was structured to be erotic as well as educational. "The video is very explicit," she said, explaining that she felt that this would help both prostitutes and their clients relate to the video's message. "More than they would to some social worker coming around with a pamphlet."

Also important in the video was the idea of personal responsibility, Lamaste said. "We have yet to see any sexual materials that actually address this."

According to a press release about the video, "studies show that people engage in high-risk activities even when they have all the information available to them about the potential consequences. The video asks people to evaluate the risks associated with different sexual practices and to assume responsibility for the activities in which they engage."

Transsexual identity was also an integral part of the film's message.

Turn to GLBT, page 3

Town discusses zoning, Nicaragua, drugs

By Nathan Jones
Collegian Staff

Amherst Town Meeting members faced the second half of a debate over a controversial zoning revision designed to shield the town from constitutional challenges from developers at a special discussion Nov. 1. The matter was postponed at the first half of the meeting Oct. 29. In the end the members passed the amendment, but with some changes.

The town's 248 Town Meeting Members are elected by voters to represent them at the Annual and occasional Special Town Meetings that are the town's legislative body, the replacement of the mayors and city councils that perform these duties in larger towns.

The zoning bylaw in question was designed to counter the rising popularity of subdivisions – multi unit developments – which are encroaching on open space here and nationwide in light of a booming real estate market. The law creates a special zoning designation called a "Farmland Protection District," in which cluster subdivision design methods must be used. These methods are more complicated but maximize open space without cutting down on the number of buildable units.

The problem the town recently discovered in a court battle is that cluster developments must be approved via the special permit process. This process gives the town the right to refuse, as opposed to a site plan review, with which there must be clear code violation for denial. Easy and complete denial of a developer's right to use the land could constitute the taking of land without compensation prohibited by the Fifth Amendment.

The new version of the bylaw alters the approval method to site plan review to satisfy this problem, but controversy developed when opposition felt that it would overly weaken the town's protection against undesired development on its some 1200 acres of potential farmland.

Planning Board member Frederick Hartwell delivered the recommendation of his group, which had not formed a position at the first meeting, as being in favor of the amendment except for three sections which they felt should remain unchanged for the time being.

The first two struck sections pertained to offering developers incentive to use the cluster method by enabling permitting agencies to allow them to build more units than would have been allowed under standard development methods.

The last would have struck down a provision in the original bylaw which placed deed restrictions on farmland made unbuildable by permanent conservation restriction, it having originally been intended to further secure the town's ability to keep some land under permanent conservation by holding the deed restrictions itself. However, Hartwell explained, the Planning Board feels that leaving these sections unchanged will still plug the biggest constitutional holes while giving the town more time to solve the more complex ones.

"The town decided to do something very significant to preserve farm and open space," Hartwell said of the bylaw. "This still makes sense under public policy and the Planning Board is committed to it...People need to understand the exposure this town has. The Massachusetts Supreme Court has said

Turn to TOWN, page 3

JEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

The busiest little town

Amherst is alive and well despite frigid cold weather.

National Briefs

California

By Ray Hengst
The Guardian (U. California-San Diego)

(U-WIRE) LA JOLLA, Calif. – Credit card companies may soon have to deal with new policies that regulate their conduct on campus.

On Sept. 12 Governor and ex-officio Universits of California Regent Gray Davis signed a bill into law requiring California State University campuses and California community colleges to adopt policies to regulate the marketing practices used on campuses by credit card companies.

The bill does not require the UC system to comply, but it does include language strongly urging it to do so.

The regulatory policies are to include a prohibition on credit card companies offering gifts to students in exchange for filling out credit card applications. The bill, which was introduced by California Assemblyman Paul Koretz, D-Los Angeles, also requires the affected campuses to offer debt education as a regular part of campus orientation for new students.

Koretz's Chief of Staff Scott Svonkin said the main goal of the legislation is to empower and educate college students on the risks of using credit cards.

"[Credit card companies] focus on giveaways and distract students from the real issues. Many college students got credit cards just because they wanted free gifts," Svonkin said, citing a Public Interest Resource Groups study.

Gov. Davis spokesman Roger Salazer said that students inexperienced with using credit cards can get into more debt than they realize.

"Because of the lax requirements that come with student credit cards, [students are] often put in a position where they've run up more debt than they can handle," he said.

UC-San Diego student goverment Vice President External Dylan de Kervor said that the A.S. Council supports the regulation of credit card companies on campus, even though the bill does not require UC campuses to do so.

"We don't want credit card companies on campus recruiting our students," de Kervor said. "If the university is allowing credit card companies on campus, it should be providing information – period."

De Kervor said that the A.S. Council wants to see the implementation of regulatory policies on credit card companies by next year.

"We'll be drafting a letter to our chancellor requesting that he do this as soon as possible," de Kervor said.

Svonkin said that a graduate student who was working in Koretz's office did some research on student credit cards and brought the issue to the attention of Koretz.

UC spokesperson Mary Spletter said that UC President Richard C. Atkinson sent out a letter to each campus, requesting that they review their policies in light of the bill to regulate the marketing practices of credit card companies.

"Each of the campuses has its own policy on the marketing of materials," Spletter said. Spletter said that no systemwide policy on student credit cards exists.

UCSD students expressed a variety of opinions about regulating credit card companies and student debt.

"Most of the time, if you use your head, you won't get in too much trouble," said Warren freshman Wesley Oldaker. "I don't think [student debt] should be the school's problem."

Warren sophomore Ian McKinney said that it would be beneficial for students to have a credit card and debt education program on campus.

"I think that credit card companies make pretty good money off people who don't know the full responsibility of having [a credit card]," McKinney said. "[Student debt] very easily could be a problem if it's not controlled. if the corporations don't act responsibly."

Warren freshman Erin Selawski agreed with McKinney that credit card companies should act responsibly.

"I don't think people who have shown they can't manage a [credit card] should have it." Selawski said.

Minnesota

By Justin Ware
Minnesota Daily (U. Minnesota)

(U-WIRE) MINNEAPOLIS – "If you build it, they will come."

The words whispered to Kevin Costner's character in the late 1980s blockbuster "Field of Dreams" carry new meaning in today's sports world.

In the sporting industry of 2001, the phrase has morphed into something along the lines of "either build it or we'll move, put a poor team on the field or eliminate the franchise altogether."

The Twin Cities is in the heart of such a debate as the Vikings warn financial woes will bring them to ruin without a new stadium, and the Twins could be one day away from abolition.

Closer to home, the Gophers football program is looking to team up with the Vikings in a push for an on-campus stadium.

Clearly, a substantial gift of city or state funds is in the best interest of the sporting clubs, but will local communities also benefit from the construction of state-of-the-art ballparks?

"Community pride is a big thing," said Barbara Casey, director of communications for the Tampa Sports Authority.

Tampa, Fla. saw its new football stadium open for business Sept. 20, 1998. For the most part, Tampa's city and sports officials said they are happy with the results of Raymond James Stadium.

"I'm seeing a large amount of people who would not come here if it wasn't for the stadium," Casey said.

Hometown pride aside, determining the economic impact on the city has not been easy.

"I've heard professionals say we've had from zero to a $900 million impact," said Henry Saavedra, TSA executive director.

"There's other impacts than monetary," Saavedra said. "There's an intangible to this."

Saavedra said while there are no studies on the economic effects of the new stadium in Tampa, the city has seen several benefits in areas like tourism because of events – such as last year's Super Bowl - the stadium brings.

Tampa City Council Member Charles Miranda does not agree with Saavedra's assessment. "I don't think football brings tourists," Miranda said. "It brings in people from 50 or 60 miles around."

Miranda said area businesses, such as bars and restaurants, aren't the ones who benefit from multi-million-dollar sporting meccas.

He said fans tailgate and spend the bulk of their money inside the stadium on souvenirs and concessions.

"There's no doubt in my mind the owners make all the money," he said.

And in Baltimore...

Ten years ago the climate in Baltimore was similar to Minnesota's current stadium situation.

The Orioles played their games in a downtrodden stadium on the wrong side of the town, said University of Maryland-Baltimore County professor Don Norris.

In the past decade, the team got a new ballpark in a different part of town, and Baltimore snatched the Cleveland football franchise with a modern stadium, turning the Browns into the Ravens.

Both teams saw immediate success in their new domains. The Orioles consistently made playoff appearances and the Ravens won a Super Bowl.

However, there has been a difference in the effects the two ballparks have had on the economic environment of the Baltimore Harbor area.

"It probably made sense for the new stadium to be built," Norris said of the baseball park.

Norris recently wrote a book on the economic impact of tourism-based development in Baltimore. Titled, If We Build it, They Will Come, the book includes several studies on the city's new sports facilities.

Norris said the length of the baseball season is what makes Oriole Park at Camden Yards a local revenue generator.

"This is because there are about 80 home games," Norris said in his book. "The stadium at Oriole Park holds around 47,000 fans, and except for the past three ... seasons, the Orioles have been highly successful in selling the stadium out. On game days, the city center is alive with activity."

Norris said he does not see the same trend tied to PSI Net – the Ravens' home.

Fan spending associated with football is far more modest because there are only eight regular games per season, he said.

Much like Miranda in Tampa, Norris said he is only partially optimistic about the long-term impact on the community.

"It is conceivable that the $210 million spent on the Orioles ... there might be a break even point," Norris said.

The Baltimore Area Convention and Visitor's Association released a study showing an annual increase of three million travelers to the harbor area between 1992 and 1998.

Oriole Park, located in the harbor area, opened in 1992.

But Lester Bagley, the Minnesota Vikings' stadium consultant, said a partnership with the University and its football team will change the economic futures of both programs.

"The University has the same problems financially as the Vikings," Bagley said.

Bagley said building a new stadium on campus will give the two teams control over parking and concessions revenues neither team benefits from in the Metrodome. Also, a stadium on campus would add to the collegiate environment Gophers' fans miss when they have to travel downtown to see games.

In addition to football, Bagley said, the stadium could host events such as World Cup soccer and concerts, attracting more visitors to the University area.

"We would solve two community problems with one facility," Bagley said.

Mississippi

By Riley McDermid
Daily Mississippian (U. Mississippi)

(U-WIRE) OXFORD, Miss. – At NATO Supreme Allied Commander General Wesley Clark's Friday afternoon speaking engagement, his audience included about a dozen activists from the local Green Party chapter and the Issues of Peace Organization. The non-violent protesters said they believe Clark's role in the United States' Balkans conflict, and his current stance on America's war in Afghanistan, are a barrier to world peace.

They passed out pro-peace literature and statements from Afghan women still living in Afghanistan to audience members and University of Mississippi administrators.

"We were out there to make the public aware that there are people in the community who are not supportive of violent responses to the Sept. 11 attacks," said local Green Party activist and Ole Miss graduate student Keith Wright. "It's time to start talking about peace."

Clark has long been a target of human rights organizations.

Following the 1999 bombing of Kosovo, Clark was found guilty of war crimes by a legally non-binding 16-judge panel of human rights groups from 11 countries in June of 2000. Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, British Prime Minister Tony Blair and former U.S. president Bill Clinton were also found guilty.

They said that the United States' hawkish attitude to solving the conflict in Afghanistan is short-sighted.

"As an army veteran I'm keenly aware that there are mainly people who join the army for financial reasons, not just to risk their lives as pawns of American foreign policy," Wright said.

"The U.S. just spent $400,000 on a public relations campaign to sell America on the war effort. To me, that reeks of fascism. And it's not something I would expect from a democracy."

Fellow Green Party member Vanessa Bliss agreed.

"We wanted to expand public discussion about the government's role in fighting terrorism," Bliss said. "It's dangerous not to have any form of dissent from what's expected, especially in times of crisis. This sort of discussion is good for everyone."

Clark had no comment about Friday's protest.

National Briefs were compiled from U-Wire.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimaulit Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

The Chancellors Office
Presents

Living Values

The Life, Death, and Legacy of Amy Biehl

7:30 p.m.
November 7th, 2001
Fine Arts Center
Free and Open to the Public

"[Amy] made our aspirations her own and lost her life in the turmoil of our transition." —Nelson Mandela

"If you can understand why someone wronged you, you can accept and reconcile." —Peter Biehl

"A death can create a new sense of energy...death can be an inspiration." —Linda Biehl

The Edwin M. Rossman Alumni Career Forums
Presents

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY
CAREER NIGHT

DATE: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2001
TIME: 4:00 pm
LOCATION: HERTER 601

AFTER THE BA: SOME OF THE MANY CAREER OPTIONS!

ALUMNI PANELISTS:

EMILY R. GOLD	SENIOR WRITER "BROWN ALUMNI MAGAZINE"
JOHN M. MACUGA	POLICY ANALYST, MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF HIGHER EDUCATION
RICHARD M. SHEA	CEO OF MASCO, A BOSTON-BASED SHARED-SERVICE ORGANIZATION
PETER H. WEIS	ARCHIVIST, NORTHFIELD MT. HERMON SCHOOL
MARGARET A. WOOVIS	EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, MONTACHUSETT HOME CARE CORPORATION
SUSAN HAMMOND	HUMANITIES & FINE ARTS CAREER NETWORK DIRECTOR, CAREER EDUCATION
GERALD McFARLAND	MODERATOR, DIRECTOR OF UNDERGRADUATE STUDIES

SPONSORED BY: CAMPUS CAREER NETWORK
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY

If you would like to have dinner afterward with the panelists, reserve a place by phoning 545-6757. A limited number of places are still available.

JEH-SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN

Reflections of hope
Think about it.

Police Log

Breaking and Entering

October 28
There was an incident of breaking and entering in Moore Dormitory.
There was an incident of breaking and entering in lot 11 north of the Alumni Stadium.
October 29
An officer was called to access garage damages to the Chancellor's House caused by breaking and entering.
Three vehicles were broken into in lot 11 and items were stolen.
A stereo was taken from a car in lot 11.
An officer patrolling the parking lot noticed damage to an alarm system in a vehicle in lot 11. There was also a report of a suspicious person leaving the area.
October 31
A Sony mini disc player was stolen from a room in Washington Dormitory.
November 2
The police were notified about a lost checkbook that was found in the possession of two individuals.
A lock was popped and several items were taken from a vehicle in lot 11.
The driver's side door was smashed in a car in lot 11 and a number of items were taken.
The driver's side door was smashed in a vehicle and a CD player and speakers were taken.
November 4
The passenger's side window was broken on a vehicle, the stereo was apparently taken and the rear seat was damaged.
There was a report of a vehicle broken into in lot 11.
There was a report of a stereo stolen from a vehicle in lot 11.

Disturbance

November 1
There was a report of three or four individuals shouting and slamming things in Patterson Dormitory.
There was a report of a fight involving approximately 10 males outside of John Adams Dormitory.
November 3

There was a report of a fight between 4-5 individuals outside of Pierpont Dormitory, when officers arrived on the scene it was clear.
A disturbance was reported outside of McNamara Dormitory, the scene was clear when police arrived.
Subjects dispersed upon arrival when police got the report of a disturbance outside of Mackimmie Dormitory.
November 4
There was an unfounded disturbance in lot 21.
There was a report of a fight breaking up outside of Coolidge Dormitory, all involved parties were advised of their rights.
Three parties were caught trespassing outside of Kennedy Dormitory.
There was a report of a fight outside of Thoreau Dormitory involving approximately 10 individuals.

Larceny

October 30
A scale was stolen from Hasbrouck Laboratory that was valued at $100.
The Campus Store reported to the police a series of bounced checks. Criminal action is soon to follow.
A gray, yellow and red bike was stolen from Hills House.
There was an attempted theft on a construction sign.
October 31
A registered mountain bicycle was stolen from President's Drive.
A locker was broken into and cash was stolen from Franklin Dining Commons.
November 1
Shoes were stolen from outside a room in John Adams Dormitory.
A window was broken in Clark Hall in a second hall classroom.
A laptop was taken from a dormitory room in John Adams Dormitory.
November 2
A Mt. Fury mountain bike with red initials and AB carved into the frame was stolen from Prince Dormitory. It was valued at $100.
A manager of a store was wishing to speak to an officer about a reported shoplifter.
November 3
A caller to the police station believes that her backpack and overnight bag were stolen from a vehicle.

-Melissa Hummel

■ GLBT

continued from page 1

Lamaste said.

"Many transsexual activists are trying to get away from the stereotype of the prostitute," Lamaste said. "[With this video] we are saying that a lot of us are prostitutes and that's what we do and we're okay with that."

The style of the video reflects this, according to Lamaste.

"We didn't want an arty kind of film," she remarked. "We wanted to show the way transsexual prostitutes really are, which can be trashy and over the top. That's why a lot of our clients come to us. We wanted to have that reflected in the film."

She added that, in her opinion, those who work as prostitutes are not given enough credit for their contributions to transsexual culture.

"Education around transsexuality is part of what transsexual prostitutes do," she said. "But don't look to transsexual leaders in America for recognition of that."

■ town

continued from page 1

that if it is not clear if the town would have passed the rest of the law without any provisions it deems unconstitutional, the whole law would be struck down, and the whole area would revert to its original residential zoning. The entire farmland would be lost and development would proceed at quadruple the rate."

The Select Board concurred with the Planning Board's recommendation, which was delivered by Chair Carl Seppala.

"There has to be a way for a developer to build on his land by-right or else it is a regulatory taking and we are liable for damages," he said.

The Finance Committee and Planning Boards also concurred with the modified amendment, even Conservation Commissaon member Robert Kusner, who had previously issued a written statement calling the original bylaw "constitutionally sound," and urging the town to "defend it in the courts."

When the matter eventually came to a vote, it was not only clearly passed with the required two-thirds majority, there was only one dissenting "nay" to be heard in the room.

SISTER CITY COMMITTEE RECEIVES VISIT FROM NICARAGUA

Marcus Katsum of Nicaragua delivered a report on behalf of the Amherst Sister City Committee at Town Meeting November 1. The committee, which designated the city of La Paz Central as Amherst's sibling 14 years ago, has since been holding public fundraisers such as bake sails to provide disaster relief and foster sustainable development in the third-world country.

"This effort has shown solidarity," Katsum said. "There has been much suffering in Nicaragua at the hands of United States foreign policy. Now our focus is on small scale economic development."

Katsum described several of the programs being offered in his city via the program, one of which gives women an $85 loan for a stove so that wood can be conserved. It requires them to pay the loan off by the week and put in a little extra for savings.

"The idea is to inculcate in these people a sense of planning," he said. "65 percent of the people there are in poverty, and it is difficult to get them to start thinking beyond their immediate existence."

Other programs he mentioned include communication workshops to improve business owners' salesmanship and giving families pigs with pens and regulated diets to stop the free-roaming and often unhealthy pigs the residents otherwise consume.

SENIORS CALL FOR IMPROVED PRESCRIPTION COVERAGE

The Amherst Council on Aging has delivered a resolution which asks the town to pressure congress for universal Medicare benefits and prescription drug price controls for seniors at Town Meeting November 1.

"Nationally, one-third of all seniors are without prescription coverage," said COA member Isaac BenEzra. "This is a national disgrace."

The COA joins a petition from the Massachusetts Senior Action Council, AFL/CIO, and Massachusetts Nurses' Association. It is hoped this petition will pick up cosigners nationwide. It asks Congress to enforce a 1980 law, which orders that drug manufacturers who receive exclusive patents return the favor to their country in the form of discounted prices, which has not happened. He noted several examples including the cancer drug Paxol, which costs $10,000 per year for a person's treatment, as well as a breast cancer drug that costs $29 for three months' worth in Canada but over $375 in the US.

"It will take a national concentrated effort to affect change," BenEzra said. "This is the tip of an iceberg."

■ Zinn

continued from page 1

"super power."

"Why aren't we a modest nation? Let's be a modest nation. Modest nations don't have to worry about terrorism. Sweden, Switzerland, New Zealand don't worry about terrorists because they're not bothering anyone," he concluded.

"I agree wholeheartedly," UMass student Tareka Miller said. A fan of Zinn's work, she, like the other students in attendance, came to the Student Union ballroom to hear Zinn speak. Miller and others, however, expressed her disappointment in the Green Party's presence at the event.

"We didn't appreciate the Green Party using the event as a platform for their events and issues," said UMass students Tim Cobbett and Chris Martell.

Despite some of the dissent toward the sponsorship of the event by the Green Party, all who attended deemed Zinn's lecture a success.

NEWS MEETING TONIGHT AT 5:30 P.M.

Click. It's a prepaid phone card.

The College PrePaid Phone Card: the really cool thing about it is—there is no card. It's virtual. You get it online with a flat per-minute rate* and no hidden fees. And it's rechargeable so you'll never need another phone card—ever.

Ordering is easy and it's instant. Just go to att.com/college/easy and choose your card denomination. Submit the form to get your PIN and you're off and dialing.

The College PrePaid Phone Card. Get it online. Keep it in your brain. How easy is that?

Go to our website now.

AT&T | BOUNDLESS

att.com/college/easy

*U.S. and international rates vary.
©2001 AT&T. All Rights Reserved.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

UMass rioters:
symbols of immaturity

Let's make something clear. Riots are not cool. Riots are not legal. Burning stuff to the ground amid chants does not make the fact that stuff is being burned to begin with OK. Riots should not happen, even if it is because the Yankees lost.

There isn't a UMass student here that did not expect something to go on after the World Series ended Sunday. Riots? The question wasn't if there would be any, but how bad they would be. That says something about our UMass community. We've got some issues to address.

There's a chunk of our UMass population that finds justification in rioting on a yearly basis. Just because it has become semi-tradition does not make it right. Seizing security desks and lounge couches and starting a bonfire in the dead of the night to celebrate something that one had no part in is stupid, lame, and a waste of the rest of our times.

Drunken idiots do not have the right to torch couches. Drunken idiots do not have the right to break things and chant obscenities on an otherwise quiet Sunday night. Drunken idiots do not have the right to set fireworks off from buildings into and above crowds numbering in the hundreds. It's dangerous, loud, and offensive. Keep it simple: it's wrong. It's all fun and games until someone loses a limb.

The arrested students in the riot do not deserve our sympathy. Basically, they got what they deserve. Vandalizing and destroying things that our university supplies is stupid. For every couch that gets burned among the infamous pyramids between the towers in Southwest, there's one less couch in another barely furnished dorm lounge. Don't people realize that if they don't take care of what they have, they end up having nothing?

Having no respect for community property may be mildly amusing to some, but it leaves our school in less than it could be. Every time something like this past weekend's riots happen, it affects us directly. It's our pocketbooks that pay for replacing the things that are destroyed in the end.

Unsigned editorials are the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

The results of "Afghanistanism?"

MELODY ZAGAMI

It has taken the death of thousands to make us realize we're not the only people out there. I hope you have been paying closer attention these past two months. I hope you have been watching with a more discerning eye. I hope you have reached the conclusion that the ornamental snow globe in which you live can be cracked with the slightest movement from the outside world.

Do you know what the term "Afghanistanism" means? It is the journalistic word for avoiding home-front controversy by focusing news coverage on obscure, distant lands. In essence, it's a way to describe little, harmless, countries we should only concern ourselves with if we have nothing else to talk about or are too afraid to stand behind the words we write about our own country. New York Times reporter I. Anthony Lukas coined the word.

"Afghanistanism" is the subjective idea held by the U.S. media about covering international news. The idea is that the further away a country is, the less important it is. That country doesn't seem so far away now, does it? It doesn't seem so unimportant now does it? Don't you kind of wish that you had known a little more, that you had been paying attention?

You are only partly to blame. The negligence rests in the hands of the media. Start noticing the world around you now because it is obvious that you cannot count on anyone else to show or teach you anything.

Presently, the media is attempting to do a better job. They're informing us about those distant desert lands. Those lands' names - Israel, Persia, Saudi Arabia, Baghdad, Palestine, and Afghanistan — evoke images of masked strangers and oil wells. Last week, in the Science Times section of The New York Times there was a huge story about the Golden Age of Islamic research and discovery. Another story on the inside was about archaeological digs in Persia. In every paper in the nation, on any given day, there is now extensive coverage of the Middle East. It is only after we have been rattled awake that the dark spot on the map comes into focus.

One side of me, the side that deems my country the strongest, the smartest and the bravest says, "Why should I care, why should it matter what any little nobody country does?"

I know this is not right, and I should have realized it so much sooner. I should have asked more from myself. I should have noticed that the microcosm in which I exist is a very small part of a greater picture whose details I am just beginning to make out. I am guilty of not knowing and not caring. Chances are you are too.

I am sick of speaking about war and crumbling towers and lost loved ones and this feral disease that is attacking government institutions.

I was in New York City this past weekend, and there's no way I can neglect my experiences there. I can't help but think if not for "Afghanistanism," I might have visited the New York I visited last fall. A New York that was indestructible. A city that went about its business, just like any other city, without the slightest bit of hesitation. A metropolis whose electrical current couldn't be shorted out, ever. The New York I spent the weekend in was a different city, now residing in a different country. There is a different feeling in the air there now. There is uneasiness and fear. People are going on as they were before, but it is different somehow. I doubt I have to explain it to you because you know exactly what I'm talking about. You feel it too every time you turn on the news, open the paper or listen to the radio.

I attended a special gallery exhibit entitled, "Here is New York: Images from the Frontline of History: A Democracy of Photographs." The exhibit, set up in an unleased store, displays random photographs that people shot on and after Sept. 11 of the Trade Center remains, and images of those around it. The images are still difficult and much more real than they are on television. These are photos like those on your living room mantel and in your high school yearbook. These are real captured images. They do not look like movies or reality TV. They are snap-shots.

"In every paper in the nation, on any given day, there is now extensive coverage of the Middle East. It is only after we have been rattled awake that the dark spot on the map comes into focus."

The credo of the exhibit I saw is this, "The causes and effects of the events of Sept. 11 are by no means clear and will not be for a very long time. What is clear, though, is this: in order to restore our sense of equilibrium as a nation, as a city, and particularly as a community of individuals, we need to develop a new way of looking at and thinking about what has happened, as well as a way of making sense of all the images which have besieged us and continue to haunt us."

This simple flier asks you to reflect upon the way in which you look at things and start looking at them, as I'm sure you have already begun to, differently.

We have been looking at the wrong images. While we were busy worrying about Jennifer Lopez's backside and Elton John singing with Eminem at the VMAs, there was a world around us that was moving, scheming, and planning our destruction. Through an ironically coined word and other sins we missed it, we just didn't see it coming, and now we are paying dearly for this oversight.

Remember this when you are suffering from your next inner struggle. You need only to stop what you are doing, glance at the world around you, and take heed that you are not the only one in it.

Melody Zagami is a Collegian Columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

Acting with honor the only way

SIMON PONGRATZ

For the past few weeks, it has seemed like every newspaper column I've read either began or ended with the sentence "in the wake of the terrorist attacks on the United States," or something to that effect. Most trends that we are seeing now, even if they began before the 11th, are either directly or indirectly tied to that terrible event (except the long overdue humbling of the Yankees).

Those trends include political initiatives that would have been unthinkable a few months ago. Recent articles and reports with the headlines "Bush backs Palestinian state" seem unbelievable—I don't recall, as they are now saying, that "the idea of a Palestinian state has always been part of the peace process 'so long as the right to an Israeli state is respected.'" It's true that the Arab nations and others in the Middle East have not respected Israel's right to exist, but the only alternative, as many understand, is more violence. The 'Powers that Be' have a complete understanding of the situation, but they unfortunately lack the courage and basic humanism to make beneficial changes.

And the violence continues, with the assassination of the Israeli tourism minister and their response, the invasion of six Palestinian towns. As distasteful as it may seem, the only way the Palestinians will even remotely realize their goals is by the good graces of the United States, who won't be talking of a state for long if the present cycles of violence continue. They may invite upon themselves the same response given the Taliban.

There have been important economic changes as well, and in the last few weeks every sanction against Pakistan has been waived, including the 1994 Glenn Amendment, which restricts the sale of non-nuclear weapon states that detonate nuclear explosions, the 1985 Pressler Amendment, banning military assistance to Pakistan and triggered in 1990 by President Bush, and the Symington Amendment blocking use of the Foreign Assistance Act or Arms Export Control Act funds for economic assistance [or] military assistance, [etc.],..." Also, The Arms Export Control Act and Export Administration Act was enacted..."following a determination that China had transferred M-11 missiles to Pakistan in the latter half of the 1990s..."

Now, however, all those have been waived, and even Pakistan's debt obligations to the IMF have been positively restructured in an effort to get the Pakistani government to join the coalition for Infinite Justice. Their reluctance manifested in the worst way as reports filtered out of Afghanistan that the US leaders did not want the Northern Alliance, Pakistan's enemy, to advance too quickly on Kabul.

For the first few weeks of the "war," the bombing campaign also seemed to betray an enormous restraint on the part of the military planners. It may be that the restraint was due to the need for an acceptable political solution between Pakistani cooperation and Northern Alliance control of the country. Due to that calculation and the delay in reaching a quick, clear-cut solution to the war, millions of Afghans will suffer immensely in the harsh, imminent winter.

If the Bush administration and Pentagon cannot provide a quick solution with minimal bloodshed, they should be doing all they can to provide aid to the innocent people hijacked by a terrible regime, rather than dropping a few sacks of rice for the nightly news.

The confusing web of alliances and promises that the U.S. is weaving will certainly be around a lot longer than the problems it was created to solve. More importantly, it may create more serious problems than it solves, as one could argue the Balfour Declaration does. Consider the relationship between India and Pakistan, both nuclear powers and militarily vying for power in Kashmir. Neither one would like to see the other gain favor from the United States, but that is exactly what India, "the world's largest democracy" and a common benefactor of American brown-nosing, has been seeing since Sept. 11. Recently, the rivalry between the two has been intensifying, and the threat of escalation into open conflict is real indeed.

What also is the war on terror doing to domestic life in the United States? It will be impossible for the establishment to fulfill their promises without vastly increasing both the size and presence of government, something that has been happening very quickly and with remarkably little audible dissent since Sept. 11. We should be very mindful of the type of leviathan we create to fight our war on terrorism, or we will end up with the modern Prometheus.

All over the world, in under two months, opinions are converging on one line of thought: that the United States has arrogantly and brutally pounded nations and peoples into submission while lecturing condescendingly to the same about their lack of moral virtue and a respect for human life. On Nov. 4, the Telegraph reported "The Chinese state-run propaganda machine is cashing in on the terror attacks in New York and Washington, producing books, films and video games glorifying the strikes as a humbling blow against an arrogant nation." Granted, the idea is not a new one, but we ourselves can prove it wrong today. In this post-New York Yankees world, we must act honorably, instead of bearing Craig Counsell in the bottom of the ninth.

The time for debate on this issue has passed, for we ourselves are the only ones fooled. Marx's observation that, "Perseus wore a magic cap so that the monsters he hunted down might not see him. We draw the magic cap down over our own eyes and ears so as to deny that there are any monsters," holds true here as well, and unless we garner the courage to remove it, everyone will pay dearly.

The Center for Nonproliferation Studies, CBSNews.com, the Pakistani Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and the United States Embassy Website were used in the writing of this column.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian Columnist.

Yankees hatred quenched:
Southwest riots filled with joy

REGAN MCKENDRY

It is inbred in every true New Englander. It is uncovered and exposed at around the same age when one learns reading and basic arithmetic. It is a lifelong passion that matters more than family loyalties and friendships. It is Yankee Hatred.

Everyone who has half a brain knows the story. Harry Frazee sells Babe Ruth to the Yankees to finance No No Nanette in 1918. Since then the Yankees have won 26 World Series titles, while the Sox have won a big fat zero. Along with all that Yankees' success has come Red Sox heartache: Bucky Dent and 1978 one game playoff (preceded by Boston's infamous September collapse); the 1999 ALCS with Chuck Knoblauch's "no tag" tag; and, of course, the 1986 World Series and Bill Buckner (that loss was to the New York Mets, but still).

Like any group with an inferiority complex, Red Sox fans revel in Yankee torment and suffer with each Yankee triumph. Chants of "Yankees Suck" may be heard all around the world of sports, made by people rooting against the biggest and best, but only Red Sox fans can do true justice to such a chant. And there is better place to celebrate one's Yankee hatred than right here at UMass in a little residential area known as Southwest.

As a four-year resident of the area, I've learned the ways of the city. When the Red Sox and/or Yankees are in the playoffs, fan rioting is a must. My first experience of this was the improbable come back of the Red Sox vs. the Cleveland Indians in the 1999 ALDS. Winning the best of five series after having been down two games to none, there was a riot attended by hundreds that paraded through campus ending in Southwest, where most of the residents were outside to celebrate. Immediately following that series was a Red Sox fan's dream: an ALCS game showdown within the Bronx Bombers. Though New York eventually won four games to one, there were some very iffy calls in the first two games, errors that determined the outcome of the game. Such calls led to an even larger gathering in the concrete jungle.

However, Sunday night's events eclipsed both of those events.

Southwest, for those of you who don't live here and have never experienced a riot, is perfectly designed for a loud display of Yankee hatred.

The area of the pyramids between John Quincy Adams, John Adams, and Washington, can accommodate crowds of hundreds of people with ease. The towers themselves make excellent birds eye viewing areas. What make a Southwest riot memorable though, are the other little things, mainly flying objects and fire.

The instant Luis Gonzalez hit a bloop single to left Sunday night, people began to congregate outside. At first there were only a hundred or two. Within ten minutes though the size had ballooned to roughly 700 to 800 people. Familiar chants of "[expletive] the Yankees" and "Yankees Suck" echoed among the towers. Toilet paper rained down from JQA and JA, with people launching rolls all over the place. Soon, plain paper was also dropped from JA and Washington, almost like confetti on the celebration below. The fires soon started with the toilet paper being lit. The celebration of the Yankees loss soon spilled into the realm of fire as well when a Derek Jeter poster was torched and a Yankees cap was burned to a crisp.

Sunday, though, the celebration was taken to another level, as many of us learned just how many kids in Southwest are the owners of fireworks. The majority of the explosions were simple firecrackers in the bonfire that had formed in the center of the crowd. Bottle rockets were also launched from a JA lounge, and someone sent a firework off the corner of JQA that looked like it belonged in a fourth of July celebration. The fireworks seemed to touch of a patriotic chord, as screams of "USA" and "[expletive] Bin Laden" were added into the mix of anti-Jeter shouts.

The piece de resistance was still ahead. For just as the fire was beginning to wane, a pair of guys raced to the center with a lounge couch and used it for firewood. The bonfire last night eclipsed the previous best these eyes had seen—a security desk being lit during the famed power outage and fire of April 2000. The couch ablaze was the plateau of the celebration. Soon an official made his way through the crowd and put the couch out, though little of it was left. The police, both on foot and horseback, began to disperse the crowd.

Why does Yankee hatred bring out such energy from people? The reasons I mentioned above are just the most extreme examples. The Yankee luck, or "mystique," as some New York fans would have you believe, just infuriates fans of other teams who are jealous and envious. Watching Jeter, Alfonso Soriano, Scott Brosius, and the rest of those pinstriped heartbreakers win games three and four in such an unbelievable fashion was too much to take. No team is that fortunate, except of course the Yankees.

Sunday night, though, it was Arizona and a couple of guys named Johnson and Schilling who put an end to the suffering that every Red Sox fan has endured since my freshman year of college. Even if UMass won the NCAA tournament, the group celebration would not be as large as one of the baseball riots, simply for the fact that Yankees hatred runs deep into one's soul.

I have watched baseball in many different places besides UMass: my home, a friend's house, a bar, and of course, in person at Fenway Park. Outside of sitting next to the Green Monster, UMass is the next best place to celebrate a Sox win. There is NO better place to celebrate a Yankees' loss than in the city of Southwest. On Sunday, people were taking pictures and videotaping the celebration. I wish I had a camcorder myself, because even retelling stories of such riots doesn't do them justice. They truly are a thing of beauty.

Next year will more than likely be my last at UMass. Hopefully, the Red Sox will break their curse then, but I know the odds say otherwise. I will say this though: if the Sox and Yankees ever again meet in the ALCS or, God willing, the Sox actually win another Fall Classic, I will be sure to be here in Southwest, celebrating and chanting along with all the others, expressing from deep within my Boston Pride and Yankee disdain.

Regan McKendry is a UMass student.

Passion is the key

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

DMX
The Great Depression
Def Jam

DILATED PEOPLES
Expansion Team
Capitol

For all of the fleeting traits that rappers reach so wide-eyed for: money, acclaim, respect, most of them neglect the fastest path to them: passion. People can recognize a burning heart. You can call up Nate Dogg or (insert female vocalist) and storm the charts if the planets are aligned, but for any kind of consistency or lasting effect its gonna take a lot more than the hand-me-down commercial training wheels.

And so it is with new drops from DMX and Dilated Peoples: where's the passion? You'd think DMX, with his continued commercial success, would be fresh out. Dilated Peoples, on the other hand, worship at the throne of hip-hop so piously that they would dare not try anything new or exciting that might desecrate the idols of two turntables and a microphone. The latter approach, by the way, will accelerate the death of hip-hop much faster than it will fuel its progression.

There's actually a good amount of passion in both records, and the fact that the majority lies in The Great Depression makes for an interesting look at the perpetual commercial vs. underground hip-hop war. DMX's latest takes some chances and maintains a pretty aggressive pace, but lacks some of the artsier flair of an underground record. Expansion Team (which has one of the coolest album covers of the year) raises the 'real hip-hop' flag high and features sporadically excellent production, but all too often along the way you'll wish MCs Iriscience and Evidence had a Biske more of the bite that X attacks with.

The Great Depression, DMX's fourth full-length, deviates little from the formula of his last effort, ...And Then There Was X, which isn't a bad thing, since that record was consistent if not mindblowing. Party anthems, street drama, and suspiciously bouncy beats tempered with X's deep growl are all par for the course, in addition to the trademark DMX flavoring particles like the 'prayer,' barks and assorted groans in the background, and some of the most ridiculous boasts in the business (Depression's contribution: "Wanna be playas?/ Stay in the park/ 'cuz the grown-ups is over here" from "Bloodline Anthem").

X's 'talking' style of rap has been criticized by those who don't consider it a 'real' flow, but when it sounds this good there's no use complaining. The best example of this is the standout track (and current single) "Who We Be." The forceful delivery and relentless beat make the subject matter that much more immediate, and when DMX gets down and dirty at the finish to actually grunt along with the music, you'll wish more rappers would make the effort to synthesize with their tunes. Similar surprises like the grimy guitars of "Bloodline Anthem" and the smooth drive of "Trina Moe" and "When I'm Nothing" will take your mind completely off Swizz Beatz (who doesn't appear until the last two tracks), and are enough to forgive the weaker tracks and make the album a success.

Meanwhile, Expansion Team's intimidating line-up of producers (The Alchemist, DJ Premier, Beatminerz) has trouble creating consistently memorable material. The 'minerz's "Trade Money" will put you right to sleep, Primo's "Clockwork" is simply serviceable, and Alchemist's stellar "Worst Comes To Worst" has him batting one for three on the album (with the awful "Panic" most certainly a strikeout).

Unfortunately, there's just no getting around the fact that Eviscience and Iriscience can be insanely boring and uncreative on the mic some of the time, no matter how energetic they are live. Flimsy beats and flimsy flows damn much of the album, but when they shine ("Worse," "Pay Attention"), as they did a good amount of time on their debut, they show a lot of potential. As it is, Expansion is best pillaged for a mix tape.

COURTESY BUCK

"Pay Attention," please. "Live on Stage," the "Dilated Junkies" are "Hard Hitters" that deliver "Proper Propaganda" in a "Heavy Rotation" of "Self Defense" "War" that moves like "Clockwork." Don't "Trade Money" during "Night Life" or else the "Worst Comes to Worst" and "Panic" will "Phil Da Agony."

PHOTO BY JEN SWARTZ/COLLEGIAN
COURTESY MTV

MTV's 'Beavis and Butt-Head' do UMass

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

"I want my MTV University!" Those are the words you may be hearing come Nov. 14.

In an effort to launch MTV University, a channel specifically geared towards college students, the music network will be touring UMass on Wednesday, Nov. 14, hoping to get a feel for the student body. Deployed camera crews will march up and down town, on and off campus, trying to capture sensational footage of a typical UMass weekday.

"If people want us to come to their fraternity, dorm, or bar we will show up there," said MTV University executive producer Morgan Hertzan excitedly. "We usually have a really good time. It's a lot of fun. People will definitely know we're there."

The University of Massachusetts was chosen as one of eight beta schools as a test for their new university initiative. So far, Hertzan and his crew have visited the campuses of the University of Connecticut, Rutgers University, Montclair State University, Pennsylvania State University, and Fordham University. MTV University will make its last two stops at the University of Georgia and the University of California-San Diego.

Hertzan said that the Pioneer Valley university was chosen for its "size, diversity, and geographic location. We just thought that you guys had a great student body and a great town."

The idea to create a college offspring of MTV came from a brainless concept that MTV executives had pondered for a while, Hertzan said.

"The reason we started this is because we care about college students. We feel like we have great stuff in our library that college students love. We have ten years of Spring Break archives. We have several seasons of 'Beavis and Butthead.' We want all of this stuff to be seen by that audience. We understand that you are an underserved audience, and we're hoping to solve that problem," Hertzan said.

MTV University will be similar to MTV but its demographic will be targeted to an older audience. The network will have shows specifically designed for the college student minus the programming they hate, like the bubble gum pop and the gloss and shine of the Backstreet Boys and Britney Spears, according to Hertzan.

"The reason for doing the pilot is to gauge interest," Hertzan said. If there is enough positive feedback, the new network will tentatively launch on Sept. 2002 and will air 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Hoping to cater to the interest of all college students, MTV University will incorporate different elements of MTV that have been popular on the network. "I think the emphasis will be on music and documentaries," Hertzan said, pointing out that it is said type of programming which draws the most liking.

The documentaries will mostly revolve around the tastes of college students — sex, drugs and nightlife, to name a few. A selection of new and old music videos popular among college students will also air.

Hertzan is asking students for their feedback of MTV University. The program can be seen through December in its pilot stages three times a week on Channel 9 on the Housing Services Cable Network lineup.

"I think this is a great opportunity for college students," Hertzan said. "It's like a TV democracy. You can tell us what you'd like to see, shows and TV documentaries, and we can play them. Do you have a favorite 'Beavis and Butthead'? We can play that for you!"

MTV will be looking for all types of people ready to star in front of the camera. "If anyone at UMass has ever wanted to be on TV, this is their opportunity," Hertzan said.

Bars have expressed anticipation of a possible MTV drop in.

"We would be honored if MTV came to the Hangar," said Pat Daly, co-owner of the Hangar, 55 University Drive. "We just hope the Backstreet Boys and P. Diddy won't be acting up," he later quipped.

"All the southern colleges get all the press," said O'Brien Tomalin, manager of Amherst Brewing Company, 24 North Pleasant Street. "It'll be great to see New England getting rocked by MTV."

Bill Boyce, a junior Journalism major, interned at MTV during the summer and helped develop and format the idea of MTV University. "They're excited about this and they want this to really take off," Boyce said. He also claims that the individuals at MTV are the "best in music and television. They're at the top of the line."

Other students are also looking forward to MTV's arrival. "MTV is awesome," said Nicole Bourassa, a sophomore Landscape Architecture major. "We're all from the 80s generation; we all grew up on MTV. I'd love for them to come to UMass."

Matt Landolt, a junior Biology major agrees. "It'll be great for them to benefit from a large University such as ours," he said.

Any students interested in being on MTV University, or would simply like to offer feedback on the network, are encouraged to contact MTV at MTVUniversity@MTV.com.

Randolph and the Family Band rock Pearl Street

By Dave Siegel
Collegian Staff

ROBERT RANDOLPH AND THE FAMILY BAND
Pearl Street Clubroom
Nov. 1

In the music industry, there is an interesting phenomenon known simply as the "buzz." By definition, the buzz is praise and appreciation about a musician or band spread through word of mouth as well as through detailed discussion across the Internet. Arguably the biggest buzz going around the jamband scene right now is regarding the very young and talented Robert Randolph playing with his Family Band. Last Thursday evening I, as well as about 150 others, packed into the smaller clubroom at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. This show was simply breathtaking, as I left completely amazed at what I had just witnessed.

Randolph is a 24-year-old musical prodigy. Growing up in northern New Jersey, the House of God church became a significant part of his life. The services of this denomination have as its centerpiece the "Sacred Steel" – pedal and lap steel guitars. The pedal steel is a very fascinating instrument as it consists of 13 guitar strings wound to a guitar neck and attached to a four-legged stand. Running down the backside of the instrument are a number of pedals, which modify the pitch of the strings. The lap steel is played with both hands. One hand picks the melody using finger picks (much like the kind banjo players use), while the other hand runs up and down the strings with a metal slide-like instrument. The sound that reverberates off of this instrument is simply mind-blowing as Randolph's hands ran up and down the strings creating a very passionate blues sound.

Having been discovered by the jamband community in the spring of 2000 at the first annual "Sacred Steel" convention in Florida, Randolph quickly assembled a band of his cousins to hit the road.

This show, originally to be played upstairs in the larger ballroom was surprisingly moved to the smaller, basement-like clubroom. I am very glad that it was moved downstairs, as it would have been more than half empty upstairs. The smaller venue also enabled a very intimate performance allowing the band to feed off of the crowd's energy and vice versa. The high energy level for this show was evident from the very beginning with a tight jam showing what was to come with Randolph's impressive showmanship and stage presence. Tearing through a few country blues tunes, the passion with which Robert Randolph plays was quite evident. Rearing back into his folding chair with his head thrown back, he virtuoistically delivered solo after solo on his amazing personalized instrument. All the way through the show, the band was having just as much fun as the crowd was. Rounding out the Family Band were cousins Marcus Randolph on drums, Danyell Morgan on bass and pseudo-cousin John Ginty on Hammond B-3 organ.

Robert Randolph is the total package. He plays amazing lap steel, sings, directs the band as well as entertains the crowd with his high energy dancing, ensuring some great audience participation. One such occasion came during the song "The March," when Randolph stands up, mid song, dancing and teaches the crowd the dance of the same name. The spirited set continued with another danceable number titled "Shake Your Hips," which concluded with Randolph singing the final words atop his amplifier. The set continued quite impressively through a few more intense bluesy numbers before hitting its climax with a steamy version of Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile," a cover that Randolph is almost expected to play every show. Not only because it is a great song, but also because it highlights the great potential of this band; demonstrating tight jamming connected to a mesmerizing lap steel hook. The set ended with "I Don't Know What You Come To Do," another danceable song with some great crowd participation.

Overall, I thought this was an amazing show. Robert Randolph is an extremely talented musician who we will definitely be hearing about in the future. The people at this show are fortunate that we got an "on" night, as I have heard that some of their performances are not as lively. Without a doubt, would I see Robert Randolph and the Family Band again? Next time I would only hope that Electric Blue and the Kosmik Truth do not open because they simply took away time that could have been given to Randolph and the band.

'The One' isn't the one

COURTESY OF KAREN HILL

Jet Li (shown here in Romeo Must Die) follows the failing path of other action flick stars in The One.

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

THE ONE
Directed by James Wong
Starring Jet Li
Playing at Cinemark 12 in Hadley

If Jet Li isn't careful, he'll wind up the next Jean-Claude Van Damme. Li was the best thing about the otherwise mediocre Lethal Weapon IV and his breakthrough hit Romeo Must Die was a solid, if conventional, action film.

However, his most recent projects leave us wondering if Li really could be an American action star. Kiss of the Dragon was a dull bore, and now there's The One, a sci-fi action flick that adopts the trite premise of having the hero fight himself. This is the same unsuccessful premise that has stymied other genre stars – including Van Damme (Double Impact and Maximum Risk), Jackie Chan (Twin Dragons), and, most recently Arnold Schwatzenegger (The 6th Day).

The One cribs shamelessly from The Matrix for it's special effects and plot centered around parallel universes. But what was innovative then, is, after countless parodies and rip-offs, rote now. The spiritual depth inherent in The Matrix is lacking in the standard-issue screenplay.

The dazzling aura of you-gotta-see-this awe has been replaced by a repetitive series of chases, crashes and fistfights. At the outset, a narrator (sounding suspiciously like William Shatner) solemnly reveals that are not one, but 125 universes making up a network called the Multiverse. In each one there is a different version of yourself. Unauthorized travel between universes is illegal and patrolled by the Multiverse Police Agency.

Li takes on three foes, though one is killed in the beginning. Yulaw (bad Li) has traversed the universes killing off his other "selves." Each time one dies, their power is divided evenly amongst the others. Yulaw has killed 123 duplicates – increasing his strength to superhuman levels – and is looking for his last target, a sheriff's deputy named Gabe (good Li) in our universe. If Gabe is killed, then Yulaw will become an omnipotent, God-like one.

The One is from the team of Glen Morgan and James Wong (Morgan produces, Wong directs; both write), best known for some of the most critically acclaimed episodes of The X Files. They're also the creators of last year's creepy horror hit Final Destination. This stands as their weakest project to date.

Delroy Lindo and Carla Gugino are given nothing to do in shallow supporting roles (Lindo brought dramatic heft to Romeo, but he fails to do so here.) Li, as an actor, is rather blank here. The dialogue is dead on arrival. The script is full of yawning plot holes. The special effects are merely adequate. But hey, at least the movie runs only a little more than 80 minutes.

The big selling point for The One is the climactic battle between the two Lis. Many of the fights are seen-it-before duels backed by a head-it-before techno-metal soundtrack. The Lis's himself is no exception. The filmmakers even cheat by not even giving us the semblance of Li fighting himself, always shooting one or the other from the back.

By the way, isn't tracking up a talented martial artist with computer effects kind of like giving basketball pointers to Michael Jordan? This "One" sadly comes up zero.

Living the high life

By Shauna Billings
Collegian Staff

This is for all the tall people of UMass... the people who walk down the street and have random strangers stop them and say, "Do you play basketball?" Just once, I'd like to turn to that person and say, "Gosh, you're short... are you a jockey?" But that would be rude of me.

Since this is a column about style and image, I just want to ask all the Shorty McGees out there, why do you feel the need to single someone out? Isn't their head sticking above all the other people's head sticking out enough? Do you really need to call attention to their Goliath stature? Don't get me wrong; I adore being 6'1"... I wouldn't change it for the world. But I would like people to stop looking at my shoes when they first meet me, and for once can't someone guess that I was a swimmer and a runner in high school, not the basketball team's star center?

My mom tells me that people comment on height because it's a good thing... that it's actually a compliment, and a conversation starter. But this is the same mom that told me if I ignored this kid Eddie in third grade, he would stop trying to kiss me in the playground (Keep in mind I ended up having to come to school swinging a purse full of baseballs to get him to leave me alone). So, most may have complimentary intentions, but it still singles the person out... and then there are always those who are just plain rude about it.

Take when I had an internship at a Northampton newspaper a year and a half ago. I stopped into a store to grab some tea before work, and a woman turned around, her face contorted in disgust, looked at my shoes, and said, "Oh my god. You are ridiculously tall. Why in the hell would you wear shoes like that? You look like a freak." That comment definitely made me feel great about my outfit that day. I left like Andre the Giant all day.

Bald people and heavy-set people feel my pain. It seems in this world of attempted correctness; we're the last group of people that it's okay to make fun of. And not only do tall people get teased... but we also get ignored by the clothing and shoe companies, who often don't make products that fit our statuesque statures.

My poor mother had the worst time clothing us as children: my brother Donovan is 6-foot-7-inches with size 16 feet, Zac is 6-foot-3-inches with size 14 feet, and then I am a fabulous two(!) 6-foot-1-inch with a shoe size that will go unmentioned (a girl's got to have her secrets, right?). Today, Donovan and I still have trouble getting the clothes and shoes we want – Zac lucked out, being on the edge of normalcy.

Finding pants would be one of the major problems for us girls – but no tall length jeans and pants. Lerner, Express, GAP and Abercrombie all make pants in long lengths. These are long enough for most, but to all my truly tall girls – check out JCREW's catalog and website. JCREW carries pants with 35 inch inseams. Other catalogs that have long lengths, but often have not the most hip clothing are Lands End, LL Bean, JC Penny and Newport News.

Shirts and skirts are not such a problem as pants are. But tall girls know, that most shirts will show their bellies, most sleeves will look three-quarter length, and the hips of skirts will puff out between an Amazonian girl's waist and hips. Solutions? Some stores do sell tall length shirts – like JCREW and Newport News. For everything else, buy a size larger than what you usually wear, or do some crunches and roll up your sleeves and embrace the belly baring and forearm showing styles. If you hunt long enough, you'll find shirts that work. For skirts, it's also better to buy a size up, and let the skirt sit low on your waist... that way the hips fall at the right place. Or buy skirts that are stretchy instead of fitted, and you'll have no problem with the hips in the wrong place.

Shoes are the absolute bane of my existence. My one quest in life is to find a pair of tall black boots with low heels. Impossible! I finally found a pair on the Internet this morning, but they were sold out of black, and only had a pair of brown left. OUCH! But there is hope for shoes, girls, it just unfortunately is going to cost more. Payless Shoe Source carries up to 12 in its store, and up to 15 online – and thankfully those shoes are dirt-cheap. Designershoes.com sells shoes for "women who leave a larger footprint", as does Statuesque.com, Cloudwalkers.com and Nordstroms... but these shoes will cost.

Guys – I feel your pain too, as my brothers are constantly complaining to me about shopping for stuff. However, guys are a little luckier than girls, because most shopping complexes do have a Men's Big and Tall store. No such luck for the ladies. As with the women, JCREW, L.L. Bean and Lands End all sell tall size clothing. Eddie Bauer and Brooks Brothers also carry quality duds for the tall guys as well. For shoes, Nordstrom, Payless, Zappos.com and Vans all carry bigger shoes – and then there are always all those sneaker companies.

While I'd never change my height, I would like to give all the shorties out there a little advice: It's not big, it's tall. The weather up here is fine. We're not all NBA superstars. And if I want to wear some heels, suck it up.

COURTESY STEPHEN VAUGHN

Okay, so in this one example, the tall guy actually does play basketball... but could you all stop asking those of Goliath stature about their sports history?

Live and Work in Japan Next Year on
The JET Program!
-Work in a Japanese public school or city office
-Share your own culture while learning about Japan
-Japanese language is not required for most positions
-Applicants must hold a Bachelor's degree by June 30, 2002. Only US citizens may apply in the US
-Application deadline for the next program session, which begins in late July 2001, is December 5, 2001.
Japan Exchange and Teaching Program
Information Session:
Thursday, November 8 at 6:00pm
The University Club
Questions? Call the Japanese Consulate in Boston:
617 973-9772 x122
JET is an annual program--all students are welcome to attend the information session.

McMurphy's
positive id
no cover
tuesday's: 10-1

It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available
DUBLIN $95
LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121
MILAN $132
FARES ARE ONE WAY. ROUND TRIP FARES ALSO AVAILABLE
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL www.counciltravel.com
Call 24 hrs. 8am Tues. Nov 6 - 2am Fri. Nov 9 & 10am - 7pm Sat. Nov 10

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST/HADLEY • 256-0011
Hours: Sun.-Weds. 11 a.m.-1 a.m.
Thurs.-Sat. 11 a.m.-4 a.m.
WE TAKE THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
FREE PIZZA
TWO FOR TUESDAY
FREE
TUESDAYS ONLY
Expires 3/30/02
CARRY OUT
DELIVERY

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
MONSTERS INC (G)1:20 1:40 2:20 3:00 4:40 5:20 7:00 7:40 8:20 10:00*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 12:15 4:10 800 10:00*
THE ONE (R) 12:30 4:50 7:10 9:30*
K-PAK (PG13) 12:10 4:30 7:20 9:50*
13 GHOSTS (R) 12:40 4:15 7:30 10:00*
ON THE LINE (PG) 12:20 4:20*
FROM HELL (R) 12:00 3:00 7:20 10:00
THE LAST CASTLE (R) 7:00 10:00
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1:35 4:15 7:20 10:05
CORKY ROMANO (PG13) 1:30 3:40
BANDITS (PG13) 4:05 10:10
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 1:05 4:00 7:45
TRAINING DAY (R) 4:00 7:00
ZOOLANDER (PG13) 1:25 7:15
THE OTHERS (PG13) 1:10
SENIOR MOVIE NOV 5
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS DOORS OPEN AT 11AM!
*NO Passholder/Discounts
cinemark.com

PENN GRADUATE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
What are you looking for in a Graduate School?
Chances are we have it!
Penn GSE offers Doctoral (Ph.D. & Ed.D.) and Master's degrees in:
Education, Culture and Society
Educational Leadership
Educational Linguistics
Educational Policy
Higher Education Management
Intercultural Communication
Interdisciplinary Studies in Human Development
Policy Research, Evaluation, and Measurement Psychological Services*
Reading/Writing/Literacy*
Elementary & Secondary Teacher Education*
Teaching, Learning and Curriculum
Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages
School, Community, and Clinical Child Psychology
Dual Degree with School of Arts and Sciences*
Executive Ed.D. in Higher Education Management
Mid-Career Ed.D. in Educational and Organizational Leadership
*State certification available
APA accredited

Harvard denies the sweep

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Russ Yarworth isn't panicking.

Neither is his Massachusetts men's water polo team, though it suffered a tough loss to Harvard at the Collegiate Water Polo Association's Northern Division playoffs in Providence, R.I. this weekend.

Harvard	6
UMass	5

After handily defeating the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Connecticut College on Friday night and Saturday morning, respectively, UMass lost the magic touch against Harvard.

The Crimson, who the Minutemen had beaten in all three previous meetings this season, earned the win with a strong second half, outscoring UMass 4-2. After leading throughout the first half, a battered and beleaguered Maroon and White team came out flat in the second, and lost 6-5.

"We were totally out of sync on offense, and we couldn't penetrate [Harvard's] defense," Yarworth said.

The Maroon and White was battling under tough circumstances, without senior standout Greg Trayer for the whole weekend. Also, nagging injuries bothered team leaders Carlos Ramos and Mike Foley.

"Not being able to play Foley was significant," Yarworth said. "And Carlos was out of most of the action with a bad shoulder."

Foley, Ramos, and Trayer contributed 88 goals to the Minutemen offense this season. "Losing your top three scorers is definitely a handful," Yarworth said.

However, don't think that anyone on the Minuteman roster is hanging his head over the loss. And no one should. The Northern division playoffs are only a stepping stone, and UMass achieved the most important goal: a spot in the Eastern Championships.

"I'm not alarmed at all," Yarworth said. "In fact I'm very encouraged about our young players. The team was not real pleased with themselves... [but] it's hard to beat [Harvard] four times in a row."

Only two weeks ago, UMass took care of the Crimson with an impressive 9-6 victory at home. Before that, the Minutemen had outscored Harvard 15-12 in the two prior contests.

On Friday night, UMass defeated MIT 12-1, and followed up Saturday morning with another impressive win, beating Connecticut College 8-1. The loss to Harvard was, as Yarworth put it, "just a little bump in the road."

Now, the Minutemen have two weeks to mend their wounds, and prepare for the Eastern Championship. UMass will begin the title run with a matchup against Princeton, one of only three teams to beat the Maroon and White this season.

"I'm confident in our game plan," Yarworth said. "We're just going to start with Princeton, and hopefully take it one at a time after that."

The injury bug will be the first thing to overcome, and the two-week hiatus should be enough to get everyone back to health.

"We'll get healed, and have no more aches and pains," Yarworth said.

UMass travels to Princeton, N.J., in two weeks to face the host Tigers. After that, the Minutemen will most likely have to go through the Golden Gaels of Queens, who also handed them a tough loss this season. However, the Maroon and White will focus on Princeton first, and then try to gain some steam for the final push to playoff glory.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

An injury kept senior Mike Foley (No. 7) from playing this weekend at the Northern Division Championships which ended with a 6-5 loss to Harvard.

Flyers aid in kill

By Jim Pignatiello
Collegian Staff

Just 10 short days before, the two teams were in a tie for first place, but Friday's matchup was about survival for the Massachusetts women's soccer team, and pride for the Dayton Flyers. And the pride won out at Totman Field.

Dayton	2
UMass	1

"I'm disappointed for the other players because this was a great opportunity for them," UMass Head Coach Jim Rudy said. "It was there, it was winnable."

A beautiful centering pass from Dayton's Sarah Walker perfectly set up Bridget Bushman for a wide-open header at 75:11 that beat UMass goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky and gave the Flyers a 2-1 victory.

The Flyers got on the board first in the 24th minute when Tesia Kozlowski hooked a deep left-footed shot just in between Podhrasky's outstretched hands and the crossbar.

"That thing just dipped in," Rudy said. "It ended up being a great goal."

The goal meant bad news for Rudy's squad, as his team had not come from behind to even tie a game all season long.

Maroon and White senior Brooke Bartlett came to life after the goal. The midfielder's moves had the Dayton defenders dropping like flies and her centering passes were continually hitting the mark, but none resulted in a goal and UMass headed into the break down 1-0.

"Everyone came to life in the second half," Rudy said. "Brooke, [sophomore Erin] Lilly, [freshman Stephanie] Santos."

The Minutewomen scored their first game-tying goal of the season less than one minute into the second half when Lilly emerged from a pack of defenders and drilled the ball into the bottom left of the goal. Bartlett and Santos were credited with assists on the play.

Flyers keeper Stephanie Weisenfeld was credited with just three saves on the day, but one was a gorgeous diving save on a Santos shot that looked destined to give the Maroon and White the lead.

"[Santos] is the one you want on the ball there," Rudy said.

Dayton's game-winner came 20 minutes later and extended UMass' losing streak to three straight.

■ msoccer

continued from page 10

up the game with his second goal of the day after a free kick landed in the net, flying just under the crossbar.

But just one minute into overtime, Xavier slipped one past goalkeeper Bryan O'Quinn to end the last game of the regular season.

"We made a few mistakes that they cashed in on," Head Coach Sam Koch said.

Freshmen made up a large part of the starting roster on Sunday to make up for the missing injured. Koch said that the rookies worked to battle back early in the game.

"I wasn't disappointed in the performance," Koch said. The weekend didn't start off too hot for the Minutemen, as they fell to Dayton in a shutout, losing Lytton and Pounces in the process.

"We didn't play well Friday," Koch said. "We struggled but we still kept it a close game."

It took Dayton 48 minutes to score the only goal of the game.

"We certainly had chances to win," Koch said. "They scored a good goal."

The Minutemen will work through the week on getting the team healthy and ready for the weekend. UMass will play in the second game of the A-10 tournament at Dayton on Friday.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Martin Burwell, holding off a defender.

COURTESY GENE BERLIN

Lindsay Abbot, the A-10 Championship's Most Outstanding Player, netted the game-winner versus Richmond and opened the scoring against West Chester.

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

the Maroon and White not only during the tournament but throughout its season as well. The team had gone seven games without a penalty corner goal heading into the weekend, with two major factors seemingly to blame: UMass graduated two-thirds of its unit from last season, and a new rule this year requires an elaborate stop and transfer of the ball before the shot on corners.

A third factor came into play at Temple Stadium this weekend, as the conference's four top dogs had to contend with a bumpy, dry turf field. Such a surface wreaks havoc on corners because the ball sticks to the surface on pushes and tends to bounce once it does pick up steam. Of the nine penalty corners attempted by UMass and Richmond during regulation of their tourney-opening game, three ended in botched pushes and three more were marred by errors on the stop.

How critical were those mistakes? The three corners that went off without a hitch resulted in a goal for each team and the save of a lifetime by UMass keeper Ashley Egland.

The last of those corners came with a mere second-and-a-half left in regulation and the Minutewomen on the short end of a 1-0 score. It was then that senior Kaitlyn Byron, who was responsible for both of her team's botched pushes, stepped aside and let a teammate take over the first leg of the p.c. pyramid. Co-captain Jill Fantasia's push was picture perfect, and Anke Bruemmer socked home the unlikely equalizer.

"The dry turf was becoming a factor, and Kaitlyn was struggling with it," Fantasia said. "It takes a lot of guts to admit something like that in a pressure situation and ask for help."

Despite the urgency of the situation, Bruemmer maintained that a clear head was what kept her aim true and breathed new life into her team.

"As a team leader in a pressure situation like that, you just have to stay focused," said the senior. "When you're about to hit it, you can't think about it as do-or-die. It has to be just another corner, like you practice."

Corners were the story again on Sunday against West Chester, when Golden Ram Kate Randle executed the same set play twice in a row to stake Richmond to a 2-1 lead in the second half. The sophomore captain used a strong-side delay shot on corners at both the 30:34 and 19:41 marks to push UMass back to the elimination brink.

The Minutewomen earned the corners they needed to come back down the stretch, but once again had trouble with clean transfers on the rough surface. It took another miracle corner, this one with a mere 2:31 left in regulation, for UMass to extend its championship run to another overtime set.

Junior Stacey Blue earned the penalty by slashing in from the left side and drawing illegal contact from a Golden Ram defender. Maroon and White freshman Ashley Gilbert's ensuing shot was blocked, but the ball stayed within the West Chester circle and Fantasia was able to launch a sprawling prayer that somehow found the back of the goal.

"I was falling when I shot it, and I didn't even think it would clip the net," Fantasia said. "When it went in, I was on the ground face-planting."

It was only fitting for a tourney run sustained so heavily by corners to be capped by one, and the extra set of the finals did not disappoint. UMass earned its twelfth corner of the contest after peppering the West Chester circle and finally hitting a Golden Ram foot, and Bruemmer lined up with a little more on her mind than locking up the fourth A-10 title of her career.

The German sweeper needed to find the enemy net only once more to reach 50 goals in a UMass uniform. Despite the clarity she had sworn by the day before, Bruemmer admitted that the milestone was indeed on her mind in what could have been the final game of her career.

"People had been talking about it to me," said Bruemmer, who hadn't scored a goal in 10 games prior to the tournament. "Maybe that's what had kept me from scoring for so long, the fact that [reaching 50] had been in the back of my mind."

A perfect push and a sensational stop later, Bruemmer propelled both herself and her team to glory by lighting up the scoreboard yet again. And as the rest of the field packed up its bags and consolation prizes, UMass finally stepped out of its corner and celebrated.

Adam White is a Collegian columnist.

■ fhockey

continued from page 10

who wants it more."

In the semifinals against Richmond, the Minutewomen stopped a Spider corner, only to see it called back because of a defensive false start 15 minutes into the contest. With the new life, Erika Cohen banana shot the ball by Maroon and White netkeeper Ashley Egland to give her team the one-goal lead.

Things remained scoreless from that point until Bruemmer's miraculous tally, and it was Egland who was responsible for keeping the game close. Time and time again in the later stages of the game, Richmond mounted offensive rallies, only to see them stopped by the sophomore goalie.

Egland's most impressive save of a good bunch came with seven minutes left in regulation, when she scissor-kicked a Spider corner shot back out of the circle. In addition, Egland was able to keep A-10 leading scorer Heather Rice from tallying, a task not many teams have been able to accomplish.

However, even though Rice was arguably the conference's most dangerous player coming into the tourney, UMass did not come up with a special strategy to contain her.

"To be honest, the entire first game I didn't even know who Heather Rice was," said Egland, referring to her squad's 2-1 victory over the Spiders on Oct. 27. "I just play her like any other player."

In Sunday's championship game with West Chester, the Minutewomen got off to an outstanding start when Abbott poked a loose ball into the opposition's goal midway through the first half.

The Golden Rams answered in the beginning of the second frame however, as a lill Posen corner shot was deflected by Kate Randle into the net less than five minutes in.

Slightly more than 10 minutes later, West Chester ran the same play off another corner opportunity, and this time, Posen's shot went untouched into the Maroon and White cage to make the score 2-1. Until Fantasia tied the game 17 minutes later, that is how the score would remain.

At the conclusion of the tournament, forward Stacey Blue, back Heather Kenney, Bruemmer and Abbott were all named to the all-tournament team. Abbott also garnered the Most Outstanding Player of the tourney award, as she knocked home two goals and dished out an assist on the weekend.

For Bruemmer, it was yet another award to add to her collection, as she was named Defensive Player of the Year at the A-10 banquet on Friday. The senior sweeper, along with Fantasia, was also a part of the all-conference team.

Now, with their awards in hand, the Minutewomen look ahead to their sixth straight NCAA tournament, which will begin next weekend. Tonight, they will find out where and whom they are playing, as they look to advance to their first Final Four since 1992.

"We have great momentum and great confidence," Shea said. "These were the first games all season where we came back and won – we just have to keep pressing and do whatever it takes."

Shea's squad will head into the tourney with an 11-9 (8-0 A-10) record, and a conference streak still intact.

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL OF AMERICA
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

FLORIDA INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY IS OFFERING A JANUARY INTERSESSION ON SOUTH BEACH DURING YOUR WINTER BREAK.
FIU Florida International University

Night Graphics, the backbone of Collegian Sports.

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES FUTONS BEDS ETC
"BYOB"
THE SLEEP BE FREE GROUP HOUSE CERTIFIED LIVING

Pelham Auto Service 253-9302
Route 9 at Belchertown/Amherst line
Specializing in Repairs on:
• VW • Subaru • Nissan
• Toyota • Honda • Mazda
• And other Imported Cars
On the PVTA Bus Line • Serving Students Since 1972

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Sigma Delta Tau would like to congratulate and welcome its newest sisters! Jen Barta, Tami Baruch, Samantha Berg, Meredith Brown, Alexis Carlton, Amanda Gardner, Melyssa Gleason, and Laura Hollander

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Cliffside on busline. Great location. Available Jan 1. Call Adrena 413-397-0978

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490 $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders 527-0389

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities • Sororities Clubs • Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Janitor Tues./Thurs. mornings. 10hrs/week, $9/hr. plus membership. Hampshire Fitness Club 256-6446

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo. pt/ft, 888-701-5105. Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Legal Assistants Wanted Spring 2002 INTERNSHIPS with the Student Legal Services Office; get hands-on experience in the legal field—work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession necessary—training provided Contact the Student Legal Services Office today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center. www.FluidVisions.com

FOR SALE

Les Paul Copy Guitar Good condition and practice amp for sale $150. Call 546-3029

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee

INSTRUCTION

Private Boxing Lessons with retired pro. Djata Bumpus in Amherst, call 413-731-1450

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

non-smoking female roommate wanted. Large apartment in Holyoke. $300/month + 1/2 utilities. 532-7959

SERVICES

Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to UMass fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

SERVICES

Dating and Relationship questions answered at askdoclove.com

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break – Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $459. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group – earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Early Spring Break Specials! Cancun & Jamaica From $389! Air, Hotel, Free Meals, Drinks! Award Winning Company! Group Leaders Free! Florida Vacations $129! springbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Best Prices Guaranteed! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas & Florida. Sell Trips, Earn cash & Go Free! Now hiring Campus Reps. 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummer-tours.com

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (earlybirds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/online-mall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

Need a roommate?? Need some place to live?? Want to get out of the dorms?? Need your apartment?? Call the Collegian TODAY 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

00	HSCN Bulletin Board
24	CBS 3 Hartford
25	CBS 3 Boston
57	ABC 40 Springfield
58	FOX 61 Springfield
59	WGBH Boston
60	WGBX Boston
61	Fox 25 Boston
62	Fox 61 Hartford
63	NBC 22 Springfield
64	Independent Channel
65	UMASS (Academic Channel)
66	WTNH New Haven
67	WWLP
68	UHF
69	UMASS TV (Academic Channel)
70	Weather Channel
71	Good to Travel
72	C-Span
73	CNN
74	CNN Headline News
75	Lifetime
76	USA
77	TBS
78	TNT
79	ESPN
80	ESPN 2
81	Sci-Fi
82	Discovery
83	Nogin
84	Cinemax Network
85	Nick at Nite
86	TV Land
87	Comedy Central
88	BET
89	Univision
90	Bloomberg Financial Network
91	College TV Network
92	MTV
93	MTV2
94	VH1
95	The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 6, 2001

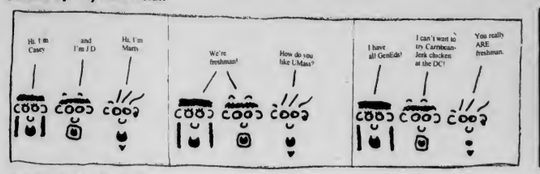
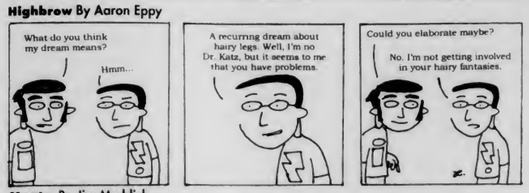
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova (N) (In Stereo)		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N)		Connecticut Journal
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Ambush" (In Stereo)		Guardian "Feeding Frenzy"		Judging Amy "Imbroglio" (N)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "Ambush" (In Stereo)		Guardian "Feeding Frenzy"		Judging Amy "Imbroglio" (N)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Spin City (N) (In Stereo)		NYPD Blue "Lie Like a Rug/Johnny Got His Gold" (N)		News		Nightline
WLVI	56	Nanny	Just Shoot Me	Friends	Raymond	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "X-Ray" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Raymond
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood	Extra (N)	Three Sisters (N) (In Stereo)		Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Deteline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends	Just Shoot Me	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Smallville "X-Ray" (In Stereo)		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Three Sisters (N) (In Stereo)		Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Deteline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Friends	Seinfeld	Raymond	70s Show	Simpsons	24 "12 Midnight - 1:00 AM"		News		Seinfeld	Raymond
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Three Sisters (N) (In Stereo)		Frasier (N)	Scrubs (N)	Deteline (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With	Jim Lehrer	Nova (N) (In Stereo)		Scientific American Frontiers		Local News (N)		News	Nightline
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Spin City (N) (In Stereo)		NYPD Blue "Lie Like a Rug/Johnny Got His Gold" (N)		News		5th Wheel	Shipmates
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	News	Frasier	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Roswell "Control" (In Stereo)	Ent. Tonight	Frasier		Inside NBA
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Friends	NBA Basketball: Orlando Magic at San Antonio Spurs. (Live)						"Boys N the Hood" (1991)
A&E	51	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Prisoner of Love"		Biography "Harry S. Truman"		Investigative Reports (N)		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Securitate"
CNN	29	Moneyline (N)		Wolf Blitzer	Crossfire	The Point (N)		Larry King Live		CNN Special Report		Greenfield	Moneyline
COM	23	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★★ "Airplane!" (1980, Comedy)		Robert Hays, Julie Hagerty...		Battlebots	Battlebots	Daily Show	Friars Club
DISC	32	Wild Discovery	Nightraiders	Wild Discovery	Queen-Killers	New Detectives "Family Picks"		New Detectives "Dead Wrong"		FBI Files "Manhunt"		Justice Files
ESPN	27	Sportscenter		NFL Films Presents (N)		College Football: Western Michigan at Toledo. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	26	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Delta Burke"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Killing Secret" (1997, Suspense) Ari Meyers.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	28	Direct Effect	Who Knows?	Spankin' New Pop (In Stereo)		Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers	Cheers	Dismissed (N)	Total Britney
NICK	63	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats	Rugrats	Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch		Cheers	Cheers	Family Ties	Family Ties
SCIFI	35	Star Trek "Dagger of the Mind"		Law & Order	Babylon 5 (In Stereo)	Farscape "A Clockwork Nebari"		Outer Limits		Star Trek "Dagger of the Mind"		Crossing Over	Crossing Over
TLC	52	Death Defying Thrills		Medical Detect	Medical Detect	I Witness (N)		David Blaine: Street Magic		Atlantis: The Lost Continent		I Witness
TNT	25	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)		Pretender "Scott Free"		Law & Order "Slamdot"		Law & Order "Deep Vote"		Charmed (In Stereo)		★★ "Losing Miniesota" (1996)
USA	33	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo)	Queen-Killers	Nash Bridges "Lap Dance"		"The Diamond of Jeru" (2001, Adventure) Billy Zane.				"The Diamond of Jeru" (2001)
HBO	43	Artists' Spec.	★½ "Anna and the King" (1999, Drama) Jodie Foster. (In Stereo)		PG-13			★★ "Miss Congeniality" (2000, Comedy) Sandra Bullock. PG-13				Band of Brothers (In Stereo)
MAX	44	(5:50) ★★★ "Any Given Sunday"	(1999, Drama) Al Pacino. (In Stereo)		R		★½ "Whiteboyz" (1999) Danny Hoch.		R	★★ "The Patriot" (2000, Drama)		Mel Gibson. (In Stereo)	R
SHOW	55	★★ "Cheech & Chong's The Corsican Brothers" (1984)		TV	PG	★★½ "Jumanji" (1995, Fantasy)		Robin Williams. PG		Resurrection Blvd. (TV)		Queer as Folk (TV)	(In Stereo)



FoxTrot By Bill Amend

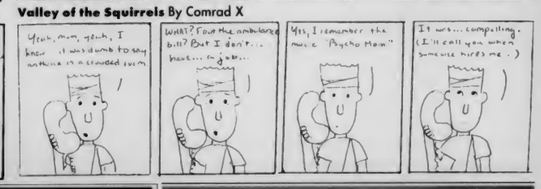
Monty By Jim Meddick



Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Monty By Jim Meddick

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy



Scarecrow By W. Bird

Monty By Jim Meddick

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Staten Island isn't under a rock!"

–Overheard

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 50 LOW: 30	HIGH: 57 LOW: 30	HIGH: 54 LOW: 32

IT'S COLLEGIAN LOVE DAY...AGAIN. BEAR WITH US.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Do you like Prince? Try calling Catherine "C.S." Turner. Not only does C.S. do a mean Ed Lover dance, she will be the King Lobster in your ocean. Reach C.S. at dancingqueen6@princess.ed.com

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Do you like movies "of a different genre?" Do you like the bell-shaped hair style? Arts Editor Mike Delano is the man for you. Not only is he the expert on Italian dramas, he drinks the "Afterburner" sauce from Wings like it's water. Reach Mike D. at 1-9494 MACHINE-HEAD.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Are your negatives "overdeveloped?" Can you strike a pose? Is your name often spelled wrong? Tibi Gwynn-Blum, P.E. (Photo Editor), is the ONLY California Girl for you. You can usually find Tibi in the darkroom, with the lights off.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Are you a disgruntled New Englander? Do you often suffer from "Hangover Paranoia?" Ken "Our Second Most Popular Model" Campbell is the Collegian Columnist for you. Reach Ken at ihaschippies@som.com

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Do you enjoy videotaping your co-workers? Listen to me. Shimauli Dave is the girl for you. Not only will she manage your production, she'll tell you the good and evils of your personality. Reach Shimauli at 1-999-GRAPHX.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Are you U.S.S.R.-ian? Are you from all of those little countries before they broke up? Give a ringer to Cara Horowitz, Graphics Superstar. Not only can she layout Sports, she does Arts as well. You can always reach her at Cara@lovepmsolution.com

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Are you missing a paycheck? Is your paperwork filled out correctly? Human Resources Coordinator Erin Renner, will get you paid. And that's that. Get in touch with her at Erin@imfromthemidwestdontyaknow.com

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Do you send Ken Campbell death threats? Do your movie picks include Forest Gump, Gladiator and Shawshank Redemption? Then you must call Dan Krechmer, ad seller extraordinaire. Stop by and see "The Captain" or reach him at somisthegreatest@lifeislikeabunchofchocolates.com.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Do enjoy the finer things in life? Then Fine Arts Editor Julie Burrell is the one for you. Not only will she "review your play," she'll "critique your artwork" as well. You can reach her at Jules@theatrewithamre.com.

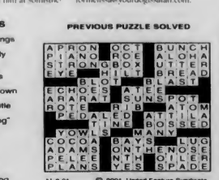
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — "Yo baby, wassup?" David Rose has what you need. Not only will he give you a bear hug, he'll give you a blood clot. Doesn't that sound fun? Reach Rose at 1-900-FREE-MASSAGE.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Does your ad "need designing?" Do you feel lightheaded and dizzy? Advertising Production Manager Morgan Taylor is the one for you. She'll "mark your borders and collect your fonts." That's right, fonts. Reach Morgan at 1Illplacesyoursubliminally@compuserve.com.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Do you like sweet and sour sauce? Do have a shrine to Elvis in your closet? Melissa Hammel is the Assistant News Editor for you. If you are into ballet, let her pirouette her way into your heart. Reach her at mishammel@yourdogissatan.com.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

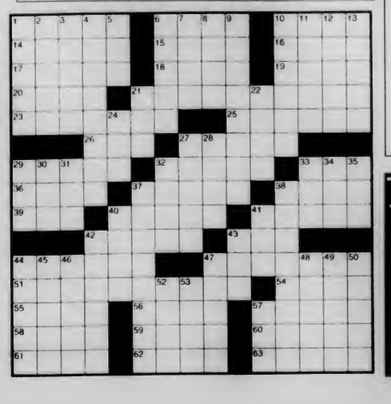
California.. nicknamed the Golden State for the riches it bestowed upon gold diggers in the 1800's. Hundreds of years later, it's all the same... only the names have changed.



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2026 for more information.

No menu today. Sorry, our graphics staff is fasting.

Collegian Graphics, the happiest place on earth... next to hell.



ACROSS
1 Gaiety
6 Building wings
10 Maniac
14 Love greatly
15 Astronaut Armstrong
16 Taj Mahal's location
17 Weighed down
18 Agatha Christie's title
19 Foray
20 "Of — I Sing"
21 Cook a pulverizer
23 Calmed
25 Acutely
26 Away
27 Brandish
29 Gentle hill
32 Domineering
33 Tibetan ox
36 Ages and ages
37 Kind of badge
38 Windmill part
39 Egyptian boy-king
40 Minaret's site
41 Informative
42 Grimy
43 Spicy
44 Talents
47 Be worthy of
51 Silver's rider
54 Reddish-brown horse
55 Vegas numbers
56 Festive
57 Culpability
58 Nasty sort
59 Runner Zatopek
60 Follow
61 Virginia —
62 Society newcomers
63 Chemical compound

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Fountain treats
2 Spud state
3 Cowboy meet
4 Forest canopies
5 Domestic bird
6 Over
7 Vault
8 Droopy
9 Most glossy
10 Worked the land
11 Once more
12 Dentist's tool
13 Unhappily
21 Caress
22 Depend (on)
24 Tint
27 Long-winded
28 Wife of Osiris
29 Adjust a clock
30 Slugger Gehrig
31 Toronto's prov
32 Entertainer Perks
33 Go off-course
34 Ques comeback
35 Clue
37 Rubbed
38 Ex-soldiers
40 Perry Mason portrayer
41 Soc. Sec. IDs
42 Heavy-duty engine
43 That girl
44 Knock for a loop
45 Inn
46 Conductor Kostelanetz
47 Contracts
48 Disturb
49 Hold dear
50 Go inside
52 Title
53 Smooth-tongued
57 Doctor's payment

11-6-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Eric Soderstrom
Photo Technician	Jeff Swartz
Copy Editor	Jim Pignatello
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak
Production Staff	Jess May, Cara Horowitz

INSIDE: Men's water polo falls to Harvard, 6-5.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, November 6, 2001 | 10

Sports Editor •
Eric Soderstrom
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Senior Julie Podhrasky hangs her head after falling 2-1 to Dayton Friday at Totman Field.

Minutewomen's season ends suddenly

Women's soccer fails to qualify for A-10s

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Sudden death.

Never had the term been so fitting as it was on Sundas afternoon as the Massachusetts women's soccer team dropped its fourth straight game, a heartbreaking 2-1 double overtime match to Xavier. The loss, coupled with LaSalle's 2-0 win over St. Joseph's, eliminated the Minutewomen from postseason play.

Xavier	2
UMass	1

The Minutewomen, who finished the season at 11-6, including 7-4 in the Atlantic 10, needed either a win or a tie against the Musketeers in order to qualify for their eighth consecutive A-10 Conference Tournament. However, Xavier's April Kennedy had other plans as she scored her first goal of the season in the 110th minute, putting her squad into the postseason and ending UMass' 2001 campaign as well as the college careers of the Minutewomen's five seniors Brooke Bartlett, Katelyn Jones, Kat Machamer, Julie Podhrasky and captain Sarah Cook.

Kennedy, the A-10 Player of the Week, got the winner against the run of play as fellow midfielder Lauren Garber won the ball at midfield and advanced on the UMass defense before hitting a perfect through ball to the streaking Kennedy. Kennedy took the ball in stride before placing it under Podhrasky and into the corner of the net setting off a pair of vastly different scenes. As the Musketeers swarmed Kennedy and celebrated wildly, the Minutewomen dropped to their knees and could only think of what might have been.

"I was shocked, completely shocked," UMass freshman midfielder Carly Turman said. "I saw Kat [Machamer]'s face and that made me start to cry. I feel really bad for the seniors, I feel we let them down."

In overtime, the Minutewomen were less than four minutes from completing their mission of qualifying for A-10's, but that was not the closest that they had come on the afternoon.

Ahead 1-0 in the 88th minute the Minutewomen surrendered a throw deep in their defensive third. As had been the case all day, sophomore midfielder Nicole Giesting took the throw, placing it deep into the box. However, none of the Minutewomen were able to get a head on this one and the ball bounced around in the box before senior defender Margaret Broe was able to get a foot to it, hitting it into the top left corner of Podhrasky's net and giving the Musketeers a life line.

"Coach told us this was the way they attacked, work it down the sides until she can put one in the box," Turman said. "It's almost like a corner and it just got to us after 90 minutes."

UMass got off to the perfect start just 35 seconds into the match when Jones put the Minutewomen ahead 1-0. Bartlett was able to get around her defender on the right flank before delivering a low, hard cross that Jones was able to direct past Xavier goalkeeper Megan Veith and into the Musketeer net.

"[That goal] gave us so much confidence and we were playing so well," said Maroon and White sophomore midfielder Janelle Khouri who made just her second start of the season against Xavier. "I thought we were going to win."

Following UMass' dream start, both sides would have a number of quality chances, most coming in the contest's second half. Machamer nearly put the game out of reach when a low Jones cross, similar to the one Bartlett hit in the first half, skipped just past the outstretched toe of the sliding midfielder.

At the other end Podhrasky was called upon in the 55th minute to palm a goal bound shot by Xavier's Laren Giesting. The Musketeer's leading scorer, over the har for one of her four saves on the afternoon. Just a minute before Giesting's drive, Broe had a vicious right-footed strike carom off the face of the crossbar and away from danger.

However, those would be the final bullets that the Minutewomen would dodge in 2001, as the Musketeers would strike twice in the match's waning moments, bringing sudden death to the Minutewomen's season.

The five UMass seniors, posing with their Atlantic 10 Championship trophy. They are (from left to right) Kaitlyn Byron, Anke Bruemmer, Kerry Ann Jaggassar, Jill Fantasia, and Lindsay Abbot.

Minuteman win streak ends at nine

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

Playing on the road is tough when you've got five men down for the count. But that's a lesson the Massachusetts men's soccer team wished it hadn't learned.

The Minutemen were defeated twice this weekend, first to Dayton, 1-0, and then to Xavier, 4-3, ending Atlantic 10 and regular season play this fall. The team ends at 15-5 on the season, 8-3 in the A-10, placing UMass in the third seed of the conference championship.

Xavier	4
UMass	3

Dayton	1
UMass	0

The Dayton loss also ended the Minutemen's nine-game winning streak.

The Maroon and White fell to Xavier Sunday afternoon in Ohio in a game that was weighed down with injuries. The overtime loss came without forward Yuri Morales, who was home with a knee injury, midfielder Andrew Eicher, who was out with a pulled hamstring, and midfielder Dan Colwell, gone with a foot injury. John Lytton played part of Sunday's game but is plagued with a ligament strain, while sweeper J.R. Pouncey rode the bench with a possible broken toe.

Xavier took the lead early in the game, netting one just five minutes into the contest. It didn't take long for the Musketeers to get on the ball again, scoring the second goal a minute and a half later.

Senior forward Jeff Deren took the initiative for UMass and put one into Xavier's net, on a breakaway feed from Travis Cooke. But the Musketeers answered with a goal in the 29th minute off a corner kick.

The second half was a different story for the Minutemen. Freshman Jason Golesky got on the board after slipping one into the open net for his second goal of the season. Deren tied

Turn to MSOCCER, page 7

Sophomore forward Ptah Myers winds up for the boot.

Cardiac crown

Field hockey saves goals for final seconds

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA – This streak just won't end.

For the Massachusetts field hockey team, its run of 22 consecutive conference wins was in serious jeopardy last Saturday at the Verizon Atlantic 10 tournament in Philadelphia. The Minutewomen trailed Richmond 1-0 with a mere 1:3 seconds left on the clock, knowing that a loss would have ended their season.

But a moment before time expired, the Maroon and White made one last gasp to keep its head above water, drawing a penalty corner as the clock ticked down to less than two seconds. On this final play of the game, Jill Fantasia made a perfect push to Lindsay Abbott, who stopped the ball for leading goal-scorer Anke Bruemmer, and then watched as the 6-foot-1-inch senior drilled the game-tying goal into the left corner of the net as the clock struck zero.

UMass	3
West Chester	2

UMass	2
Richmond	1

With the score now tied and the momentum clearly in favor of the Minutewomen, Abbott secured the double overtime win by backhanding the rebound of an Ashley Gilbert shot into the opposing cage with 4:12 left.

"We almost pictured ourselves on the bus going home and we just didn't want it to happen," Bruemmer said. "The whole team noticed it all at once – it was great."

The UMass weekend was not nearly done, however, as the A-10 championship game, with an NCAA tournament berth at stake, was still to be played. This time around, the Maroon and White was pitted against West Chester, a team that had crushed St. Joseph's 2-0 in the other semifinal match.

Sure enough, the Golden Rams got out to a 2-1 lead as the contest neared completion, but the Minutewomen could not be denied for the second consecutive day. A botched push on another penalty corner somehow resulted in a loose ball in front of the West Chester net, and Fantasia was able to blast her first career score through the resulting scrum and into the opposing cage.

That sent things into another OT, and this time around, it was Bruemmer that finished the Golden Rams off, corralling her own deflection of a penalty corner blast from the point, and drilling it into the right corner of the cage for the game and tourney win.

"We knew it would be a fight," Maroon and White coach Patty Shea said. "Because every team has nothing to lose against us. The No. 1 seed always has a bulls-eye on its back and they're always going to be tough, tough games – but we persevered.

"These were two of the most exciting games UMass has ever been involved in," the fifth year coach added. "We maintained our poise and composure the entire time. To first tie it and then win it is a tough task, and it can become a game of

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 7

UMass best when backed into corner

PHILADELPHIA – There is a beautiful desperation that comes with facing a one-goal deficit in field hockey. Time becomes your biggest enemy, and with your season ticking away you are presented with the simplest choice by the powers-that-be:

Put the ball in the net or go home.

For the Minutewomen of Massachusetts, that desperation defined their journey through this weekend's Verizon Atlantic 10 Championship tournament. The top-seeded team needed not one, but two come-from-behind victories to capture its sixth-straight conference crown, and UMass' field hockey survival would hinge on its ability to execute one fundamental penalty play.

ADAM WHITE

With their season teetering on the brink against both Richmond and West Chester, the Minutewomen found the answer to their prayers in a play called – fittingly enough – the corner.

"We never once gave in to the pressure, even with our backs to the wall," said Head Coach Patty Shea. "To show so much poise in the face of such pressure, when it came down to executing a critical play at a critical time, is the mark of a champion."

That critical play – the penalty corner – had plagued

Turn to FHOCKEY, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 44 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 7, 2001

ARTS p. 5

hey Might Be Giants left quite an impression after stomping through the Valley. Follow in their foot-steps in Arts.

SPORTS p. 12

Celia Wiste helped keep the volleyball team's playoff hopes alive in two wins over the weekend. Collegian Sports: can you dig it?

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

There was a video lecture by Noam Chomsky presented in the Student Union Ballroom last night. A discussion followed afterward, all centering around the tragedies of September 11th.

Chomsky points finger of blame in US direction

By Elizabeth Pariseau
Collegian Staff

A speech given by Noam Chomsky on Oct. 18 as part of an MIT Technology and Culture forum was rebroadcast last night in the Student Union Ballroom. About 400 University of Massachusetts students and area residents were in attendance for the event, which was sponsored and produced by Students for Political Awareness.

Chomsky's speech was structured around five questions. "What is happening right now?" he asked. "What makes the attacks of September 11 historic events? What is the war against terrorism, and, by extension, what is terrorism itself? What are the origins of the September 11 crimes? And finally, what are the policy options open to the United States right now?"

The attack on Sept. 11 was historic, he said, "but not, unfortunately, because of its scale." Though he said it was "the worst instantaneous human death toll in history, certainly," he said the biggest change after Sept. 11 was in the balance of power between the U.S. and countries abroad. "The biggest difference was the direction in which the guns were pointing," he said.

Chomsky then addressed the American definitions of terrorists and terrorism. Since the Reagan administration, he said, the U.S. has regarded terrorists as "a plague, and the deprived opponent of civilization itself."

Because of its actions in Nicaragua, Chomsky said that "the U.S. still stands as the only country to be on record as being condemned by the U.N. Security Council for international terrorism. That was the first war on terrorism."

He next addressed the American notion that terrorism is a weapon of cowards. "Terrorism is not a weapon of the weak," he said. "In a world that is ruled by force, it is the weapon of the strong."

The difference between so-called terrorists like Osama bin Laden and the terror perpetrated by the U.S., according to Chomsky was that "our terror doesn't count as terror." He added that he felt the U.S. had a "monopoly on violence" that allowed them to get away with such actions.

This comment on the video drew applause from both the MIT and the UMass audiences.

In discussing the origins of the Sept. 11 attacks, Chomsky drew a distinction between "the actual agents of the crimes" and "the reservoirs of sympathy and sup-

Turn to CHOMSKY, page 3

Walk brings safety to light

Police, administration join students in exploring campus

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Darkness served as an advantage at last night's semi-annual "Walk for Light," an event organized in collaboration with the Campus Safety Summit.

A group of 11 campus employees and eight students gathered on the front steps of the Student Union at 6:30 p.m. to walk around a moonlit campus and look for potential safety problems. Included in the group were Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Javier Cevallos, University of Massachusetts Police Officer Dave Black and representatives from the Physical Plant and the Student Government Association.

"It's quality, not quantity," said Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor in reference to the group's size. "We have a lot of quality assembled here."

The individuals broke up into four groups with one exploring the safety of the Goodell and Southwest areas, another in the academic area or the core of campus, another group traveling by foot through Orchard Hill and Central and the final group looking at the safety of the areas north of Totman, the Northeast residence area and the Sylvan residence area.

O'Connor explained that people within the groups should be on the lookout for such things as broken lights, areas that were dark and potentially dangerous, places where more call boxes may be needed, areas where the shrubbery was overgrown and problems with walkways. She went on to explain that broken lights were easily identifiable and recordable because of the individual numbers on the poles.

Once all of the groups had returned their lists of safety concerns would be compiled and given to the Physical Plant. Later, the Physical Plant and the UMPD will work together to see that call boxes and new lights are installed into areas that need them most.

Through programs like this the campus has been able to put more call boxes and lights in place. The walk, which takes place every semester, began in 1997 and was organized by the Campus Safety Summit, a committee that meets to address campus safety issues.

In 1980 there were only five call boxes installed, O'Connor explained that now there are over 100. Previous safety walks have resulted in the implementation of a number of new call boxes, improved lighting on campus and the pruning of shrubbery for safety purposes.

"The safety walk is a great idea," O'Connor said.

One of the areas that was spotted and isolated as a potentially dangerous spot was near the outside of Worcester Dining Hall. O'Connor suggested that it may be a good idea to place lights on the side of the building because at night when the dining hall is closed it may serve as a dangerous place for students to walk alone.

"From our perspective someone could be standing behind that tree," O'Connor explained how the lack of light could become a dangerous situation.

Other areas that were isolated as possible places that could present safety problems were areas with overgrown shrubbery and some broken lights in the parking lot behind Sylvan dormitory. Also suggested in the walk-through was the placement of a light on the side of Cashin Dormitory to illuminate a particularly dark portion of dormitory and the additional of lights in the area of the McNamara walkway.

O'Connor cited fewer automobile break-ins in the parking lots near the Sylvan area, specifically in lot 40, because of increased lighting there.

"I can tell you from experience that Sylvan used to be really dark," O'Connor explained about the progress that safety walks has allowed. "Overall we found a couple things, but not anything really major."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The UMASS Walk for Light took place last night, with the administration and the UMPD leading groups around campus.

UM prof debates church and state in new book

By Erik Hoan
Collegian Staff

A new book by University of Massachusetts sociologist Nicholas Jay Demerath III revealed how religion and politics have played "moths to each other's flame."

In Crossing the Gods: World Religions and Worldly Politics, published by Rutgers University Press and released last July, Demerath gave a firsthand account of religion and politics in the United States and 14 other countries. He described religion and politics as a potentially volatile mixture because while one is always attracted to the other, as a moth is attracted to the heat and light of a flame, the inevitable consequence is disaster.

"The larger conclusions that I reached had a lot to do with religion's involvement with the state, and religion's efforts to gain control of the state," Demerath said. "In every country I visited, where there was violence related to religion, and there was often considerable violence, it had to do with religion trying to put its stamp on the state."

Demerath said that the countries he visited allowed the free exercise of religion but did not have any provisions to prevent the establishment of a state religion. He said that without that provision, struggles for religious control are bound to happen, including in India, which passed its constitution in 1950.

"For the first 30 years of its political life as the world's largest democracy it did very well with a very neutral government presiding over a country that was about 80% Hindu and 12% Muslim," he said. "But 12% Muslim means 100 million people and a lot of potential conflict. The government began to try to play politics with religion."

He said the U.S. is different from the other countries he visited because while the First Amendment to the Constitution allows for the free exercise of religion, it also contains that all-important anti-establishment clause, a stroke of genius by the Framers.

"It is that anti-establishment clause that keeps religion from entertaining any ambitions of gaining control of the state," he said. "I think as long as religion is per-

Turn to CROSSING, page 3

Legacy of Amy Biehl will continue tomorrow

By Jake Lilien
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will host "Living Values: The Life, Death, and Legacy of Amy Biehl" tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in room 904 of the Campus Center. The event is being held in honor of a visit by Peter and Linda Biehl, whose daughter Amy was stoned and stabbed to death by disgruntled protestors in South Africa.

Amy Biehl was a Fulbright scholar working in Cape Town, South Africa in the final days of the South African Apartheid era, in which blacks were denied equal citizenship. She had been working with government officials to prepare the nation for its first racially unbiased elections. In August 1993, she was killed by four men who had attended an anti-Apartheid political rally.

Biehl's killers were convicted of murder, but later applied for amnesty with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission [TRC], which granted freedom to perpetrators of political crimes. Biehl's parents shocked the African nation by supporting the men in their quest to be released from prison, an attempt which ultimately proved successful. Peter and Linda have since established the Amy Biehl Foundation in the U.S., and the Amy Biehl Foundation Trust in South Africa, to improve living conditions for disadvantaged South African youth.

The Biehls spoke at a press conference yesterday, where they described their attempts to empower African communities, and their success at finding peace in the wake of their daughter's death.

"We were very excited when we first heard about the Truth and Reconciliation Commission," Peter

Turn to BIEHL, page 3

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

The Biehl family held a press conference yesterday in anticipation of tonight's presentation.

MSP union in suspense for new contract to pass

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

Funding for the Massachusetts Society of Professors' (MSP) contract remains questionable.

The MSP's new three-year contract is currently waiting Massachusetts Governor Jane Swift's approval for funding and support in the State House. The contract, if funded, will provide five percent pay increases to faculty for each of the three years the contract is in place.

In addition, the contract guarantees parental leave for all men or women who have a natural or adoptive child. The contract will also establish a joint MSP/administration committee to study faculty trends and recommend avenues to rebuild and expand faculty.

The MSP is a union of professors, librarians, and faculty that is affiliated with the Massachusetts Teacher's Association (MTA) and the National Education Association (NEA). The union provides a place for professors to voice their needs and opinions within the university system. According to their Web site, the overall result of the MSP is "a better educational institution, a better place for students, a better place for us to work."

University of Massachusetts President William Bulger sent the contract to Swift in late September. Swift had 45 days to forward the contract to the Legislature for funding. State House Representative Ellen Story reported on Nov. 1 to the Faculty Senate that she had heard nothing definite concerning the contract's future but "from what I understand it's going to be okay."

Concerned that the contract's funding was in jeopards due to the increasingly bad budget cuts, MSP president and History Professor Ron Story posted a special notice on the MSP Web site encouraging members to be aware of the contract's importance, and take action to support funding for the contract.

"As one part of the effort, the MTA next week will send every MSP member a tear-off postcard to be signed and sent to Governor Swift urging her to forward the contracts," reported the MSP Web site.

MSP members view the contract's pay increases as incentive to bring new faculty, and keep current faculty at the campus. Pay levels for UMass professors are slightly below national averages, causing the university to lose prospective employees to competitors.

"Failure to fund the contract would be a serious blow to the efforts of the campus to attract and retain top-quality faculty," Professor Story said.

Story maintains that the contract is important not only because it will help recruit faculty, but also for the sake of

Turn to CONTRACT, page 3

Cultural Events Calendar

PERFORMANCES

AMHERST – Shubha Sankaran, Manik Munde, and Brian Silver will perform a Suburban Concert: Music of India in Buckley Recital Hall of Amherst College's Arms Music Center on Wednesday, Nov. 7 at 8:00 p.m.

UMASS – New WORLD Theater will present Project 2050's Creative Calleneos: Identity, Immigration, Incarceration, Exploitation and Negotiation on Saturday, Nov. 10, at 8:00 p.m. The show is an homage to demographer's projections that 2050 will be the year in which people of color are a majority population in the United States. Tickets are $10, $5 for students, seniors, and low-income patrons. For reservations, call 545-2511.

UMASS – Adrienne Kennedy's play Ohio State Murders will be performed in the Fine Arts Center's Curtain Theater on Nov. 8, 9, and 10 at 8:00 p.m. There will also be a performance at 2:00 p.m. on the 10th. Tickets are $7, $4 for Five College Students. Call 545-2511 for tickets. The play tells the story of a black author who returns to her college campus and recounts her struggles there. Performances will also be held the following week, on the 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17, all at 8:00 p.m. There will also be another matinee on Saturday the 17, at 2:00 p.m.

AMHERST – Lanford Wilson's play Sympathetic Magic will be performed in Amherst College's Experimental Theater on Thursday, Nov. 8, Friday, Nov. 9, and Saturday, Nov. 10, at 8:00 p.m. All performances are free. The play tells the stories of eight men and women – their lives, their secrets and the tough decisions they have to make amidst the pulls of faith in science versus faith in religion at the end of the 20th century. Reservations are recommended. Call 545-2277 between 1:00 and 4:30 p.m. weekdays for tickets.

SMITH – Smith Life and Learning will present An Evening of Jazz on Friday, Nov. 9 at 8:00 p.m. in Davis Center Ballroom. This event is free and open to the public.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The Mount Holyoke African and Caribbean Student Association will present Ejandan Dance Artist "Sosana" on Friday, Nov. 9, at 8:30 p.m. in Blanchard Campus Center. This event is free and open to the public.

AMHERST – A 25 Years of Coeducation concert will be held in Studio 3 of Amherst College – Webster Hall on Saturday, Nov. 10 at 7:00 p.m. The concert will feature alumnae and women student vocalists.

UMASS – The Hillel House Drama Group and the Gay/Straight Alliance Group will be sponsoring a RENT Extravaganza, to be held at Hillel House at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 13. Perform and sing to your heart's content, with the award-winning Broadway soundtrack. Costumes are encouraged.

UMASS – Ballet Hispanico, featuring dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz, and ethnic styles will be performed on Wednesday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

FILMS

UMASS – Wattons and Slim Hopes, a film about the pervasiveness of sexism in today's society, will be shown on Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 7:00 p.m., in Room 917 of the Campus Center. This event, part of the Radical Film Series, is free.

UMASS – The Radical Film Series will present School of the Assassins Documentary Night at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 13, in Room 917 of the Campus Center. A discussion will follow the films. This event is free and open to the public. The films will also be shown on Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 7:00 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – The film Volver A Empezar, (or Begin the Begin) will be shown in Room 101 of Mount Holyoke College's Dwight Hall on Tuesday, Nov. 13, at 7:00 p.m. This event, part of the Spanish Film Series, is free.

UMASS – An Asian/Asian-American Film Festival will be held in Room 227 of Herter Hall on Tuesday, Nov. 13 from 9:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. The festival will feature recent films from Asian and Asian America filmmakers. The film will conclude with filmmaker-in-person events and mini-conferences with scholars of the Asian American cinema. The festival will continue on Wednesday, Nov. 14 from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. in Room 108 of South College.

RELIGIOUS

SMITH – A kickoff dinner for the Interreligious Education and Discussion Series will be held at 5:45 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 7, in Mendenhall Center's Gamut. The event will feature an informal roundtable dinner discussion.

LECTURES/DISCUSSION

AMHERST – Author Kevin Young will read from his book, To Repel Ghosts, at Food For Thought Books on Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 7:00 p.m. To Repel Ghosts is a tribute to black artist Jean-Michael Basquiat. The bookstore is located at 106 North Pleasant Street.

SMITH – A political action workshop, titled Women and Social Change: Population Committee of the Pioneer Valley Sierra Club, will be held at Smith College's Wright Common Room on Wednesday, Nov. 7, at 7:00 p.m. The event will feature Annette Souder, senior Washington representative for the Sierra Club, and Jay Keller, field director of Zero Population Growth.

SMITH – Professor Kevin Quashie will facilitate a discussion of Toni Morrison's book Beloved at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 7, in Smith College's Mawangi Cultural Center. Beloved is the current selection of the Black Student's Alliance Book Club. For more information, contact Aronica Cotton at 585-7883.

UMASS – Peter and Linda Biehl will present The Life, Death and Legacy of Amy Biehl in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Wednesday, Nov. 7 at 7:30 p.m. Amy Biehl was an American exchange student who was killed by a mob in Cape Town, South Africa. Linda and Peter, her parents, have established a foundation in her name, and promote human rights worldwide. A reception will follow the event.

UMASS – Les Wright, editor and co-author of The Bear Book: Readings in the History and Evolution of a Gay Male Subculture and The Bear Book II: Further Readings in the History and Evolution of a Gay Male Subculture, will deliver a lecture, titled, "Bears!" on Thursday, Nov. 8, at 12:30 in Campus Center Rooms 904-908. This event is part of the Stonewall Center's LGBT Lunch Lecture Series.

AMHERST – Gay poets Juan Larkin and Mark Doty will read from the works on Thursday, Nov. 8 at 7:00 p.m. in Food For Thought Books.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Novelists Olaf Olafsson and National Book Award winner Gloria Emerson will read from their works "The Journey Home" and "Loving Graham Greene", respectively, at Odyssey Bookshop on Thursday, Nov. 8, at 7:00 p.m. The bookshop is located at 9 College Street, South Hadley.

UMASS – The UMass Women of Color Leadership Network will sponsor Movers and Shakers: Campus Activism and Political Organizing on Thursday, Nov. 8, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. in Room 203 of Wilder Hall.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Joan DelPlato of Simon's Rock College will deliver a lecture, Heroizing Black Femininity in the Late Harlem Renaissance: Jacob Lawrence's Harriet Tubman Series, at the Five College Women's Studies Research Center on Thursday, Nov. 8, at 7:30 p.m. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

AMHERST – Professor Mamadou Diouf of the University of Michigan will deliver a lecture, "Engaging Postcolonial Cultures: African Youth and Public Space", in Cole Assembly Room of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Friday, Nov. 9, at 4:00 p.m. The lecture is the keynote address of the conference, "Youth in Africa: The Legacy of the Past, The Challenge of the Future."

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Amy Richards and Jennifer Baumgarden will discuss the book Manifesta: Young Women, Feminism and the Future in the New York Room of Mount Holyoke's Mary Woolley Hall on Friday, Nov. 9, at 4:00 p.m. This event is sponsored by Weissman Center for Leadership and Odyssey Bookshop.

SMITH – Solitude of Self: A Tribute to Elizabeth Cady Stanton will be held in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Neilson Library on Sunday, Nov. 11 at 3:00 p.m. The event will feature a reading of Stanton's famous speech by six locally and nationally known women, including Northampton mayor Mary Clare Higgins.

SMITH – David Pellegrini will deliver a lecture, "Japanese Avant-Garde Performance and Art of the 1920s", in the Green Room of Smith College's Mendenhall Theater Center on Monday, Nov. 12, at 1:10 p.m.

AMHERST – Professor Brian Horowitz of the University of Nebraska – Lincoln will deliver a lecture, "Zionism and Symbolism: Messianic Collaboration at the Dawn of the Soviet Era" on Monday, Nov. 12, at 4:30 p.m. in Amherst College's Center for Russian Culture. The center is located on the second floor of Webster Hall. A reception will follow.

AMHERST – Japanese poet Hiromi Ito will read from her works in Porter Lounge of Amherst College's Converse Hall on Monday, Nov. 12 at 4:30 p.m.

MOUNT HOLYOKE – Martha Loutfi, former editor-in-chief of the International Labor Review, will deliver a lecture, "What Do We Want? Towards a Debate on the Ultimate Objective," in the Five College Women's Studies Center on Monday, Nov. 12, at 4:30 p.m. The lecture will examine ways in which to study progress in the continuing struggle of women to achieve quality with men. The Center is located at 83 College Street, South Hadley.

UMASS – The UMass Muslim Students Association will present Islamic Terrorism: An Oxymoron, featuring talks by Dr. Mohammad Lazzouni and Dr. Ali Hazratji, on Monday, Nov. 12, in Campus Center Room 163 at 6:30 p.m. The talks will be followed by a question and answer session.

SMITH – Dr. Phuntsog Wangmo will deliver a lecture, "A Tibetan Woman Doctor's Narratives on Life and Work in Rural Northeast Tibet", in the Browsing Room of Smith College's Neilson Library on Tuesday, Nov. 13, at 7:30 p.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded [illegible] the Student Press Association. Since 1968, the Hooker Collegian of 1914 and then the Massachusetts Collegian of 1938, The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has a circulation of [illegible]. Subscriptions are $45 per semester. Call for advertising rates and information at (413) [illegible]. Newsroom hours are 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 a.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delmo Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Girczyc-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Bosco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE
-DISCOUNT OIL-
NORTHAMPTON/HOLYOKE
584-4112 • 535-1888
• SAME DAY DELIVERY •

Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice! Healthy Choice!
ICHIBAN
OPEN 7 DAYS Delivery Available
Authentic Japanese Restaurant
1 Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton, MA
(413) 585-1185
(Behind City Hall, Off Main St.)
What is the Difference?
#1 Sushi
Daily fresh raw fish over sushi rice
Stay healthy & live longer!
"This one is what everyone falls in love with"
#2 Tatami Room
• Cozy & private
• Parties available up to 25 ppl
10% Off Dinner w/ Student ID (All 5 College Students)
Exceptional Catering Service
Sushi chef works @ your party
Lunch Specials $4.95 & up
Reserve for Karaoke

STUDENT TRAVEL
FREEDOM
Freedom to travel will never be compromised.
STA TRAVEL
800.777.0112
www.statravel.com

COLLEGE KIDS LET'S GO
BOWLING!
THURSDAY
Top 40 Galactic Bowl Lites Out
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
FRIDAY
Disco 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
SATURDAY
Retro 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

It's Back...Only at Council Travel
AMAZING SALE
Student / Youth / Teacher
5 Days Only! Nov. 6-10! 20 European Cities Available
DUBLIN $95
LONDON $97
FRANKFURT $121
MILAN $132
FARES ARE ONE WAY, ROUND TRIP FARES ALSO AVAILABLE
Tickets are subject to availability and must be paid in full at time of booking. Ticket are non refundable. Taxes and fees are extra. Additional restrictions apply. Blank dates apply. Intl. ID and ISTC card required—valid for departure through March 2002. Fares are not all cities.
44 Main Street
Downtown Amherst
413-256-1261
1-800-2COUNCIL www.councilitravel.com
Call 24 hrs. 8am Tues Nov 6 - 12am Fri Nov 9 & 10am 7pm Sat Nov 10

■ crossing

continued from page 1

suaded, and every religious group is persuaded, that there will be a level playing field, that no one group is going to gain access to dominance... then you simply don't get that grab for ultimate power."

He added that while the potential for violent struggle exists, that religion and politics should not be separated completely.

"You can't keep [religion] out and I'm not sure you'd want to," he said. "It keeps politics alive. It gives it a pulse. It gives it a vitality."

However, with charismatic cult leaders like Osama bin Laden around, Demerath said that it is important to understand just how dangerous mixing religion and politics can be.

"[H]e is the head of a political-religious cult," he said. "Neither religion nor politics alone could ignite such a lethal fuse, but the two together provide members with a cause, an identity, and an ultimate and transcendent experience – all of which they have lacked in their personal lives to that point."

Demerath has studied religion for over 40 years. He has written or contributed to other books on the topic, including A Bridging of Faiths: Religion and Politics in a New England City, Sacred Companies: Organizational Aspects of Religion and Religious Aspects of Organizations, and Rational Paradigms, A-Rational Religion, and the Debate over Secularization.

"It became pretty clear to me that religion was a pretty good window into American society and, in particular, American culture," he said. "If you wanted to see what made this country tick, that isn't a bad place to begin."

He started work on Crossing the Gods in the late 1980s when, after receiving a grant from the Lilly Foundation, he began travels to Brazil, Guatemala, Poland, Northern Ireland, Sweden, Egypt, Turkey, Pakistan, Indonesia, India, Thailand, Japan and China.

He said it was an opportunity for him to gain a more worldly view of a subject he had worked on locally for years.

"While I was commuting on I-91...I decided there must be a world bigger than this and I needed to learn more about it," he said. "I took the same problem areas – the same set of issues concerning religion, politics, the state – and instead of staying local I went global."

He said it was also an opportunity to see first hand one of the main causes of conflict in the world.

"I saw it in country after country after country," he said. "It became very clear that if there's one sin that religion commits, it is that sin of trying to win that kind of control."

■ Chomsky

continued from page 1

port that they draw from."

As far as the actual agents go, Chomsky claimed, "the U.S. is either unwilling or unable to produce concrete evidence about their identities."

Chomsky called the American perceptions that Arab extremists "hate us because we champion a new world order which should be in place everywhere" and that terrorists "seek only apocalyptic nihilism" incorrect.

"They're comforting ideas," he said. "But it's totally at variance with everything we know and it's a perfect way to escalate the cycle of violence. It's tribal violence."

The way to stop this cycle, Chomsky said, is simple. "One easy way – and therefore it's never discussed – to stop terrorism is to stop taking part in it," he said.

Awareness among Americans is also important in breaking the cycle of terrorist violence, according to Chomsky. "One of the best things to happen since Sept. 11 is that some discussion and some press has begun to open up to these ideas," he said. "There's been more willingness to think about things that have [previously] been swept under the rug.

"We should make it possible to discuss this," he concluded. "The only way a powerful state [like the U.S.] can be brought to a stop is from within. Maybe then we could prevent new things from happening – new things so severe that they could make September 11 pale into insignificance."

The video presentation of Noam Chomsky's lecture on international terrorism allowed plenty of room for student response, both at the original lecture at MIT and at its rebroadcast at the University of Massachusetts yesterday. Before conducting its own discussion, the UMass audience had the chance to view the question-and-answer session from the original MIT lecture, which was also included on the videotape.

The discussion at MIT sometimes grew heated. One man on the tape asked Chomsky who should claim responsibility for the Sept. 11 attacks. "Surely you don't blame America for the events of September 11," he said.

"The people we're killing aren't defending the Taliban," he added. "They're the victims of the Taliban too. They are perfectly innocent people, people who we are acting consciously – you and I are acting consciously – to kill. If we can't face that we can't even talk about this problem."

"Let's look in the mirror," he said. "The first place to look is in the mirror."

The question and answer session at UMass was more peaceful. The discussion was formally moderated by Professor John Cunningham and Orchard Hill Assistant Residence Director Yohannes Wildermariam but was largely conducted among the students themselves.

"I wonder why there is so much complacency and perhaps there is more to it than that," one student said. "Perhaps guilt is something we're all afraid to recognize."

"Bombing is not the answer," said another. "We need to contact our legislators."

"I feel really paralyzed," another woman said as she took the microphone. "What can we really do? What kind of power do we really have beyond going out and shouting and crying and being misrepresented in the papers?"

Mohammed Reza, a senior Biology major and an RA in Field, helped to organize the event. He said he felt that it had gone well and that he hoped that last night's success would encourage further discussion on campus about Afghanistan and U.S. foreign policy. "We need to get the awareness out there that this bombing isn't hurting the Taliban. It's hurting the 18 million people of Afghanistan. I mean, we don't see the pictures of little kids missing limbs running to the border for safety. We don't see mothers crying. All we see is sparks in darkness, at a distance."

But there is hope, he added. "I believe that Americans are genuinely good people. These kinds of discussions need to go out there."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/ C

Magic Bus

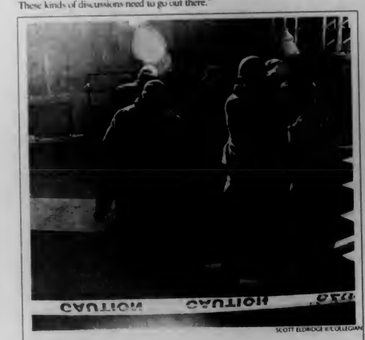
The Ecobus was parked behind the Fine Arts Center yesterday.

■ Biehl

continued from page 1

Biehl said. "We knew all about it because Amy told us about it. South Africa's free elections would never have taken place without it. Amy supported it, so we supported it - knowing very well that her killers would apply for amnesty." He went on to say that they "aren't bothered a bit" by the knowledge that her killers are now free.

"We were very fulfilled and rewarded by the experience of participating in the hearings," he continued. "We learned that the process of reconciliation begins with the truth. The four young men who killed Amy had not ever confessed before [the day of the hearing]."



The Biehls explained that, since being freed, two of Amy's four murderers have joined their organization, and work in her honor.

"They're not killers," Peter explained. "They were wrapped up in a political movement."

While the two others involved in her death have had run-ins with the law since being released, the Biehls are still optimistic about what they call a "50 percent success rate."

At noon today, the Biehls will be presented with Chancellor's Medals in a ceremony to be held in room 1009 of the Campus Center. UMass staff expressed excitement about the Biehl's presence on campus to receive the medals.

"This [event] is important, because students will have the opportunity to learn from individuals that truly demonstrate and live the values that we embrace as an institution of higher learning," said Elizabeth Dale, the Assistant Chancellor for University Advancement and Special Projects

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/ C

Pane in the glass

A large pane of glass was moved in carefully to replace where some machinery was as a result of the Ustore construction.

■ contract

continued from page 1

overall faculty morale.

"Besides that, failure to fund would deal a severe blow to faculty and therefore campus morale at a time when budget prospects are already gloomy," Story said. "There will be more retirements, more gaps in the offerings of the departments, less interest in developing innovative courses, less willingness to direct independent studies, less willingness to work one-on-one with students. The level of bitterness and alienation would be extremely high."

Story attests that the contract was created in "good faith and signed and ratified" by both the administration and the MSP, and should therefore be equally supported by the Bulger and administration.

According to the MSP, funding is available for the contract despite severe state cutbacks. In its first year the MSP contract would require eight million dollars in funding, which Story believes is plausible.

President Bulger's office and Gov. Swift's office declined to comment on this agenda.

On the Net: MSP:http://www.umass.edu/msp

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Schools must remove religion from education

The issue of prayer in schools gained national attention recently when the State of Florida passed a bill allowing optional prayer at graduations and other non-required school events. This has brought up a great degree of debate on the national level, addressing such issues as the separation of church and state and previous cases dealt with by the Supreme Court.

Opponents of the bill are hopeful that if it does make it to the Supreme Court, it will not receive support since the body ruled that public schools can't lead stadium crowds in public prayer.

This decision was more than appropriate. If the Supreme Court supported this bill or the bill that Florida is attempting to pass in its school systems, it amounts to the government endorsing a particular religion in school. What happens in classrooms in which the child is an atheist or simply does not hold the majority religion of his or her classmates? Not only would it be singling a student out and pointing out religious differences, but it would also be unconstitutional to force or even strongly suggest that someone pray.

Strangely enough, the court made a decision last week rejecting a challenge to the constitutionality of a bill passed in Virginia that required students to observe a daily moment of silence. The moment of silence is required for the one million schools in the state and allows students to use the time to pray, meditate or reflect upon their day. In this case, students are under the obligation to be quiet; however, they are not required to pray.

The two cases, however, are not very different. Both are trying to require students to spend some portion of school time praying or doing something in a religious manner and both are unconstitutional.

Students should not be required to spend time that they should be obtaining education practicing their religion. School is just that, school. It is for learning and preparing students for the future and not indulging the religious beliefs of the majority. If students wish to pray or deal with religious issues, they can do so in their free time. Enforcing school prayer is just another way to make things more difficult for those who do not have the same beliefs as their classmates.

It is unfair.

Unsigned editorals represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

Anyone interested in writing for Ed/Op can submit to collegianeditorial@yahoo.com. While we cannot print every submission, we encourage and appreciate your input.

Letter – response: opening a public dialogue

BILL LARKIN

After reading Bill Larkin's opinion piece, "The ceiling over our heads" (10/31/01), I was driven to respond. I appreciate Mr. Larkin's attractive prose but I cannot allow him to misrepresent his readers as I believe he did; as a capitalistic scourge without conscience because of the United States' current actions in and around Afghanistan.

Larkin wrote "I know not of a writer with the literary ability to convey the atrocity of a military occupation to a society whose members have never feared traveling on a bus, have never seen their homes leveled by a helicopter, and have never languished in a refugee camp." Bill, I hope you're not talking about Americans because the sheer number of our differences and the fact that these people do exist in our country makes you, if nothing else, inordinately wrong.

People who fear riding a bus?? They're called Israelis. People who have seen their homes devastated by a helicopter? Well, I've never seen a helicopter do the damage, but I did see two commercial airliners devastate buildings near my home that happened to house thousands of people at the time. D o you watch the news? And as for people languishing in refugee camps, where do you think they're trying to go? Don't most of those people move to the United States? Or to Israel? Or to one of a dozen countries throughout Western Europe where they can live free of oppression? Do you think Afghanistan had no refugees before the U.S. arrived there?

Open your eyes, Bill. We were attacked. A small group of terrorists decided to kill a large number of Americans, as well as innocent people of a multitude of other nationalities, and you view our response as unjust? To me, that seems unfair, if not a desecration of the memory of those people.

You say "America has dissected the earth by refusing to accept the common bonds of humanity, valuing the lives of the English-speaking world over its Arabic counterpart." No, Bill, the Arabic world (not even the entire Arabic world, but a minute cross-section of its most fundamentalist followers) refuses to accept the common bonds of humanity. We are not fighting this battle because America is flexing its muscles.

Those who committed these atrocities against us do not want us to fight them; they want us dead. They view us as inferior and not worth of life and they believe that they have the right to kill us because our beliefs are not theirs. As Senator John McCain said a few days after September 11, "we are greater than our enemies. We are greater because the very virtues our enemies revile and seek to destroy make us so. There were not just crimes, they were acts of war."

I respect the rights of people to live peacefully and practice whatever religion they choose. But don't forget, Bill, we didn't pick this fight, those that we're battling did. And as you say, "by declaring war on Afghanistan, all America might do is encourage further chaos in a region already scathed at our presence within its borders." No, all that America is trying to do is prevent the terrorist acts that happened on September 11, as in Yemen in 2000, in Tanzania and Kenya in 1998, and in Saudi Arabia in 1996, from ever happening again.

Michael Levin
Undergraduate
UMass

First, I would like to thank Mr. Levin for his compliment and comments. For the past few weeks, I have been waiting to receive a thoughtful reply to the columns I have written since Sept. 11. Until Mr. Levin e-mailed the Daily Collegian the criticisms printed above, I have read on the newspaper's website only hateful attacks couched in insult and not founded upon any coherent logic. This section of the newspaper represents an excellent forum for the discussion of issues crucial to our lives as students, Americans, and human beings. I hope Mr. Levin and other Collegian readers continue to raise levels of debate by questioning the arguments provided in these pages; such input will improve the quality of our democracy by widening the range of opinions available to its members. On any issue, we should agree on a consensus only after weighing the opinions of public officials and private citizens, students and faculty, liberals and conservatives. Therefore, I have convinced my editor to publish Mr. Levin's letter alongside this response, in hopes that our dialogue will encourage further public discourse on the war in Afghanistan.

> "We picked this fight by permitting the ambition of politicians such as John McCain, Donald Rumsfeld and George W. Bush to transform a terrorist attack into a campaign platform that rewards the loss of life in the Middle East."

Mr. Levin, you said that I have misrepresented the newspaper's readers by criticizing the actions our country has begun in Afghanistan. Although I do believe that this country's current and previous administrations have waged wars to ensure its superiority atop the global economic hierarchy, I do not attach this analysis to the readers of the Collegian. I know that few of my readers agree with such an explanation; I attribute the perpetuation of such policies to this ignorance. I wrote "The Ceiling Over Our Heads" to illustrate that the tendencies of human beings living in both Afghanistan and the United States prevent us from accepting responsibility for our actions. Instead of acknowledging the economic, political and geographic histories that teach us to ignore the common bonds of humanity, we have devolved into caricatures of our basest tendencies.

Despite your reply, I cannot accept that the majority of Americans who drive political action in the country's democracy can understand the despair prevalent in an occupied nation. Before the Sept. 11 attacks, when have citizens living on American soil witnessed such horror in what our politicians call the greatest nation on earth? We consider the United States an Avalon from the human horrors that desecrate the planet, New York its insulated epicenter. Refugees languishing in detention camps across the globe come here to live, but not because America liberates its citizens from oppression. The United States processes them into taxpaying agents of repression, and as our corporate leadership demonstrates, we treat our financiers as an untouchable royalty. Who would blame the pauper for seeking to escape despair, and who would blame the prince for fortifying the castle walls?

But such a kingdom only aspires to span the entire planet. The nature of free-market capitalism necessitates that we live amongst both winners and losers in the survival game. We cannot ensure the integrity of such an Avalon without subjecting its outcasts to violence and suffering. Yes, a small group of terrorists deliberately attacked the United States. But, by launching a massive bombing assault on an already impoverished country whose citizens did not participate in that attack represents a shameful tendency antithetical to my definition of greatness. Revenge and bloodlust guided by a blind eye performs a far greater desecration to the victims of Sept. 11 than any egalitarian crusade for peace. I still fail to see how capturing or killing the members of Al Qaeda would prevent another suicidal fundamentalist group from crashing airplanes into our proudest buildings. I still fail to see how trading the Taliban for the Northern Alliance would stop human rights abuses in the Middle East or quell hatred of the United States there. I still fail to see how bombing bazaars in Kabul differs any from demolishing firms in New York.

We did pick this fight, Mr. Levin. We have picked this fight for the past 50 years. We picked this fight by allowing our representatives to legislate and pursue policies that manipulate foreign lands to satisfy corporate demands for cheap labor, resources, and a repressed populace. We picked this fight by refusing to analyze the causes behind and consequences of our rise to prominence. We picked this fight by permitting the ambition of politicians such as John McCain, Donald Rumsfeld and George W. Bush to transform a terrorist attack into a campaign platform that rewards the loss of life in the Middle East. The same Americans who recline in deaf gardens behind the unquestioned solace of the drawbridge represent the same readers who could not understand the atrocity of a military occupation and the same warhawks who attribute the conflict in Afghanistan to tenets of a foreign religion instead of a domestic secularism.

Bill Larkin is a Collegian Columnist.

The beat goes on: music strikes a chord in us all

SAM WILKINSON

When I was nine or 10 years old, I purchased They Might Be Giants' fourth album, Flood. I had known about the band earlier in my life—Nickelodeon had a video music show, and actually played videos from TMBG's first album) but I hadn't actually owned any music, until that point.

Most would think this wouldn't be an important event, but it was. I know because I remember this. With my friend Joe, I purchased Flood on a cold Sunday in the winter, on a day that I would later help my father gather firewood, at Backstreet Records from the shop's proprietor. I'm. That's a memory of the event off the top of my head. For comparison's sake, I can remember maybe three details of my first sexual experience. This tape is important to me.

That tape now sits, along with the other four TMBG albums that I have on tape (they were all purchased on tape long before I purchased them all again on CD), on top of my doorframe at home, under an ancient putter given to me by my grandfather as a gift. Those tapes are some of my most cherished possessions, and while I have considered adding them to my car's tape collection, I have refrained lest those five cassettes be injured.

I was reminded of all of this (and thank god, I needed a column topic) at last Sunday's Giants show at Pearl Street. It was only my second Giants show, the first one being a Fall Concert performance at West Virginia University. No offense to my fraternity brothers on campus – Tappa Tappa Kegga, what?!? – but seeing them at home, surrounded by said doofuses, was seeing them in the wrong environment. Seeing them at Pearl Street? Sublime.

Before I get too entangled in this love affair I have with the music of two dorky New Yorkers, let me also say this: you have had the same love affair. Maybe with a song, maybe with a band, maybe with a musical movement, you've had the same love affair with one form of music or another. Maybe you want to draw a line between your fandom and mine, but you can't.

You love music and if somebody held a microphone in your face right now and asked you to name a favorite album, or a favorite singer, or a favorite song, you could do it because you have them. We all do. Maybe we all aren't obsessed, but we love music. I digress.

My friends and I once sat down to recall the most ridiculous CDs we purchased in pursuit of our favorite band. My friend Rob shelled out 30 bucks for an Iron Maiden interview CD (a CD of nothing more than an interview with the band...little, if any, actual music). Mike had purchased all of the singles Oasis has ever released...ever. Me? I borrowed money from friends once to pay for a TMBG import copy of John Henry; that had a six-song live second disc as a bonus. I already had one copy of John Henry, and the six songs on the bonus disc weren't new, but dammit, they were live versions of the songs, so I had to have it.

This is my fandom. Or at least, it was anyway. I haven't been a member of a mailing list for years. I haven't been a member of the fan club ever. I don't know all the insider They Might Be Giants trivia that the real hardcore fans do. If I'd forgetten this for some reason, I was forced to recognize at Pearl Street. I didn't know any of the hand motions, or when to sway, or when to chant, or when to do the little dance the weirdo next to me was doing, seemingly only to annoy the bejeezus out of me, as nobody else joined him in his twirlings. I was an outsider at my own show.

> "There is nothing that we, as a people, love more than our music. It is more important than literature or theater or movies or newspapers or any other media. This is not hyperbole; it is gospel truth."

In every sense save one: when they played the song "Dead" (track five from Flood), I sang every word. I haven't listened to Flood in more than a year, maybe more (my copy is horribly scarred and skips on the middle tracks), but I knew every word.

I didn't even know that I knew every word. I once dated a girl who knew every word to every song ever. Ever. I could never keep up with her, and even if she was flipping the radio stations rapid-fire, she'd know all the lyrics. It was an amazing thing, something I've never been able to do. Except for TMBG apparently, because it didn't matter which song from Floyd members. Or Julie, who once asked a stranger if he was listening to the Original Cast Recording of Merrily. Or Rachel, who knows everything about Fleetwood Mac. Or Amanda, who can sing Newsies drunk better than almost anybody (save Julie, perhaps).

Or you, with whatever you love, be it Dave Matthews or Ludacris, the Beatles or Zeppelin, Coltrane or Bach.

Music is the most important thing society has next to oxygen, food, housing and clothing. There is nothing that we, as a people, love more than our music. It is more important than literature or theater or movies or newspapers or any other media. This is not hyperbole; it is gospel truth. Every society known to man has some form of musical expression. They might not have the other medias, but every society has music. Of all the things that unite us, perhaps it is the easiest for us to understand. We, as humanity, love a beat, and everybody's got one.

Lest this get too romantic, I offer the final quick story. When I got to Pearl Street, I noticed that, standing on one of the platforms in the back of the club, there were two or three young kids, all probably 12 or younger. They were with Mom and Dad, who were clearly going out of their way, especially on a school night. The kids were anxiously awaiting the show, watching some local folk singer who kept saying things like "that was my song and They Might Be Giants will be out soon," while taking in the cheers of the crowd that were clearly not for him. I had been worried that the smoke, the noise, the whole of show might not do it for these kids. After all, they probably only knew the recent stuff from Malcolm in the Middle.

At the end of the show, I turned around and, just for a brief second, saw a younger version of myself: awestruck, amazed, and addicted for life.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

Bubba's B's: Brawny, Brawling, Brave

By Kurt Polosky
Collegian Staff

BUBBA SPARXXX
Dark Days Bright Nights
Beat Club Records

From somewhere deep down in the dirty south comes Bubba Sparxxx. Not from Compton, Brooklyn, Detroit, or even St. Louie, but from the small town of Athens, Georgia - a few miles south of Stankonia- where hip-hop's newest shining star was born and raised. And it shows: Bubba's brand of hip-hop is far from the hood, instead being close to the farm.

Comparisons with Eminem and Outkast are a bit out of line, even though some have insisted on making them. The only similarity between Slim Shady and Bubba is that they both are white rappers. Their styles have little in common. As for Outkast? While they have some similarities in their sound, nothing is strikingly similar. Geography alone unites them. Anyway, comparisons are for drooling record industry types that are desperate to get some MTV and radio play. The fact is that Bubba Sparxxx has his own sound, and it's pretty damn good.

Bubba's flavor of southern country hip-hop could play well "at The Tunnel in New York, or at the dorms out in Athens," as he boasts in "Bubba Talk." And it's true, his tracks have the usual hip-hop bounce quality, but accomplish it in an entirely different way than the la Rule's and Fabolous's of the world do. The cows mooing, and horses neighing over heavy string and bass beats in "Bubba Talk" is unique at the very least.

And while he might not have anything groundbreaking to say, Bubba still has a solid flow complete with witty wordplay. On the title track, he raps, "I probably won't even fault ya if you dismiss me as the demon/Because it's true/I am not you/My skin's the tone of pissy semen/But if we fight this evening I assure you, we'll both be red/And it'll take your whole slum and all they guns to leave me dead." Bubba does have some serious words for his people of the South struggling with poverty in "Well Water." He rhymes "Did you know they are closing down the only factory in this town/but you still got the nerve to say there's plenty of work to go around." No bling here: He spouts, "Even though it's Christmas Day, we still eating off foam plates."

But most of all, Sparxxx's debut excels because of the funkadelic production of Timbaland. The juxtaposition of the first two tracks show Timbaland's ability to be creative and varied when he lays down his beats. "Take Off," the album opening song, is complete with an airplane metaphor, where Bubba takes off towards his "destiny" while the movie Gladiator is being shown in flight. The track includes a slow moving, anticipation building violin sample. Next up the journey really takes flight with the uproarious "Ugly," a hard grinding, fast moving number. Later on Timbo makes more than a cameo on the fun track "Twerk A Little," where he aptly rhymes about Sparxxx's sound, "It's like hip hop meets I'n Tim McGraw." After Bubba bumps uglies with the same girl as Timbo, he thanks him for "his sloppy seconds, but after I send her back to you, I bet we are both infected."

It's easy to tell by the CD packaging that Bubba Sparxxx is something different. Absent is the usual rapper iced out with his shirt off. Instead we get a picture of a NASCAR and some scratch tickets. It's not as if the whole "country rapper" shtick is merely a gimmick with little sizzle behind the steak. Not only is it creative, but it's quality as well.

COURTESY INTERSCOPE RECORDS

THEY MIGHT BE BRILLIANT...

GIANTS smash NoHo

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

THEY MIGHT BE GIANTS
Pearl Street
November 4

Consider the following, and then consider that last Sunday's They Might Be Giants concert might have been this fall's best, an energetic mix of performance and skillful musical presentation.

In the late 1980's, there was something that might be called a college-rock revolution. Groups that had previously gotten airplay only on campus radio stations, who had made careers of aggressively touring, got a brief recognition from the corporate world. Few things united the groups – REM, a Tribe Called Quest and Red Hot Chili Peppers couldn't be more different – but corporate America took a sudden interest in groups that had significant reputations but little promotion beyond their own.

The aforementioned groups made it big, capitalizing on a loyal fan-base with more pop-friendly albums that appealed to wide segments of the population. REM's Out of Time and Red Hot Chili Peppers' Blood Sugar Sex Magik both succeeded based on a fan-base that was sure to eat up the album and an American public that could digest the band's newest material.

They Might Be Giants, two New Yorkers who had achieved nominal success with their self-titled first album and Lincoln, had that same opportunity. Originally on Bar/None Records, they were signed by Elektra and had the opportunity to release an album that would win them a popular audience and a presumably thus successful career. Instead, they released Flood. Although it contained the band's two most known songs, "Istanbul, not Constantinople," and "Particle Man," and eventually went gold, it ultimately failed to get the band over with a fickle American audience.

And then: grunge. Clearly the next big thing, corporations abandoned their college-rock projects, instead plunging their time and money into Mudhoney and Screaming Trees. Which left corporate projects like TMBG to twist idly in the wind, which is exactly what they did. John Henry and Factory Showroom dropped to moderate response from anybody other than the group's loyal fan base. Contract finished, TMBG returned to indie-powerhouse Restless Records.

With such a twisted history, there is no reason for They Might Be Giants to care any more. Both John Flansburgh and John Linnell had been jerked around by corporate America, shunned by consumer America and ignored by critical America. They are both nearing 40. Yet, when the band takes the stage, surprise; there hasn't been a performance in the area more scintillating in at least six months.

Frankly, They Might Be Giants' performance at Pearl Street last Sunday was everything that anybody could have wanted from a show: the biggest hits, the newest songs, inspired Interaction with the crowd, gimmicked performance tricks and an undercurrent of musicality that few bands take the time to show off. Instead of blowing off western Massachusetts, TMBG praised NoHo, calling it their "home away from home."

Playing to support the group's newest album Mink Car, They Might Be Giants debuted the depressingly catchy "Drink," the catchy-as-can-be "Bangs," and "Cyclops Rock." Giants also played "Man, It's So Loud in Here," a decidedly un-Giants song. With a heavy disco beat – and disco balls on either side of Pearl Street spinning white lights around the room – "Here" showed that the band is hardly falling back on its old, quirky habits. But while similarly crediting the band with creativity, the show's crowd was informed and participatory. Most of the fans knew the lyrics to the newest songs, indicating that the classy fans, who knew when to play along and when to jump around, were the band's most loyal.

Turn to GIANTS, page 8

COURTESY ELEKTRA RECORDS

Comic gods battle over new conceptions of a hero

"I think that everything's changed, yes. Perhaps because the whole scenario was a comic book one, a B-movie plot," said Neil Gaiman, best-selling novelist and comic book writer, responding to a question regarding changes in the comic industry's content as a result of the terrorist attacks on September 11. Marvel Enterprises and DC Comics – both located in Manhattan – are grappling with the question of what is appropriate in these uncertain times. With most, if not all, of their series revolving around glorified violence, these two publishers are responding to the event in markedly different ways. While DC seems to be canceling material that can be construed as similar to the events at the WTC, Marvel seems to be openly talking about the events.

DC Comics canceled many of its upcoming projects, though the cancellation and delays of forthcoming issues of the ultra-violent comic series The Authority have attracted a lot of controversy in the comic book community. The Authority, which writer Mark Millar described as "startling[ly] where other superhero books drew the line," features wide-screen action that pulled no punches and showed mayhem similar to the events of Sept. 11 on a fairly regular basis. While Millar's issues will be released, plans for further stories beyond those remaining two issues have been shelved indefinitely.

Marvel delayed an issue of Elektra at the request of writer Brian Michael Bendis.

"For those people following the book, you know that we're dealing with a fictional US-Arab conflict," Bendis said. "Though there's nothing in Elektra that's deliberately incendiary or parallel to what's going on in the world, we thought a couple weeks' distance was just in good taste."

Marvel, however, decided to assemble the top writers and artists around and put together a tribute poster book as well as a comic book featuring heroes of 9-11, with proceeds from both books going to charity. The poster book, aptly titled Heroes, featured art of policemen, firefighters and other heroes during the tragic events. Marvel Editor-In-Chief Joe Quesada has gotten rare mainstream, going on the Today Show and MTV to promote the company's tribute books. In addition to the Heroes book, Marvel is also publishing Moment of Silence, which features true stories of valor. Comic writer and filmmaker Kevin Smith is one of many attached to the project, writing an eight-page story.

"I think it all comes down to being from Jersey, and being so close to the disaster," Smith told Comic Book Resources News. "I mean, I grew up directly across the river from the Trade Towers; that skyline was a major part of my life for 31 years. The fact that it's no longer there, and that in its decimation so many lives were lost really packs a wallop if you're from my area. Any way I can give back via my line of work, I'm happy to step up."

Marvel also intends to confront the devastating effects of the event with its most popular New Yorker character, Spider-Man. The Amazing Spider-Man #36, to be released on Nov. 14, will feature the wall-crawler's own thoughts and reactions to the attack.

"So they asked me to write it," said Babylon 5 creator and Amazing Spider-Man writer J. Michael Straczynski. "Unsure if I had the wherewithal necessary to pull it off without embarrassing myself or trivializing the situation through any inadequacies on my part, I asked for 24 hours to think it over. Figured I'd probably pass, since I just didn't know how I could handle it in a comic book format. Somewhere along the way that night, I found the words."

Gutter Culture with Christopher Scott Kenny

With the immediate reaction of the events underway, there is still the problem of long term changes in content still faces DC and Marvel.

"I've already started writing X-Men as a pacifist comic," says Grant Morrison, the Scotland native and self-professed "militant pacifist" writer. "I've already started writing X-Men as a pacifist comic. They don't believe in violence. They want to change the world in other ways. I don't think there will be as much fisticuffs anymore. I always thought that was rubbish anyway. I'm more into the philosophical basis of comics, the ideas they explore."

Millar, however, is worried about reac-

Turn to HEROES, page 8

Delano does discs: Merchant's emotive, Apex dives

NATALIE MERCHANT
Motherland
Elektra

Somewhat defeated but still defiant is Natalie Merchant on Motherland, her latest studio album. These are songs of wisdom, of someone who has seen history repeat itself and can't help but turn down her eyes as she sees it coming around again.

Motherland sees love and comfort as the ideal, and details the many forces that pry the arms of stability apart. The title track is especially poignant in the aftermath of September 11 (whose victims the album is dedicated to), and feels like a cry for calmer times. "Motherland cradle me, close my eyes, lullaby me to sleep. Keep me safe, lie with me, stay beside me, don't go." This will certainly strike a chord with anyone who feels the relative security they enjoyed before the attacks slowly slipping away with every newspaper headline.

This feeling of helplessness, amplified by world events, is still very intimate in many of the songs. The mournful violins on "This House Is On Fire" speak of a love crumbling, but also of two people too tired, or unsure, to end it. Merchant's hardened sagacity gives way to bitterness at times, as well. "So you're in love, that's so good for you. Live it up girl 'cause it never lasts too long," goes the sharp tone of "The Worst Thing," while "Not In This Life" looks harshly back on mistakes made in love, but is hopeful in the end.

Weary as life may have made her, though, Merchant is far from down for the count, and, on the contrary, comes out swinging much of the time. "I'm Not Gonna Beg" is fairly direct: "I'm not gonna beg you for nothing, I'm not gonna beg you for your love." "Build A Levee," accentuated by additional vocals from Mavis Staples, advises acquiring a brimming well of self-confidence as the best way to keep the deceitful opposite sex's hooks out of you. Motherland leaves you with the feeling that no down is so far down that you can't crawl back up. (Michael Delano)

significant others

THE APEX THEORY
The Apex Theory
Dreamworks

The Apex Theory reminds me of pre-Make Yourself Incubus, when Brandon Boyd wasn't yet madly in love enough (as he is now) to write stuff like "Stellar" and "Wish You Were Here." These were the days when Incubus let the funk flow much more freely, and bounced around talking about consciousness expansion (granted, they did this on Make Yourself, too), a torch that has recently been passed to BoyHisCar.

Or maybe it has been passed to The Apex Theory, but without a lyric sheet, I have no clue what they're singing about. In any event, TAT has the free-flowing, jamband-esque feel nailed down, so much so that you wish they'd settle down and write a song already.

The closest they come is "4RA's" from their self-titled five-song EP. It's pretty quick and to the point, and brings to mind, like much of the album, a feeling of Primus-lite. The vocals bring to mind both the previously mentioned Brandon Boyd and, at times, Cedric Bixler in "Invalid Litter Dept." mode and/or D. Boon.

The EP definitely begins better than it ends, as "Trust Ease" is much too sparse and lifeless, while the jittery bass behind the tranquil guitar distortion on the opener "Shhh...(hope diggy)" finally lets me know what it would feel like to watch the sun set while lying on a beach...on crack. Who knows, the tide might be coming in for these guys soon. (Michael Delano)

Natalie Merchant

Apex Theory

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and

- ❒ A. Contracting an STI.
- ❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
- ❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, a 2-semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

One wily WEENing:

A Hallow's Eve trip into the bizarre

By Aaron Pfannebecker
Collegian Staff

It was last Tuesday night when I left for Burlington, Vermont, a place I have only been once to before and a place I thought was filled to the brim with Michael J. Fox yuppie fallout. The cold doesn't bother me there. I grew up in the northern tundra of Canada. (All of this is neither here nor there. I was traveling north to see Ween on Halloween at the University of Vermont.)

Thinking all of these things to myself, the van I am traveling in is huffing and puffing its way north like so many vans previous. The van I am in is just an infant. It is cold and I wear next to nothing to attract attention. Once, completely unnoticed, I bundle up and look out the window; the foliage was beautiful, even at night.

It was All Hallow's Eve, the night when your little brother throws toilet paper at your neighbors' houses, to later learn that those neighbors' houses were really his own house and that the family that lives in that house is finally aware of the (your) little brother's problem with alcohol. For myself, I went to bed on a dorm room floor next to a tall blonde named Jeff. Jeff was just as tired as I was.

In the morning I woke up. It was Halloween and myself and six of my friends had a job to do. We were the Burlington regiment of tonight's concert setter uppers. We were roadies. Why? Because we are fans and cannot afford tickets. It was hard work. I pulled my back out, dropped things and once again felt miniscule in life. The concert was to take place in a gymnasium. Sweat, sin, intoxication and a many invented custom idea were going to enter this hallowed-out shrine to basketball. Even Ween were going to come in here and play.

To cut to the chase, Ween were to take the stage at eight at night. I was very tired by this time and needed to get some sleep. Instead, I got an all-access pass and $@%&*. Something like 2,000 people entered this gym to see this stupid band. It was to be Ween's last show of their tour before work on a new album takes place. The atmosphere was very exciting. People were dressed up as laundry baskets, Christmas trees, dead people, ghouls and my personal favorite, Peter Pan.

Ween came on stage, wearing customs and weight loss. They were looking very healthy. I was shocked and thought of my own personal fitness when the concert began. Earth's weirdest and greatest rock band from New Hope, Pennsylvania played one of the best shows I have ever seen. They played heavy songs, funny songs, ballads, "Band on the Run" by Wings and even a song by Prince. The show was fantastic. All 123 pounds of me were thrown into a quasi-mosh pit and I didn't mind the hitting and kicking.

After the show, the band wished the crowd a "Happy Halloween." The crowd said, "Whatever," and dispersed and I sat down on the glitter-covered ground and stared at the stage. I had an all-access press pass. I was wondering to myself what this sticker I had yet to take off meant. A guard came up to me and asked me, "Are you okay?" "Bagaboombrewhoohoo," I replied. I was asked to leave. Apparently, my all-access pass meant nothing.

I was outside again in Burlington. It was very cold and there was real snow falling from the sky against a blue moon. There has not been a blue moon (a blue moon is the second moon of the month) on Halloween in 49 years. It was a good night. It was one in the morning. Ween had played from eight to a little after midnight with only one encore. As I walked away from the gymnasium I saw the most beautiful girl I have ever seen in my life. She was dressed as Peter Pan. I approached her. "You are very pretty," I said. She smiled and walked away. I was traumatized and still am.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
MONSTERS INC (G)1200 1240 220 300 440 520 700 740 920 1000*
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 1215 410 800 1030*
THE ONE (R) 1230 400 710 950*
K-PAX (PG13) 1210 430 725 1015*
13 GHOSTS (R) 1240 415 730 1000*
ON THE LINE (PG) 1220 430*
PROM NGHT (R) 1200 800 700 1040
THE LAST CASTLE (R) 700 1005
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1205 415 720 1030
GOSEY NORANG (PG13) 1250 740
BANDITS (PG13) 400 1010
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 1205 400 745
TRAINING DAY (R) 400 840
ZOOLANDER (PG13) 1220 710
THE OTHERS (PG13) 1010
SENIOR MOVIE NOV 8
RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS DOORS OPEN AT 1140AM
*NO PASSES/COUPONS
1 DAY ADVANCE PRICE SALES • EXPRESS N' SERVESM
Tickets & Gift Certificates Available at cinemark.com

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
FRIDAY thru NOV. 15 – for seven days only!
THE NEW YORK TIMES
"Leslie Sobieski and Albert Brooks deliver outstanding performances!"
"TWO THUMBS UP!!"
"Deeply funny! An Oscar®-caliber performance from Albert Brooks!"
my first mister
DAILY at 7:00
BACK BY DEMAND
Value... Added Footage
24 Extra Seconds Free
"It's Fun Night At The Movies"
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
ONLY WESTERN MASS SHOWING
DAILY at 9:15
Downtown North presents
Academy of Music
Movie-Line: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

Life is hard without balance.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2001

At Ernst & Young, we enable people to bring their professional goals into harmony with their personal aspirations. It's a work ethic we believe in. That's why we were named one of the 100 Best Companies to Work For. Three times in a row. Perhaps you'll want to join us as we go for four. Come on over and get a warm welcome.

ERNST YOUNG
FROM THOUGHT TO FINISH.™

Giants

continued from page 5

Giants also played some of the traditional favorites, including Dinah's "Birdhouse in Your Soul" and "Dead" Lincoln's "Lie Still, Little Bottle " and Miscellaneous T's "The Famous Polka." The crowd popped huge for each of the songs, listening to live versions of songs that were in almost every case, better than the original album versions, notably the soulful performance of "Dead" From the band's debut album Hansburgh told a story of performing at Pearl Street in 1986, getting knocked off stage before it got to perform "Don't Let's Start." To redress that missed opportunity, TMBG rocked out a newer version of the song that featured a more textured musical performance.

There were other truly Giants moments at the show: the band covered local radio stations, the band's drummer played 10 different styles at the command of Hansburgh, the new guitarist played Eddie Van Halen's guitar style, John and John's admonition of clove-cigarette smokers.

Ultimately however, it was the band's clear love of the music and the fans that made the show amazing. Clearly enjoying the songs they've played a thousand times before, clearly enjoying a crowd that would have done whatever the band commanded, clearly enjoying a romantically small atmosphere where the band could be truly individualistic.

Oh, and as for They Might Be Giants professional struggles for success? At one point during the show, while joking with the audience, one of the two Johns said there was the "easy way, and the They Might Be Giants way." They both sort of smirked, they both sort of laughed, they both sort of smiled, and then They Might Be Giants started playing again.

heroes

continued from page 5

to the industry. He says there will be a move towards "de-costuming" heroes to emulate the real heroes in reality.

"The de-costuming of heroes is a trend we've been heading towards at Marvel this year and that you may see more of in 2002. Not every hero will reveal their identity, but some will," Quesada told the London Sunday Times. "Marvel's heroes have always been much more powered down than our competitors', so they deal with threats and life on a much more human level."

Sources consulted: comicbookresources.com, milehighcomics.com/newsarama, comicscontinuum.com, and londontimes.com.

Chris Kenny is a Collegian Staff Member.

Why did the chicken cross the road? To write for Arts!

DAN SANTILLA/COLLEGIAN

Hitting the post

Kat Machamer and the rest of the women's soccer team just missed qualifying for an A-10 tournament berth.

North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
www.northamherstmotors.com
549-RENT OOPS!
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • SUV's • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co • MHEC Rates
(On bus route)

The Wisdom of Solomon
Karen Manz
"Going Public with Spirituality"
7:30

The Collegian
Home to:
with Kurt Polesky
Dritte und Vierzig Acht über den Zuständen
(THIRD AND FORTY-EIGHT ACROSS THE NATION)
Style File with Shauna Billings
FULL COURT PRESS with Glen Straub
At the movies with Sam Wilkinson

Live and Work in Japan Next Year on
The JET Program!
-Work in a Japanese public school or city office
-Share your own culture while learning about Japan
-Japanese language is not required for most positions
-Applicants must hold a Bachelor's degree by June 30, 2002. Only US citizens may apply in the US
-Application deadline for the next program session, which begins in late July 2001, is December 5, 2001.
Japan Exchange and Teaching Program Information Session:
Thursday, November 8 at 6:00pm
The University Club
Questions? Call the Japanese Consulate in Boston: 617 973-9772 x122
JET is an annual program--all students are welcome to attend the information session.

Does your writing want a home? Contact the Collegian at 545-1809

Owners do battle in more than one sport

Jerry Colangelo, owner of the World Series champion Arizona Diamondbacks, is sitting at the top of the world right now.

For starters, he constructed the first professional championship-winning organization in the state of Arizona. Secondly, his toddler – the four-year old D-backs – was the club that finally dismantled the New York Yankee dynasty. Thirdly, he got Yankee owner George Steinbrenner to shut his mouth for once about how good his team is.

Now that the baseball season has concluded, Colangelo cannot just sit down and enjoy the dry, desert state winter; he must turn his attention to his basketball enterprise – the Phoenix Suns.

GLEN STRAUB

As he starts to focus in on the Suns he will realize that Steinbrenner is getting a little revenge in a very interesting way.

The Suns made a blockbuster deal with the New Jersey Nets over the summer – trading away their franchise player in Jason Kidd to New Jersey for Stephan Marbury. It was a swap of two of the premier point guards in the league with two completely different playing styles.

In the first week of the 2001-02 NBA season, the two clubs have gone in opposite directions. The Suns have compiled a record of 1-3 in their first four games and are currently tied for last place in the Pacific Division with the L.A. Clippers and Portland Trailblazers.

The Nets, on the other hand, have a surprising 3-1 mark. Believe it or not, but the Nets are in first place in the Atlantic Division. The impressive start is the best in the 25-year history of the organization.

By the records, it shows that the squad from the swamp has gotten the better of the deal.

Steinbrenner may have just lost the World Series but he is one up in the basketball category over Colangelo.

The Nets are part of Steinbrenner's sports business monopoly, entitled Yankee-Nets. The organization, which is operated by the Boss, owns the Yankees, the Nets, the New Jersey Devils, and it recently added another champion, the Manchester United soccer club from Manchester, England.

New Jersey has been tearing it up across the Eastern Conference in the first week. Without a doubt, the catalyst behind the Nets uprising has been Kidd.

Kidd has brought a new style of play to the Continental Airlines Arena. In past years, Marbury held onto the ball for as long as possible and then tried to make a move on his defender. At the end of the move he would either try to find the open man (who was usually not open) or take a rushed shot. It was successful on an individual level as Marbury was one of the top scorers in the league last year, but the team never flourished, as they finished with a 26-56 record.

Now with Kidd at the helm there has been more of a team aspect on the court, and everyone is getting involved. Keith Van Horn has returned to his rookie year form – leading the Nets in scoring with 17.5 points per game.

Kenyon Martin has benefited from Kidd in that he loves the run-and-gun style that Kidd brought from the West Coast. He is averaging 12.0 ppg and 5.0 rebounds a game in his sophomore season.

Kidd is leading the Nets team in rebounds, assists and steals. His stats for the year so far are 14.5 ppg, 7.5 rpg and 8.0 apg, nearly averaging a triple-double.

Marbury is nearly averaging a triple-double as well with 21.5 ppg, 10.5 rpg and 9.0 apg, but championships are not made by one player. The team is flustered and it needs help. Maybe if Colangelo is smart, he'll let World Series game-winner Luis Gonzalez sub-in for Shawn Marion in the next game.

Glen Straub is a Collegian Columnist

series

continued from page 12

throughout the East and the world, praying for some sort of redemption.

In 1997, a young Marlin squad went out and topped the Indians, winning the final game in extras. The only problem is, nobody really cared. Neither the Indians nor the Marlins held anywhere near the popularity that either the Yankees or the Diamondbacks grasped this year. Without the emotional factor, the Fall Classic just isn't the same.

So with that we're down to one. This is the only series that can actually rival this summer's Fall Classic. Ten years ago, the Twinkies topped Atlanta in seven games, in a series that nearly paralleled its counterpart of '01, with five games being decided by one run and three going into extra innings, including the final two games in Minnesota. Also, like this season, all seven games in the series were won by the home team.

As great as 1991 was, this year's World Series was far better on so many levels. Sure, the first and sixth games were blowouts that had their outcomes in doubt for no more than five innings. But aside from those two contests, the Series was filled with superstars, in both greatness and in failure. It was filled with so many swings of momentum and of emotion that fans could hardly take a breath for any of those five games.

First off, only twice in World Series history had a team been down two runs in the ninth inning and come back to win the ball game. Not only did the Yankees do it twice in a row, they tied both games with two-run jacks with two outs in the bottom of the ninth and then went on to win in extras. That is truly the work of backyard wiffle ball dreams that manifest themselves in the minds of youths across America.

Second, we got to witness the greatness of Curt Schilling, who was easily the best player in this season's playoffs. Still, he was imperfect against the Yanks, a beautiful thing in its own right. Schilling was phenomenal in games one and four, and cruised through six innings of the final outing. The fact that he started to crack in the seventh and gave up a homer to Alfonzo Soriano to lead off the eighth, showed the humanity of someone who was performing acts that were so heroic just two innings before.

Speaking of imperfection, the sheer fact that Mariano Rivera came in to pitch the final two innings and actually lost is phenomenal. Rivera, who still possesses the lowest career postseason ERA in the history of the major leagues, not only allowed two runs in the ninth, but threw away a sure-out at second base with no one retired. His dominance in the game should not be overshadowed by the sheer results though – aside from Tony Womack's double, no player truly got good wood on any of Rivera's pitches.

Additionally, it was only the second time in over 150 games that the Yanks lost when leading after eight innings of play – the first time since the year that baseball became integrated.

Game Seven alone qualifies this series as one of the all-time classics. A pitcher's duel between two of the most dominant pitchers of their generation is rarely paralleled, let alone in a seventh game. It was one of the tensest games ever viewed, without a doubt. A potential series-winning home run by a 23-year-old rookie on a nearly perfect pitch from a dominant veteran? Unbelievable. A botched play by a pitcher in the upper echelon of his position in terms of fielding? Magnificent. A come from behind victory in the bottom of the ninth? Stellar.

The beauty of this series was founded though, in the emotion that surrounded it. On one hand, you had the defending champs – the schoolyard bullies who always seem to win, but still have an egregious number of people rooting against them. On the other hand, there was the young franchise that was yet so old, and some suggested the mail it received from the AARP crippled mail carriers.

And then there were the players. Grizzled veterans like Schilling, Randy Johnson, Matt Williams and Mark Grace, all looking for their first, and likely last, titles. Stoic Yankee heroes like Paul O'Neill, Tino Martinez and Scott Brosius all looking for just one more sip of the nectar of victory. Journeymen Miguel Batista and Brian Anderson, showing they aren't just backups to Arizona's 1-2 punch, but instead pitching as well as their counterparts at the top of the rotation.

It was the stoic history of the Yankees against a club in existence for just four years. It was a back-and-forth series that found its excellence in pitching, but timely hitting was the difference in the series. It was a series in which the excellence of its stars was overshadowed by isolated moments of imperfection.

Without blemishes, beautiful things simply seem ordinary. Could anyone truly appreciate a perfectly blue sky if there weren't days filled with gray? Would baseball be the same if its heroes were successful nine times out of ten or if certain players never made mistakes? Absolutely not. Imperfection is exactly what makes some things so beautiful.

It is that imperfection that made the 2001 World Series perfect.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Red Sox fans show more bitterness

Over a month ago, the Red Sox were officially knocked out of the playoff race after suffering a catastrophic letdown. The team couldn't get along, unfairly fired its manager in the midst of a playoff race and could barely garner a .500 record with the second-highest payroll in baseball.

Yet for some reason, here at the University of Massachusetts, Red Sox fans were rioting in the streets in celebration last Sunday.

What was the cause of this celebration? Did the Red Sox actually do anything to deserve this unprecedented support? Of course not. It was only another case of Boston fans showing why they are the most biter fans the sports world has to offer.

JESSE GREENSPAN

When the Diamondbacks beat the Yankees, Red Sox fans took to the streets like their team had just won its fourth straight world title. The "Yankees suck" chant resonated around campus, and most of UMass went to sleep with a cozy feeling in its heart.

However, a brief look at the situation will show just how ridiculous this display was. For one thing, a Yankee win in game seven would have given them 27 World Series titles since the Red Sox last won one in 1918. Because the Diamondbacks pulled it out, though, on a Luis Gonzalez bloop single in the bottom of the ninth, New York now has to settle for a mere 26 world championships since the Red Sox won their last one.

This is not something that would make me dance in the streets if I was a Red Sox fan, burning Derek Jeter posters while simultaneously trying to convince myself that the Yankee shortstop is indeed, a homosexual.

Red Sox fans don't even root for their own team anymore, instead choosing to spend their time hating somebody else. Just look at their rallying cry of "Yankees suck." Every other team in sports has a rallying cry that is meant for cheering the hometown team on. "Let's go Mets" can be heard at Shea Stadium, the Tomahawk chop (which I hate, but at least it is for the Braves and not against another team) is heard at Turner Field and even Expos fans bang on empty seats to try and motivate their squad.

Meanwhile, Red Sox fans spend the tense moments of every game, not cheering on their own team, but instead telling the most successful team in baseball history how bad it is.

If these "Yankees suck" chants were reduced to times the Red Sox were actually playing the Yankees, they wouldn't be all that bad. However, Boston fans have taken it upon themselves to break out their rally cry no matter who their team is playing. When the Red Sox play the Orioles, it doesn't matter – the Yankees still suck. When they play the Blue Jays, once again, it is the Yankees that suck. It has gotten so bad that even Foxboro Stadium and the Fleet Center generally hear the words "Yankees suck" more often than they hear, "Go Patriots" or "Go Celtics."

The funniest part of this situation is that Red Sox-Yankees is hardly even a rivalry. In a true rivalry, Boston would actually have to win some of the time, and that is clearly not the case. Since the Red Sox sold Babe Ruth 83 years ago, the Yankees have never lost to Boston in a game that actually mattered.

As a result of this, Yankees fans don't even dislike Red Sox fans. After all, it is virtually impossible to despise someone you always beat. It is like the big brother always picking on the little brother in one-on-one basketball, but never going so far as to dislike his younger compatriot. Instead, it is the Mets (my favorite team) that are the true rivals of the Yankees, as the two squads fight for New York City supremacy.

In all of their bitterness, Red Sox fans don't even realize that other baseball teams have suffered as much or more than Boston. The Cubs, for instance, haven't won a World Series since 1908, and yet you will never hear a "Cardinals suck" chant in the north end of Chicago. Granted, the Cubs usually don't come as close to the title as Boston before falling just short, but still, there is basically no bitterness in a group of fans that continually comes out to Wrigley Field in droves every year.

The White Sox have also suffered as much pain as the Red Sox, not having won a World Series since 1917. Once again, however, "Indians suck" chants are a rare sound indeed at Comiskey Park. All this, and the White Sox have a jinx even worse than the selling of Babe Ruth – that being the Black Sox scandal of 1919.

So, the next time Boston wins an important game, take to the streets and revel in what your team has accomplished. However, the next time New York loses an important game, just be thankful that your main "rival" has not increased the gap between the Yankees and the Red Sox even farther than it already is.

Jesse Greenspan is Collegian Columnist.

COURTESY GENE BERESIN

Breum-boom

Anke Bruemmer, who was recently selected to compete in the Division 1 North/South Senior All-Star game, will lead her squad into the NCAA tournament this upcoming weekend against No. 1 seed Old Dominion.

CORRECTION: The Atlantic 10 Championship field hockey photo on the back page of yesterday's Collegian was improperly accredited to Gerald Ling. It was actually taken by Gene Beresin. The Collegian Sports staff regrets the error.

the Ground Round of Hadley
ALL DAY EVERY DAY DRAFT SPECIAL
BOOMER MUGS only $2.79
Budweiser BUD LIGHT MICHELOB Ultra
Nightly Specials
Sun., Mon., Tues. 4pm 'til closing
10 wings- $3.00
Wed.&Thurs. 4pm 'til closing
Chicken or Buffalo Wings -$3.00
9 TV's. Smoking Section. Monday Night Football

WOMEN ARE MORE THAN THEIR BODIES!
Come create a student-run task force to work on the following:
POLITICAL ACTION, ADVOCACY, SUPPORT AND CONNECTION
Explore these issues with a group of professional women on campus.
TIME: November 15, 4–5 p.m.
PLACE: Campus Center Room 802

30th Anniversary Celebration Sale
Wed. Nov. 7th thru Sun. Nov. 11th
Enter to win a $1000 Shopping Spree
ZANNA
30 years of serving Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Do you have questions about your rights as a tenant? We can help with leases, security deposits and other tenant issues. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union or call 545-0865

Cheap Heating Oil! Join the Pioneer Valley Oil Co-Operative. Call 545-0865 or stop by Commuter Services, Rm 428 Student Union

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 2 beds available Jan 1, 2002. Limited supply. Act now. Call Rental office 549-0600. www.brandywine-apts.com

AUTO FOR SALE

96' Mitsubishi Eclipse RS Sunroof, good condition, well maintained, AC, automatic. Please call 413-594-2490. $6500

EMPLOYMENT

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 16, 2001 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office about a Spring, 2002 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office today. 545-1955, 922 Campus Center

Need Business Experience? Good Pay! Interested? Spring/Summer Internships/Jobs Call College Pro 888-277-7962. See us in the Campus Center on Wednesday

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this semester with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. Does not involve credit card applications. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Janitor Tues./Thurs. mornings. 10hrs/week, $9/hr. plus membership. Hampshire Fitness Club 256-6446

Work from home and love it. $1500-5000/mo, pt/ft, 888-701-5105, Free Booklet!

EMPLOYMENT

Earn Good Money in spare time. Sell jewelry to friends. Take orders. 527-0389

www.Fluid Visions.com

FOR RENT

Lockers for rent: Cheap! $10 for the year. Come to Commuter Services, 428 Student Union

FOR SALE

1994 Plymouth Laser 90,000 miles regular maintenance done recently asking $2600, negotiable. 549-5422

Les Paul Copy Guitar Good condition and practice amp for sale $150. Call 546-3029

Color Pentium Laptop $99. Color 17" monitor $89. Warrantee 413-584-8857

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITYBARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

LOST AND FOUND

Found car keys by Skinner. 549-5109

ROOMMATE WANTED

Room available in 2 bedroom apartment with own bathroom –Millvalley- Dave 253-6638 drothaus@student.umass.edu

Responsible non-smoking female roommate wanted. Large apartment in Holyoke. $300/month + 1/2 utilities. 532-7959

SERVICES

Dating and Relationship questions answered at askdoclove.com

SERVICES

Pregnant Need Help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Party Cruise! Avoid Flight Concerns & Sail From Florida. Spend 5 Days in Bahamas From $279! Includes Most Meals! Get Group-Go Free! spingbreaktravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK PARTY! Indulge in FREE Travel, Drinks, Food, and Parties with the Best DJ's and celebrities in Cancun, Jamaica, Mazatlan, and the Bahamas. Go to StudentCity.com, call 1-800-293-1443 or email sales@studentcity.com to find out more.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions Available. Sign onto our Website Today www.EpicuRean.com 1-800-231-4-FUN

#1 SPRING-BREAK operator! Check our website for the best deals! www.vagabondtours.com Cancun, Bahamas Jamaica & Florida Group organizers EARN FREE TRIPS & CASH... Call today! 1-866-BREAK 00

TRAVEL

#1 Absolute Lowest Spring Break Price Guarantee! #2 Reputable company, Award-Winning Customer Service! (see website) #3 Free Meal Plans! (early-birds) #4 All Destinations! #5 Campus reps earn $$, Travel Free! Enough Reasons? 1-800-367-1252 www.springbreakdirect.com

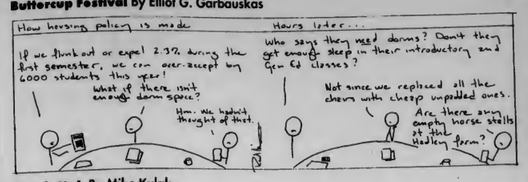
WANTED

Wanted: 29 serious people to get $$Paid$$ to lose 30lbs in the next 30 days! www.fillgood.com/onlinemall/

WANTED TO RENT

Looking to lease 3, 4, or 5 bedroom apt. For spring. Call Matt 617-650-7278

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.



HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 - HSCN Bulletin Board
2 - CBS (Hartford)
3 - CBS (Boston)
4 - ABC (Springfield)
5 - FOX (Springfield)
6 - HSCN Movie Channel
7 - UPN (Hartford)
8 - HSCN Info Channel
9 - NBC (New Haven)
10 - NBC (Springfield)
11 - Independent Channel
12 - UMATV (Academic Channel)
13 - WB (New Haven)
14 - ESPN
15 - ESPN2
16 - UMASS TV (Academic Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Cable News Channel
22 - C-Span
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifestyle
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - E!
30 - Nickelodeon
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Lifetime
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - VH1
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 7, 2001

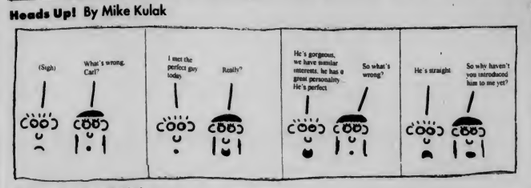
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)		National Geographic		Warship "Sea Power/Big Guns" (Series Premiere) (In Stereo) (N)				Nature "Survive"
WFSB	3	3 News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Ent. Tonight	Country Music Association Awards (In Stereo Live) (N)						News (N)	Late Show (N)
WBZ	4	4 News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Country Music Association Awards (In Stereo Live) (N)						News (N)	Late Show (N)
WCVB	5	5 News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (N)	My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey (N)	Bob Patterson	20/20 (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WLVI	56	Nanny (N)	Just Shoot Me	Friends (N)	Raymond	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) (N)		Felicity "Boooz" (In Stereo) (N)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News	Tonight Show
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Hollywood Sq.	Extra (N) (R)	Ed (N) (In Stereo) (N)		West Wing "War Crimes" (N) (R)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Friends (R)	Raymond
WTXX	8	Sabrina-Witch	Fresh Prince	Friends (R)	Just Shoot Me	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) (N)		Felicity "Boooz" (In Stereo) (N)		News	Home Imp.	Just Shoot Me	Mad Abt. You
WVIT	9	10 News	NBC News	Extra (N) (R)	Hollywood	Ed (N) (In Stereo) (N)		West Wing "War Crimes" (N) (R)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo) (N)		Seinfeld (R)	Raymond
WTIC	61	11 Simpsons (R)	Friends (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Raymond	Temptation Island		Temptation Island 2 (N) (R)		News		News (N)	Tonight Show
WWLP	22	22 News (R)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Ed (N) (In Stereo) (N)		West Wing "War Crimes" (N) (R)		Law & Order (N) (In Stereo) (N)		News (N)	Nightline (N)
WGBY	57	8 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		National Geographic		Warship "Sea Power/Big Guns" (Series Premiere) (In Stereo) (N)				News (R)	Nightline (R)
WGGB	40	28 News (R)	ABC News	Seinfeld (R)	Fraser (R)	My Wife-Kids	According-Jim	Drew Carey (R)	Bob Patterson	20/20 (R)		5th Wheel (R)	Shopmates (R)
WSBK	38	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Fresh Prince	Friends (R)	Enterprise "Breaking the Ice" (R)		Special Unit 2 "The Rocks" (R)		Ent. Tonight	Fraser (R)	Ripley's Believe It or Not!
WTBS	29	Roseanne (R)	Roseanne (R)			Ripley's Believe It or Not!		 "Blast From the Past" (1995, Comedy) Brendan Fraser,				Law & Order "Good Girl" (R)
A&E	69	Night Court	Newsradio (R)	Law & Order "Snatched" (R)		Biography: Jerry Falwell				American Justice: Blueprint		Greenfield	Moneyline
CNN	20	23 Moneyline (N) (R)		Wall Blitzer	Showbiz	Steen's Money		 "Blazing Saddles" (1974, Comedy) Cleavon Little,				Daily Show (R)	Friars Club
COM	33	39 Saturday Night Live (R)		Daily Show (R)	Steen's Money			The Point (N) (R)		Larry King Live (R)		South Park (N) (Geeks
DISC	32	Wild Discovery		Wild Discovery: South America		Mers on Earth (N)						Deadline Discovery (N)	Sportscenter (R)
ESPN	31	Sportscenter (R)		Charles Barkley		NHL Hockey: San Jose Sharks at Dallas Stars (Live) (R)							Justice Files
LIFE	34	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"House of Secrets" (1993, Suspense) Melissa Gilbert,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	35	Direct Effect	Who Knows?	Spankin' New Pop (In Stereo)		TRL (In Stereo) (R)			Making-Video	True Life (N) (In Stereo)		Dismissed (N)	New: Incubus
NICK	55	Rocket Power	Rocket Power	Rugrats (R)	Rugrats (R)	Spongeb	U Pick Toons	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Cheers (R)	Cheers (R)	Family Ties (R)	Family Ties (R)
SCIFI	59	Star Trek (R)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo) (R)		Farscape (R)				Outer Limits (R)		Star Trek (In Stereo) (R)	Crossing Over
TLC	67	26 Motorcycles – Born to Be Wild		Medical Detect: Medical Detect		Disasters at Sea				Junkyard Wars (N)		Robocrafters (N)	Disasters at Sea
TNT	65	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA) (R)		Pretender "Over the Edge" (R)		NBA Basketball: Washington Wizards at Boston Celtics. (In Stereo Live) (N)					NBA		 "Psycho III" (1986)
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger (R)		JAG (In Stereo) (R)		Nash Bridges "Land Pirates" (R)		 "Crimson Tide" (1995, Suspense) Denzel Washington. (In Stereo) (R)					Martin (R)
HBO	50	 "The Replacements" (2000, Action) Keanu Reeves, PG-13 (R)				Reverb (N) (In Stereo)				Curb-Entham	Mind-Married	Band of Brothers (In Stereo) (R)	 "Charlie's Angels" (2000) Cameron Diaz,
MAX	60	 "The Crow" (1994, Fantasy) Brandon Lee. (In Stereo) (R)				 "An Innocent Man" (1989, Drama) Tom Selleck. (R)						Soul Food (TV) (In Stereo) (R)	Resurrection
SHOW	54	(5:05) "The Nephew" (1998) (R)		 "Strictly Business" (1991, Comedy) PG-13 (R)		 "Book of Shadows: Blair Witch 2" (2000) (R)							"After Hours"

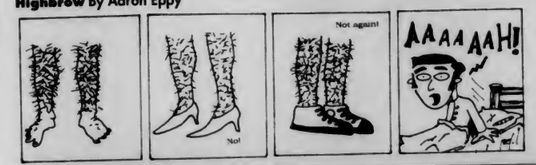


Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

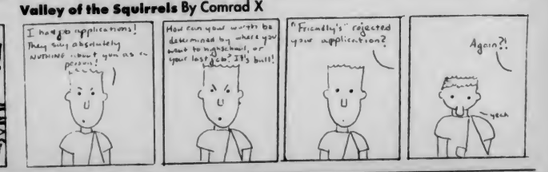
Monty By Jim Meddick

Heads Up! By Mike Kulak

Scarecrow By W. Bird



Monty By Jim Meddick



Shut the Duck Up By Seany McSean

Highbrow By Aaron Eppy

Valley of the Squirrels By Comrad X

Quote of the Day

"Bunch of savages in this town..."

– Randal Graves
Clerks

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 95 LOW: 26	HIGH: 11 LOW: 0	HIGH: 50 LOW: 23

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Now is not the time to say no when it is just as easy to say yes. You can have the things that are important to you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – After a long and arduous effort, you'll have to place a beloved project in the hands of the judges today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You can make some changes today that will help others look forward with greater optimism and drive. You will be proud of your accomplishments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This is a good day for you to make plans for the coming year. Don't limit yourself; your dreams can come true!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Someone may leave you uncertain and unsettled today, but you can be sure that it's all part of the plan! He or she may have something big in mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Today, you'll have the chance to get well ahead of schedule and make time for one or two special activities you've long awaited.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may have to break the rules ever so slightly from time to time today to get the results you really want.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – With a little fancy footwork you can land the role of your choice today. You will even surprise your critics with an unforgettable performance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You must be more aggressive today if you really want to achieve your desired goals. There will be no room for insecurity or self-doubt at this time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Put yourself in another person's shoes and you'll understand more completely why things have turned out the way they have. Do not cry over spilt milk.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You are not after just a piece of the pie today, you're after the whole thing. Your goal will be within reach if you really put your mind to it!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You will have to do a little careful negotiating on behalf of someone else today if you want to have things your way when the time comes.

Sheep By Arthur Poor

Following game seven of the World Series, Scooby and the gang uncover the mystery behind Mariano Rivera's unimaginable collapse.

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2026 for more information.

LUNCH

Chicken Burrito

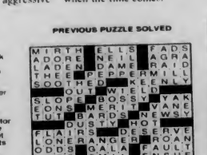
Fried Clams

Bean Burrito (vegan)

DINNER

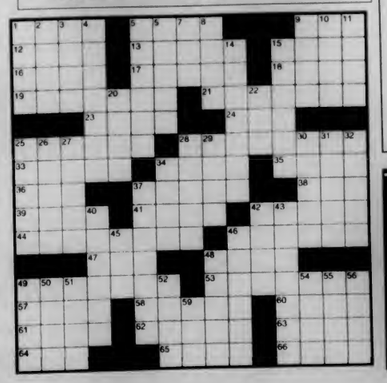
Chicken Cacciatore

London Broil



Veggie Cacciatore (vegan) (W only)

Native American Stew



THE HARP
IRISH PUB
TONIGHT!!!
come to the
HARP DANCE PARTY
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"
163 Sunderland rd.
Amherst, MA 01002
548-6900

ACROSS
1 Trickle
5 Recital piece
9 Family man
12 Soprano Gluck
13 Pub sign
15. Ocean motion
16 Trot or gallop
17 Vice
18 Stratford's river
19 Beseech
21 Skill
23 Spring bloom
24 Use a calculator
25 Large primate
28 Sleeper's spot
33 Works on tests
34 Type of lock
35 Big Food's kin
36 Capp's Abner
37 Roamed about
38 Bruins grp
39 Slippery ones
41 Baseball's Tenme
42 Interstate sight
44 Like guys who work out
46 Skimpy
47 Forty-niner's quest
48 Woodlands grazer
49 Window box flower
53 Ingenuous
57 Type of interview
58 Process cheese
60 Muffin spread
61 Imitates
62 Rabbits
63 Chowder relative
64 Curtain hanger
65 Most excellent
66 Winslet of "Titanic"

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Poultry seasoning
2 Vivacity
3 Given off (heat)
4 New England grinder
5 Kingdom
6 Modules
7 LAX info
8 Pack firmly
9 Plunge in the pool
10 Hubbubs
11 Bears' abodes
14 Copied illegally
15 Sleazy
20 February 14 figure
22 Sonnet kin
25 Amazon port
26 Good-bye, in Cannes
27 Pay them!
28 Taffer
29 Nautical position
30 Inclinations
31 Singer Merman
32 ... daily dawdle
34 Exercise system
37 North Carolina capital
40 Talent seekers
42 Bump into
43 Scull part
45 Voice with a tool
46 Least
48 Goes out with
49 Mellow fruit
50 Canadian player
51 Knotted
52 Sheik
54 Ms. Fitzgerald
55 Usher's target
56 A few
59 "— you kidding?"

Trader Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Andy Vogt
Production Supervisor	Esther Dansky
Production Staff	Pete Preston, Andrea Mangini

UMass KO's Colonials to keep playoff hopes alive

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

For the last couple of weeks the Massachusetts volleyball team has been on the ropes. But like a proven heavyweight champion, the squad is starting to throw some serious uppercuts to remain in the fight.

The Minutewomen kept their slim playoff hopes alive this past weekend by trouncing Atlantic 10 opponents George Washington and Fordham on the road, by scores of 3-1 and 3-0.

UMass	3
Fordham	0
UMass	3
G.W.	1

UMass received solid performances from all over its roster, as the team won its third straight match and stayed alive in the fight for the fourth and final Atlantic 10 postseason berth. The Maroon and White carried over the success it had in its dominating victory against URI last Tuesday into the weekend matches.

"I think that any time you beat anybody 3-0, you're playing pretty darn good," Head Coach Jeannie Kenny said.

"[URI] definitely was a confidence builder for us," sophomore outside hitter Nitia Small added. "We played great defense and our offense was unbelievable [this weekend]."

The Minutewomen opened up the weekend against the Colonials Friday night in our nation's capital, and were tested but ultimately emerged victorious to gain a much-needed conference victory. The two teams battled in a nightly contested game one, as GW took a 29-27 advantage only to see UMass fight back with two straight points to tie up the match. With the score at 32-32, the Colonials' Sarah Hokom committed two straight attack errors, giving the Minutewomen a 1-0 lead out of the gates.

Game two saw much of the same, as the hosts played UMass hard again and fought to a 23-23 score. However, the Maroon and White's Janeen DeMarte put down two kills and Lmarie Llovet slammed home another to lead the Minutewomen into the locker room with a 30-27 victory and a 2-0 lead.

The Colonials were able to cut the deficit to one after halftime, but UMass kept the pressure on in the fourth game, and two Llovet kills with UMass leading 28-26 culminated the Maroon and White victory. GW threw down an astounding 80 kills in the match, led by sophomore superstar Ruth Lazzari's 24 terminations, but was victimized by a not-so-spectacular 44 errors in the loss. Small (18 kills, .514 hitting percentage) and Llovet (15 kills) were the offensive stars for the Minutewomen, while four Maroon and White members contributed more than 10 digs on the defensive end led by Michelle Spaleta's 15 saves.

Fordham, on the other hand, provided little resistance in succumbing to the offensive attack of UMass, as the Minutewomen finished the match with a .289 hitting percentage. The dismal Rams, currently 1-12 in the Atlantic 10, were dominated in the opening game, hitting for a .085 percentage in dropping the frame 30-18. Fordham's offense slowly got better as each game progressed, but unfortunately for the Rams, so did the UMass attack. The third and final game was the most competitive, but the Maroon and White committed only two hitting errors and left the Bronx with the sweep.

"I'm not so sure we played as well as we did against URI, but I think we played just as hard," Kenny said.

Small definitely was the star of the weekend for the Minutewomen, leading the team in kills both nights. She was quick to give credit to her teammates, however, for her success.

"There is no way I would have gotten all of those kills without [the team's] defense and passing," she said.

With one contest remaining, UMass must depend on help from other A-10 teams, as it is battling with Duquesne and Temple for the fourth and final postseason spot.

"We have one more match to prepare for," Kenny said. "We've done all we can do, so whatever happens, happens."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Kat Machamer fought through adversity to have a stellar senior year for the women's soccer team.

The big Kat

Machamer finishes senior year in style

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

Sometimes things don't work out quite as they're planned.

Five years ago, Kat Machamer, an accounting major from Highland Ranch, Colo., arrived on this campus having achieved almost everything a high school soccer player could possibly achieve. She led Cherry Creek High School to three consecutive Centennial League championships and was a three-time all-league selection. She was twice named as a first team All-Colorado performer as well as being a two-time all-Denver Post and all-Rocky Mountain News selection.

To go along with all this, her club teams won five Colorado State Cup championships and the 1997 Far West Regional title. Machamer was also a member of the Olympic Development Program from 1989-1996 and competed in and won the Dallas Cup and Orange Bowl, two of America's premier amateur soccer tournaments.

In the fall of 1997 she was supposed to step in and help contribute to a Minutewoman squad that had reached five consecutive Sweet 16's. That is when it all went pear-shaped. Machamer suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament in her right knee prior to coming to Amherst and was lost for the entire season.

"I think it's hard to come in hurt," Machamer said. "You don't really know anybody on the team, but Coach [Jim Rudy] was really good about getting me involved with the team. I traveled and everything so that helped a lot."

After watching UMass win the Atlantic 10 Championship before falling 2-0 to Harvard in the first round of the NCAA Tournament in '97, Machamer concentrated on getting herself ready to make her debut the next season. It was a goal she achieved, appearing in 16 of the Minutewomen's 21 matches. However, UMass slumped to its first ever sub-.500 record (10-11) and failed to qualify for the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1990.

"I had a lot of problems so it took me a while to get into the college game physically," she said. "Intellectually I think it helped me to sit out and watch. I think I saw a lot of stuff that I wouldn't have seen if I had gone straight in playing [out of high school]. Sitting on the bench, you see things than you wouldn't notice while playing so I think that helped me a lot."

Apart from simply stepping onto the playing field that season, the brightest moment of the '98 campaign for Machamer was scoring her first ever collegiate goal in a 4-2 win over Colgate. Machamer also added an assist in that match and two more in a 5-0 triumph over Virginia Tech to finish the season with five points.

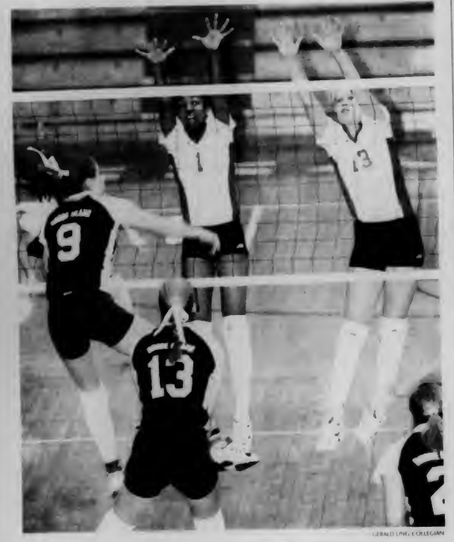
"I remember it was with my right foot so it was exciting because of the injury," Machamer said of her goal against Colgate. "It's always nice to score and it's an ice-breaker to get your first, so it was exciting."

However, as much as '98 was a success for Machamer, 1999 was again a setback as she was once again hampered by injury, appearing in just seven games, tallying just a single goal and one assist. The next season, her junior year, was only slightly better, as she was able to appear in 14 matches, starting 11 of them, notching a career-high seven points on two goals and three assists.

"She was a little different player [following the injury,]" Rudy said. "She was a little slower but she utilized what she had very well. She had a good brain and a sweet left foot. She knows what she can and can't do; she played older than her years. She's one of the smarter players that have played here."

That set the stage for this season, her last hurrah. Finally gone was the lingering shading of injury and Machamer was finally able to perform at her full potential. All the promise that she had shown in high school was evident as Machamer went on to have a career year, setting career-highs in games played (15), goals (4) and assists (6) as well as notching her first career hat trick in a 7-0 victory over Duquesne at Totman Field on Oct. 14.

Two days before scoring her hat trick, Machamer tallied three assists in a 5-0 win over St. Bonaventure, giving her nine points on the weekend. For her effort Kat was named A-10 Player of the Week, WHMP Athlete of the Week, as well as being named to the Soccer America Team of the Week.



"I was determined that she was going to have a really good senior year. That was one of my goals as a coach," Rudy said. "I appreciate the adversity she's been under and what she's done to get where she is. This kid is one of our top workers in the weight room, in fitness, in health habits, cooperation. I feel she's maximized here and I'm really pleased she had a great senior year."

Helping Kat in producing that great senior year were her two fellow central midfielders, sophomore Michelle Luttati and junior Martha Conover. Not only did those three contribute 10 goals and 19 assists in 2001, they helped dictate the pace of the UMass attack and provided an important link between the Minutewoman defense and frontrunners.

"I think we have a great connection and we play a lot alike. All three of us are very similar in that we like to pass the ball around and make the simple connections, and we all play very smart," Machamer said. "I think they're two of the best players I've ever played with. It's really nice to play on a team that has that connection in the middle. I love playing with those two."

Despite all the injury problems and not playing in an NCAA tournament game during her five-year UMass career, Machamer leaves focusing solely on the positives of the experience.

"Being so far from home, the team has been my family, especially Martha. I've been truly honored to play in the middle with my best friend."

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Nitia Small (left) and Celia Wiste sky for a block attempt as the UMass volleyball team prepares to make a last-second dash toward the postseason.

One of the greatest ever

MATT BRADY

It's over.

Said as it is, the 2001 World Series is finally finished, seemingly weeks after it began. The riots are likely over, the Bronx Bombers have been dethroned and a bunch of snakes are the possessors of the title of "World Champions."

But the question is, was it the greatest World Series of our lifetime?

Well, first we must look at the other series that could potentially take that title. Because of the beauty of drama, let's eliminate any series that didn't go the full slate. That leaves us with only six World Championships since 1981 (the year I was born) outside of this year's.

Of those six, 1982, 1985 and 1987 were all series that went seven deep, but really lacked the luster that most of the games from the 2001 version of the Fall Classic possessed. In those three matchups, a total of only two games were decided by one run, compared to four in just this year's campaign.

Now here's one that can actually match up with this year's contest. In 1986 (for Red Sox fans who can't bear to read this, please proceed to the next paragraph) the Mets took four out of the last five games to end the Sox' hopes of ending their streak. Still, the series only had two one-run classics and it climaxed in Game Six, not at the very end. The only reason that '86 could compete with '01 is because of the tension of Sox fans

Turn to SERIES, page 9

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVIII Issue 45 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, November 8, 2001

Today in arts the king of pop returns and we send a crew to Mass Moca

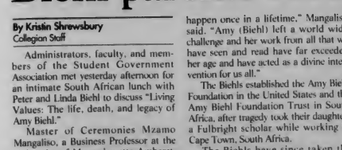
ARTS p. 5

Check out the hockey team's weekend preview in sports

SPORTS p. 14

Biehl parents receive honor

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff



Administrators, faculty, and members of the Student Government Association met yesterday afternoon for an intimate South African lunch with Peter and Linda Biehl to discuss "Living Values: The life, death, and legacy of Amy Biehl."

Master of Ceremonies Mzamo Mangaliso, a Business Professor at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, began the event.

"This is one of those occasions that happen once in a lifetime," Mangaliso said. "Amy (Biehl) left a world wide challenge and her work from all that we have seen and read have far exceeded her age and have acted as a divine intervention for us all."

The Biehls established the Amy Biehl Foundation in the United States and the Amy Biehl Foundation Trust in South Africa, after tragedy took their daughter, a Fulbright scholar while working in Cape Town, South Africa.

The Biehls have since taken the opportunity to speak to various universities around the country as well as work closely with a variety of organizations in the U.S. and in South Africa.

TIBORA GINCZY/ BEAM COLLEGIAN

Peter and Linda Biehl expressed their thanks for receiving the Chancellor's medal.

Chancellor Marcellette Williams with the help of Professor Emeritus Fred Tillis presented the Biehls with the Chancellor's Medal.

"It is my privilege and honor to present the Chancellors Medal to you both," Tillis said. "You have taken the tragic death of your daughter and created a positive and transformative energy that gives larger meaning not only to Amy's life, but more importantly to the values she lived by."

Tillis further explained that by the Biehls actions they have provided living values that we as a university aspire to live by.

The Biehls accepted the awards in shock, but with thankfulness as well.

"We all experience loss at different times, and it is very humbling to receive this award," Mrs. Biehl said.

Mr. Biehl agreed by explaining that he two is humbled by this experience, and hopes to keep a lasting friendship with the University in the years to come.

"We are humbled by this experience and are looking forward to sharing more with you," Mr. Biehl said. "We are already looking forward to returning and putting more rubber on the road."

The Biehls gave each attendee of the luncheon a loaf of Amy's Bread, which is sold in South Africa. The bread displays not only a picture drawn by a child in one of the Beihls after school programs, but instructions on how to avoid danger.

Turn to BIEHL, page 3

de Miguel talks today

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

During the academic year, the University of Massachusetts campus is alive with interdepartmental events, and hosts a variety of distinguished lecturers. Now it is the Anthropology Department's turn to sponsor a lecture as they invite Professor Jesus de Miguel to speak in Memorial Hall.

Professor de Miguel is Chair of the Department of Sociology at the University of Barcelona, and will give a lecture entitled "Identity, Democracy, and Disaffection: The Case of Spain" at 4 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 8. This is the sixth lecture in a series that the UMass Anthropology Department sponsors annually.

"I think [he will be speaking about] the change within Europe since the 1970s," Dr. Oriol Pi-Sunyer, of the Department of Anthropology said. "Specifically for Spain since it was a dictatorship, Spain is now an active member of the European Union and recognizes democracy. I have an idea he will talk about internal changes and the role of Spain in the European Union and in Western Europe."

In addition to his position on the University of Barcelona faculty, de Miguel also serves as the Vice-Chair for Social Sciences in the European Cooperation in the Field of Scientific and Technical Research as part of the European Commission in Brussels. His research currently focuses on Spanish social structure, social change, higher education, and the political system. He recently published a comparative study of higher education in Spain and the world entitled Excelencia. This latest work is one of 48 books he has authored.

Turn to SUNYER, page 3

MASS House

MASSPIRG volunteers, Laura Trimboli and Moriah Delano, construct a home to collect cans for the Western Food Bank of Massachusetts.

Islam Awareness Week appeals to non-Muslims

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The Muslim Students Association has revamped its annual Islam Awareness Week to reach a wider non-Muslim audience. It hopes it will dispel the stereotypes that it claims continue to be propagated in the media today.

The University of Massachusetts chapter of MSA launches its Islam Awareness Week this Saturday, one week prior to the beginning of Ramadan, the Muslim holy month of fasting. The week's events include several talks covering the issues of terrorism and the oppression of women and ending with a lecture entitled "The Solution," featuring world-renowned speaker Imam Siraj Wahaj.

MSA President Navid Kahn believes that there have been many underlying questions surrounding the Islam faith by the larger American community. Since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the subsequent media attention of the Muslim-American community, these questions are beginning to arise.

There have been 33 incidents of anti-Muslim incidents in Massachusetts since Sept. 11, ranking the state tenth in the nation (New York has the most reported anti-

Turn to MSA, page 3

By Jennifer Eastwood and Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

As lunchtime rolls around, eateries across the University of Massachusetts become bustling scenes of students and faculty buying and selling fast food, on-the-go coffee, full course meals, and even goodies for those with a sweet tooth.

The Auxiliary Services department's Food Services is the main provider under which category most UMass eateries fall, including the four main dining halls, the Blue Wall Eatery and Café, the Hatch Food Court, the Coffee Shop and Starbuck's Coffee cart in the Campus Center, and the snack bars in Whitmore, Hamden, and the Physical Plant.

In addition, student-run businesses such as the Earthfoods Café, the People's Market, the Sylvan snack bar in McNamara, the Greenough Sub Shop at Central, and Sweets N'More in Field at Orchard Hill provide an alternative to satisfy students' appetites.

Beyond that, the almost hidden treasures of the Graduate Lounge, privately owned businesses, like the Newman Center Cafeteria, and campus vending machines ensure that food options are everywhere for anyone hungry.

"In the Campus Center, we put through 15,000 transactions daily, could be 20,000," Retail Food Services Operation Manager of the University Food Services Brenda Ryan-Newton explained. "We probably cook an average of 200 pounds of French fries a day and serve 1,500 grinders, 800 cups of coffee, 350 smoothies, and an average of 2,000 cups of soup each day."

She noted that in particular smoothies, a new concept this semester, are climbing in popularity, sharing how pleasant it is for her to hear the sounds of the blenders during the making of a smoothie and how adding boosters for things such memory or energy make the experience that much more fun.

Dan Frazier, a supervisor at the Blue Wall Eatery and Cafe, agreed with Ryan-Newton, pointing out that since the opening of the smoothie stand, business in that section of the Blue Wall has gone from making less $100 in profit on a week day to making anywhere between $800 to $1,000 in the same amount of time.

"We're constantly trying to improve, trying to serve students and all customers faster," Ryan-Newton added, citing the example of a focus group ranging from 80 to 100 participants, which will attempt to panel UMass students next month to find out what they expect from campus retail operations.

Frazier particularly highlighted the $4.99 daily special and the "hot line" at the Blue Wall Eatery as an excellent faction of University dining, in which different meal options are provided each day and night.

"The Blue Wall[is a nice atmosphere and study area," he added, noting that between 2,000 and 3,000 people pass through the dining area each weekday and enable the business to make a daily profit of $8,000 to $10,000.

Frazier also explained that the friendly atmosphere of employees might be responsible for drawing in some Blue Wall customers.

"I love working with students, 99.9 percent of the time," he said, "I like to tell people I've got 100 kids because that's what it seems like. Most of them stay here up through their senior year, and it's a great way to make friends."

The community television set in one corner of the Blue Wall, he added, may also attribute to the dining area's relaxing environment appeal.

A sophomore, who only wished to be identified as Maggie, agreed that the atmosphere and convenience of the Blue Wall are indeed among its strongest points.

"I used to get my coffee at Starbuck's, but then there was no place to sit," she said. "[The Blue Wall] is big. You walk into the Campus Center, and it's right there. I probably come here like three times a week."

However, there are those who would disagree, such as sophomore exchange students Mariko Yoshida who usually buys coffee from the nearby Starbuck's cart, explaining that she does so in order to get better coffee.

"There's more variety here," she said. "Besides if I'm going to pay more money, I might as well get something with more variety than the DC [dining commons]."

The Coffee Shop, open from 8:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. and profiting about $3,000 on weekdays according to Frazier, is just down the hall from the Blue Wall and the Starbuck's cart, yet it draws customers in by offering an environment that the other two do not.

"I like how they make your food right in front of you," junior Sociology major Michelle Hunt explained. "It makes you feel more special. I think the quality of the food is better too. Plus, it's a good location. It's easy because I pass through here anyway."

Snack bars on campus, particularly the one on the first floor of the Whitmore administration building, are open for business usually from 7:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and serve about 2,000 customers on a good day. Closing Supervisor JoAnn Liacos estimated.

Senior Sports Management major Harold Amnah, an employee at the Whitmore snack bar, accredited this popularity to its location.

"A lot of students tell me it's less crowded here," he said. "It's closer if you going to Herter

Turn to EATING, page 2

ALL PHOTOS TIBORA GINCZY/ BEAM COLLEGIAN

eating

continued from page 1

[Hall] or Southwest [Residential Area]. Teaching Assistants also come down here a lot to meet with their students."

He also made note that the numbers are split relatively down the middle between student and faculty administration customers.

"In the morning, it is more employees and faculty here," he said. "But definitely during lunch, there're more students because they can use the YCMP."

The dining halls are a classic part of the undergraduate experience, supplying first and second year students with both a traditional college occurrence and more often than not, something to gripe about.

All in-residence freshmen and sophomore students are required to eat on campus at one of the four main dining halls on campus. To make the experience a pleasant one for most students, the dining hall offers a number of options to suit the appetites of all students.

"We provide a lot of variety and options and the food is all you can eat," Ken Toong Director of Food Services explained. "We have salads, pizza, pasta and a lot of other options, we also use products from recognizable brands such as Tyson and General Mills."

To get away from the traditional stereotype of stuffy bland dining commons food, Food Services has, in the past two years, implemented new food stations in an attempt to please all palates. Food Services boasts, "if you want convenient, worry-free dining, welcome to UMass residential meal plans," Food Services website states. "You don't have to shop for food, cook meals, clean up or do dishes."

One new concept in the dining halls is the fun station. In this area students are able to access more fun and interesting foods. Chicken wings, chicken nuggets, nachos and hot dogs are offered up here. The stir-crazy and international stations offer up some more exotic dishes, specializing in a variety of different stir-fries and dishes from around the world.

"At our international station, every meal we feature a new food from a different country," Toong said. "We feature foods from the Middle East, Mexico and a number of other countries so that every day there is a different item on the menu."

The grill station does exactly what the name suggests, provides foods like grilled cheese, burgers and chicken sandwiches to the student public. While a Taste of Italy provides students with a choice of daily sauces and a number of different pasta choices.

Freshman Biology major Mary Barrett explained that she thought that overall the meals at the dining hall were good.

"In general I think that the food is pretty good," she said. "It is not as bad as bad as I was warned about before I got here."

As for dining options outside of Auxiliary Services, Ryan-Newton expressed her admiration for the nearby student-run businesses.

"It's a great concept," she said. "I don't look at them as a competition at all but as another choice for [a place for] students on campus to eat. We work very cooperatively with student businesses."

Earthfoods Café in the Student Union Building, which serves roughly 300 to 500 people a day, provides customers with "quality food," according to employee Junior Journalism major Scott Enright.

"The great thing about our food is we make everything from scratch," he said. "It's nice that people can get essentially a home cooked meal here."

Enright illustrated the popularity of Earthfoods how during the peak hours between 12:00 p.m. and 1:00 p.m., the line often extends beyond their doors.

"But what's really important is that we're a collective," he added.

Senior Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC) and Economics double major Hanna Jones, who has been working for Earthfoods for three semesters, believes that Earthfoods' customers want to be part of something that operates on collection and equality.

"I think if you're looking for healthy food that's been well thought out, is fresh, fairly inexpensive, and good, that's what would bring you into Earthfoods," she said.

Junior Psychology major Monica Ballin considered the acceptance of the Your Campus Meal Plan (YCMP) and UCard as additional attributes to their popularity.

"We try to listen to our customers, and do what they want," she said. "I just think it provides a really good place for vegan and vegetarian options."

Junior STPEC major Alex Porch claimed as reason for eating at Earthfoods every day stemmed from his whole support student-run businesses and the food.

"It's the that supp entrees and vegetables tionally that way to cook he said. "They're collectively run, so there's no hierarchy here. It's very open and accepting atmosphere."

Just around the corner is the People's Market, which conducts between 500 to 700 transactions each day. According to employee junior Legal Studies major Carrie Payne, this student-run business faces most of its competition based on the fact that it does not accept the YMPC.

She explained that People's Market did in fact attempt to get the meal plan program but was told it does not carry enough food in its stock to make an entire meal and was rejected. Payne tended to disagree with this decision.

"If you like fluorescent lights and you like corporate America, go elsewhere," she said. "But this is the place you can spend your money and know you are doing good, helping out student businesses."

She also explained that the People's Market is the only place on campus that serves coffee which is part of fair trade, a program that guarantees coffee bean farmers reasonable wages and puts extra money back into the community in various ways, such as opening a women's clinic.

"There is no education better on this campus than a student-run business," Payne said.

Sophomore Resource Economics and Plant and Soil Sciences double major Jess Soules, an employee, said the People's Market features a healthy alternative to food and a "more fun" environment, with its music, layout, [illegible] signs, and art gallery, which is [illegible] being assembled.

"I like to talk to our customers," she said. "It's fun."

Senior Afro-American Studies major Julia Agron agreed that the combination of food products and atmosphere/location keep bringing her back.

"I only eat organic foods, so this is my only option on campus," she said. "I don't live on campus, but I'm probably in here at least a couple times a week to get coffee."

The Graduate Lounge across from the Blue Wall in the Campus Center, which gets many of its food supplies from Auxiliary Services even though they are not officially under the Auxiliary Services umbrella, provides a different atmosphere than most places on campus, according to employee Vanessa Antkiw, a graduate student in the French department.

"It usually has an older crowd here," she said, attributing this non-profit business's success to its quitter atmosphere, cheaper prices, and ability to serve alcohol.

Her fellow co-worker, junior Sociology major Saba Wahid, recalled how last semester the lounge had and art show and people daily come and play their piano as examples of how the atmosphere is much more relaxed.

"Not enough people know about this place or that undergraduates can come," she said. "You don't have to be 21 to eat here."

She furthermore explained that the reason behind the cheaper prices at the Graduate Lounge was due to it being a non-profit organization and gave the example of prepackaged sandwiches that are also served at the Blue Wall but are cheaper at the lounge, sometimes as much as a dollar less.

Tilman Lanz, a graduate student of Anthropology and customer of the Graduate Lounge, noted that he just found out about this vast price difference only two to three weeks ago.

"They have the price tickets from Blue Wall and I always wondered why it came up cheaper," he said. However, it is not the price that keeps Lanz as a steady customer.

"One reason I like it here better than Blue Wall is it's smaller, more quiet, and one place I like to work," he explained. "Sometimes I come here for lunch, come here for a sandwich, and come here particularly for Orangina. The only place I can get that is here."

Across campus a ways is the Newman Center Cafeteria, located in the basement of the Newman Catholic Community Center, serving approximately 800 people each week-day.

"We're a private, family owned business," Manager Scott Buffum reported. "We lease this space from the church, Springfield Diocese."

He explained how the Newman Center is officially considered off campus, "even though it's right in the middle of everything," noting how some state employees are actually prohibited from eating at the cafeteria during their lunch breaks because it is considered as leaving the campus.

"I like their food here," junior English major Jamielle Walker clarifying why she chooses to eat at the cafeteria up to a couple times each week. "It is a little bit healthier than other places on campus. I like their pasta salad."

Breakfast is the most popular and least expensive meal served at the Newman Center, said Buffum, and is served throughout the entire day. However, he also noted that all of the foods served at the cafeteria are served the entire day.

"We serve anything as soon as we open," he said, "I've served hamburgers at 7:00 a.m. If people have wanted them."

Buffum believes the cafeteria attracts its customers because it is privately owned and has a pleasant atmosphere.

"I've had people come to me and ask, 'How come everyone's so happy here?'" he said, smiling.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts operating school year except during vacations. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Sam Wilkinson Editor-in-Chief
Matthew F. Sacco Managing Editor
Amy Garganta Business Manager
Shimauli Dave Production Manager
Jake Lilien Diversity Editor
Mike Kulak Editorial Production Manager
Jason Smith Advertising Manager

Mike Delano Arts & Living Editor
Matthew Despres Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennifer Eastwood Features Editor
Catherine Turner News Editor
Tibora Ginczy-Blum Photography Editor
Eric Soderstrom Sports Editor
Brent Siniawski Finance Manager
Charlie Jacco Distribution Manager

Morgan Taylor Advertising Production Manager
Esther Danzig Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Cara Murphy Assistant Finance Manager
Nicki Van Pelt Assistant Business Manager
Megan Shannon Assistant Advertising Manager

SATURN™

Get service at Saturn of Hadley, no matter what year, make or model... foreign or domestic!

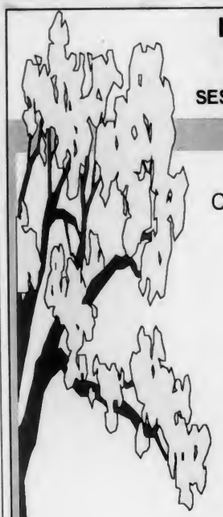
Oil & filter change only $19.95. Change oil & filter; top off all fluids; adjust tire pressures; hand wash & vacuum up to 4 quarts. It will cannot be combined with any other offer.

Cooling System Service - $39.95. Flush and fill antifreeze/coolant system; check for leaks; inspect belts & hoses; hand wash & vacuum up to 5 gallons of antifreeze/ cannot be combined with any other offer.

Mass State Inspection - $29.00. Mon.-Fri. 8-12/1-6, Thurs 8-12/1-7. Limit one per customer per appointment.

Free 25 Point Inspection upon request. Including checks on steering, suspension, tires, brakes, belts, hoses, lights, wiper blades and more.

Who else will wash and vacuum your car…



while you eat jelly donuts?

10% Off All Orders With A Student Or Faculty ID.

Call our service department today at (413) 584-6066 to schedule an appointment, or just stop by Monday-Friday 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Thursday 7:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. and Saturday 7:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. We are conveniently located on Route 9 in Hadley at a PVTA stop and have direct access to the bike path. We also offer a courtesy shuttle service within a 15-mile radius (must call to schedule). All offers are valid with any student or faculty ID at Saturn of Hadley.

INTERESTED IN A CO-OP OR INTERNSHIP FOR WINTER SESSION OR SPRING SEMESTER?

Take the first step!
Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Mondays
1:30 pm 114 Stockbridge Hall
3 pm 103 South College

Tuesdays
11:30 am 211 Marston
2 pm 8 ISOM Building
5 pm 3 Bartlett Hall

Wednesdays
1 p.m. 305 E LAB
3 pm 8 ISOM Building
4 pm 204 Herter Hall

Thursdays
3 pm 103 South College
4 pm 114 Stockbridge Hall

Fridays
11 am 122 Lederle Tower
2 pm 122 Lederle Tower

We'll tell you about exciting opportunites with IBM, Fleet Bank, The Boston Globe, The American Red Cross, Jim Henson Co., The Late Show with David Letterman, The Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, The Metropolitan Museum of Art, The Philadelphia Zoo, the FBI and many many more!!

For more information, call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265 or see our website www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Senators debate over council appointments

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Controversy surrounding last years Student Government Association Senate was once again an issue, as debate arose over the possible appointment of former Senator Jeff Bazydlo to the Chancellor of Elections.

The appointment was made by Southwest Governor Joshua Seidman, and sparked debate between Mike Taugher, Chair of Ways and Means and President John Sheehan. Issues surrounding Bazydlo's ability to be impartial were of much concern, as well as his affiliation with the University of Massachusetts at Amherst Minuteman newspaper.

However Bazydlo claimed before the Senate that he would be impartial under all circumstances. He also addressed the issue of the up and coming judiciary case surrounding this Fall's elections. Bazydlo, a witness on the case, stated that he did not have anything to do with the case, other than being a liaison.

"I promise that the rules will be followed and that there will not be any of the problems that we've faced in the past," Bazydlo said.

Sheehan then rebutted, by presenting an article from the Nov. 1 Minuteman newspaper, stating that Bazydlo had called the Senate, "...squabbling children."

He further went on to explain that he felt that Bazydlo was partial, based on his previous experiences within the Senate.

Sheehan continued by referring to next week's judiciary hearing, in which the illegalities of this Fall's Senate elections will be on trial.

"The rules of our Constitution did not enable us to appoint elections commissioners, but we made sure that the elections happened as legally as possible," Sheehan said. "Rules were held up to the best of our ability and we don't need a police officer as the chancellor of elections, we need someone impartial."

Taugher responded, by explaining that he saw nothing wrong with following the rules of the elections as documented in the SGA Constitution.

"I haven't heard anything that would prohibit the elections," Taugher said. "People keep on saying that he'll (Bazydlo) follow the rules; what is so wrong with that?"

After two rounds of debate, and a roll call vote was called, the motion to appoint Bazydlo failed.

Issues surrounding the changed time of 5 p.m. Senate meeting from the normally scheduled 7 p.m. also brought forth comments from Senators.

Taugher explained that he felt it brought forth dangerous political precedent to the Senate.

"Changing a meeting for a political event sets a dangerous precedent and I don't think it was right," Taugher said. "Next semester when the Republican Club starts hosting speakers, I'm sure that Senate meetings will not be moved."

Speaker Aaron Saunders responded by explaining that he felt the move not to be political. Taugher responded by explaining that the movement of the meeting based on the presentation of the Linda and Peter Beihl, was political because it revolved around hate crimes. The issue was shortly deceased, but was noted by the Senate.

Other motions on the agenda were the allocation of $2000 to the Haitian Student Association, which is putting on their annual event Saturday Nov. 10. The motion passed unanimously.

A motion to change the job description of the Secretary of Finance was also on the agenda. The motion called for a more detailed description of the Secretary of Finance's official position within the Executive Cabinet. The Senate passed the motion unanimously.

The Senate ended their meeting with the final appointments of members to the Ad-Hoc Priority Committee, a committee formed by the Senate in which students will look closely and offer their opinions on the new chancellor search committee. Those appointed to the committee were Jennifer Temen, Jen Casavant, Brian Thompson and Sheehan.

MSA

continued from page 1

Muslim incidents), according to the Council on American-Islamic Relations website. The incidents include discrimination, harassment, physical assault, hate mail and airport profiling.

Consistent with these reports, Kahn said UMass has been no stranger to such incidents. Students have been harassed, there has been verbal abuse targeting Muslim students and one event that involved several people trying to break into a Muslim student's room.

In lieu of these events, Kahn stated that Islam Awareness Week will also send the message that "we're Muslims, we're your neighbors, friends and co-workers. We're out there and we're people just like everybody else. We're peace-loving people – the vast majority of us – and we want people to know that."

The week begins with an informal potluck dinner on Nov. 10 at 6:30 p.m. in Campus Center 101. The following day, a talk entitled "Ever Wonder?" will be lead by Imam Mufeed Odeh as an introduction to Islam as well as addressing questions surrounding the faith. The event will be held in Campus Center 163 at 6:30 p.m.

"Islamic Terrorism – An Oxymoron?" brings back two veteran speakers of MSA's Islam Awareness Week, Dr. Mohammed Lazzouni of the Islamic Society of Worcester and Dr. Ali Hazratji of the Springfield Islamic Society. It will take place on Nov. 12 in Campus Center 163 at 6:30 p.m.

Intending to dispel another stereotype around Islam, Nov. 13 features the talk "Women in Islam: Oppressed or Empowered?" in Campus Center 168 at 6:30 p.m. Kahn said the event will highlight the point that "women's rights and liberation is actually an Islamic concept, contrary to what a lot of people believe and see in the media." The speaker will be announced later in the week.

The Nov. 14 event entitled "The Solution" is one Kahn claimed is the MSA's biggest event to date. The talk will feature Imam Siraj Wahaj in the Campus Center Auditorium at 6:30 p.m. Wahaj, based out of New York, will address the issues of racism, genocide, hate crimes, intolerance, terrorism and related topics.

"Islam offers a solution to all of these things rather than being the cause of them and shows that this is what the message is all about," Kahn said.

Islam Awareness Week ends on Nov. 15 at which time the MSA will hold a lowkey social event to be announced later in the week.

The MSA has been a member of the UMass community since 1986 and has approximately 280 members. Ramadan begins on Saturday, Nov. 17.

Sunyer

continued from page 1

Professor de Miguel has also been the recipient of grants from the Fulbright Commission, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation and others during his career. He serves on the editorial board of Contemporary Sociology, and holds teaching positions at the University of Arizona, the University of Adelaide, and the University of California at Berkeley and San Diego. This fall has a teaching appointment at the Edmund A. Walsh School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University.

The visit by Professor de Miguel serves to highlight the Department's European research program. Both Anthropology faculty and graduate students have studied or will study in Europe through the program. Five Anthropology graduate students will travel throughout Europe to do research next spring under the direction of Dr. Pi-Sunyer. Some of the topics they will be studying include representations of tourism in Spain, and women in employment and immigration in Turkey.

"We're trying to establish good connections not only with subjects of our study, but also those in Europe who do similar kind of work," Pi-Sunyer said. "The logic is the same, and we want to know what they think about the issues in the field."

According to Dr. Pi-Sunyer, the lecture falls within the cultural anthropology sphere of the department. He and his associates work specifically in Europe and Latin America. Pi-Sunyer is currently studying the impact of tourism on the Mayan people of Mexico as well as the politics and economics in Spain and other countries in the Mediterranean.

The exchange program also extends beyond simple lectures. Pi-Sunyer held a position as a visiting professor at the University of Barcelona and taught a class on multiculturalism.

"That [multiculturalism] is an issue of public concern in the US, but a relatively new issue in Spain," Pi-Sunyer said. He also explained that the program is more an model for exchange, and that is why de Miguel's visit is so important to research enterprises. "We have many people who go and research there," Pi-Sunyer said. "They [the people in Spain] live through it, they've experienced it, so it's very important."

The event is not just important for the UMass Anthropology Department. The Five College Lecture Fund, The Modern European Studies Program, the Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies, the Departments of Anthropology and Sociology of Amherst College, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire College, and the Departments of Sociology at Smith College and UMass are all co-sponsors of de Miguel's visit.

According to Pi-Sunyer all the Anthropology Departments from the five colleges get together once a year to relate on the topics that they are studying. "We talk about what we're doing and what others are doing," Pi-Sunyer said. "It's a rather important thing and a way to keep in touch."

Regardless of where the audience originates, Pi-Sunyer is confident that the lecture will appeal to many. He also encourages undergraduate students to attend in addition to the graduate students and faculty that are expected.

"An undergrad who's interested in Anthropology will get a sense of how Anthropology subjects are dealt with on a professional level," Pi-Sunyer said. "It puts them in a loop to see how these matters are treated on a more approachable level."

TIBORA GINCZY-BLUM/COLLEGIAN

A mix of ideas

Adam Meringolo, pictured right, talks to student John Flajnik, about the newspaper, The Socialist Worker.

"Death is a millisecond, life is important."-Biehl

By Alicia Upano
Collegian Staff

The parents of Amy Biehl, a human rights activist who was murdered in the last days of Apartheid, discussed their daughter's legacy in regard to South Africa, life values and the current international crisis at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center last night.

"Living Values: The Life, Death, and Legacy of Amy Biehl," began at 7:30 p.m. with an introduction by Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams, marking the second day of the Biehl's visit to UMass.

"I believe we can gain inspiration by being in the company of people who live values of the sort that we, as a university community, aspire to model for our students and for the world," Williams said, introducing Peter and Linda Biehl as well as South African faculty member Tsualedi Thobejane.

After a few words from Thobejane, a segment of "Long Night's Journey into Day" was shown to an audience that packed nearly half of the FAC Concert Hall. The video highlighted not only the Amy Biehl case but also the truth and reconciliation process.

After Apartheid, the TRC announced that amnesty would be considered case by case in exchange for the truth. Seven-thousand people applied for amnesty – four of whom were Amy's killers who were eventually pardoned.

Throughout the death of their daughter and their work in the Foundation, Peter Biehl said, "I marvel at her legacy ... I marvel at the commitment she made." He added, "I think in terms of my own life – if I were to [die] this evening, how crisp, how important, how valuable would my legacy be?"

Amy Biehl's legacy has taught her father to "treasure time ... to find joy in relationships new and old ... to be passionate and buss about something important."

"Death is a millisecond, life is what's important," Peter Biehl said.

The floor was opened to questions to the Biehls and Thobejane. Thobejane of the UMass Center for International Education was "brought up under the culture of revolution," and became an activist in South Africa at the age of 16 and continued for almost two decades during which time he was imprisoned, tortured and witness to the death of close friends involved in the movement.

As a member of the anti-Apartheid movement, Thobejane shared his thoughts about the Amy Biehl case. "Her killers were more and more selfless, [they were] taken up by the zeal to liberate the country." However, he considers South Africa "on the threshold of democracy" today.

All three participants agreed that the struggle in South Africa is not over. The Biehls vowed their life-long commitment to South Africa and hoped to narrow the gap between the rights and reality of the current status of South Africa. Peter Biehl said, "South Africa has helped us heal and we, in turn, must help them heal."

Responding to a questions regarding America's current stance in its "war on terrorism," Peter Biehl said, "I think that our new war is a creation of CNN and some of the media."

He added, "I think rather than wasting this time creating new wars for America, the media and all of us should get busy trying to sort out what it is that's behind the feelings people have about us and how we, as a world community, can address these truths in a constructive fashion."

Thobejane expressed his belief that the American government could have done a better job by participating in the recent UN sponsored race conference in South Africa. Both comments received applause.

The evening closed with the revised national anthem of South Africa and a reception in the FAC lobby.

Biehl

continued from page 1

ous situations and prevention methods to the AIDS virus.

"Most of our programs are based on the community, and Peter had always had a dream of owning a bakery of his own, and it's happened in South Africa," Mrs. Biehl said. "Aside from a child's work of art on the bag, with provided information and a hotline number on the back of the bag that people can get help or information about the AIDS virus."

The luncheon closed in a South African song preformed by Mangaliso to all those in attendance.

"It was off the charts," Mr. Biehl said. "We've visited a lot of outstanding universities, and this has by far been the most challenging and the most stimulating campus visit that we've had."

Mr. Biehl continued by explaining that the students' responses to them [the Biehls] have been provocative. He furthered by stating that students have been highly precipitant as well as share an exceptional awareness of what is going on around them.

"They share an exceptional awareness to what we and the world are going through, much of the questions related to despair, much to do with the events of 911/Sept. 11th," Mr. Biehl said. "What we try to do in response is help them out of it. We're always looking for the eve of the tiger when we visit campuses, were always looking for more freedom fighters."

Events

Islam Awareness Week 2001
Nov. 10 – Nov. 15

Sunday, Nov. 11
Islam 101 – Ever Wonder?
Dr. Mufeed Odeh
Campus Center 163 @ 6:30 p.m.

Monday, Nov. 12
Islamic Terrorism – An Oxymoron?
Dr. Mohammed Lazzouni and Dr Ali Hazratji
Campus Center 163 @ 6:30 p.m.

Tuesday, Nov. 13
Women in Islam – Oppressed or Empowered?
Speaker TBA
Campus Center 168 @ 6:30 p.m.

Wednesday, Nov. 14
The Solution
Imam Siraj Wahaj
Campus Center Auditorium @ 6:30 p.m.

Thursday, Nov. 15
Social Event TBA

Grand Opening.

Now you can choose from a variety of affordable vehicles to answer any of your rental needs right here:

Amherst
213 College St.
(413) 259-1188

Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car
Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.

Come in now and take advantage of our Grand Opening Offer.

Free Upgrade On Your Next Visit

Reserve any size car in advance. At the time of rental if a car from the next higher class is available, you'll be upgraded at no extra charge. Valid at the Amherst location through 6/02, but not in conjunction with other promotional offer.

Enterprise 1 800 rent-a-car
Pick Enterprise. We'll pick you up.

30th Anniversary Celebration Sale

Wed. Nov. 7th thru Sun. Nov. 11th

Enter to win a $1000 Shopping Spree

ZANNA

30 years of serving Women
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES 2001 - 2002

Where the Arts and Audiences Come Together
Tickets only $5, $7, $10, $15 for five college students

Wednesday, November 14
Ballet Hispanico
Ballet Hispanico is smashingly theatrical – from the stunning expressive style of its dancers, to its use of sets, lighting, costumes and sound. The company's extraordinary repertory includes dances in ballet, contemporary dance, jazz and ethnic styles.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm / Sponsored by The River 93.9

Thursday, December 6
The Dayton Contemporary Dance Company & The Dirty Dozen Brass Band in "When the Spirit Moves"
An exhilarating evening of live New Orleans brass band jazz music and contemporary modern dance come together in a program titled When the Spirit Moves - a series of vignettes celebrating the lineage and essence from which these two uniquely American forms emerged.
Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River, WEIB 106.3FM and WGBY TV 57 / Concert Hall at 7:30pm
Sponsored by The River 93.9

For tickets call:545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS or go on-line towww.lineartscenter.com

Join us for a salsa party with Ballet Hispanico on Tuesday, November 13 at the Red Barn on the Hampshire College Campus from 7-11pm. Luis Melendez of WFCR's Tertulia will be our DJ for the evening. salsa lessons from 7-8, party follows with Latin foods provided by La Veracruzana. Admission is only $10. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 8, 2001
Ed/Op Editor • Matthew Despres
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Where do we go?
Toward reality

Visitors in the Boston Globe yesterday – based partly out of the University of Massachusetts – focused on the climate of American college students: a group with a new emphasis on its unpredictable variables in this, the post – Sept. 11 world.

The large question raised? Where do we go from here.

Have college students ever had the answer to that? Though the maturation and learning processes continue throughout life, college is often viewed as the four (or five or six) year transition period that helps to shape what path that life will take. It's full of questions, uncertainties, unknown variables that will be plugged in at a later date (or perhaps not at all).

This already tough situation, as the Globe piece so eloquently pointed out, has been further complicated by a nation at odds with itself. Not only do we now wonder about employment after graduation, but suddenly security and our personal safety. It's a tough proposition to handle when placed on an already full plate.

Like anything else, some good can come of the circumstance. As various groups and individuals have rallied to support those affected by the attacks, we can take the moment to establish as ourselves as an emerging generation, a group of men and women, not split by party lines, race or other factors, but a single force with something legitimate and substantial to offer.

How do we do that?

No one solution can ever solve any problem, especially one of this nature, but common steps can be taken so that, in the end, each one will have led to an equal and common good for us all. Now, more than ever, we should pursue what we love academically, professionally, and even socially. Events such as those that occurred on Sept. 11, turn the commonplace into the extraordinary, and as wishful or cute as that may sound, accomplishing a larger goal begins with individual points that we all can excitedly pursue.

Even more important is sharing that wealth – not monetary success, but the idea of self-fulfillment. There's a lot to be said for the efforts of everyday citizens in our country right now – giving of themselves what they can. Terror has spurred this on, but should by no means be the sole reason for it to continue; let us carry this on indefinitely. Our problems won't vanish overnight, but the satisfaction of having tried will remain.

Ultimately, we don't want to be a generation left undefined, marked in the popular culture by some letter of the alphabet and poked at as an apathetic group indifferent to the world around them. We need to expect – and demand – more of ourselves, as well as others.

In the same turn, we don't need to march out of this school expecting to make radical and immediate changes.

Perhaps, then, the ideal is simply to be realistic. In any circumstance, life goes on – how we go about it, and are then subsequently viewed – lies in our hands.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian editorial board.

collegianeditorial@yahoo.com

On living off-campus

ROB SCHULZE

I don't know about you, but I'm counting down to Spring Break. Only about a week and a half left. Then I'm off to Florida to visit my parents and my friends down there. I'm looking forward to it. I'll be able to sleep in my own bed, eat my mom's cooking and watch my favorite TV shows. Plus, I'll be able to see my friends who have graduated and moved away. It's going to be great.

Then I'll have to come back to Amherst. Ugh.

I'm not looking forward to coming back to Amherst because I'm going to have to live off-campus next semester. I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own beer.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV.

I'm not looking forward to living off-campus because I'm going to have to live with people I don't know in a house that is probably a dump that is probably going to be expensive and I'm going to have to walk to class in the snow and I'm going to have to shovel my own walk and I'm going to have to pay for heat and I'm going to have to pay for electricity and I'm going to have to pay for water and I'm going to have to pay for cable and I'm going to have to pay for phone and I'm going to have to pay for parking and I'm going to have to pay for rent and I'm going to have to pay for food and I'm going to have to pay for beer and I'm going to have to pay for my own bed and I'm going to have to pay for my own pillow and I'm going to have to pay for my own blanket and I'm going to have to pay for my own TV and I'm going to have to pay for my own cable and I'm going to have to pay for my own phone and I'm going to have to pay for my own parking and I'm going to have to pay for my own rent and I'm going to have to pay for my own food and I'm going to have to pay for my own

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

The Source

Compiled by Nick Pizzolato Send all submissions to collegiansource@yahoo.com

GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

UMASS – Until November 11, Central Gallery will be presenting an exhibit entitled Icon and Golem by Judith Shaffer.

SMITH COLLEGE – "Paradise Gate" is an architectural sculpture gallery that will be on display at Burton Lawn North Carolina sculptor Patrick Dougherty created his sculptures using natural materials. The artwork will remain there all year.

SMITH COLLEGE – Photo artist Anne Ross will be exhibiting Digital Photography in an exhibit called "A Space Odyssey 2001." Already an accomplished color photographer, Ross believes that the endless possibilities involved with computer manipulation are "a natural transition." Her show can be seen at the Smith College Alumnae House Gallery through January 12, 2002. The gallery hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

THEATER AND DANCE

UMASS – The critically acclaimed show "Ballet Hispanico" is coming to UMass. The show has been recognized as the foremost dance interpreter of Latino culture in the United States. Founded in 1970 by Tina Ramirez and has toured around the US and the world. "Ballet Hispanico" will be at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Wednesday, November 14 at 7:30 p.m.

UMASS – "Music and Myth" is a percussion ensemble featuring music by Victorio, Read, Miki & others. It will take place in Bowker Auditorium on Tuesday, November 20 at 8 p.m. and costs $10 and $5.

UMASS – New World Theater presents Project 2050's Creative Cadences: Identity, Immigration, Incarceration, Exploitation, & Negotiation. It is the culmination of a series of summer workshops in which local youth, scholars, and professional artists. They created a new type of theater that battles stereotypes identified with youth. The performance will be on November 10, 2001 and are $10 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors. For more information call (413) 545-2511 or (800) 999-UMASS.

MUSIC PERFORMANCE

UMASS – Professor Nigel Coxe will perform Beethoven's Opus 27 Sonatas. During the show, Prof. Coxe will also provide the audience with commentary during the show about Beethoven and the selected works. The event will take place on Tuesday, November 13 at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $4 for seniors and $8 for everyone else. For more information call 545-2511.

UMASS – The Academy of St. Martin in the Fields performs with Artistic Director Kenneth Sillito. The chamber music orchestra will be featuring selections from Mozart, Bruckner and Tchikovsky. The show will be at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday November 8 in the Concert Hall. Prices ranger from $15 to $40 for the general public and between $5 and $10 for Five College students. For more information call 545-2511.

UMASS – WMUA 91.1 FM presents a night of rock with The New Harmful, Surgeon's Photograph, and The Secrets on Friday, November 9th at 8:30 p.m. in the Greenough basement. Admission is $5, and leave the booze, backpacks and bottles at home.

SMITH COLLEGE – The third season of Singers' Project opens this weekend with a program of a cappella sacred music from the Romantic era. The program, called "Heaven and Earth", is motets by Johannes Brahms, which have the same characteristics of some of Bach's work. The show will take place on November 10 at 8 p.m. in the Helen Hills Hills Chapel at Smith College. Tickets are $15 for general admission, $10 for seniors and $5 for students. For more information call 413-665-9949

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents The Legacy of Iva Dee Hiatt performed by Jane Bryden and Frederic Cohen. Iva Dee Hiatt was a member of the Smith College Music Department and served as Director of Chorale Music for many years. It will be held on Friday, November 9 at 8 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public.

SMITH COLLEGE – The Smith College Music Department presents the Autumn Serenade Concert. Featuring selections by Ippolitiv-Ivanov, Gardner, Perera, and Wheelock, the concert is an annual event. It will take place on Saturday, November 10 at 8 p.m. and is free.

AMHERST – Gilbert and Sullivan's musical/comedy "The Grand Duke" will be performed by the Valley Light Opera of Amherst. The performances will take place on Fridays November 2 & 9 at 8 p.m. and Thursdays November 3 & 10 at 8 p.m. with a matinee on Sunday, November 4 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $14 for adults and $10 for students and seniors. To order tickets and more information call (413) 256-4065 or go to their website, www.bse.org.

MONTAGUE – Umass own Vocal Suspects will be performing at the Montague Bookmill. Come join some of the most talented musicians on campus in full hour of co-ed collegiate fun. Discover new local venues in the valley and support The Vocal Suspects. Tickets are being sold in advance and for ticket information call 413-367-9200. The show will be this Saturday November 10 at 8 p.m.

MONTAGUE – The music improv group The Bop Arts and Thomas Ciufo and Jason McGill will be performing at the Montague Bookmill on Thursday, November 8 at 8 p.m. The price is six dollars per person and for more information call 413-367-9200.

READINGS/LECTURES/ACADEMIC EVENTS

SMITH COLLEGE – Physician Phuntsog Wangmo will give a two part lecture at Smith College on the revival of traditional Tibetan medicine. The first lecture is a commentary on her work as a woman's doctor in Tibet. The second lecture deals with the relationship between Tibetan Medicine and Tibetan Astrology. Both events are free to the public. The first lecture will be on Tuesday, November 13 at 7:15 p.m. in Neilson Library Browsing Room. The second lecture will take place on Wednesday, November 14 in the same location and at the same time.

COURTESY PONNIE DERBY

Archer Mayor, author of Tucker Peak, will appear at the Greenfield Public Library on November 16

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books will sponsor a reading of Race to Incarcerate by the author Marc Mauer. Mauer, the assistant director of the Washington, D.C. based Sentencing Project, examines in the book the political origins of the "get tough" movement against crime and why the policies have failed. The book calls attention to the "lock 'em up" policy that has grown popular during recent times. The event will take place on Wednesday, November 14 at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books presents a book reading and signing by new author Sparrow Patterson and her first novel Synthetic Bi Products, the story of a young bisexual woman and her experiences before entering college. The book has already been called "An affecting, fresh first novel." The event will take place on Thursday, November 15 at 7 p.m.

AMHERST – Food for Thought Books is giving the floor to local academic Dean Robinson and he talks and signs copies of his new book, Black Nationalism in American Politics and Thought. Robinson is a former UMass Assistant Professor of Political Science and is spending two years at Harvard University. The event takes place on Friday, November 16 at 5 p.m.

GREENFIELD – The Meet Pioneer Valley Author Series continues at the Greenfield Public Library as Vermont mystery author Archer Mayor discusses, sells, and signs his new novel Tucker Peak, the twelfth book in a series about I.T. Joe Gunther. The event will be taking place in the LeVanway Room on Friday, November 16 at 7:30 p.m. The public is welcome for this free event.

FILMS

UMASS – The Radical Student Union continues its film series this week with the film School of Assassins. The film deals with the supposed training of foreign dictators by U.S. Army forces, regardless if human rights violations occur. The film will be showing twice once on Tuesday, November 13 and Wednesday, November 14 in Campus Center room 917. Both screenings will take place at 7 p.m.

EVENTS

UMASS – The "World Famous" Lipizzaner Stallions will be make their way to Amherst today at 7:30 p.m. In this there 31st year, the show is featuring a special presentation of the "Dancing White Stallions." They have been a staple of the equestrian world for the last 425 years and are now looked at like a work of art. Tickets are $18.50 for adults and Seniors and kids save two dollars. For more information call 413-545-0505.

King of Pop's Invincible a lackluster comeback

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Staff

MICHAEL JACKSON
Invincible
Epic

In his first studio album since 1991's Dangerous, Michael Jackson has finally released Invincible, a record filled with 16 brand-spanking new singles. But the hubris in the title of this comeback bid is nearly as embarrassing as his appearance.

A reported $30 million, countless visits to the recording studio, and nerve-racking perfectionism were some of the items that plagued the recording of Invincible. Hoping to launch his career back to the pinnacle of his 80s heyday and to once again put the "King of Pop" moniker to good use, Jackson hoped for a present-day Thriller. But the record comes off more like filler than any sort of thriller.

The album spirals off in so many different directions it seems like Jackson didn't know where exactly he wanted to take his new sound. Such is the case when hiring an army of producers, having access to an unlimited cash supply and being allotted infinite time. A concrete game plan apparently was never established during the early stages of the album. What we get then is a jarred combination of ballads and up tempo songs that hold the album together like a string suspending a bridge. Every good album has a general theme tying one song to the other without excessive stuffing and packing. Invincible doesn't.

The album mellows in so much digital technology and so much lush and delicate instrumentation that it's nearly cringe worthy.

The first three songs, "Unbreakable," "Heartbreaker," and the title track try so hard to underscore Jackson's musical impact but fail so miserably in their jadded attempts to set the album at an electrifying pace. Following in the footsteps of 'N Sync's sheepish dance beats, Jackson goes all out with aggressive synths that even this dance tycoon will have difficulty dancing to (it's awfully sad how Jackson has had to cling on to the lame hot shot upstarts of 'N Sync to hopefully lure some of the group's teen fan base as his own). The lyrics on these Rodney Jerkins-produced tracks are drowned out by the thumping beats and bass, leaving us with Jackson's gulping and hiccupping.

The ballads would more appropriately accompany a soul album. Nevertheless, the music receives a welcome reception during the appropriately titled "Break of Dawn" and "Heaven Can Wait" as the dizzying effects of the opening tracks finally diminish. "Cry," an R. Kelly-produced single and the second release off Invincible, basks in Jackson's tender vocals and motivational lyrics as he sings, "You can change the world (I can't do it by myself)." It's no wonder the song has become a Sept. 11 anthem. And if you can look beyond the eyebrow raising high falsetto, "Butterflies" is another great ballad. The slow rhythm allows the balance of audible vocals and music and avoids using the same old R&B formula plaguing many of today's hits.

The rest of the ballads seem too restrained for Jackson. You can nearly feel Jackson's energy bursting through the seams of "You Are My Life" and "Speechless," as the slow pace leaves him anything but.

"You may apply your 3-D glasses," a laughable octave-enriched voice advises us on "2000 Watts." A whirlwind track was the clear intent here but "futuristic" bombs and blasts are comparable to 'N Sync's own "Digital Getdown." Jackson's vocals are showered in techno and electronic explosions but fail to elicit any fireworks. The lyrics promised something great here - "Bass note, treble, stereo control, how low you go" and "Press play, don't stop, rotate, too hot." But the improper knob twirls of Teddy Riley with-wash away the potential of what would have otherwise been an undisputed dance floor anthem.

"You Rock My World" drips in R&B goop, but its steadfast dance beat and strings make this song one of the most seamless singles on Invincible. Much like the lead single, the album is retained in Jackson's old stages. But that seems to be the precise point of the album. Sony, or Jackson himself, was afraid that if a newly refined voice were introduced he would alienate his fan base and a new audience would go unfounded.

Jackson never forgets the children, and this album is no exception. "The Lost Children" is nothing more than a swaying heart warmer. It's a trick he's employed before, but the song's praise-worthy message makes up for what it lacks musically.

"Privacy" is a retaliatory battle cry from the tabloid-stalked pop star. Throaty vocals and beats heavier than the estate of his Neverland Ranch have the single nearly reaching Bad's great "Leave Me Alone" momentum.

The cluelessly titled album ends with the "Thriller"-inspired "Threatened" complete with creepy Rod Serling lines. But the single fails to reach the er...thrilling heights of its predecessor.

It's easy to dog poor Michael. His eccentricities, larger-than-life persona, and slumping sales have made him the perfect target of bitter critics who fail to evaluate his music and rather focus on the freak show.

Most appalling, however, is the resolute conviction of critics that Jackson's career is completely over. Jackson's career shines like a bright beacon. A person with the mega-watt superstardom of Jackson's doesn't just fall of the face of the Earth. True, his career shines less brightly than his prime, but it is far from extinguished.

Sadly, Invincible will do little to convince the cynics otherwise. But even though Invincible is a mostly lackluster comeback effort, it has enough decent tracks to remain in the spotlight and to help Jackson reclaim the throne as the "King of Pop."

Ondrasik rocks Paradise; Davis' acoustics stumble

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

FIVE FOR FIGHTING with ALANA DAVIS
Paradise Rock Club
November 2

This past weekend the Paradise Rock Club hosted the up-and-coming talents Five for Fighting and Alana Davis, bringing in a diverse Boston crowd. The general mass was mostly college students and twentysomethings, but there were also a fair share of kids and adults in attendance too. Unlike other Beantown clubs there is not one bad seat in the entire house of the intimate Paradise, making most any show there involving and friendly.

So much so, in fact, that it became commonplace for audience members to get up on stage and dance along with Five for Fighting's rock music. The lax security there seemed to have no problem with it, nor did Five lead singer John Ondrasik, who boogied with the bevy of strong, independent women who joined him on the stage.

Before Five for Fighting played, promising progressive rock act Alana Davis performed an acoustic set of songs from her new CD Fortune Cookies and a handful of selections from her debut disc, Blame It On Me. There's no other choice here except to blame Alana for the disappointing show she gave; while she has a full band accompanying her on her CDs, she was the sole musician on stage at the Paradise gig, only singing along with her acoustic guitar. The latter effect results only in a monotonous and indistinguishable collection of songs. Listen to her CDs and Davis's talent is apparent when backed up by a band, but when she flies solo, the routine wears out quickly.

Five for Fighting soon resurrected the dour mood of the crowd with their latest album's title song "America Town." The band cruised through every tune from the most recent CD, with Ondrasik conversing with audience members between nearly every song. Before playing the big hit, "Superman (It Ain't Easy)," Ondrasik took a pause to thank Boston for being one of the first cities to embrace Five for Fighting's music, including this song. The club fell to a hush as Ondrasik performed the beautiful song, turning the microphone over to the concertgoers for the well-known refrain of the popular song.

Ondrasik took some time during the show to pay tribute to the bands that inspired him, declaring that Pink Floyd Is "one of the best rock and roll bands ever." After briefly chatting with a guy in the audience wearing an U2 t-shirt, Ondrasik jumped into a rendition of "One," by the popular Irish band. Also covered were Elton John's "Rocket Man" and The Beatles "Let It Be."

Even though Five for Fighting's first CD is lesser known than their current album climbing the charts, they played a few songs from their debut, Message for Albert. Included was the song that Ondrasik called his favorite, "Love Song," which he performed by himself on acoustic guitar. Unlike Davis, Ondrasik kept the audience and the song alive, despite having no accompaniment. It clearly pointed out his understanding of which songs are appropriate to alter to acoustic form, as well as not beating a dead horse by doing it more than once.

Proving that he is a showman, Ondrasik ended the performance in a medley of three songs from the latest CD, the final tune being "America Town," the song the show began with. It's a rare commodity nowadays to give a concert a storybook feel that comes full circle, but seeing as how, once upon a time, the Paradise has housed world-famous acts like Bruce Springsteen, Five for Fighting is a fitting addition that is in good company.

■ Jankowski

continued from page 5

lection of phone calls to psychics. He has to have his specific questions answered or his own unique message will be lost in the proverbial ether. Therein lies the confusion of the piece.

If the viewers appreciate Jankowski's work, then not only is he successful, but the psychic tarot has been justified. The flip-side? If viewers don't value the piece, the German has proved psychics wrong at the expense of his video. Thus, viewers are forced to make a decision: disliking Jankowski's piece to disprove the psychics, or accepting the false reality of tarots to approve of Jankowski's work? In the end, it is a brilliant ruse.

Jankowski's clever approach carries him, but his art cannot forever succeed on simply logical tricks. For the same reason that M.C. Escher is seen as an outsider in the world of "real" art, Jankowski cannot possibly expect the long-term success that his psychics have promised. Unless he can move away from the clever deceptions, he will have a wasted career that makes this piece all the more meaningful.

■ Draeger

continued from page 5

rate video stills of the destroyed TWA flight, and then cut into a jigsaw puzzle. Dragged from the sea after the flight exploded over the Atlantic Ocean, the sections were pieced together by officials trying to recreate the crash and figure out what happened on the flight. Destroyed planes have been implanted into our subconscious lately. This work is particularly moving, expressing the immense task of the backtracking process.

"Tornado, Kissimmee, Florida," "Earthquake, Armenia, Columbia" and "Tornado, Spencer, South Dakota" are stunningly similar images. Although the areas represented are obviously very different, the tornadoes and earthquake have rendered them virtually the same. They too are paintings of real images subsequently cut into puzzles. The disasters, from our aerial view, are overwhelming. A house is transformed to something that has sheltered to something the tiny figures need shelter from. These people are inadequate to deal with the scale of what nature has done to their lives.

These puzzles are not a game that can be played. The wreckage is unable to be put back together. What were once distinct houses in neat rows have become piles of lumber and building materials come undone, all looking the same.

Puzzles at first give us control. They allow us to take what is broken and fix it. Initially, depicting these events seems strange. We may feel better about what we can't control by putting into puzzle form. We can fix it, make it better, have some control over nature. Then the realization comes that we can't do anything. If taken apart, these puzzles will never be able to be put back together. We can't control nature, and these jigsaw puzzles only serve to illustrate the sense of frustration we have at a situation that is out of our hands. Draeger allows his audience to feel just a bit of the powerlessness and frustration of the disaster's victims.

"Catastrophe #1" and "Catastrophe #2" are extremely large painted representations of photographs of miniature models that were made and sculpted into landscapes by the artist. They turn this traditional genre on its head. They're not composed pictures of nature, but instead, are landscapes of utter decimation. Everywhere the eye looks, it is greeted by the ruins of a contemporary city. Buildings are barely visible. This is a post apocalyptic imagining on which the dust have recently settled.

Previous to Sept. 11, this view destruction wouldn't mean much to the viewer. But, like almost all of Draeger's artwork in this show it has taken on significance that the artist could not have predicted. Once cliched visions of destruction have become very real reminders of recent events.

Draeger's portraits of disasters don't pander to the people they affect. They don't show us pathetic children or individual lives ruined. But this doesn't take away from the pieces' humanity. He questions they way we would normally react to disasters that don't personally touch our lives. He sense a bit of what it means to be powerless. His work is too compelling for our eyes to gloss over and for us to feel the detachedness afforded to us by television and movies. These images somehow exist as our reality. Draeger gives us way to deal with that.

ETI Educational Testing Institute
Massachusetts Teacher Test Preparation
5 Week programs with guaranteed results in Communication and Literacy
Delivering what you need to prepare for success:
- Literacy and communication skills
- Test content and test taking strategies
- Supportive setting and individual attention
- Proven test preparation book and curriculum
- Custom programs and private tutoring

Record of outstanding results:
- Pass rates improve from 12% to 71%!
- Average scores improve over 12% per section!

Join ETI and guarantee your success!
800-399-5448 or consult: www.massteachertest.com

Arts, it's what's for dinner.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-2224 • M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-6, Sun 12-5
204 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-2554 • M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 10-8, Sun 12-5 800-729-8971
www.silverscapedesigns.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
MONSTERS INC (G) 1:30 3:30 5:30 8:00 10:00
DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE (PG13) 12:15 4:10 7:00 9:50
THE ONE (R) 12:30 4:50 7:10 9:40
K-PAX (PG13) 12:10 4:30 7:30 10:10
13 GHOSTS (R) 1:40 4:15 7:20 9:55
ON THE LINE (PG) 1:20 4:20
FROM HELL (R) 1:00 3:50 7:00 10:00
THE LAST CASTLE (R) 1:50 4:40 7:40 10:20
SINGING IN CARS WITH BOYS (PG13) 1:20 4:15 7:20 10:00
DON'T BOTHER KNOCKING (PG13) 1:30 4:00 7:30 10:00
BABYSITTING (PG13) 1:10 4:10 7:10 9:45
SERENDIPITY (PG13) 1:20 4:00 7:45
TRAINING DAY (R) 1:00 4:00 7:00 10:00
ZOOLANDER (PG13) 1:30 7:10
THE OTHERS (PG13) 1:10
SENIOR MOVIE NOV 5 RIDING IN CARS WITH BOYS DOORS OPEN AT 11:45AM
cinemark.com

WOMEN ARE MORE THAN THEIR BODIES!
Come create a student-run task force to work on the following:
POLITICAL ACTION, ADVOCACY, SUPPORT AND CONNECTION
Explore these issues with a group of professional women on campus.
TIME: November 15, 4–5 p.m.
PLACE: Campus Center Room 802

1/2 price Wings-n-Things 9pm-close
Pub Trivia Night 9pm-10:30pm Win $$ and Prizes
12 Great Import and Microbrew Drafts
THE HARP IRISH PUB
Full Menu! From Burgers to Lobster!! Never a Cover!!!
163 Sunderland Rd. Amherst, MA 548-6900
THURS. 11/8
Early Show: 8:30 - 10:30 Ed Vadas (blues)
Late Show: 10:30 - close I-Ganic Sound System (roots, reggae & dub)
SAT. 11/10
NBFB (rock)
"START YOUR OWN TRADITION"

Commercials as disgusting as Mountain Lightning

Maybe it's just the shows I watch, but there sure are some bad commercials on television these days. So instead of talking about television shows this week, it's time to talk about the things that pay for the television shows; the commercials. And not just any commercials, the really pitiful ones. Not to step on the toes of fellow Collegian staff member who wrote about some commercials that draw his ire in the Ed/Op section earlier this semester, but here is my list:

Steven The Dell Computer Kid: The charming "boy next door" Steven, who really wants you to buy a Dell, started appearing in Dell ads last year. Since then, Dell's revenue has gone up 46%. Is it possible that America actually likes this kid who sounds like he just woke up before the commercial? I once heard a rumor that this guy went to UMass, although I've never seen him, and I don't think Amherst is exactly the place for aspiring young actors. On the other hand, who would ever make up something so stupid? If you're out there Steven, give me a holler. No, wait, actually don't.

Cleo The Psychic: Cleo, who claims that it's all about "keepin it real," has become a fixture on daytime television. Housewives nationwide who demand to know what their man is doing when he comes home late smelling like perfume can trust Cleo to inform them. As Cleo says to a "customer" in one of the ads "The father of the baby is the one with the funny chin." Hey, it's all in the cards, don't question it. Cleo was recently put under investigation by the state of New York for violating the states telemarketing laws over 100 times. Looks like some jail time might be in the cards for Miss Cleo.

Chrysler-Love: This is the new advertising catch phrase for Chrysler. Forget about subliminal messages in advertising, just come out and make the ridiculous statement Chrysler probably doesn't really equal love, but Ford does equal hate. Hate for yourself when you buy one, that is.

Castrol: These commercials have basically conceded defeat for all men. Can't figure women out? Just start having a sexual relationship with your car. The ads consist of some guy jetting around off road in his truck that "thinks a little gas is a good thing." The godlike voice then states, "here's to the perfect relationship (with your pickup), here's to keeping it that way." "CASTROL." So basically the advertising community thinks that wrestling fans (a program where this ad plays about 5 times per show) have no skills with the ladies? I refuse to believe.

Wal-Mart Lady: Recently this commercial began airing which features a women who looks to be in her 60's playing the part of a Wal-Mart sales associate. She states that her job "is the best job in the world." OK now, is this absurd or what? The best job in the world pays seven bucks an hour with no benefits? Why am I in college when I can just head down the street to Wal-Mart and get "the best job in the world?" Plus I can help shoppers get those great deals, like a 50 pack of Dr.Thunder or Mountain Lighting for "two" bucks.

Friendly's Dad: There are a few different versions of these ads with the same basic premise in Friendly's new campaign. My favorite has to be the one with the preteenage girl on the phone with her friends, who doesn't want to be bothered by unhip Dad. On the other hand, Dad feels left out because they used to spend so much quality time together, like eat at fast food joints with one another. Preteen girl realizes this and proposes a trip to Friendly's where the two bond over Patty Melts and Hot Fudge Sundaes. I can see the board meeting now: Some rotund executive proposes a way to get families to come to Friendly's. "We'll make ads that will make it look like your kid will like you if you take them to Friendly's. Yea, that's it."

KFC and Jason Alexander: These commercials are even more painful to watch than a meal at KFC is to your arteries. The former "Seinfeld" star parades around with a bucket of fried chicken at a youth soccer game and tells people eating fast food burgers that look like pieces of coal flattened out on a bun that they should be eating KFC. Of course, everybody in the commercial mauls the bucket of chicken like vultures. As Alexander says, it "brings him so much joy."

Tube Notes Quickies:

Ah, the quickie. Here's some quick news bites from the world of television this past week.

-Game 7 of The World Series knocked "The Emmy's" out of the park, drawing 39.1 million viewers to "The Emmy's" 17.1 million. It was the smallest audience that the awards show has had since 1990.

-With November Sweeps coming up, the networks have lined up a slew of special shows. NBC has celebrity editions of both "Fear Factor" and "The Weakest Link" planned. "Fear Factor" will feature such legends of David Hasselhoff, Donny Osmund, Coolio, and the "wrestler" formerly known as Chyna. Meanwhile, Chyna's old WWF buddies, including The Rock, Big Show, and Stephanie McMahon, compete next Monday on "The Weakest Link."

-Speaking of Jason Alexander, his ABC show "Bob Patterson" was canceled by the network to the surprise of nobody.

While people might not want to see ex-"Seinfeld" stars, apparently they do want to see college students. Fox has ordered "Undeclared" for an entire season. The show has routinely won its time slot in the coveted 18-34 demographic. Looks like that positive review in "Tube Notes" helped.

Finally, in the most ridiculous item of the week. The New York Post reports that Barbara Steisand, out of fear of anthrax, traveled to "The Emmy's" with her own personal nurse. According to the report, Streisand plans on traveling with the nurse everywhere.

Kurt Polesky is a Collegian Staff Member

Salem Cross Inn a filling experience

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Nestled in the hills of New England lies The Salem Cross Inn, a hidden gem that provides a historic atmosphere coupled with superior cuisine. The restaurant itself is situated on the rolling hills of Central Massachusetts just a short drive away from Amherst in West Brookfield. On the 600 acres worth of land lies the historic facility, which was built in 1620 and restored in 1961 to its original quality.

Inside the family-run restaurant the decor still remains rustic, enhancing the overall mood. Floors are hardwood and the original wooden paneling remains in many of the dining rooms. The restaurant even goes so far as to preserve older traditions in terms of making food as well. The meat served to customers is roasted on an open hearth using an item known as a roasting jack, a seventeenth century device that operated with the help of pulleys, weights and cogs.

Also in use at within the scope of food preparation is a beehive oven. The brick oven was a traditional sight in many inns during the 1700s and remains within the Salem Cross Inn the way to go about making baked goods and dishes.

However, if the ascetic and historic qualities of the Salem Cross Inn are not enough of a draw, the food is.

The inn serves a wide variety of foods ranging from Marsala chicken to duck to filet mignon. Not a fan of meat? No problem, the menu spans fairly far including choices such as baked stuffed shrimp, boiled scrod and pasta primavera for those who are vegetarians.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect of the dining is the interactive events that the restaurant puts on. One, known as the fireplace feast, gives those interested an opportunity to sit back and observe or actually lend a hand as dinner is being made. Customers can watch as their prime rib turns on a roasting jack in front of an open hearth, and can also assist in making the restaurant's famous clam chowder (guaranteed to please anyone)! For dessert homemade deep fried appk pie with homemade whipped cream is offered to guests.

During downtime, visitors to the Inn are encouraged to go on a sleigh or hayride over the rolling landscape of the facility. Not to fear though, if a chill seeps in, mulled wine and apple cider are on hand to help warm customers up. The restaurant also offers an outdoor Dover Roast in the summer time and a Maple gathering in which they offer foods made from the maple from trees on their property. The herb sampler, another popular event, is held in the springtime and features foods made from the homegrown herbs in the gardens on the grounds of the eatery.

The restaurant is perfect for those that are looking for a special place to eat out or simply want a change of scenery. The unique atmosphere coupled with the exquisite food makes the Salem Cross Inn a place not to be missed.

For more information call the Salem Cross Inn at 508-867-0551.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bullfrogs & Koalas

By Ian Beck
Collegian Correspondent

I'm not quite sure how I came to hear about Kid Koala's band Bullfrog. I've known about the turntablist for some time now, and have been familiar with his sonic palate for a little over a year. I did not know that he had a funk band, though. As soon as I heard about Bullfrog, I jumped on the opportunity to add them to my record collection, and thank them for being so esoteric. I don't think their publicists did a very good job of talking them up; they're not well known in any respect, but they have a lot of potential to carve a nice spot in the currently AWOL American Funk Scene.

The self-titled debut album from Kid Koala's funk band Bullfrog has an energy that for the most part stands out. When the groove switch isn't flipped in the 'On' position, the band steps aside (for the most part) to let Koala take the plate. While his samples aren't strike-me-down-catchy (they don't in fact define any genre), they are subtly humorous. There's a tongue-in-cheek wit that his samples demonstrate. On "Extra Track II," his samples and reflections on life in the music industry, fans, and making it big. When Koala isn't in full effect, that is, when he's not soloing, his samples make a lot more sense. They're complimented by the rest of the band who easily fill in any of the gaps that may have marginalized listeners.

The standout track in this category is "All Right Music for Morning People." This song has Koala sampling from Carpal Tunnel Syndrome's song of the same name. The turntables are catchy on that track, but are incomplete until Bullfrog steps in and polishes everything off. No polishing is necessary actually; they add a hooks luster to their re-dub of the track. Let's compare and contrast Kid Koala's original, while not bland, doesn't have any musical flavor. Bullfrog takes and exploits his sonic energy into a flavorful, chill instrumental using Koala's track as a sort of rubric. Guitarist Mark Robertson infuses his own brand of Isaac Hayes style guitar dances all over a spankin' bassline and copious drum beats.

The album isn't all cliché funk love though, and that's a good thing. Kid Koala only lightly touches Bullfrog album; his presence isn't showcased the way Bono's voice is on a U2 track; rather, he's infused like the perfect amount of salad dressing, neither too much to ruin the salad, or lacking so much as to maintain an overall blandness. Bullfrog consists of six members. Kid Koala gets off turning his tables with BluRum 13 MCing and rhyming on a few of the tracks. Additionally, Mark Robertson pretends he is Curtis Mayfield with vocals and guitar, while Massimo Samalone kicks, drums, and fills the mean, MEAN bass of Peter Santiago. There's also Joanna Peters percussion-ing to the band's bounce, adding rhythmic flavor here and there.

For those who are already fans of Bullfrog, their debut LP is a compilation of their previous two EPs with the addition of a few new recordings. My personal favorite track is "Snakeskin," an instrumental that demonstrates, perhaps, the killer talent that each musician has (including Koala). The song starts off slowly, taking time to build up a groove, and when the music is riper than the veggies at the DC, takes off into an obscene rumba beat leaving no one's booty safe. When you hear it, you've gotta bounce, or at least get something moving. Turn it up too. Bullfrog are definitely at their best when turned up loud; feel it, don't just listen, make yourself the audience, put some funk into your bland Massachusetts life.

■ MoCA

continued from page 5

Further development of the MoCA continues. The compound's 27 buildings, if fully renovated, could create 750,000 total square feet of indoor display space, and a study on the feasibility of that development is nearing completion.

When Robert Wilson's 14 Stations is moved into the museum in December, all of MoCA's available space will be filled. As it is, there are now five shows in the compound's open buildings.

Game Show – MoCA's featured exhibit includes artists from around the globe proving how fun art can be. Chris Finley's paintings invite you to become a part of them by moving around the room until you piece three parts of a large one-eyed pig painting together through optical illusion, or ocularly combine a large wooden alligator with small hanging toy alligators (see picture at left). One of his paintings even requires that you jump on a trampoline to see it. Christoph Draeger uses the familiar game of jigsaw puzzles for his canvases (see review on this page). Christian Jankowski's video installation Telemistica uses TV tarot psychics to question the nature of art (see review on this page). Kay Rosen's massive wall drawing invites you to play a word game and visualize music simultaneously. How many times have you been frustrated by your computer? Perry Hoberman's "Cathartic User Interface" asks you to pitch balls at a wall of keyboards as error messages appear on them to egg you on. Whether they are games that you are playing, or games that artists play on you, Game Show proves that art can be play.

Domestic Disturbance – Mona Hatoum takes household objects and recreates them on a grand scale. An imposing birdcage shrinks us to the size of birds. A huge food grater looks almost like a prehistoric creature. A giant egg slicer looks as if it could contain a small human. When she's not dwarfing her audience, Hatoum reinvents common items. A steel wheelchair is pointed forward in an aerodynamic position, ready to race. A strainer's holes are closed up with nuts and bolts, not only taking away its former function, but also creating a new purpose, perhaps a violent one. (See our archived review at www.dailycollegian.com.)

Year's Supply of Turtle Wax – J. Otto Seibold is an energetic work of wallpaper that covers a 55-foot long wall. Seibold, illustrator of the children's book Olive the Other Reindeer, infuses the wall with chaotic fun. Animal creatures, cartoon-like people, scenes and text layer over one another, combining story lines by binding them together with the drawn tins of Turtle Wax.

Fluxus Games – The movement called Fluxus was created in the 1960s by artist George Maciunas. It used the idea of Dada and readymade art to give everyday objects a new status. These games, whether they are small or large, bend already established rules, or create their own. Some games are impossible to play at all. Some gatherings of Fluxus artists encouraged Flux-sports, where a slow bicycle race was won by the last to cross the finish line.

Lightning with Stag in its Glare – Sculptor Joseph Beuys, a German conceptual artist, uses narrative in this piece. A large bronze triangle, flattened but corrugated, acts as the lightning. Looked at from the side, it becomes thin and takes on the permanent presence of the storm. Creatures resembling worms wriggle around on the floor, near the "stag." The stag is actually made of shining aluminum. Although the lightning is dull, its brightness and power is seen in the stag's frozen light. Beuys combines all of nature into the energy of the storm.

Myers seemed excited about the museum's future, noting that its regulars come from all the United States and include a large number of locals. Further, it was noted that artists too are excited about the possibilities for MoCA's tremendous amounts of open space. MoCA is the only museum in the United States, for example, that could house Wilson's Stations.

Ultimately though, the museum succeeds because it brings together a diversity of arts with a diversity of interested peoples. To be as isolated as it really is - the cultural richness of the Berkshires notwithstanding – while doing that is a success in it of itself.

Arts, the other white meat.

GERALD LING/COLLEGIAN

Let the (real) games begin!
The men's soccer team will be ranked third in the Verizon Atlantic 10 Tournament this weekend. The Minutemen will take the pitch against host Dayton on Friday. Read the preview in tomorrow's Collegian.

E-mail brings role of Indiana U. athletics media relations into question

By Katie Schoenbaechler
Indiana Daily Student (Indiana U.)

(U-WIRE) BLOOMINGTON, Ind. - The mission of the Indiana University athletics media relations department is to act as a liaison for student-athletes and the media, media relations Director Jeff Fanter said. But in an e-mail obtained by the Indiana Daily Student, Fanter told several sports information directors what student-athletes should be saying to members of the media.

Fanter defended the e-mail, saying, "We do not prep our athletes on what is to be said in interviews. We go over concerns, questions and try to help them. These concerns have come from other student-athletes."

Pete Moore, president of the College Sports Information Directors of America, of which IU is listed as a member, echoed Fanter, saying SIDs "serve as a liaison between the student-athletes and the media."

While the organization's code of ethics doesn't address preparing students for interviews, it does state: "Administrators and coaches should be encouraged to answer questions from the media honestly and accurately."

Each Big Ten university athletics department has a media relations director and staff. The media relations staff has SIDs assigned to each sport to communicate with the media and athletes and to facilitate interviews.

Fanter sent an e-mail Friday to several IU SIDs in response to an Daily Student request for an interview with seven prominent IU athletes. His e-mail message to the SIDs accidentally was forwarded to the Daily Student by football SID Todd Starowitz; Fanter confirmed he wrote it.

"We want our athletes talking about how important athletics is to their overall development as a person and how helpful athletics has been in making them better people," he began in the e-mail. "They can talk about the fact that they do not feel that IU has commercialized athletics. They should mention how athletics builds pride in the alumni, both former athletes and non-athletes. Put a positive spin on things...," Fanter wrote.

He ended the e-mail by saying, "Be sure to speak with your athletes about this before setting up the interview. It would look good if all of them are saying the same thing."

When asked to comment on Fanter's e-mail, Starowitz referred comment to Fanter but said the athletic department does not censor athletes.

Moore said while it is acceptable for SIDs to prepare athletes for interviews, it is unacceptable to tell them what to say.

Moore, who is also SID at Syracuse University, said his university produces a manual for athletes that explains to them what many reporters are looking for in interviews and what to expect with television and newspaper interviews.

"We feel that it is very appropriate to review different scenarios and to make suggestions, especially for those student-athletes that are really uncomfortable in that setting, and I don't call that telling them what to say," Moore said. "In our case, I think that it is part of the educational process, and do you at times perhaps make suggestions? Sure.

"But the fact of the matter is our jobs, and I hope the people at Indiana would say the same thing, is to allow reporters to get a feel for the individual student-athlete, and we certainly don't want to do anything that puts the athlete in the position where they are not portraying themselves accurately."

Besides acting as an intermediary with players, the media relations department also handles media requests to interview staff members such as coaches, the athletics director and other department staff.

The response to recent Daily Student requests to interview Athletic Director Michael McNeely has been that he would need days or weeks to decide on interviews. An article in Tuesday's Bloomington Herald-Times reported that it too had encountered a similar problem.

"The Herald-Times requested a brief interview with McNeely," the article states, "but was told by his spokesman that time could not be made in his schedule for such an interview until mid-November."

At other Big Ten universities reporters have direct access to athletics directors and staff members. Responding to a request for an interview for this story, Northwestern University athletics Director Rick Taylor was available after only a few seconds of waiting.

"Anyone can call me at any time," Taylor said.

Minnesota assistant media relations Director Kyle Coughlin said men's athletics director Tom Moe can be reached through the media relations department within one or two days.

Fanter said his department has good intentions regarding student-athlete contact with the media.

"All we are trying to do is show what is good about college athletics," Fanter said.

Duke wallops EA Sports in exhibition

By Christina Petersen
The Chronicle (Duke U.)

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.C. - Ordinarily Electronic Arts Sports is known for manufacturing realistic sports games like March Madness 2001, where ordinary players have the chance to alter sports history from the comfort of their own homes.

But as the EA Sports real-life All-Stars learned Monday night, probably the only way to beat the No. 1 team in the nation will be by pressing the B button.

The Duke Blue Devils opened the 2001-2002 season with a roar, stuffing the All-Stars 129-94. Although EA Sports shocked North Carolina by 31 last night, the question for fans was not how much Duke would win by, but how each individual player would perform, especially without the incomparable Shane Battier to lead the team.

"There will be no leader to replace Shane, but there will be leadership," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "Jason [Williams], Carlos [Boozer], [Mike] Dunleavy and [Chris] Duhon will lead this team, but there will be no primary leader."

The game began with the Carlos Boozer show, as the junior quickly made his presence known. Boozer scored nine of Duke's first 12 points, not hesitating to move strong to the basket and lean on the All-Stars' Will Cunningham, a 6-foot-11-inch Temple graduate.

Boozer was strong on defense as well, with five of his 11 rebounds coming on that end of the floor. As a team, Duke did not allow the All-Stars to score until almost three minutes into the game, when Cunningham finally laid it in. The Blue Devils out-rebounded EA Sports 56-29, scoring 39 second-chance points while only allowing five for the All-Stars.

The Cameron Crazies were not satisfied with mere execution, though, as they eagerly awaited the lightning-quick passes and three-pointers that helped Duke to its first national championship in nine years.

After Initial erratic play in which the lead dwindled to six points on a Williams turnover, the Blue Devils were only happy to comply with a blizzard of perimeter passes that culminated in a trademark Williams three-pointer with 10:49 remaining in the half.

Williams converted on a similar play five minutes later when Dunleavy fired the ball to sophomore Duhon at the top of the circle. Duhon barely touched the ball, sending it to a patiently waiting Williams, who again drained the shot to put Duke up by 20. Duke stretched the lead to 23 at halftime.

With the cushion, the Blue Devils came out of the locker room firing. Seven seconds into the half, Williams stole the ball from St. Bonaventure graduate Tim Winn, dribbled behind his back and then passed to Boozer for a fast break dunk.

The second half also allowed new Duke players more chances to win the Crazies' hearts. After sitting out last season due to NCAA transfer rules, junior Dahntay Jones showed what it truly means to go above the rim. Jones dunked on an alley-oop pass from Duhon with 17:54 remaining in the game and then hung on the rim for emphasis.

Although the message was clear — Dahntay Jones had arrived — the refs still called him for the technical.

"I was real pleased with Dahntay," Krzyzewski said. "He had a great practice the other day, and he took it into this game. It was his first real live performance."

For his part, Dunleavy returned home 20 pounds heavier and full of purpose on both ends of the floor. A triple threat, the Lake Oswego, Ore., native recorded his first double-double of the season with 16 points, 11 rebounds and five assists.

"Regardless of the ACC championship or the Final Four or playing in those big games, you never take it for granted playing in [Cameron]," Dunleavy said. "It's a great atmosphere and the main reason why you come to Duke."

Collegian Sports: We saw Jordan in person yesterday.

Collegian Sports: some of us understand what being a Red Sox fan is all about. The rest think those imbeciles in Southwest are the norm.

Attention: Science Majors

Explore a career in Alternative Healthcare

College of Chiropractic (Doctor of Chiropractic)
- First University-based Chiropractic College in the United States
- Accelerated Science Pre-requisite Program Available
- Only Chiropractic College located in New England and the greater New York metropolitan area

College of Naturopathic Medicine (Naturopathic Physician)
- Only College of Naturopathic Medicine that is part of a major University
- Clinical Experience and Integrative Care Setting
- Only college on East Coast and one of only four in the United States offering this degree

For more information and an application:

College of Chiropractic
1-888-UB-CHIRO
e-mail: chiro@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/chiro

College of Naturopathic Medicine
(203) 576-4108
e-mail: natmed@bridgeport.edu
www.bridgeport.edu/naturopathy

UNIVERSITY OF BRIDGEPORT

Sarah Cook (No. 15) played tenacious defense as the soccer team's sweeper in her last two years with the Maroon and White.

As the captain of the Minutewomen for two years, Sarah Cook (No. 15) was the undeniable leader of the women's soccer team.

■ cookie

continued from page 14

a NCAA Tournament game.

These were goals that her and her teammates set out to reach in 2001.

"We had team meetings during the preseason and we wanted to win the A-10 regular season, A-10 Tournament and make it to NCAA's," she said.

However, despite being named to the preseason all-conference team and starting the season 10-2, Cook and the rest of the Minutewomen barely missed out on the postseason this year, finishing fifth in the A-10 just a point behind fourth placed Xavier.

Captain Cook and the rest of the Massachusetts defense held opponents to just 23 goals and at one point went more than 500 minutes without allowing a score. Again, fitness played a major role for her as she played each and every minute of every game in 2001.

"It was a hell of a long season, but she can do that because she's so strong," Rudy said.

Even though she was unable to help get UMass back into the NCAA's, Cook can take solace in the fact that she has helped return the women's soccer program to an elite level during her time wearing the Maroon and White. Also she has left an example for future generations of Minutewomen on how to handle the ups and downs that go along with playing the sport at such a high level.

"She's overcome some adversity to do real well. I hope she goes on to become a Graduate Assistant coach somewhere because I'd like to see her stay in the sport," her coach said of her.

While her UMass career might not have ended the way that she had envisioned it, Cook can look back fondly at her time in the Pioneer Valley and all that it brought her.

"I really feel like they're my sisters," Cook said of her fellow graduating seniors. "It feels like I've known them forever, it's really been awesome."

Legendary Michigan diving coach retiring

By Jon Schwartz
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

ANN ARBOR, Mich. – Dick Kimball, who has coached Michigan's diving programs for the past 45 years, announced his resignation Monday, effective at the end of the 2001-2002 athletic season.

"I just felt like it was the right time," Kimball said.

Kimball is the last remaining member of Michigan's athletic department who was hired by former Athletic Director Fritz Crisler, who left the position in 1968.

"We're a very close family at the pool and Dick has talked on and off over the last couple of years about his future, and what he wants to have happen and when," Michigan women's swimming coach Jim Richardson said. "So this decision was made known to all of us some time ago."

In discussing his decision, Kimball noted several factors that led him to leave the University. First and foremost, he noted how much more difficult the recruiting process has become in recent years. Whereas in the past, he would sign many walk-ons who attended his camps, recruiting has now become a yearlong struggle.

"I still enjoy the coaching part very much," Kimball said, but he noted that "it's a lot more difficult than it used to be."

During his career, Kimball coached nine swimmers to Olympic medals and served as an assistant coach for the U.S. National Team five times. He also received numerous honors from the Big Ten and NCAA for his work, which included five NCAA championships.

"Not only are we losing a great diving coach with the longest longevity in the sport of collegiate diving, but we are also losing a real good friend of swimming," Michigan men's swimming coach John Urbanchek said in a statement released by the athletic department. "All swimmers appreciate his dedication and I'm sure they will miss his joking personality and presence at the pool on a daily basis."

Kimball coached just the men's team for his first 16 years at Michigan before assuming control of the women's team 27 years ago.

If you compare what he is in diving to other sports, he's the Vince Lombardi, he's the Dean Smith, he's the Bear Bryant in his sport," Richardson said. "He will go down in history as arguably the greatest diving coach ever."

Kimball's name is well known throughout the diving world. Many coaches from programs that compete with Michigan understand what the sport is losing.

"Dick Kimball is the true meaning of loyalty and giving you everything he has in his life to offer," Florida diving coach Donnie Craine said. "He is the greatest inspiration in my coaching career and only second to my father in the inspiration of my life. You will never find a greater man or coach than Dick Kimball."

While Kimball may be leaving the University, he made it very clear that his heart still lies with Michigan.

"I bleed blue and yellow," he said. "It hurts me just as much to see the football team get beat as it does anyone else."

Today's Layout:

In at 6:56 baby!

Oh YEAH!

www.dailycollegian.com

Four Seasons Wine & Liquor
Home of the 50 lb bag of ICE
Largest selection of Cigars in Hadley and Amherst.
Special Orders Welcome
BEER WINE LIQUOR ICE
KEGS CIGARS GLOVES
CIGARETTES TOBACCO
333 Russell Street (Route 9) Hadley, MA
Hours Mon-Sat. 9am-11pm
(413)584-8774
Amex, Disc, MC, Visa, Debit Accepted

SLEEPY HOLLOW BED CO.
MATTRESSES FUTONS BEDS ETC
"BYOB"
328 COLLEGE ST. RTE 9 AMHERST 2 & 3 BEDS
THE AREA'S BEST RESOURCE FOR COLLEGE LIVING

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
FRIDAY thru NOV. 15 – for seven days only!
THE NEW YORK TIMES
"Leelee Sobieski and Albert Brooks deliver outstanding performances!"
"TWO THUMBS UP!"
"Deeply funny! An Oscar®-caliber performance from Albert Brooks!"
my first mister
BACK BY DEMAND
Value... Added Footage 24 Extra Seconds Free
"It's Fun Night At The Movies"
MONTY PYTHON AND THE HOLY GRAIL
ONLY WESTERN MASS SHOWING
DAILY at 7:00
DAILY at 9:15
